TO HIS MOST SACRED MAIESTIE CHARLES,

By the grace of God, King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, &c.

Most Gracious and Dread SOVERAIGNE:

WEE here present to Your most SACRED MAJESTY, a booke of Sermons: Wee need not tel whose they are, the Sermons are able to speake their Authour. When the Authour dyed, Your Majesty thought it not fit his sermons should dye with him. And though they could not live with all that elegancie which they had upon his tongue, yet you were graciously pleased to think a paper-life better than none. Upon this Your Majesty gave us a strict charge, that we should over-looke the Papers (as well Sermons as other Tractates) of that Reverend and Worthy Prelate, and print all that wee found perfect. There came to our hands a world of Sermon-notes, but these came perfect, Had they not come perfect, we should not have ventured to adde any limme unto them, lest mixing a Penne farre inferiour, wee should have disfigured such compleat bodies.

Your Majesties first care was for the Presse, that the worke might be publike. Your second was for the worke it selfe, that it might come forth worthy the Authour; which could not be, if it came not forth as he left it. In pursuance of these two, we have brought the work to light, and we have done it with care and fidelity; for as the Sermons were preached, so are they publiſhed. When he preached them, they had the generall approbation of the Court, and they made him famous for making them. Now they are printed, we hope they will have a generall liking of the Church, and inlarge and indeare his name, to them that knew not him.

We know there is a great prejudice attends the after-printing of dead mens Workes. For the living may make the dead ſpeake as they will, and as the dead would not ſpeake, did they live. And many worthy Authors in all profeſsions, have had ſuch unſutable peeces ſtitched to their former workes, as make them ſpeake contrary to themſelves, and to their known judgements while they lived. As if they had ſeene ſome viſion after death, to croſſe or recall their judgement in their life. We would be loth to ſuffer under the ſuſpition of this. And therefore in a full obedience to Your Majeſties Command, as we have printed all that we could find perfect, and worthy his Name : ſo have we not added or detracted in the leaſt, to alter or divert his ſenſe. That ſo the worke may not onely be his, but as himſelfe made it : And the honour Your Majeſties that ſo carefully commanded it : And the faithfulneſſe ours in our obedience to Your Majeſty, and our love to his memory.

And now will Your Majeſtie graciouſly be pleaſed to give us leave, to commend this worke to Your Protection, which would have needed none, had not Your Majeſtie commanded it to be publike. For, publike view is as great a ſearch as many eyes can make. And many eyes can ſee what two cannot, be they never ſo good. And among many eyes, ſome will ever looke aſquint upon worth, and maligne that which they cannot equall. And if ever any mans patience and temper could prevent this evill Eye, wee hope his may : And yet, even whilſt we hope the beſt, we humbly begge Your Majeſties protection againſt the worſt, becauſe the dayes are evill.

Eph. 5. 15.

We have but two things to preſent to Your Majeſtie. They are the Perſon to Your memorie; and this his worke to Your eye. For the Perſon, wee can adde nothing to him. To name him, is enough to all that knew him; and to reade him, will bee enough to them that knew him not. And though Vertue have but its due, when 'tis commended, yet we conceive not how praiſe may make Vertue better than it is, eſpecially when the perſon in whom it was, is dead to all encouragement or comfort by it. And yet though Vertue cannot thus be bettered, it may be righted thus. For, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita cenſura difficilis. Tis eaſie to admire the living, and we do it, but 'its hard to cenſure them any way. Both becauſe there will bee no preferring one before another without offence : And becauſe, as wee know not what may come upon them before death, ſo the cenſure may be ſo good, as they will ne're deſerve; or ſo bad, as though they doe deſerve, they will not beare. 'Twas Bibulus his caſe. The admiration of men had carried him up to Heaven; no lower place would ſerve him. Yet when it came to a Wiſemans cenſure, hee profeſſed profeſſed, Hee knew no ground for that admiration, and leſſe worth in him for ſuch a height. But when men have payd all their rights of nature to death, and are gone into their ſilence; then where admiration ceaſeth, cenſure begins. Now, if the cenſure be heavy (as it is too oft upon the beſt) yet then it ſhould bee ſparing for Humanities ſake. For that humanitie, which forbids the rifling of a grave; bids forbeare him that is ſhut up in it, and cannot anſwere. But if the cenſure be good, you may be bold with the grave: And you cannot praiſe any ſo ſafely as the dead; for you cannot humour them into danger, nor melt away your ſelfe into flattery.

Pater. Lib. 2

The Perſon therefore, whoſe workes theſe are, was from his youth, a man of extraordinary worth and note. A man, as if hee had beene made up of Learning and Vertue. Both of them ſo eminent in him, as 'tis hard to judge, which had precedency and greater intereſt. His Vertue (which we muſt ſtill judge the more worthy in any man) was comparable to that which was wont to be found in the Primitive Biſhops of the Church. And had hee lived among thoſe ancient Fathers, his Vertue would have ſhined, even among thoſe vertuous men. And for his Learning, that was as well, if not better knowne abroad, than reſpected at home. And take him in his Latitude, wee which knew him well, knew not any kinde of Learning to which hee was a ſtranger; but in his profeſsion admirable. None ſtronger than hee, where he wreſtled with an Adverſary. And that Bellarmine felt, who was as well able to ſhift for himſelfe, as any that ſtood for the Roman party. None more exact, more judicious than hee, where he was to inſtruct and informe others. And that, as they knew, which often heard him preach, ſo they may learne, which will read this which he hath left behind him. And yet this fulneſſe of his Materiall Learning, left roome enough in the temper of his braine, for almoſt all Languages, learned and moderne, to ſeat themſelves. So that his Learning had all the helpes Language could affoord; and his Languages learning enough for the beſt of them to expreſſe. His Iudgement, in the meane time, ſo commanding over both, as that neither of them was ſuffered idly, or curiouſly to ſtart from, or fall ſhort of, their intended ſcope. So that we may better ſay of him, than 'twas ſometimes ſaid of Claudius Druſus; He was of as many, as great vertues, as mortall nature could receive, or induſtry make perfect. Pater. Hiſt. lib. 2. And ſince we are both taught, and ſee it by experience, that wiſe men alſo dye, and periſh together as well as the ignorant and fooliſh, and though they leave their riches, yet cannot diſpoſe their wiſedome to others; 'tis fit we ſhould be converſant in the writings of wiſe and religious men, that we may in part learne that in their works, which the dying Authors had not power to bequeath unto us. Pſal. 49. 10.

Theſe workes then comming from ſo Grave, Learned, and Religious an Author, have but two things to doe in their publiſhing to the World.

The one is, to teach the world, What a treasure they have of them. And the other, to tell this Church, what a Iewell shee lost, when shee lost their Authour. The worke is a Body of Sermons. To them hee had been most bred, and in them he most excelled. And he was not a greater Preacher in his age, than he was both great and frequent, in his younger and stronger time. As for the body of the worke it selfe, were it not that we like not to disparage any mans endevours by comparing, we would say, the Christian world hath not many such Bodies of Sermons, as we here present, under Your Majesties favour, to the view, and use of this Church. And if another Nation had them, they would as highly value them.

And here we humbly beg leave to tell Your Majestie, that these Sermons are in this, like their Authour, mixed, of Religion and Wisedome. It is an excellent thing for a man to speake wisely, and eloquently, both at once: but where the se perfections meet not, there saith S. Augustine, Dicat sapienter, quod non potest eloquenter. Let the Preacher (of all men) speak that wisely, which he cannot utter eloquently. And if S. Augustine in his time found that fit, out of all doubt it is necessary now, that men of our profession, set themselves to preach with more wisedome, than eloquence. With Christian and Religious Wisedome; which alone knowes how to preserve Truth and Peace together. For as all other Churches in the world, are most happy when these meet; so is this too. But too many among the people, choose rather to have their humor fed, than their soules edified. And carry partiall eares even to the house of that God, who is no accepter of persons. To settle therefore the peace of the one, and to abate the humor of the other, nothing certainly under God, would be of greater efficacy, than Conciones sapientes, wise, and discreet Sermons, which yet may be as zealous and devout as any other. For hee that is zealous according to knowledge, is not lesse zealous for his knowledge sake. And true wisdome, which is not true, if it be not Christian, carries no water about it to quench zeale, but only to sprinkle it, that it may burn withi n compasse, and not fire that house which it intended but to warme.

Act. 10. 34.

Wee have neither purpose nor Commission to step aside here, and complaine of the Times. All times have somewhat amisse in them, else Preachers should have the lesse worke. And if these times have more than many others, which our Fore-fathers have seen, we must needs be sorry there is so much worke for Preachers: and more, if they which live by the Gospell of Peace, should make any. For after the building up of the Faith of Christ, their chiefe worke should be, to beat downe those strong Holds, which any sins have built up in the hearts of men, to pollute or defame Christianity. And true Preachers indeed are, as S. Ierome speakes, Maxillæ Ecclesiæ, the Iaw-bones of the Church, which by preaching, beate downe the carnall life of man. Now all hatred, contention, variance, all sedition and disobedience to Lawfull Authoritie is (as 'tis reckoned by the Apostle) among the workes of the flesh. And therefore since all Preachers are the Iawes of the Church, and the ſinnes of the people are, as it were, to be ground inter Maxillas, betwene theſe Iawes, before the People themſelves can be made fit to nouriſh the Church, or the Church them : How can this be done, (eſpecially done as it ought) if the Iawes be weake or fallen, and cannot doe their office.

But our hope is that God will ſo bleſſe your Majeſtie in your government, Your people in their loyaltie, the Preachers in their wiſdome added to zeale and diligence, that the hearts and hands of all ſorts of men, ſhall be joyn'd together to preſerve Gods worſhip in truth, Your Maieſties throne in honour, the Church in religious devotion, and all Your People in obedience and union; the onely meanes to make both your Maieſtie, and your People happy in this life, and bleſſed in that which is to come. And we humbly deſire men of all ſorts to thinke ſeriouſly of this; that if the Publike ſuffer either in Church or State, no mans private pleaſure, or profit can ſtand firme unto him. No mans. And Cicero had reaſon enough to laugh at the folly of thoſe men, Qui amiſſa Repub. Piſcinas ſuas fore ſalvas ſperare videntur, which in his time ſeemed to conceive ſuch a windy hope, that their fiſh-ponds and places of pleaſure, ſhould be ſafe, when the Common-wealth was loſt. Lib. 1. Ep. 15. ad At.

Theſe Sermons, when they were preached, gave great contentment to the religious, and judicious eares of Your Royall Father, of ever bleſſed memory, the moſt able Prince that ever this Kingdome had, to judge of Church-worke. And therefore we hope that the printing of them ſhall be as acceptable to Your Majeſtie, as the preaching of them was both to your ſelfe and him. We conceive, if your liking had not continued to them, Your Maieſtie would not have commanded us the printing of them. And we aſſure our ſelves, ſince the Lines are the ſame, the Preſſe which hath made them legible, hath made no blot upon your gratiovs favours. We have been only Servants, as we are many waies bound to be, to Your Maieſties command, in making them ready for the Preſſe, but Authors of nothing in them. And we heartily pray that the publiſhing of them, may be Honour to Your Maieſtie; Good to the Church; & meanes of Comfort and ſalvation, to them which read them. And in theſe, and all other prayers for your Maieſties long life, and happy Governement, we humbly beſeech You to conceive of us, as we are, and ſhall ever be and humbly devoted

OF
THE NATIVITY, Preached upon
CHRISTMASSE
DAY.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Tueſday, the XXV. of December,
A. D. MDCV. being CHRISTMAS Day.

HEBR. Chap. II. Ver. XVI.

For, He in nowiſe tooke the ANGELS: But, the Seed of ABRAHAM He tooke.

AND, even becauſe, this day, He tooke not the Angels Nature upon Him, but tooke our Nature, in the ſeed of Abraham: therefore hold we this Day, as a high Feaſt: therefore meet we thus, every yeare, in a holy Aſſembly; even, for a ſolemne memoriall, that He hath, as this day, beſtowed upon us a dignity, which upon the Angels, He beſtowed not. That He (as in the Chapter before, the Apoſtle ſetteth Him forth) that is the brightneſſe of His Fathers glory, the very Character of His ſubſtance, the Heire of all things, by whom He made the world: He, when both needed it, (His taking upon Him their Nature:) and both ſtood before Him, Men and Angels: the Angels He took not, but Men He tooke; was made Man, was not made an Angell: that is, did more for them, than He did for the Angels of Heaven. Heb. 1. 3.

Elſe-where the Apoſtle doth deliver this very point poſitively; (and that) not without ſome vehemency. Without all queſtion great is the myſtery of godlineſſe, God is manifeſted in the fleſh. Which is in effect, the ſame, that is here ſaid; but that here it is delivered by way of compariſon. For, this ſpeech is evidently a compariſon. If He had thus ſet it down: Our Nature He took; that had been poſitive. But, ſetting it down thus; Ours He took, the Angels He took not, it is (certainly) comparative. 1 Tim. 3. 16.

1. Now, the Maſters of ſpeech tell us, that there is power in the Poſitive, if it be given forth, with an earneſt aſſeveration. But nothing to that, that is in the Comparative. It is nothing ſo full, to ſay; I will never forget you: as, thus to ſay it; Can a mother forget the child of her own wombe? well, if ſhe can, yet will not I forget you. Nothing ſo forcible, to ſay thus; I will hold my word with you: as thus, Heaven and Earth ſhall paſſe, but my word ſhall not paſſe. The Comparative expreſſing is (without all queſtion) more ſignificant: And this here is ſuch. Theirs, the Angels, nuſquam, at no hand He took: but, ours He did.

Eſa. 49. 15. Luk. 19 17.

2. Now, the compariſon is, as is the thing in nature, whereunto it is made: If the thing be ordinary, the compariſon is according: But, then is it full of force, when it is, with no meane or baſe thing, but with the chief, and choice of all the Creatures; as, here, it is: even with the Angels themſelves. For then, it is at the higheſt. 1. That of Elihu, in Iob: That God teacheth us more than the beaſts, and giveth us more underſtanding than the fowles of the ayre; (that is) that GOD hath been more gracious to us, than to them, being made of the ſame mould that we are; that (yet) He hath given us a priviledge, above them; this, is much: 2. That of the Pſalmiſt, He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation; nay, not with any other Nation, in giving us the knowledge of His heavenly truth and Lawes; even, that we have a prerogative, if we be compared with the reſt of mankinde: (More than the beaſts, much: more than all men beſides, much more:) 3. But this here, Nuſquam Angelos, &c. that He hath given us a preheminence above the Angels themſelves; granted us that, that He hath not granted the Angels; that, is a Compariſon at the very higheſt, and further we cannot go.

Iob 35. 11. Pſal. 147. 20.

3. One degree yet more: and that is this. As, in compariſons making, it skilleth much, the excellency of the thing, wherewithall it is compared; ſo doth it too, the manner, how the compariſon is made, the pitch that is taken in it. It is one thing to make it in tanto, another, in toto. One thing, when it is in degrees; (that more, this leſſe: this not ſo much as that,) yet that, ſomwhat though:) Another, when one is, the other is not at all. So is it here: Aſſumpſit, non aſſumpſit: Vs He did take; the Angels, οὐδαμοῦ, not in any wiſe; not, in a leſſe, or a lower degree than us: but them, not at all. So, it is with the higheſt, and at the higheſt. So much is ſaid here; and more cannot be ſaid.

The only exception that may be made to theſe compariſons, is; that, (moſt-what,) they be odious: it breedeth a kinde of diſdaine in the higher, to be matched with the lower; Eſpecially, to be over-matched with Him. We need not feare it, here. The bleſſed ſpirits, (the Angels) will take no offence at it; they will not remove Iacobs ladder for all this; or deſcend to us, or aſcend for us, ever a whit the ſlower, becauſe He is become the Son of man. There is not, in them, that envious mind, that was in the elder brother, in the Goſpell, when the younger was received to grace after his riotous courſe.

Gen. 28 17. Iohn 1. 51. Luke 15. 28. 1 Tim 3 16.

When the Apoſtle tels us of the great myſtery, that God was manifeſted in the fleſh; immediately after, he tels, that He was ſeen of the Angels: And (leſt we might think, they ſaw it, as we do many things here, which we would not ſee) S. Peter tels us, that deſiderant proſpicere; that, with deſire, and delight, they ſaw it; and cannot be ſatisfied with the ſight of it, it pleaſeth them ſo well. And, even this day, the day that it was done, an Angell was the firſt that came to bring newes of it to the ſhepheards; and he no ſooner had delivered his meſſage, but preſently there was with Him a whole Quier of Angels, ſinging and joying, and making melody, for this εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις, this Good-will of God towards men. So that without dread of any diſdaine or exception, on the Angels parts, we may proceed in our Text.

1 Pet. 1. 12. Luke 2. 10. 14.

The Diviſion

I. Wherein, firſt of the parties compared: Angels, and Men.

II. 1 2. Then, [1] of that, wherein they are compared, aſſumption, or apprehenſion: in the word Taking: [2] And, not every taking, but apprehenſio ſeminis, taking on Him the ſeed.

III. 3 3. Laſtly, of this terme [Abrahams ſeed] the choice of that word, or terme to expreſſe mankinde by, thus taken on by Him. That He ſaith not: But Men He took: or, But, the ſeed of Adam; or, the ſeed of the Woman He took: But, the ſeed of Abraham He took.

1. Of

1 OF the parties compared; Angels and Men. Theſe two we muſt firſt compare, that we may the more clearly ſee the greatneſſe of the grace and benefit, this day, vouchſafed us. No long proceſſe will need, to lay before you, how farre inferiour our Nature is, to that of the Angels; it is a compariſon without compariſon. It is too apparent, if we be laid together, or weighed together, we ſhall be found minus habentes, farre too light. They are, in expreſſe termes, ſaid, (both, in the Old, and in the New Teſtament) to excell us in power: And as in power, ſo in all the reſt. This one thing may ſuffice, to ſhew the odds: That our Nature, that we, when we are at our very higheſt perfection, (it is even thus expreſſed, that) we come neare, or are therein like to, or as an Angell. Perfect beauty, in S. Stephen: They ſaw his face, as the face of an Angell. Perfect wiſdome in David: My Lord the King is wiſe as an Angell of GOD. Perfect eloquence in S. Paul: Though I ſpeake with the tongues of Men, nay of Angels. All our excellency, our higheſt and moſt perfect eſtate, is but to be, as they: therefore, they above us farre.

I. The Parties compared. MEN with ANGELS. Pſal. 103. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 11. Acts 6 15. 2 Sam. 14. 20. 1 Cor. 13. 1.

But, to come nearer: What are Angels? Surely, they are ſpirits; Glorious ſpirits; Heavenly ſpirits; Immortall ſpirits. For their Nature or ſubſtance, Spirits: For their Quality, or property, Glorious: For their Place, or abode, Heavenly: For their Durance, or continuance, Immortall.

Heb. 1. 14. Heb. 9. 5. Mat. 24 36. Luke 20. 36.

And: what is the ſeed of Abraham, but, as Abraham himſelfe is? And, what is Abraham? Let him anſwer himſelfe; I am duſt and aſhes. What is the ſeed of Abraham? Let one anſwer, in the perſons of all the reſt; Dicens putredini, &c. ſaying to rottenneſſe, thou art my mother, and to the wormes, ye are my brethren. 1. They are ſpirits; now, what are we, what is the ſeed of Abraham? Fleſh. And what is the very harveſt of this ſeed of fleſh? what, but corruption, and rottenneſſe, and wormes? There is the ſubſtance of our bodies.

Gen. 18. 27. Iob 17. 14. Gal. 6. 8.

2. They, glorious ſpirits: We, vile bodies (beare with it, it is the Holy Ghoſts own terme, Who ſhall change our vile bodies.) And not only baſe and vile, but filthy and uncleane: ex immundo conceptum ſemine, conceived of uncleane ſeed: There is the metall. And, the mould is no better: the wombe, wherein we were conceived, vile, baſe, filthy, and uncleane. There is our quality.

Phil. 3. 21. Iob 14. 4. Pſal. 51. 6.

3. They, heavenly ſpirits, Angels of Heaven: that is, their place of abode is in heaven above. Ours is here below, in the duſt; inter pulices, & culices, tineas, araneas, & vermes; Our place is here among fleas, and flies, moths, and ſpiders, and crawling wormes. There is our place of dwelling.

4. They, immortall ſpirits; that is their durance. Our time is proclaimed in the Prophet: Fleſh, All fleſh is graſſe, and the glory of it, as the floure of the field; (From Aprill to Iune.) The Sithe commeth; nay, the wind but bloweth, and we are gone. Withering ſooner than the graſſe, which is ſhort: nay, fading ſooner, than the floure of the graſſe, which is much ſhorter: nay, (ſaith Iob) rubbed in peeces more eaſily, than any moth.

Eſay 40 6. Iob 4. 19.

This we are, to them, if you lay us together. And, if you weigh us upon the ballance, we are altogether lighter than vanity it ſelf: there is our weight. And, if you value us; Man is but a thing of nought: there is our worth. Hoc eſt omnis homo; this is Abrahams and this is Abrahams ſeed. And who would ſtand to compare theſe with Angels? Verily, there is no compariſon; They are, incomparably, far better than the beſt of us.

MEN, by themſelves. Pſal. 62. 11. Pſal 144. 4. Rom. 4. 17.

Now then; this is the rule of reaſon, the guide of all choice, Evermore to take the better, and leave the worſe. Thus would man do; Hæc eſt lex hominis. Here then commeth the matter of admiration: notwithſtanding theſe things ſtand thus, between the Angels and Abrahams ſeed: (they, Spirits, glorious, heavenly, immortall;) yet tooke He not them; yet, in no wiſe, took He them; But the ſeed of Abraham. The ſeed of Abraham, with their bodies, vile bodies, earthly bodies of clay, bodies of mortality, corruption; and death: Theſe He took, theſe He took for all that. Angels, and not men; So, in reaſon, it ſhould be: Men, and not Angels; So it is: And, that granted to us, that denied to them. Granted to us, ſo baſe; that denied them, ſo glorious. Denied, and ſtrongly denied; οὐ, διάνυσις; Not, not in any wiſe, not at any hand, to them. They, every way, in every thing thing elſe, above, and before us; in this, beneath and behinde us. And we (unworthy, wretched men that we are,) above and before the Angels, the Cherubim, the Seraphim, and all the Principalities, and Thrones, in this dignity. This being beyond the rules and reach of all reaſon, is ſurely matter of aſtoniſhment: Τοῦτο, &c. (ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome,) this, it caſteth me into an extaſie, and maketh me to imagine, of our Nature, ſome greater matter, I cannot well expreſſe what. Thus it is: It is the Lord, let Him do what ſeemeth good in His owne eyes.

1 Sam 3.18.

II. Wherein they are compared.

And, with this, I paſſe over to the ſecond point. This little is enough, to ſhew what odds between the Parties here matched. It will much better appeare (this) when we ſhall weigh the word ἐπιλαμβάνεται, that, wherein they are matched. Wherein, two degrees we obſerved: 1. Apprehendit, and 2. Apprehendit Semen.

I. In apprehendit, He took. Oecumen. in locum.

1. Of Apprehendit, firſt. Many words were more obvious, and offered themſelves to the Apoſtle (no doubt,) Suſcepit, or Aſſumpſit, or other ſuch like: This word was ſought for (certainly,) and made choice of (ſaith the Greeke Scholiaſt: And he can beſt tell us, It is no common word, and tell us alſo what it weigheth:) Δηλοῖ γὰρ (ſaith he) ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἐφιππάμεθα, ὅτε ἐδιώκομεν, καὶ διώκων ἔφθασε, καὶ φθάσας ἐπελάβετο: This word ſuppoſeth a flight of the one party, and a purſuit of the other: A purſuit eager, and ſo long, till he overtake; and when he hath overtaken, ἐπιλαμβανόμενος, apprehendens, laying faſt hold, and ſeazing ſurely on him. So two things it ſuppoſeth; [1] a flight of the one, and [2] a hot purſuit of the other.

It may well ſuppoſe a flight. For, of the * Angels there were that fled, that kept not their originall, but forſooke and fell away from their firſt eſtate. And Man fell, and fled too; and hid himſelfe in the thicke trees, from the preſence of GOD. And this is the firſt iſſue. Upon the Angels flight, He ſtirred not; ſate ſtill; never vouchſafed to follow them: Let them go whither they would; as if they had not beene worth the while. Nay, He never aſſumed ought, by way of promiſe, for them: No promiſe in the Old, to be borne and to ſuffer; No Goſpell, in the New Teſtament, neither was borne nor ſuffered, for them.

* Iude v.6. Gen. 3 8.

But, when Man fell, He did all. Made after him preſently, with Vbi es: ſought to reclaime him, What have you done? Why have you done ſo? Proteſted enmitie to him, that had drawne him thus away: Made his aſſumpſit of the Womans ſeed.

And (which is more,) when that would not ſerve, ſent after him ſtill, by the hand of His Prophets, to ſollicit his return.

And (which is yet more,) when that would not ſerve neither; went after him (Himſelf) in perſon: left His ninety and nine in the fold, and got Him after the loſt ſheep: Never left, till He found him, laid him on His ſhoulders, and brought him home againe.

Luke 15.5.

It was much, even but to looke after us; to reſpect us, ſo farre, who were not worth the caſt of His eye: Much, to call us backe, or vouchſafe us an Vbi es.

But more, when we came not for all that, to ſend after us. For, if He had but only been content to give us leave, to come to Him againe; but given us leave to lay hold on Him, to touch but the hemme of His garment; (Himſelfe ſitting ſtill, and never calling to us, nor ſending after us;) it had been favour enough: farre above that we were worth. But not only to ſend by others, but to come Himſelfe after us; to ſay, Corpus apta mihi, Ecce venio; Get Me a body, I will My ſelfe after him: this was exceeding much. That we fled, and He followed us flying.

But yet, this is not all; this is but to follow. He not only followed, but did it ſo, with ſuch eagerneſſe, with ſuch earneſtneſſe, as, that is worthy a ſecond conſideration. To follow, is what; yet that may be done faintly, and afarre off: but to follow thorow thick and thin; to follow hard, and not to give over; never to give over, till he overtake: that is it.

And, He gave not over His purſuit, though it were long and laborious, and He full weary; though it caſt Him into a ſweat, a ſweat of blood. Angelis ſuis non pepercit (ſaith S. Peter,) The Angels offending, He ſpared not them: Man offending, He ſpared him; and to ſpare him (ſaith S. Paul) He ſpared not His own Sonne: Nor His owne Sonne ſpared not Himſelfe, but followed His purſuit, through danger, diſtreſſe, yea, through death death it ſelfe. Followed, and ſo followed, as nothing made Him leave following, till He overtooke.

And when He had overtaken (for thoſe two are but preſuppoſed, the more kindly to bring in the word ἐπιλάβετο·) When (I ſay) he had overtaken them, commeth in fitly and properly, ἐπιλαμβάνεται. Which is not every taking; not ſuſcipere, or aſſumere: But, manum injicere, arripere, apprehendere; to ſeaze upon it with great vehemency, to lay hold on it with both hands, as upon a thing we are glad we have got, and will be loth to let go againe. We know, aſſumpſit, and apprehendit, both, take; but apprehendit, with farre more fervour and zeale, than the other. Aſſumpſit, any common ordinary thing; apprehendit, a thing of price, which we hold deere, and much eſteeme of.

Now, to the former compariſon, of what they, and what we, (but ſpecially, what we,) add this threefold conſideration: 1. That He denied it the Angels, Οὐ: denied it peremptorily, Οὐδαμοῦ; Neither looked, nor called, nor ſent, nor went after them: Neither tooke hold of them, nor ſuffered them to take hold of Him, or any promiſe from Him: Denied it them, and denied it them thus. 2. But, granted it us; and granted it, how? That He followed us firſt; and that, with paine: and ſeazed on us, after; and that with great deſire: We flying, and not worth the following: and lying, and not worth the taking up. 1 That He gave not leave for us to come to Him: or, ſate ſtill, and ſuffered us to returne, and take hold: (yet, this He did.) 2 That He did not look after us, nor call after us, nor ſend after us onely: (yet, all this He did, too.) 3 But, Himſelfe roſe out of His place, and came after us; and with hand and foot, made after us: Followed us, with His feet; and ſeazed on us, with His hands; and that, per viam, non aſſumptionis, ſed apprehenſionis, (the manner, more than the thing it ſelf.) All theſe, if we lay together, and, when we have done, weigh them well, it is able to work with us. Surely, it muſt needs demonſtrate to us, the care, the love, the affection, He had to us, we know no cauſe why; being but (as Abraham was) duſt, and, (as Abrahams ſeed (Iacob) ſaith) leſſe; and not worthy of any one of theſe: no, not of the meaneſt of his mercies. Eſpecially, when the ſame thing ſo graciouſly granted us, was denied to no leſſe perſons than the Angels, far more worthy than we. Sure, He would not have done it for us, and not for them; if He had not eſteemed of us, made more account of us, than of them. Gen. 18 32, 18

And yet, behold a far greater than all theſe: Which is, apprehendit ſemen. He took not the perſon, but He took the ſeed, (that is) the Nature of man. Many there be, that can be content to take upon them the perſons, and to repreſent them; whoſe natures, nothing could hire them once to take upon them. But, the ſeed is the Nature; yea, (as the Philoſopher ſaith) naturæ intimum, the very internall eſſence of nature is the ſeed. The Apoſtle ſheweth, what his meaning is, of this taking the ſeed, when (the verſe next afore, ſave one) he ſaith, that Foraſmuch as the children were partakers of fleſh and bloud, He alſo would take part with them, by taking the ſame. To take the fleſh and bloud, He muſt needs take the ſeed: for, from the ſeed, the fleſh and bloud doth proceed: which is nothing elſe but the bleſſed apprehenſion of our Nature, by this dayes Nativity. Whereby, He, and we, become not only one fleſh; (as man and wife do, by conjugall union:) but, even one blood too, (as brethren, by naturall union:) Per omnia ſimilis (ſaith the Apoſtle, in the next verſe after againe) ſin only ſet aſide: Alike and ſutable to us in all things: fleſh, and blood, and nature, and all. So taking the ſeed of Abraham, as that He became (Himſelfe) the ſeed of Abraham: So was, and ſo is truly termed, in the Scriptures. Which is it, that doth conſummate, and knit up all this point, and is the head of all. For, in all other apprehenſions, we may let go, and lay down, when we will; but, this taking on the ſeed, the nature of man, can never be put off. It is an aſſumption, without a depoſition. One we are, He and we, and ſo we muſt be; One, as this Day, ſo for ever.

2 In apprehendit Semen.

Verſe 14.

Eph. 5. 28, 29.

Verſe 17.

And, emergent, or iſſuing from this, are all thoſe other apprehendings, or ſeaſures of the perſons of men, (by which, GOD layeth hold on them, and bringeth them backe from errour to truth, and from ſinne to grace,) that have beene, from the beginning, or ſhall be to the end of the world. That, of Abraham himſelfe, whom GOD laid hold of, and brought from out of Vr of the Chaldeans, and the Idols, he there worſhipped. That of our Apoſtle S. Paul, that was apprehended in the way to Damaſcus.

Gen. 15. 7. Acts

Luk.12.62,63 Damaſcus. That, of Saint Peter; that in the very act of ſinne, was ſeazed on with bitter remorſe for it. All thoſe: and all theſe, whereby men daily are laid hold of in ſpirit, and taken from the by-paths of ſin, and errour, and reduced into the right way; and ſo their perſons recovered to God, and ſeazed to His uſe. All theſe apprehenſions (of the branches,) come from this apprehenſion (of the Seed:) they all have their beginning and their being, from this dayes taking, even Semen apprehendit. Our receiving His Spirit, for His taking our fleſh. This ſeed, wherewith Abraham is made the Sonne of GOD, from the ſeed, wherewith CHRIST is made the ſonne of Abraham.

And, the end, why He thus tooke upon Him the ſeed of Abraham, was, becauſe He took upon Him to deliver the ſeed of Abraham. Deliver them He could not, except He deſtroyed death, and the Lord of death, the Devill. Them He could not deſtroy, unleſſe He died: Die He could not, except He were Mortall: Mortall He could not be, except He tooke our Nature on Him, that is, the ſeed of Abraham. But, taking it, He became mortall, died, deſtroyed death, delivered us; was (Himſelfe) apprehended, that we might be let go.

One thing more then, out of this word Apprehendit. The former toucheth His love, whereby He ſo laid hold of us, as of a thing very precious to Him: This (now) toucheth our danger; whereby, He ſo caught us, as, if He had not, it had been a great venture, but we had ſunk and periſhed. One, and the ſame word [Apprehendit] ſorteth well, to expreſſe both His affection, whereby He did it; and our great perill, whereby we needed it. We had been (before) laid hold of, and apprehended, by one, mentioned in the 14.verſe, he that hath power of Death, even the Divell: We were in danger to be ſwallowed up by him; we needed one to lay hold on us faſt, and to pluck us out of his jawes. So He did. And I would have you to mark: It is the ſame word that is uſed to S. Peter, in like danger, (*Mat.*14.13.) when, being ready to ſink, ἐπελάβετο, CHRIST caught him by the hand, and ſaved him. The ſame here, in the Greeke; that, in the Hebrew, is uſed (*Gen.*19.16.) to Lot and his daughters, in the like danger, when the Angels caught him, and by ſtrong hand plucked him out of Sodome. One delivered, from the water; the other, from the fire.

And it may truly be ſaid, (inaſmuch as all GOD's promiſes, as well touching temporall, as eternall deliverances; and as well corporall, as ſpirituall; be in CHRIST yea and Amen: Yea, in the giving forth; Amen, in the performing) that even our temporall delivery, from the dangers that daily compaſſe us about; even from this laſt, ſo great, and ſo fearfull, as the like was never imagined before; all have their ground from this Great apprehenſion: are fruits of this Seed, here, this bleſſed Seed, for whoſe ſake, and for whoſe truths ſake, that we (though unworthily) profeſſe, we were by Him caught hold of, and ſo plucked out of it: And, but for which Seed, facti eſſemus ſicut Sodoma, We had been even as Sodome, and periſhed in the fire; and the powder there laid had even blowen us up all.

Rom.9.29.

Hebr.8.9. And may not I add to this [apprehendit, ut liberaret,] the other (in the eighth Chapter following) apprehendit, ut manu duceret: to this [of taking us by the hand, to deliver us,] that, [of taking us by the hand, to guide us:] and ſo, out of one word, preſent Him to you, not onely as our Deliverer, but as our guide too? Our Deliverer, to rid us from him, that hath power of death; Our Guide, to Him, that hath power of life. To lead us, even by the way of truth, to the path of life; by the ſtations of well-doing, to the manſions of His Fathers houſe. Seeing, He hath ſignified, it is His pleaſure not to let goe our hands, but to hold us ſtill, till He have brought us, that where He is, we may alſo be. This alſo is incident to apprehendit; but, becauſe it is out of the compaſſe of the Text, I touch it onely, and paſſe it.

Iohn 14.2. Iohn 14.3.

The reaſons of this apprehendit. * Luk.1.43. And, can we now paſſe by this, but we muſt ask the queſtion, that S. Iohn Baptiſts Mother ſomtime asked, on the like occaſion? * unde mihi hoc? (ſaith ſhe:) Vnde nobis hoc? (may we ſay:) Not, quòd mater Domini; but, quòd Dominus ipſe venit ad nos; Whence commeth this unto us, that the LORD Himſelfe thus came unto us, and took us, letting the Angels go? Angels are better than the beſt of us; and, reaſon would, ever, the better ſhould be taken: how then were we taken, that were not the better?

Sure,

Sure, not without good ground, (ſay the Fathers,) who have adventured to ſearch out the Theologie of this point: ſuch reaſons, as might ſerve for inducements, to Him, that is, pronus ad miſerendum, naturally inclined to pity; why, upon us, He would rather have compaſſion. And, divers ſuch I finde: I will touch only one or two of them.

1 First, Mans caſe was more to be pitied, than theirs, becauſe man was tempted, by another; had a Tempter. The Angels had none. None, tempted them; None, but themſelves. Et levius eſt alienâ mente peccâſſe, quàm propriâ (ſaith S. Auguſtine.) The offence is the leſſe, if it grow from another, than if it breed in our ſelves: And, the leſſe the offence, the more pardonable.

2 Againe, of the Angels, when ſome fell, other ſome ſtood; and ſo, they (all) did not periſh. But, in the firſt man, all men fell; and ſo, every mothers childe had died, and no fleſh beene ſaved; For, all were in Adam; and ſo, in, and with Adam, all had come to nought. Then commeth the Pſalmiſts queſtion; Nunquid in vanum, &c? What haſt thou made all men for nought? That cannot be: So great wiſdome cannot doe ſo great a work, in vaine. But in vaine it had beene, if God had not ſhewed mercy; And, therefore was mans caſe rather, of the twaine, matter of commiſeration. This is Leo. Pſa. 87. 47.

3 And thus have they travelled, and theſe have they found, why He did apprehend us rather than them. It may be, not amiſſe. But, we will content our ſelves, for our unde nobis hoc? whence commeth this to us, with the anſwer of the Scriptures: Whence, but from the tender mercies of our God, whereby this day hath viſited us? Zelus Domini (ſaith Eſay) The zeale of the Lord of Hoſts ſhall bring it to paſſe: propter nimiam charitatem (ſaith the Apoſtle) Sic Deus dilexit (ſaith He, He, Himſelfe;) And wee (taught by Him) ſay, Even ſo Lord, for, ſo it was thy good pleaſure thus to doe. III The CHOISE Why Abrahams Seed.

All this while are we about taking the ſeed: the ſeed in generall. But now, why Abrahams ſeed? Since it is Angels, in the firſt part, why not Men, in the ſecond, but ſeed? Or, if ſeed to expreſſe our nature; why not the ſeed of the woman, but the ſeed of Abraham? It may be thought, becauſe he wrote to the Hebrewes, he rather uſed this terme of Abrahams ſeed, becauſe ſo they were, and ſo loved to be ſtiled, and he would pleaſe them. But, I finde, the ancient Fathers goe further; and, out of it, raiſe matter, both of comfort, and of direction: and that, for us too.

I For our comfort.

1. Of comfort, firſt; with reference to our Saviour, who taking on Him Abrahams ſeed, muſt withall take on Him the ſignature of Abrahams ſeed, and be, as He was, circumciſed. There is a great matter dependeth even on that. For, being circumciſed, Hee became a debtor, to keep the whole Law of God: which bond we had broken, and forfeited, and incurred the curſe annexed, and were ready to be apprehended, and committed for it. That ſo, He, keeping the Law, might recover backe the chirographum contra nos, the hand-writing that was againſt us; and ſo, ſet us free of the debt. This Bond did not relate, to the ſeed of the Woman; it pertained (properly) to the ſeed of Abraham: therefore, that terme fitteth us better. Without faile, two diſtinct benefits they are: [1] Factus homo, and [2] Factus ſub lege; and, ſo doth S. Paul recount them. Made man; that is, the ſeed of the Woman: and, made under the Law; that is, the ſeed of Abraham. To little purpoſe, He ſhould have taken the one, if He had not alſo under taken the other, and as the ſeed of Abraham, entred bonds for us, and taken our debt upon Him. This firſt. Gal. 4. 4. Col. 2. 14.

2 For our direction.

2. And, beſides this, there is yet another; referring it to the Nation, or People, whom He tooke upon Him. It is ſure, they were, of all other people, the moſt untoward; both, of the hardeſt hearts, and of the ſtiffeſt necks; and (as the Heathen man noteth them) of the worſt natures. GOD Himſelfe telleth them ſo; it was, for no vertue of theirs, or for any pure naturals in them, that He tooke them to Him, for they were that way, the worſt of the whole earth. And ſo then, the taking of Abrahams ſeed amounteth to as much, as that of S. Paul, (no leſſe true than worthy of all men to be received;) that He came into the world to ſave ſinners; and that, chiefe ſinners, (it is certain) they were; even the ſeed of Abraham, of all the ſeed of Adam. Deut. 9. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 15.

But, not for comfort only, but for direction too, doth he uſe Abrahams name here. Even to entaile the benefit comming by it, to his ſeed; that is to ſuch as he was.

Gen.22.18. For, for his ſake were all Nations bleſſed. And Chriſt though He tooke the ſeed of the Woman, yet doth not benefit any but the ſeed of Abraham; even thoſe that follow the ſteps of His faith. For, by faith Abraham tooke hold of Him, by whom, He was in

Rom. 4. 3. his, to Him, was accounted for righteouſneſſe. To him was, and to us ſhall be (ſaith the Apoſtle,) if we be in like ſort apprehenſive of Him. Either, as Abraham; or, as the true ſeed of Abraham (Iacob) was, that tooke ſuch hold on him, as he ſaid plainly, Non demittam te; niſi benedixeris mihi; without a bleſſing, he would not let Him go. Sure-
Gen. 32. 26. Rom. 9. 7. ly, not the Hebrewes alone; nay, not the Hebrewes at all, for all their carnall propagation: They only are Abrahams ſeed, that lay hold of the word of promiſe. And, the Ga-
Gal 3. 6. lathians ſo doing, though they were meere heathen men, (as we be,) yet hee telleth them, they are Abrahams ſeed, and ſhall be bleſſed together with him.

But. that is not all; there goeth more to the making us Abrahams ſeed, (as Chriſt Himſelfe, the true ſeed, teacheth both them and us.) Saith He; if ye be Abrahams ſons, then muſt ye do the works of Abraham. Which the Apoſtle well calleth, the ſteps, or im-

Gal 5. 6. 1 Tim. 6. 10. [1] one of S. Paul; [2] the other of S. Iames; Work, for both hands to apprehend. Both, [1] Charitas; quæ ex fide; and [2] fides quæ per charitatem operatur. By which we ſhall bee able (ſaith S. Paul) to lay hold of eternall life; and ſo, be Abrahams ſeed here, at the firſt; and come to Abrahams boſome there, at the laſt. So have we a briefe of Semen Abrahæ.

The uſe of the Text
1 For meditation
* Pſal 8. 4. Now what is to be commended to us out of this Text, for us to lay hold of? Verily firſt, to take us to our meditation; the meditation, which the* Pſalmiſt hath, and which the Apoſtle (in this Chapter,) voucheth out of him (at the ſixth verſe;) When I conſider (ſaith he) the Heavens, (lay we, the Angels of Heaven) and ſee thoſe Glorious Spirits paſſed by, and man taken, even to ſigh with him, and ſay, Lord, what is man, (either Adam, or Abraham) that thou ſhouldſt be thus mindfull of him, or the ſeed, or ſons of either, that thou ſhouldeſt make this do about him! The caſe is heere farre otherwiſe, far more worth our conſideration. There, Thou haſt made him a little lower: Here, thou haſt made him a great deale higher, than the Angels. For they, this day firſt, and ever ſince, daily have, and do adore our Nature, in the perſonall Union with the DEITIE. Look Heb 1. 6. you (ſaith the Apoſtle) when He brought His only bogotten ſonne into the World, this Hee proclaimed before Him, Let all the Angels worſhip Him: and ſo they did. And upon this
1 Chron. 21. 16 Apoc 22. 9. very dayes taking the ſeed, hath enſued (as the Fathers note) a great alteration. Before in the Old Teſtament, they ſuffered David to ſit upon his knees before them: Since (in the New) they endure not, S. Iohn ſhould fall downe to them, but acknowledge, the caſe is altered, now; and no more ſuperiority, but all fellow-ſervants. And even in this one part, two things preſent themſelves unto us: [1] His humility, Qui non eſt confuſus (as, in the eleventh verſe, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) who was not confounded, thus to take our Nature. [2] And withall, the Honour and happineſſe of Abrahams ſeed, ut digni haberentur, Luk. 21 35. that were counted worthy to be taken, ſo neere unto him.

2 For reſolution. The next point: That, after we have well conſidered it, we be affected with it;
Ioh 8. 56. and that, no otherwiſe, than Abraham was. Abraham ſaw it, even this day, and but afarre off, and He rejoyced at it: And ſo ſhall we, on it, if we be his true ſeed. It brought forth a Benedictus, and a Magnificat, from the true ſeed of Abraham; If it doe not the like, from us, certainly it but flotes in our braines; we but warble about it: But wee believe it not, and therefore, neither do we rightly underſtand it. Sure I am, if the Angels had ſuch a feaſt to keep, if He had done the like for them, they would hold it with all joy and jubilee. They rejoyce of our good; but, if they had one of their own, they muſt needs do it after another manner; farre more effectually. If we do not, as they would do, (were the caſe theirs,) it is becauſe we are ſhort, in conceiving the excellency of the benefit. It would have (ſurely) due obſervation, if it had his due and ſerious meditation.

Luk 12 48. Further, we are to underſtand this: That to whom much is given, of them will much be be required; and (as Gregory well ſaith) Cum creſcunt dona, creſcunt & rationes donorum. As the gifts grow, ſo grow the accompts too: Therefore, that by this new dignity befallen us, Neceſsitas quædam nobis impoſita eſt (ſaith S. Auguſtine,) there is a certaine neceſſity laid upon us, to become, in ſome meaſure, ſutable unto it; in that we are one, one fleſh; and one blood, with the Sonne of God. Being thus in honor, we ought to underſtand our eſtate, and not fall into the Pſalmiſts reproofe, that we become like the beaſts that periſh. For, if we do (indeed) think, our Nature is ennobled by this ſo high a conjunction, we ſhall henceforth hold our ſelves more deare, and at a higher rate, than to proſtitute our ſelves to ſinne, for every baſe, trifling, and tranſitory pleaſure. For tell me, men that are taken to this degree, ſhall any of them proove a Divell (as Chriſt ſaid of Iudas:) or ever (as theſe with us, of late) have to do with any deviliſh or Iudaſly fact? Shall any man after this aſſumption, be as Horſe, or Mule, that have no underſtanding; and, in a Chriſtian profeſſion, live a bruitiſh life? Nay then, S. Paul tels us further, that if we henceforth walke like men, like but even carnall and naturall men, it is a fault in us. Somewhat muſt appeare, in us, more than in ordinary men, who are vouchſafed ſo extraordinary a favour. Somwhat more, than common, would come from us, if it were but for this Dayes ſake.

1 Cor. 3. 3.

To conclude, not only thus to frame meditations and reſolutions, but even ſome practice too out of this act of apprehenſion It is very agreeable to reaſon, ſaith the Apoſtle, that we endeavour and make a proffer, if we may by any meanes to apprehend Him, in His, by whom we are thus, in our Nature, apprehended, or, as He termeth it, comprehended, even CHRIST JESUS; and be united to Him, this day, as He was to us, this day, by a mutuall and reciprocall apprehenſion. We may ſo, and we are bound ſo: verè dignum & juſtum eſt. And we do ſo, ſo oft, as we doe, with S. Iames, lay hold of, apprehend, or receive inſitum verbum, the word which is daily grafted into us. For, the Word He is, and, in the Word, He is received by us. But, that is not the proper of this day, unleſſe there be another joyned unto it. This day, verbum caro factum eſt; and ſo muſt be apprehended, in both. But eſpecially in His fleſh, as this day giveth it, as this day would have us. Now, the bread which we breake, is it not the partaking of the body, of the fleſh, of JESUS CHRIST? It is ſurely; and by it, and by nothing more, are wee made partakers of this bleſſed union. A little before, He ſaid, becauſe the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo would take part with them; May not we ſay the ſame? Becauſe He hath ſo done, taken ours of us, we alſo enſuing His ſteps, will participate with Him, and with His fleſh which He hath taken of us. It is moſt kindly, to take part with Him, in that, which He took part in, with us; and that to no other end, but that He might make the receiving of it by us a meanes, whereby He might dwell in us and we in Him, He taking our fleſh, and we receiving His Spirit; by His fleſh, which He tooke of us, receiving His ſpirit, which he imparteth to us; That, as He, by ours, became conſors humanæ naturæ; ſo we, by His, might become conſortes divinæ naturæ, partakers of the Divine nature. Verily, it is the moſt ſtreight and perfect taking hold that is. No vnion ſo knitteth, as it. Not conſanguinity; Brethren fall out: Nor marriage; Man and wife are ſevered. But, that which is nouriſhed, and the nouriſhment, wherewith, they never are, never can be ſevered; but remaine one for ever.

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Wedneſday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCVI.
being CHRISTMAS day.

ESA. Chap. IX. Ver. VI.

For unto us a Childe is borne, and unto us a Sonne is given; and the Government is upon His ſhoulder; and He ſhall call His name WONDERFVLL, COVNSELLER, THE MIGHTY GOD, THE EVERLASTING FATHER, THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

THE words are out of Eſay: and if we had not heard him named, might well have beene thought, out of one of the Evangeliſts, as more like a Story than a Prophecy. Is borne, is given, ſound, as if they had beene written at, or ſince the birth of Chriſt: yet were they written more than ſix hundred yeares before.

There is no one thing ſo great a ſtay to our faith, as that we finde the things, we believe, ſo plainly fore-told, ſo many yeares before. Is borne, is given? Nay, ſhall be; ſpeake like a Prophet: Nay, is; loquens de futuro per modum præteriti; ſpeaking of things to come, as if they were already paſt. This cannot be, that GOD, Rom. 4. 17. who calleth things that are not, as if they were, and challengeth any other, to doe the like. Eſay 41. 23. It is true; miracles move much: but yet even in Scripture, we read of lying miracles: 2 Theſ. 2. 9. and the poſſibility of falſe dealing leaveth place of doubt, even in thoſe that be true. But, for one, ſix hundred yeares before He is borne, to cauſe prophecies, plaine direct prophecies to be written of Him: that paſſeth all conceit; cannot be imagined, how poſſible it may be, but by GOD alone. Therefore Mahomet, and all falſe Prophets Apoc. 19. 10. came, (at leaſt boaſted to come) in ſignes. but, challeng them, at this; not a word, no mention of them in the world, till they were borne. True therefore, that S. Iohn ſaith: 1. Pet. 1. 19. The teſtimony (that is, the great principall teſtimony) of JESUS, is the ſpirit of Prophecy. It made S. Peter, when he had recounted what he himſelfe had heard, in the Mount (yet, as if there might be, even in that, deceptio ſenſus) to addo, Habemus etiam firmiorem ſermonem prophetiæ: We have a word of prophecy, beſides; and that firmiorem: the ſurer of the twaine.

This prophecy is of a certaine Child. And, if we aske, of this place, (as the Eunuch did, of another, in this Prophet) Of whom ſpeaketh the Prophet this? we muſt make the Act. 8. 34. anſwer that there Philip doth; of Chriſt; and the teſtimony of Ieſus is the ſpirit of prophecy. The ancient Jewes make the ſame. It is but a fond ſhift, to draw it (as the latter Jewes do) to Ezechias: it will not cleave. It was ſpoken to Ahaz, Ezechias father, now King: and that after the great overthrow he had, by the King of Syria and Iſrael, in the fourth of his raigne. But, it is deduced, by plaine ſupputation, out of 2 King. 18. Ezechias was nine yeares old, before Ahaz his Father came to the crowne. It was by that time, too late to tell it for tydings, (then) that he was borne; he then, being thirteene yeares of age.

Beſide, how ſenſeleſſe is it, to apply, to Ezechias, that in the next verſe; that, Verſ. 7. of his government and peace there ſhould be none end, that his throne ſhould be eſtabliſhed from henceforth for ever: whereas his peace and government (both) had an end within few yeares?

To

To us it is ſufficient, that the fore-part of the Chapter is, by S. Matthew, expreſly applyed to our Saviour: and that, this verſe doth inſeparably depend on that, and is alleadged as the reaſon of it; For, unto us. Of Him therefore, we take it, and to Him apply it, that cannot be taken, of any, or applyed to any other, but Him. Mat. 4 15.

But, how came Eſay to ſpeak of Chriſt to Ahaz? Thus: Ahaz was then in very great diſtreſſe; he had loſt in one day eighty thouſand of his people; and two hundred thouſand of them (more) carried away captives. And now, the two Kings were raiſing new power againſt him: The times grew very much overcaſt. And, this you ſhall obſerve: The chiefeſt prophecies of Chriſt came ever, in ſuch times: That S. Peter did well, to reſemble the word of prophecy to a candle, in loco caliginoſo, a dark room. Iacobs of Shilo, in Egypt, a dark place: Daniel's, of Meſſias in Babylon; a place as dark, as Egypt: This of Eſay, when the ten Tribes were on the point of carrying away, under Hoſhea. That of Ieremy (A Woman ſhall incloſe a man) when Iuda, in the ſame caſe, under Iechonias. Ever, in dark times, who therefore needed moſt the light of comfort. The occaſion of this Prophecy. 2 Pet. 1. 19. Gen. 49 10. Dan 9 24 25. Ier. 31. 22.

But, what's this to Ahaz caſe? He looked for another meſſage from him; How to eſcape his enemies. A cold comfort might he think it, to be preached to of Immanuel. Indeed, he ſo thought it; and therefore he gave over Eſay, and betooke him to Shebna, who wiſhed him to ſeek to the King of Aſſur for help, and let Immanuel go. Yet for all that, even then to ſpeak of Chriſt, being looked into, it is neither impertinent, nor out of ſeaſon. With all the Prophets it is uſuall, in the calamities of this people, to have recourſe ſtill, to the fundamentall promiſe of the Meſſias. For that, till He were come, they might be ſure they could not be rooted out; but muſt be preſerved, if it were but for this Childs ſake, till He were borne. And yet, if they could believe on Him, otherwiſe it is no match: Niſi credideritis. Then, thus the Prophets argue: He will not deny you this favour, for He will grant you a far greater than this, even His own Son; and by him a far greater deliverance; and, if He can deliver you from the devouring fire of Hell, much more, from them: and if give you peace with God, much more with them. So, teaching thoſe that will learne, the only right way to compaſſe their owne ſafety, is by making ſure work of Immanuel, God with us. To the true regard of whom, GOD hath annexed the promiſes as well of this, as of the other life. All are, as lines drawn from this center, all in Him, yea and Amen. Which all ſerve, to raiſe Ahaz up, and his people, to receive this Child, and to rejoyce in His day, as their Father Abraham did. Eſay 7 9. 1 Tim. 4 8. 2 Cor. 1. 20. John 8. 56.

Thus, the Occaſion you have heard. The parts, ad oculum evidently, are two: [1] a Child-birth: and a [2] Baptiſme: [1] The Child-birth, in theſe: For unto you &c. [2] The Baptiſme, in theſe: His name, &c. The Diviſion

In the former; 1. Then of the deriving of an intereſt to us, in theſe [To us,] two times. And that is of two ſorts: [1] By being borne; a right, by his birth. [2] By being given: a right, by a deed of gift. I. 1 2

In the latter, of His Baptiſme, is ſet downe His ſtile conſiſting of five peeces, conteining five uſes, for which He was thus given: each to be conſidered in his order. II

IT is ever our firſt care, to begin with, and to ſettle the maine point of the myſtery; [1] Nature, [2] Perſon, [3] Office: and after, to look to our own benefit by them. As Man.
As God

We have two words, Child, and Son: neither, waſt. But, if no more in the ſecond than in the firſt, the firſt, had been enough: if the firſt enough, the ſecond ſuperfluous. But in this Book, nothing is ſuperfluous. So then, two diverſe things they import.

Weigh the words: Child is not ſaid but in humanis, among men. Son may be in divinis: from heaven, God ſpake it, This is my Son: May; and muſt be, here, Mat. 17. 5.

Weigh the other two; [1] born and [2] given. That, which is borne, beginneth then (firſt) to have his being. That, which is given preſuppoſeth a former being: for, be it muſt, that it may be given.

Again,

Again, when we say born; of whom? of the Virgin His Mother: when we say Given; by whom? by GOD His Father.

Esa.7.11. Esay promised, the sign, we should have, should be from the deep here beneath, and should be from the height above: both, a Child, from beneath; and a Son, from above. To conclude: it is an exposition decreed by the Fathers assembled in the Councell of Sevil: who, upon these grounds, expound this very place so: The Child, to import His Humane; The Son, His Divine Nature.

Can.2.13. All along His life, you shall see these two. At His birth: A Cratch for the Child; a Star for the Son: A company of Shepheards viewing the Child; A Quire of Angels celebrating the Son. In his life: Hungry Himself, to shew the nature of the Child: yet feeding five thousand, to shew the power of the Son. At His death: dying on the Crosse, as the Son of Adam; at the same time disposing of Paradise, as the Son of God.

If you ask, why both these? For that, in vain had been the one, without the other, Somewhat there must be borne (by this mention of Shoulders:) meet it is every one should bear his own burden The nature, that sinned, bear his own sin; not, Ziba make the fault, and Mephibosheth bear the punishment. Our nature had sinned, that therefore ought to suffer: The reason, why a Child. But that which our nature should, our nature could not beare; not the weight of Gods wrath due to our sin: But, the Son could: the reason, why a Son. The one ought, but could not: the other could, but ought not. Therefore either alone would not serve; they must be joyned, Child and Son. But that He was a Child, He could not have suffered. But that He was a Son, He had sunk in His suffering, and not gone through with it. God had no Shoulders; Man had; but, too weak, to susteine such a weight. Therefore, that He might be lyable, He was a Child; that He might be able, He was the Son: that He might be both, He was both.

2. His Person. Gen.3.22. This, why God. But why this person, the Son? Behold, Adam would have become one of us; the fault: Behold, one of us will become Adam, is the satisfaction. Which of us would He have become? Sicut Dii, scientes; the person of knowledge. He therefore shall become Adam: A Son shall be given. Desire of knowledge, our attainder; He, in Gen.3.5. Col 2.3. whom all the treasures of knowledge, our restoring. Flesh, would have beene the Word, as wise as the Word; the cause of our ruine: meet then, the Word become flesh, that so, our ruine repaired. There is a touch given, in the name COUNSELLOR, to note out unto John 1.4. us, which person; as well, the SONNE.

3 One more; if these joyned, why is not the Son first, and then the Child; but, the Child is first, and then the Son. The Son is far the worthier, and therefore to have the place. Chap.7.14 Luk 3 31.38. And thus too it was, in His other name Immanuel, (Chap.7.) It is not Elimanu; not Vers 7. Deus Nobiscum; but, Nobiscum Deus. We, in His name, stand before God. It is so in the Gospell: the Son of David, first; the Son of God after. It is but this still, zelus Domini Exercituum fecit hoc: but to shew His zeale, how deare He holdeth us, that He preferreth, and setteth us before Himselfe; and, in His very name, gives us the precedence.

The Person, briefly. The Child and the Son: these two make but one Person, cleerely; for both these have but one name, His name shall be called: and both these have but one paire of shoulders, Vpon his Shoulders. Therefore, though two natures, yet but one Eph.2.14.14. Person, in both. A meet person, to make a Mediator of God and Man, as symbolizing with either God and Man. A meete person, if there be division between them (as there was, and great thoughts of heart for it) to make an union: Ex utroq; unum seeing He was unum ex utroq;. Not man only; there lacked a shoulder of power: Not God only; there lacked the shoulder of justice: But, both together. And so have ye the two Supporters of all, [1] Iustice, and [2] Power. A meet person, to cease hostility, as having taken Gen.23.12. pledges of both heaven and earth; the chief nature in heaven, and the chief on earth: To set forward commerce between heaven and earth, by Iacobs ladder, one end touching earth, the other reaching to heaven: To incorporate either to other: himself, by his birth, being become the Son of man, by our Newbirth giving us a capacity, to become the Sons of God.

3 His Office. His Office: The Kingdome on his shoulders. For, He saw, when the Child was born, it, should so poorly be born, as (lest we should conceive of Him too meanly) He tels us, He commeth cum principatu, with a Principality; is born a Prince: and beautifieth Him with with ſuch names, as make amends for the manger? That he is not onely Puer, a Child; and Filius, a Sonne, but Princeps, a Prince.

Truth is, other Offices wee finde beſides. But, this you ſhall obſerve, that the Prophets ſpeaking of CHRIST, in good congruity ever apply themſelves, to the ſtate of them they ſpeak to; and uſe that Office and Name, which beſt agree to the matter in hand. Here that which was ſought, by Ahaz, was protection: that, we know, is for a King: As a King therfore he ſpeaketh of him. Elſe-where He is brought forth by David, as a Prieſt: and againe elſe-where by Moſes, as a Prophet. If it be matter of ſin, for which ſacrifice to be offered, He is a Prieſt for ever after the order of MELCHIZEDEK. If the Will of GOD, if His great counſell to be revealed, A Prophet will the Lord raiſe, &c. Heare Him. But here is matter of delivery (only) in hand: here therefore, he repreſented Him, Cum Principatu, with a Principality. Pſal. 110. 4. Deut. 18. 28.

A Principality not of this world. Herod need not feare it, nor envie it. If it had, His officers, as they would have ſeene Him better defended at His Death, ſo would they have ſeene Him better lodged at His Birth, than in a ſtable with beaſts: for, if the Inne were full, the ſtable (we may be ſure) was not empty. Of what world then? Of that, He is Father; Futuri ſæculi. Of that He is Father; and He is a Prince of the government, that guideth us thither. Luk. 2. 7.

Yet, a Prince He is, and ſo He is ſtyled: born, and given, to eſtabliſh a government: That none imagine, they ſhall live like Libertines under Him: every man believe, and live, as he liſt. It is CHRIST, not Belial, that is borne to day: He bringeth a government with Him: they, that be His, muſt live in ſubjection under a government: elſe neither in Child, nor Son; in Birth, nor Gift, have they any intereſt.

And this government is by name a Principality: Wherein, neither the popular confuſion of many; nor the factious ambition, of a few, beare all the ſway; but, where one is Soveraigne. Such is the government of heaven: ſuch is CHRISTS government.

With a Principality, or Government; and that upon His ſhoulders: Somewhat a ſtrange ſituation. It is wiſdome that governes: that is, in the head; and there is a Crowne worne: What have the ſhoulders to do with it? Certainly, ſomewhat by this Deſcription. The Shoulder (as we know) is the bearing member: and unleſſe it be for heavy things we uſe it not. Ordinary things we carry in our hands, or lift at the armes end: It muſt be very heavie, if we muſt put ſhoulders and all to it. Belike; Governments have their weight; be heavie; And ſo they Be: they need not only a good head, but good ſhoulders that ſuſtain them. But that not ſo much, while they be in good tune and temper; then they need no great carriage: but when they grow unwealdy, (be it weakneſſe or waywardneſſe of the governed;) in that caſe they need: And in that caſe, there is no Governour, but, at one time or other, he beares his government upon his ſhoulders. It is a morall, they give, of Aarons Apparell: He carved the twelve Tribes in his Breſt-plate, next his heart; to ſhew, that in care he was to beare them: But, he had them alſo engraven in two Onyx Stones, and thoſe ſet upon his very ſhoulders; to ſhew, he muſt other-while beare them in patience too. And it is not Aarons caſe alone; it was ſo with Moſes too. He bare His government as a Nurſe doth her child, as He ſaith, Numb. XI. that is, full tenderly. But, when they fell a murmuring (as they did often) He bare them upon His ſhoulders, in great patience, and long ſuffering. Yea, he complained, Non poſſum portare; I am not able to beare all this people, &c. Exod. 28. 29. Exod. 28. 12. &c. Num 11. 12. Num. 12. 1.

It were, ſure, to be wiſhed, that they, that are in place, might never be put to it. Beare their people only in their armes, by love; and in their breſts by care. Yet if need be, they muſt follow CHRISTS example and patience, here, and even that way, beare them, not only beare with them; but even beare them alſo.

Yet is not this CHRISTS bearing, though this He did too: There is yet a further thing, He hath a patience paramount, beyond all the reſt. Two differences I finde betweene Him and others. 1. The faults and errours of their government, others do beare and ſuffer, indeed, ſuffer them; but, ſuffer not for them He did both: endured them, and endured, for them, heauy things: A ſtrange ſuperhumerall, the print wherof was to be ſeen on his ſhoulders. The Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlateth it thus, The law was upon his ſhoulders Act. 15 10.

(And ſo it was too:) A burthen, ſaith S. Peter, neither He, nor the Apoſtles, nor their Fathers were able to beare. This he did: and beare it ſo evenly, as he brake, nay bruiſed not a Commandement. But, there is another ſenſe, when the Law is taken for the puniſhment due by the Law. It is that which our Prophet meaneth (in the 53. Chap.) when he ſaith, Poſuit ſuper humeros, He hath laid upon His ſhoulders, the iniquity of us all. And, not againſt His will: Come (ſaith He) you that are heavie laden, and I will refreſh you, by loding my ſelfe, take it from your necks, and lay it on mine owne. Which his ſuffering, though it grew ſo heavie, as it wrung from Him plenty of teares, a ſtrong cry, a ſweat of blood, (ſuch was the weight of it;) yet would He not caſt it off, but, there held it ſtill, till it made Him bow down His head, and give up the Ghoſt. If He had diſcharged it, it muſt have light upon us; (it was the yoke of our burden, as in the 4. verſe He termeth it:) If it had light upon us, it had preſſed us down to Hell; ſo inſupportable was it. Rather than ſo, He did it ſtill, and bare it; and did that which never Prince did, dyed for his Government. It was not for nothing, we ſee, that, of the Child borne, no part but the ſhoulders is mentioned: for, that, we ſee, in this Child, is a part of ſpeciall imployment.

2 Exod. 18. 23. Eſay 63. 3

The other point of difference betweene Him and other Governours. When we ſay, [On His ſhoulders,] his we ſay; on no other ſhoulders, but His. For, others, (by Moſes example upon Iethroes advice, and Gods own allowance,) may, and do lay off, and tranſlate their burthen, (if it be too heavie) upon others, and ſo eaſe it, in part: Not ſo, He: it could not be ſo in His. He, and He alone: He, and none but He: Upon his own ſhoulders, and none but his owne, bare he all. He trod the wine-preſſe, and bare the burthen Solus, alone; Et vir de Gentibus, and, of all the Nations there was not a man with him. Upon his only ſhoulders did the burthen only reſt.

3 Mat. 18. 13, 14 Levit. 16. 8, 9. Deut. 32. 11. Ioh 10. 28.

Now from theſe two doth the Prophet argue to a third: to the point (here) ſo principall intendment. That if, for his government ſake, he will beare ſo great things; bear their weakneſſes, as the loſt Sheep; beare their ſins, as the Scape-goat: He will, over the government it ſelf, as in Deut. 32. he maketh the Simile, ſtretch forth his wings as the Eagle over her young ones, and take them, and beare them between his pinions; beare them, and beare them through. They need take no thought: No man ſhall take them out of his hands; no man reach them off his ſhoulders. He had begun ſo to carry them; and thorow he would ſtill carry them: At leaſt-wiſe, till this Child Immanuel were borne. Till then, he would: and not wax weary, nor caſt them off. And (like the Scape-goat) beare their ſins; and (like the Eagle) beare up their eſtate, till the fulneſſe of time came, and he, in it, with the fulneſſe of all grace and bleſſing. And this point I hold ſo materiall; as Puer natus, nothing, and Filius datus, as much, without Princeps oneratus: For, that is all in all, and, of the three the chiefe.

Gal. 4. 4.

II The ſecond maine point. The benefit: To us. Heb. 2. 16.

AND now, what is all this to us? Yes; to us, it is; and that, twiſe over, for failing. We come now to look another while into our intereſt to it, and our benefit by it. Nobis is acquiſitivè poſitus: We get by it; we are gainers by all this.

To us; not to himſelfe. For a far more noble Nativity had he, before all worlds, and needed no more birth. Not to be born at all; ſpecially, not thus baſely to be born. Not to him therefore; but to us, and our behoofe.

Luk. 1. 31. & 2. 11.

To us, as in bar of himſelfe, ſo likewiſe of his Angels. Nuſquam Angelos, not to the Angels was he borne, or given; but, to us he was both. Not an Angell in heaven can ſay Nobis, Vobis they can: The Angels ſaid it twiſe, Nobis natus or datus, they cannot; but we can, both.

I

Nobis excluſivè, and Nobis incluſivè. Eſay ſpeaks not of himſelf only, but taketh in Ahaz. Both are in Nobis; Eſay an holy Prophet, and Ahaz, a worſe than whom you ſhall hardly read of. Eſay includeth himſelfe, as having need, though a Saint; and excludeth not Ahaz, from having part, though a ſinner. Not only Simeon the Iuſt; but Paul the ſinner, of the Quorum, and the firſt of the Quorum.

Luk. 2. 25. 1 Tim. 1. 15.

Incluſivè: not only of Eſay, and his Country-men the Iewes; It is of a larger extent. The Angell ſo interpreteth it, this day, to the Shepheards: Gaudium quod erit omni populo, Ioy that ſhall be to all people, Not the people of the Iews; or the people of the Gentiles; but but ſimply to all people. His name is JESUS CHRIST, half Hebrew, half Greeke: Ieſus, Hebrew; Chriſt, Greek; So ſorted, of purpoſe, to ſhew, Iews and Greeks have equall intereſt in Him. And now, ſo is His Fathers name too, Abba Father; To ſhew the benefit equally intended by Him, to them, that call Him Abba, that is, the Iews; to us, that call Him Father, that is, the Gentiles. Mar. 14. 36. Rom. 8. 15.

But yet, it is incluſivè of none, but thoſe that include themſelves; that believe, and therfore ſay, Nobis, to us He is born, to us He is given. Which excludes all thoſe, that include not themſelves. S. Ambroſe ſaith well: Facit multorum infidelitas, ut non omnibus naſceretur, qui omnibus natus eſt: Want of faith makes, that He, that is born to all, is not borne to all though. The Turks and Iews can ſay, Puer natus eſt: The Divell can ſay, Filius natus eſt, too: But neither ſay, Nobis; but, Quid nobis & tibi? They have not to do with Him; and for lack of it, of this, neither Child, not Son, birth, nor gift doth availe them: We muſt make much of this word, and hold it faſt; for, thereby our tenure and intereſt groweth. Which intereſt groweth by a double right, (and therefore is Nobis twiſe repeated:) 1. The one, of His birth, natus; 2. the other, by a deed of gift, Datus. Of which, the one (His Birth) referreth to Himſelfe: the other (the gift) to His Father: To ſhew the joynt conſent and concurrence, in both, For our good. So Chriſt loved us, that He was given: So God loved us, that He gave His Son. Rom. 3. 12. Eph. 5. 2. Ioh. 1. 11. Ioh. 3. 16.

By His very birth there groweth to us an intereſt in Him, thereby partaker of our nature, our fleſh, and our blood. That which is de nobis, He took of us, is ours: fleſh and blood is our own; and, to that is our own, we have good right.

His humanity is cleerely ours; good right to that. But, no right to His Deitie. Therefore His Father (who had beſt right to diſpoſe of Him,) hath paſſed over that by a deed of gift. So that, what by participation of our nature, what by good conveyance, both are ours. Whether a Child, He is ours: or whether a Son, He is ours. We gave Him the one; His Father gave us the other. So, both ours: and He ours, ſo far as both theſe can make Him. Thus, God, willing more abundantly to ſhew to the heires of promiſe the ſtablenesſe of His Counſell, tooke both courſes; that, by two ſtrong titles, which it is impoſsible ſhould be defeated, we might have ſtrong conſolation, and ride (as it were) at a double Anchor. 1 Ioh. 3. 16. Gal. 4. 4. Heb. 6. 17.

I want time, to tell of the benefit which the Prophet, (Verſ. III.) calleth the harveſt, or bootie of His Nativitie. This it is in a word: If the tree be ours, the fruit is: If He be ours, His Birth is ours; His life is ours; His Death is ours; His ſatisfaction, His merit, all He did, all He ſuffered is ours. Further, all that the Father hath is His, He is Heire of all; then, all that is ours too. S. Paul hath caſt up our account: Having given Him, there is nothing; but He will give us with Him: So that, by this Deed, we have title to all, that His Father, or He is worth. Heb 1. 2. Ioh 3. 35. Mat. 21. 18. 1 Cor. 3. 22 23 Rom. 8. 32.

And now, ſhall we bring forth nothing for Him that was thus borne? No Quid retribuam, no giving back, for Him that gave Him us? Yes, thanks to the Father, for His great bounty in giving. Sure, ſo good a giving, ſo perfect a gift there never came down from the Father of lights. And to the Son, for being willing ſo to be borne, and ſo to be burthened as He was. For Him to condeſcend to be born, as Children are borne, To become a Childe; great humility: great, ut verbum, infans; ut tonans, vagiens; ut immenſus, parvulus: that the Word, not be able to ſpeak a word; He, that thundred in heaven, cry in a Cradle; He, that ſo great and ſo high, ſhould become ſo little as a Childe, and ſo low as a Manger. Not to abhorre the Virgins wombe, not to abhorre the Beaſts Manger, not to diſdaine to be fed with butter and honey; All, great humility. All great, and very great: But, that is greater, is behinde. Puer Natus, much; Princeps oneratus, much more: That which He bare for us: For, greater is Mors crucis, than Nativitas præſepis: Worſe to drinke vinegar and gall, than to eat butter and honey; worſe, to endure an infamous death, than to be content with an inglorious birth. Our Duty. Pſal. 116. 12. 2 Cor. 9. 14, 15 Col. 1. 12. Iam. 1. 17. Phil. 2. 8.

Let us therefore ſing to the Father (with Zachary) Benedictus: and to the Sonne (with the bleſſed Virgin) Magnificat: and (with all the Angels) Gloria in excelſis, To the Prince with His government on his ſhoulders. Lu. 1, 68. 46. 2, 14

Nothing but thanks? Yes; by way of duty too, to render, unto the Child, confidence; Puer est, ne metuas: To the Son, reverence; Filius est, ne spernas: To the Prince, obedience, Princeps est, ne offendas. And againe; to Natus; is He born? then cherish Him. (I speake of His Spirituall birth, wherein we by hearing and doing His word, are (as Himselfe saith) His Mothers. To Datus; is He given? then keep Him. To Oneratus, is He burthened? favour Him; lay no more on, then needs you must.

Mat. 12. 49, 50.

This is good morall counsell. But, S. Bernard gives us politike advice; to look to our interest, to think of making our best benefit by Him, De nobis nato & dato faciamus id, ad quod, natus est & datus; ut simus nostro, in utilitatem nostram; de servatore nostro, salutem operemur: With this borne and given Child, let us then do that for which He was borne and given us: Seeing He is ours, let us use that, that is ours, to our best behoofe; and even worke out our salvation, out of this our Saviour. His counsell is to make our use of Him: but, that is not to doe with Him what we list; but, to imploy Him to those ends, for which He was bestowed. Those are foure:

1 Pet. 2. 21.

1 He is given, (saith S. Peter) ut exemplum for an example, to follow. In all; but (that which is proper to this day,) to doe it, in humility. It is that, which the Angell set up, for a sign and sample, upon this very day. It is the vertue appropriate to His birth. As faith, to His conception, (Beata quæ credidit;) So humility to His birth, (& Hoc erit signum:) Fieri voluit in vitâ primum, quod exhibuit in ortu vitæ, it is Cyprian; That, he would have us to expresse in our life, that He first shewed us, in the very entry of our life. And to commend to us this vertue the more, Placuit Deo majora pro nobis operari, It hath pleased Him to do greater things for us, in this estate, then ever He did, in the high degree of His Majestie: as, (wee know) the worke of Redemption passeth that of Creation, by much.

1 Pet. 1. 19.

2 He is given us in pretium, for a price. A price, either of ransome, to bring us out de loco caliginoso: or a price, of purchase, of (that, where, without it, we have no interest,) the kingdome of heaven. For, both He is given; offer we Him for both. We speak of Quid retribuam; We can never retribute the like thing. He was given us to that end, wee might give Him back. We wanted, we had nothing valuable; that we might have, this He gave us, as a thing of greatest price, to offer for that, which needed a great price, our sins, so many in number, and so foule in quality. We had nothing worthy GOD; this He gave us, that is worthy Him, which cannot be but accepted, offer we it never so often. Let us then offer Him; and, in the act of offering, ask of him what is meet: for we shall find Him no lesse bounteous, than Herod, to grant what is duely asked upon His birth-day.

Mat. 7. 7, 8. Mat. 14. 6. 7.

3 He is given us (as himself saith) as the living bread from Heaven: which bread is His flesh, borne this day, and after given for the life of the world. For look how we do give back that He gave us, even so doth He give back to us that which we gave Him, that which he had of us. This He gave for us, in Sacrifice; and this He giveth us, in the Sacrament; that the Sacrifice may, by the Sacrament, be truly applyed to us. And let me commend this to you; He never bade, Accipite, (plainly, take,) but in this only: and that, because the effect of this Dayes union is no wayes more lively represented, no way more effectually wrought, than by this use.

Ioh. 6. 53. Mat. 26. 26. 1 Cor. 11. 24.

4 And lastly, He is given us in præmium: (Not now to be seene, only in hope;) but hereafter, by His blessed fruition, to be our finall reward; when, where He is, we shall be; and what He is, we shall be; In the same place, and in the same state of glory, joy, and blisse, to endure for evermore.

At His first comming, you see, what He Had on His shoulders. At His second, He shall not come empty, Ecce venio, &c. Lo I come, and my reward with me; that is, a kingdom on His shoulders. And it is no light matter; but as S. Paul calleth it, αἰώνιον βάρος, an everlasting weight of glory. Glory, not (like hers here) feather-glory; But, true; that hath weight and substance in it: And that not transitory, and soone gone; but everlasting, to continue to all eternity, never to have end. This is our state in expectancy. S. Augustine put all foure together, so will I, and conclude: Sequamur [1] exemplum, offeramus [2] pretium; sumamus [3] viaticum, expectemus [4] præmium: let us follow Him for our patterne, offer Him for our price, receive Him for our sacrament all food, and wait for Him as our endlesse and exceeding great reward, &c.

Act. 22. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

A SER.

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Thursday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCVII.
being CHRISTMAS day.

1 TIM. Chap. III. Ver. XVI.

And without controversie great is the Mystery of Godlinesse, which is, GOD is manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seene of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up in glory.

THE Mystery (here mentioned) is the mystery of this Feast; And this Feast, the Feast of this Mystery: for, as at this Feast, GOD was manifested in the flesh. In that it is a great Mystery, it maketh the Feast great. In that it is a Mystery of Godlinesse, it should make it likewise a Feast of Godlinesse. Great, we grant, and godly too, we trust: Would GOD, as godly, as great; and no more controversie of one, than of the other.

The manifestation of God in the flesh, the Evangelists set down by way of an History: the Apostle goeth further, and findeth a deepe mystery in it; and for a mystery, commends it unto us. Now there is difference betweene these two, Many: This, for one; that a man may beare a Story, and never wash his hands; but a mystery requireth both the hands, and heart to be clean, that shall deale with it.

SPeaking of it then, as a mystery, the Apostle doth here propound two things: [1] Firſt, that it is one: Without controversie, &c. [2] Then, what it is: God manifested, &c. [3] And out of these, a third will grow necessarily; (Because Mysteries will admit a fellowship,) how to order the matter, that we may have our fellowship in this mystery. The Division I. Eph. 3. 9.

In the first part, foure things he affirmeth: [1] That it is a Mystery: [2] A Mystery of Godlinesse: [3] That it is a great one: [4] A great one, without controversie.

Then doth He (as it were) rend the veile in sunder, and shew us, what it is: [1] GOD, manifested: [2] Manifested in the flesh. II.

Which Mystery, how it may concern us, will be our third, and last consideration. And that two wayes: [1] by the Operation of it, in us: [2] by the Initiation of us, into it. III.

A Mystery it is: presented to us in that terme, by the Apostle, to stir up our attention. Omnes homines naturâ scire desiderant, All men, even by nature, love to be knowing. The Philosopher hath made it his ground, and set it in the front of his Metaphysicks. So saith Philosophy. I. A Mystery it is.

And even to this day (saith Divinity,) doth the Tree of knowledge still work in the sons of Eve; we still reckon the attaining of knowledge, a thing to be desired, and, be it good, or evill, we love to be knowing, all the sort of us. Knowing: but what? Not, such things as every one knoweth, that goeth by the way; vulgar, and triviall. Tush, those are nothing. But, Metaphysicks, that are the Arcana of Philosophy; Mysteries, that are the Secrets of Divinity; such as few besides are admitted to: Those be the things we desire to know. We see it, in the Bethshemites; they longed to be prying into the Ark of GOD: They were Heathen, we see it in the People of GOD too: they pressed too neare the Mount: Railes were fain to be set, to keep them back. It is, because it is held a point Gen. 3. 6. 1 Sam. 6. 19. Exod. 19. 12.

of a deepe wit, to ſearch out ſecrets: as, in Ioſeph. At leaſt of ſpeciall favour, to be received ſo far, as Vobis datum eſt, noſſe Myſteria. All deſire to be in credit. The mention of Myſteries will make us ſtand attentive: why then, if our nature like ſo well of myſteries, Ecce oſtendo vobis Myſterium, Behold I ſhew you a Myſtery (ſaith the Apoſtle.)

Gen. 41 45. Luk. 8. 10. 1 Cor. 15. 51.

2 A Myſtery of godlineſſe.

A Myſtery of Godlineſſe. The world hath her Myſteries in all Arts, and Trades, (yea, Mechanicall, pertaining to this life;) which are imparted to none, but ſuch as are filii ſcientiæ, apprentices to them. Theſe have their Myſteries: have them, nay, are nothing but Myſteries. So they delight to ſtile themſelves by the name of ſuch and ſuch a Myſtery. Now, Pietas eſt quæſtus, (Chap. 6. Verſ. 6.) and (in the next Chap.) ad omnia utilis, a Trade of good returne; to be in requeſt with us; whether we look to this life preſent (ſaith he) or to that to come. Therefore to be allowed her Myſteries: at leaſt, as all other Trades are. The rather, for that there is Myſterium iniquitatis: And, it were ſomewhat hard, that there ſhould not be Myſterium pietatis, to encounter and to match it: That Babylon ſhould be allowed the name of a Myſtery, and Sion, not. It were an evident Non ſequitur, that there ſhould be profunda Satanæ, deepe things of Sathans; and there ſhould not be deep and profound things of God and godlines, for the Spirit to ſearch out. But, ſuch there be; Myſteries of Godlines. And we will (I truſt) ſtand affected, as in all other Trades, ſo in this, to be acquainted with theſe; and (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) to pierce ad interiora Velaminis, to that which is within the veile; to the very Myſtery of godlines.

1 Cor. 2. 10. Heb. 6. 19.

3 A great Myſtery.

It is not only a Myſtery of Godlineſſe, but a Great one. The Apoſtle (where he ſaith; If I knew all myſteries*) giveth us to underſtand, ther be more than one; there is a plurality of them. And, (here, in this place) telleth us; they be not all of one ſcantling; there is magis and minus in them: ſome little, ſome great. [1] Some great; (if you ſtill) according to all the dimenſions, length and breadth, &c. [2] Or, great, Virtute, non mole, of greater value, more precious than other: [3] Or great, a third way, that is, gravida Myſteriis; one Myſtery, but hath many Myſteries with it. That ſuch there are, and that this here is one of them: Great. Now that which leadeth us to make account of Myſteries, will likewiſe leade us to make Great account, of Great Myſteries; ſuch, as this is.

* 1 Cor. 13. 3. Eph. 3 18. 2 Pet 1. 4.

2 A great one, without controverſie.

Yet have we not all, one point further. It is a great one; a great one, Without controverſie. For, even of thoſe Myſteries, that are great, all are not great alike. Many great there are; yet is not the greatneſſe of all generally acknowledged, in confeſſo. Doubts are made, queſtions ariſe about them: all are not manifeſtè magna. We ſee, in our daies how men languiſh about ſome points, which they would have thought to be great; and great controverſies there be, and great bookes of controverſies about them. Well, howſoever it is with other, it is not ſo with this. This is ὁμολογουμένως, taken pro confeſſo, Great; Great without controverſie: the manifeſting of GOD in the fleſh, is a myſtery manifeſtly great. Being then one of the Myſteries of Religion; a great one among them; ſo great, as though queſtions grow about the greatneſſe of others, none may about this: I hope there will be no more queſtion, or controverſie of our account, and our great account of it, than there is of the Myſtery it ſelfe, and the Greatneſſe of it.

But, before we go any further, to remove the veile, and ſhew what it is, let us pauſe here a while, till we have rendred thanks to God, and ſaid with Nazianzene, χάρις τῷ μακαρίῳ ΘΕΩ, &c. Now yet, bleſſed be GOD, that among diverſe other Myſteries, about which there are ſo many miſts and cloudes of controverſies raiſed in all Ages, and even in this of ours, hath yet left us ſome cleare, and without controverſie; manifeſt, and yet great; and againe, great, and yet manifeſt. So great, as no exception to be taken: ſo manifeſt, as no queſtion to be made about them.

Withall, to reforme our judgements in this point. For a falſe conceit is crept into the minds of men, to think the points of Religion, that be manifeſt, to be certaine petty points, ſcarce worth the hearing: Thoſe, yea thoſe be great, and none but thoſe, that have great Diſputes about them. It is not ſo: Τὰ μὲν ἀναγκαῖα, &c. Thoſe that are neceſſary He hath made plaine: thoſe, that not plaine, not neceſſary. What better proof, than this here? This here, a Myſtery, a great one, (Religion hath no greater,) yet Manifeſt, and in confeſſo, with all Chriſtians. Zacharies Prophecy, and promiſe, touching CHRIST, wherewith he concludeth his Benedictus, (we heare it every day,) ſhall not deceive us, for for this Myſtery: He came to guide our feet into the way of peace. A way of peace then, there ſhall be, whereof all parts ſhall agree, even in the midſt of a world of controverſies. That, there need not ſuch adoe in complaining, if men did not delight, rather to be treading mazes, than to walk in the wayes of peace. For, even ſtill, ſuch a way there is, which lyeth faire enough, and would lead us ſure enough to ſalvation; if leaving thoſe other rough labyrinths, we would but be ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpell of peace. Luk. 1. 79. Eph. 6. 15.

Yea further, the Apoſtle doth aſſure us, that if, whereunto we are come, and wherin we all agree, we would conſtantly proceed, by the Rule, thoſe things, wherein we are otherwiſe minded, even them would GOD reveale unto us. That is, He maketh no controverſie, but controverſies would ceaſe, if conſcience were made of the practice, of that which is out of controverſie. And I would to GOD it were ſo; and that this here, and ſuch other manifeſtè magna were in account. With the Apoſtle himſelfe it was ſo. He ſheweth plainly, what reckonning he made of this plain Myſtery; in that, having been raviſh'd in ſpirit up to the third heavens, and there heard wonderfull high Myſteries, paſt mans utterance; yet reckoned he all thoſe nothing, in compariſon of this plaine Myſtery here, nay, eſteemed himſelfe not to know any thing at all, but this. Phil. 3. 15. 2 Cor. 12. 2.

And as he eſteemed it himſelf, ſo would he have us. It is his expreſſe charge, we ſee (in the Verſe next before) where he tels his Biſhop Timothy, how he would have him his Prieſts and Deacons occupie themſelves, in his abſence: This he commends to them; wils them to be doing with this Myſtery. That you may know what to do (ſaith he,) What? do but deale with this point; throughly, deale with it. Howſoever it is manifeſt, it is great: Great regard to be had of it, great paines to be beſtowed about it. And, even ſo then let us do, and ſee now another while, this Myſtery, what it is. 1 Cor. 2. 2.

II
What this Myſtery is, God is manifeſted in the fleſh, &c.

GOD is manifeſted in the fleſh. Being one of the Myſteries of Godlineſſe, it cannot be, but God muſt be a part, and a chiefe part of it. And, Gods being a part maketh it great. For, great muſt that needs be, whereof He is a part, of whoſe greatneſſe there is no end. And mark firſt, that it is not aliquid Dei, but Deus; not any thing divine, or of God, but God himſelf. Diverſe things, diverſe inviſible things of God had beene formerly made manifeſt: His eternall Power, Wiſdome, Providence*; in, and ſince the Creation. They be no myſteries: But, this is; that, not the things of God, but Gods own ſelf: not the ἀπαυγάσματα the beames of His brightneſſe; but, the very Character of His ſubſtance, the very Nature and Perſon of God. This is a great Myſtery. I GOD. † Rom. 1. 20. Heb. 1. 3.

Of God, the Prophet Eſay ſaith (Chap. XLV. Ver. XV.) Verè Deus abſconditus es tu: God is, of himſelf, a Myſtery, and hidden; and (that which is ſtrange) hidden with light, which will make any eyes paſt looking on Him. But, a hidden GOD our nature did not endure. Will you heare them ſpeak it plainly? Fac nobis Deos, Make us viſible gods, who may go before us, and we ſee them. Myſticall, inviſible Gods we cannot skill of. This we would have God to be manifeſted. Why then, God is manifeſted. 2 God manifeſted. 1 Tim. 16. Exod. 32. 1.

Manifeſted; Wherein? Sure, if GOD will condeſcend to be manifeſted, there is none but will think, it is meet to be, and it would be, in the moſt glorious Creature, that is under or above the Sun: None, good enough. Yea, in what thing ſoever, be it never ſo excellent, for God to manifeſt himſelfe in, is a diſparagement too. What ſay you to fleſh? is it meet GOD be manifeſted therein? Without controverſie it is not. Why, what is fleſh? It is no Myſtery to tell what it is: It is duſt (ſaith the Patriarch Abraham.) It is graſſe (ſaith the Prophet Eſay;) Fœnum, graſſe cut down, and withering: It is corruption, not corruptible, but even corruption it ſelfe, (ſaith the Apoſtle Paul.) There being then (as Abraham ſaid to him, Luke XVI.) χάσμα μέγα, ſo great a gulf, ſo huge a ſpace, ſo infinite a diſtance between thoſe two, betweene GOD, and duſt; GOD, and Hay; GOD and corruption; as no comming of one at the other; ſileat omnis caro, talke not of fleſh. Were it not a proud deſire, and full of preſumption, to wiſh things ſo remote to come together? to wiſh, that the Deitie, in the fleſh, may be made manifeſt? Yet we ſee, wiſhed it was, by one in a place (Cant. VIII.) in reaſonable expreſſe termes: O that thou wert as my brother, that ſucked the breſts of my mother! That is, O that He might bee manifeſt in the fleſh. O that Hee might bee! and ſo Hee was. Not onely 3 Manifeſted in the fleſh. Gen. 18. 27. Eſay 40. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 54. Luk. 16. 26. Zach. 2. 13 Can. 8. 1.

manifeſt, at all; (that is great:) but manifeſt in the fleſh; (that is greater.) For, if gold mixed, though it be with ſilver, is abuſed by it; what if it be mixed with the ruſt of Iron or droſſe of Leade? This muſt needs be great, in it ſelfe: But greater, with us: With us eſpecially, that make ſuch a do at any, though never ſo little diſparagement; and that, if any, (though not much our inferiour) be ranked with us, take our ſelves mightily wronged. We cannot chooſe, but hold this Myſtery for Great, and ſay with S. Augu ſtine,) Deus: quid glorioſius? Caro: quid vilius? Deus in carne: quid mirabilius? GOD: what more glorious? fleſh: what more baſe? Then, GOD in the fleſh: what more marvellous?

But, I ask further: manifeſted in the fleſh; what fleſh? Or, how manifeſted? In what fleſh? What, in the pride and beauty of our Nature? No: but in the moſt diſgracefull eſtate of it that might be. And, how manifeſted? Ad gloriam, for His credit or glory? No: but ad ignominiam, to His great contempt and ſhame. So to have beene manifeſted, as in the holy Mount, (His face as the Sun, His garments as lightning, betweene Moſes and Elias, in all glory, and glorious manner:) This had not been ſo great an impeachment. Was that the manner? no: But how? In clouts, in a ſtable, in a manger. The GOD, whom the heavens, and the heaven of heavens cannot containe, in a little Childs fleſh not a ſpanne long: and that fleſh of a Child not very well conditioned, as you may read in the XVI. of Ezekiel.

Eze. 16. 4. 5. &c

As a condemned perſon.

So, to day but after, much worſe. To day in the fleſh of a poore Babe crying in the Cratch, in medio animalium: after in the rent and torne fleſh of a condemned perſon, hanging on the Croſſe, in medio latronum, in the midſt of other manner perſons, than Moſes and Elias; That, men even hide their faces at Him; not, for the brightnes of His glory, but for ſorrow and ſhame. Call you this manifeſting? Nay, well doth the Apoſtle call it, the Veile of his fleſh; as whereby He was rather obſcured, then any way ſet forth; yea, eclipſed, in all the darkeſt points of it. Verily, the condition of the fleſh, was more than the fleſh it ſelfe: and the manner of the manifeſtation, far more, than the manifeſtation it ſelfe was. Both ſtill make the Myſtery greater and greater.

Heb. 10. 20.

The manner of this Manifeſtation.

And now, to weigh the word manifeſted, another while; becauſe, that may ſeem to be terminus diminuens, a qualified terme, rather abating than any way tending to make great the Myſtery; In that, a thing may be manifeſted, and not be that, for which it is manifeſted; be manifeſted for one thing, and be another. Would to GOD, we had not too plain examples of theſe, even in that we are about, in godlineſſe it ſelfe: That there were not, that manifeſted themſelves ἐν μορφώσει, in the viſor, or maſk of godlineſſe, but be nothing leſſe. Well, this, how or howſoever it may be with men, with GOD it is not: He is not like to us: And howſoever, not here in this. For firſt, it is not in the ſhaddow, ſhew, or ſhape of fleſh: but, in very fleſh it ſelfe. Then, it is not (ſaith the Greeke Scholiaſt) φαντὰις, but, φανερωθεὶς; φανθεὶς, which importeth but an apparition, tranſitory, for a ſeaſon, and then vaniſheth again; φανερωθεὶς, a manifeſtation; ſuch, as is (ſay they) permanent, which paſſeth not, but laſteth for ever. And to put all out of queſtion, (that here is nihil perſonatum, but even perſona,) He that here is ſaid to be GOD manifeſted in the fleſh, is, in another place, ſaid to be Verbum caro factum, the Word made fleſh. So manifeſted, that made: ſo taking our nature, as His, and it are grown into one perſon, never to be ſevered, or taken in ſunder any more. And, in ſign thereof, that fleſh wherin He is manifeſted, (in the beginning of the Verſe; in the end of the Verſe,) in the very ſame fleſh, He is received up into glory; And in the ſame, ſhall appeare againe, at his ſecond manifeſtation.

Iohn 1. 14.

And yet, to go further; I ſay, that this word [manifeſted] is ſo far from being Terminus diminuens, that it doth greatly ampliate and inlarge the Myſtery yet ſtill. To be, manifeſted; Eſſe, and videri; Dici de, and eſſe in, are two things. And, as, in ſome caſes, it is more to be, than to be manifeſted; ſo, in ſome other, it is more to be manifeſted, than to be: And namely, in this here. More, for GOD to be manifeſted, than to be in the fleſh. It is well known when a great high Perſon doth fall into low eſtate, he careth not ſo much for being ſo, as for appearing ſuch: Manifeſt him not, and you do him a pleaſure. More it is for Him, to be made known, than to be, that, He is. O it is naturally given us, to hide our abasing, what we can. Our misery must be kept in a mystery, and that mystery is not manifested in any wise. Blow a Trumpet in Sion, if any good come to us, But, whilst let it not be heard in Gath, nor in Ascalon, if any evill fall upon us. Not so much as Naomi (we see,) but when she was fallen into poverty, she could not endure to be called by that name: No, her name was Mara; as if she had been some other partie: So loth she was, to have her misery made manifest. Humility intrinsecall is not so much: it is the manifesting our humility that poseth us. That David should have been humble in heart before GOD and His Ark; that Michal could have born well enough: This was the griefe; that David should make it manifest, uncover himselfe, weare an Ephod, and thereby (as she thought) mightily disgrace, and make him selfe vile in the eyes of his servants. That was it, she took so ill: Not, to be, so much; as, to be manifest: That same manifesting marred all. And, why would Nicodemus come to CHRIST, but not by Candle light, but that to be seen manifestly to come, was (with him) a far greater matter, than to come. By all which it appeareth, that in case of abasement, to seem, is more than to be; dici de, than esse in: And so (here) nosci, more than nasci. And I make no question, but we may reckon these two, as two distinct degrees: [1] He abhorred not to become flesh: [2] He abhorred not to have it manifestly known. It was not done (this) in a corner, in an out-corner of Galilee; but, in the City of David. His poore Cunis manifested, by a Star: His shamefull death published, by a great Eclips: Yea, that it might be manifest indeed, (as it followeth after in the Verse) He would have it preached over all the world.

2 Sam. 6. 20.

Ioh. 19. 39.

Acts 6. 26. Luk. 2. 4.

But, when we have done and said all that ever we can, if we had all Mysteries, and no love, the Apostle tels us, it is nothing. We can have no Mystery, except Love be manifest. So is it. Two severall times doth the Apostle tell us. [1] (Tit. II.) apparuit gratia: [2] (Tit. III.) apparuit Amor erga homines: At the openning of this mystery, there appeared the [1] Grace of God, and the [2] Love of God toward mankind. Velatio Deitatis, revelatio charitatis: As manifest as GOD was in the flesh, so manifest was His love unto flesh. And then, because great love, a great mystery, Dilexit goeth never alone, but with Sic; (so, CHRIST:) Ecce quantam charitatem; (so, S. Iohn.) Sure, how great and apparent Humility, so great and apparent love. And His humility was too apparent. So, we have GOD manifested in the flesh, Deus charitas: for, if ever He were Love, or shewed it; in this, He was it, and shewed it both. GOD, (that is Love,) was manifested in the flesh.

1 Cor. 13. 1. Tit. 2. 11 & 3. 4.

Ioh. 3. 16. 1 Ioh. 3. 1. 1 Ioh. 4. 8.

To make an end, one question more. To what end? Cui bono? who is the better for all this? GOD, that is manifested; or the flesh, wherein He is manifested? Not GOD: To Him, there groweth nothing out of this manifestation. It is for the good of the flesh, that GOD was manifested in the flesh. 1. For the good present: for, we let go that of the Psalmist, now, [Thou that heares the prayer, to thee shall all flesh come;] and much better and more properly say; Thou that art manifest in the flesh, to Thee shall all flesh come: With boldnesse entring into the holy place, by the new and living way prepared for us, through the veile, that is, His flesh. 2. And, for the good to come; For we are put in hope, that the end of this manifesting God in the flesh, will be the manifesting of the flesh in Him, even as He is: And, that which is the end of the verse, be the end of all, The receiving us up into His glory. To this haven ariveth this Mystery, of the Manifestation of it.

Psal. 65 2. Heb 10. 19, 20

The end of this Second part is but the beginning of the third. For, hearing that it is so great, and of so great availe rising by it, that it is quæstus multo uberrimus, a trade so beneficiall; it makes us seek, how to incorporate our selves (as in the * III. of the Ephesians he speaketh; how to have our part and fellowship, in this Trade, or Mystery. And that may we doe (saith he, in the same place) * si operetur in nobis, (that is) if it prove to us, as it is in it self, a Mystery. I know, it were a thing very easie, for a speculative Divine, to lead you along, and let you see, that this Mystery is the Substance of all the Ceremonies, and the fulfilling of all Prophecies: That all Moses veiles, and all the Prophets visions, are recapitulate in it. But it is a point of speculation; We heare those points too often, and love them too well: Points of practice are lesse pleasing, but more profitable for us; namely, how we may get into the partnership of this Mystery.

III. How this mistery concerneth us.

1 By the Operation of it ... us.

* Eph 3. 6. 9.

* Eph. 3. 7.

There is this difference, between a Ceremony and a Mystery: A Ceremony represents and 2 Thes. 2. 7. and ſignifies, but, works nothing: A Myſtery doth both. Beſide that it ſignifieth, it hath his operation; and work it doth; elſe, Myſtery is it none. You may ſee it, by the Myſtery of iniquity; That doth operari; was at work in the Apoſtles time; and it is no way to be admitted, but that the Myſtery of godlineſſe ſhould have like operative force.

If you ask, what it is, to work? It is to do, as all other Agents; Vt aſſimulet ſibi paſſum, to make that, it works on, like it ſelfe; to bring forth in it the very ſame quality. This, the rather, for that, this day being a Birth day, and the Myſtery of it, a Birth, or ge eration; in that, (we know) the naturall and moſt proper work is, Sui ſimile procreare, to beget and bring forth the very like to it ſelfe. And what ſhould the Myſtery of godlineſſe beget in us, but godlineſſe? What, the Myſtery of Godlineſſe (in this Chapter,) but the Exerciſe of godlineſſe (in the next?) To ſhew, we muſt make S. Baſil's Ασκησις of it: For, his Ασκησις, and S. Paul's Γυμνασια, I take to be all one.

Verſe 7.

Within; the Myſtery.
2 Pet. 3. 11. Iam. 1. 27.

Firſt, Within, (after the manner of a Myſterie,) by entring into our ſelves, and ſaying (with S. Peter) Seeing then, GOD hath dealt ſo with us, what manner of perſons ought we to be, in all holy converſation and godlineſſe? How ought we to eſteeme Him, that ſo eſteemed us? How to eſteem our ſelves, whom He hath ſo eſteemed? How, without ſoile, or ſpot, to keep that fleſh, wherein GOD hath manifeſted Himſelfe, that nothing come from it but ſuch as may become that fleſh, which is now all one with the fleſh of the SONNE of GOD.

Gal. 5. 19. Iam. 2. 18. 2 Cor. 4. 10, 11

Provided, that it be not all Within: For, we deale not with a Myſtery alone, but with a Manifeſtation too. That therefore our godlineſſe be not onely myſticall, but manifeſt, as GOD was. As the Myſtery, ſo the Godlineſſe of it; Great, and conſpicuous both. For, that is the complaint; that, in our godlineſſe, now adayes, we go very myſtically to work indeed; we keep it under a veile; and nothing manifeſt, but opera Carnis. Which maketh S. Iames cry, Oſtende mihi, ſhew it me: and S. Paul tels us, that the life of JESUS muſt not only be had in our ſpirit, but manifeſt in our fleſh. For, Godlineſſe is not only Faith, which referreth to the Myſtery (as we have it directly, at the IX. Verſe, the Myſtery of Faith:) But, it is Love too; which referreth to the Manifeſtation. For, in hoc cognoſcimus (ſaith S. Iohn,) By this, we know, our ſelves; and, in hoc cognoſcent omnes (ſaith CHRIST,) By this ſhall all men know, that we are His. And, if Faith work by Love, the Myſtery will be ſo manifeſt in us, as we ſhall need no proſpective glaſſes, or other optick inſtruments, to make it viſible; all men ſhall take notice of it.

1 Iohn 3. 14. 4. 13. Iohn 13. 35.

* By the Initiation of us into it.

And yet remaineth there one point; than which, there is not one more peculiar to a Myſtery. That which the Apoſtle (Heb. 10. 20.) calleth Initiating: whereby we grow into the fellowſhip of this, and what Myſteries ſoever. For, this we are to underſtand, that Myſteries go not all, by hearing; no, they be diſpenſed alſo: And men are to eſteeme of us (ſaith he) not onely, as of the Vnfolders, but, as of the Stewards (or Diſpenſers) of the Myſteries of GOD. Operari Myſteriis, is a phraſe well knowne to the very Heathen themſelves: That Myſteries, as they work, ſo they are to be wrought. That they are to be handled, and that our hands are to be cleane waſhed, yer we offer to touch them.

By which, I underſtand the Myſtery of godlineſſe, or Exerciſe of godlineſſe (call it whether ye will,) which we call the Sacrament: the Greeke hath no other word for it, but Μυστηριον:) whereby the Church offereth to initiate us into the fellowſhip of this dayes Myſtery. Nothing ſorteth better than theſe two Myſteries one with the other; the Diſpenſation of a Myſtery, with the Myſtery of Diſpenſation. It doth manifeſtly repreſent; it doth myſtically impart what it repreſenteth. There is in it, even by the very inſtitution, both a Manifeſtation, and that viſibly to ſet before us this fleſh; and a myſticall Communication, to infeoffe us in it, or make us partakers of it. For the Elements: What can be more properly fit, to repreſent unto us the union with our Nature, than things that do unite themſelves to our Nature? And, if we be to diſpenſe the Myſteries in due ſeaſon; what ſeaſon more due than that His fleſh and blood be ſet before us, that time, that He was manifeſted in fleſh and blood for us. Thus we ſhall be initiate.

Apo. 10 7.

You look to heare of a Conſummation of it too; and conſummate it ſhall be, but not yet: not till the dayes of the voice of the Seventh Angell. Then ſhall the Myſtery of GOD be finiſhed. So we finde it directly, but not before. When, He that was, this day manifeſted in the fleſh, ſhall manifeſt, to the fleſh, the fulneſſe of this Myſtery, His eternity, glory, and bliſſe. So, ſtill it remaineth a myſtery in part; a part thereof there ſtill remaineth behinde, to be manifeſted. What He is, appeareth; what we ſhall be, doth not yet appeare; but ſhall, at the ſecond appearing. Two veiles we read of: [1] The veile of His fleſh (Heb. 10.20.) [2] And the veile where our hope hath caſt anchor, even within the veile, meaning heaven it ſelfe. The firſt is rent; theſe myſteries are remembrances of it. The ſecond alſo ſhall be, as we alſo with it; and as he, (in the end of the Verſe) ſo we, with Him, in the end, ſhall be received up into glory. To the conſummation of which great Myſtery, even that Great Manifeſtation, He vouchſafe to bring us all, that was, this day, for us all, manifeſted in the fleſh, Ieſus Chriſt the Righteous, &c. 1 Ioh. 2 2.

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Munday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCIX.
being CHRISTMAS day.

GALAT. Chap. III. Ver. IV. V.

When the fulneſſe of time was come, God ſent his Sonne, made of a woman, made under the Law.

That He might redeeme them that were under the Law, that we might receive the Adoption of Sonnes.

IF, when the fulneſſe of time commeth, God ſent His Son: then, when God ſent His Son, is the fulneſſe of time come. And at this day, God ſent His Son. This day therefore (ſo oft as by the revolution of the yeare it commeth about) is to us a yearely repreſentation of the fulneſſe of time. So it is: and a ſpeciall honour it is to the Feaſt, that ſo it is. And we our ſelves ſeeme ſo to eſteeme of it. For we allow for every moneth a day, (look how many moneths, ſo many days,) to this Feaſt, as if it were, and we ſo thought it to be, the full recapitulation of the whole year.

This honour it hath, from Chriſt, who is the ſubſtance of this, and all other Solemnities. Peculiarly, à Chriſti miſſa, from Chriſts ſending. (For, they that read the ancient Writers of the Latine Church (Tertullian, and Cyprian) know, that Miſſa, and Miſſio, and Remiſſa, and Remiſſio, with them, are taken for one. So that, Chriſti miſſa, is the ſending of Chriſt.) And when then hath this Text place ſo fit, as Now? Or what time ſo ſeaſonable to intreat of it, as This? Of the ſending of his Son; as when God ſent his Son: Of the fulneſſe of time; as, on the yearely returne and memoriall of it.

To intreat of it then. The Heads are two: 1. Of the fulneſſe of time. 2. And of that, wherewith it is filled. 1. Times fulneſſe, in theſe, When the fulneſſe of time came. 2. Times filling, in the reſt, GOD ſent His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, &c. The Diviſion

In the former, (Quando venit plenitudo temporis,) there be foure points: 1. Plenitudo temporis: That, time hath a fulneſſe; or, that there is a fulneſſe of time. 2. Venit plenitudo: I.

plenitudo: That that fulneſſe commeth, by ſteps and degrees; not all at once. 3. Quando venit: That, it hath a Quando, (that is,) there is a time, when time thus commeth to this fulneſſe. 4. And when that When is? And that is, When God ſent His Son. And ſo paſſe we over to the other part, in the ſame Verſe, Miſit DEUS; GOD ſent His Son.

II. For the other part (touching the filling of time.) There be Texts, the right way to conſider of them, is to take them in peeces. And this is of that kind. And if we take it in ſunder, we ſhall ſee, as it is of fulneſſe, ſo a kinde of fulneſſe there is in it: every word, more full than other: every word, a ſtep in it, whereby it riſeth ſtill higher, till by ſeven ſeverall degrees it commeth to the top, and ſo the meaſure is full, 1. GOD ſent, the firſt. 2. Sent his Son, the ſecond. 3. His Sonne made, the third. 4. And that twice made, Made of a woman, the fourth. 5. Made under the Law, the fift; every one fuller than other, ſtill.

And all this, for ſome Perſons, and ſome Purpoſe; The Perſons, Vt nos, that we. The purpoſe, Reciperemus, that we might receive. Nay, (if you mark it) there be two Vt's, [1] Vt ille, [2] Vt nos, that He might, and, that We might. He might redeeme; and We might receive: that is, He, pay for it, and, We reap the benefit. 6. A double benefit; of [1] Redemption (firſt) from the ſtate of perſons caſt and condemned, under the Law, which is the ſixth. 7. And then, of [2] Tranſlation into the ſtate of adopted children of God, which is the ſeventh, and the very filling up of the meaſure.

III. All which, we may reduce to a double fulneſſe. Gods, as much as He can ſend. Ours, as much as we can deſire. GODS, in the five firſt. 1. God ſent. 2. Sent his Son. 3. His Son made. 4. Made of a Woman. 5. Made under the Law. And Ours in the two latter; 6. We are redeemed, the ſixth. 7. We receive adoption, the ſeventh.

In that of Gods, every point is full. The thing ſent, full. The ſending, and the manner of ſending, full. The making, and the two manners of making, [1] Of a woman, and, [2] under the Law, both full. And our fulneſſe in the two latter, (the effects of theſe two Acts; or makings, [1] of a woman, [2] under the Law,) Redemption and Adoption, which make up all. That when we were ſtrangers from the Adoption; and not that only, but lay under the law, as men whom ſentence had paſſed on: From this latter, we are redeemed, (He under the Law, that we from under the Law,) That, (being ſo redeemed) we might further receive the adoption of children, (and as He the Son of man: ſo we might be made the Sons of God.) Which two are as much as we can wiſh. And this is Our fulneſſe.

IV. And to theſe; I will crave leave to add another fulneſſe of Ours, riſing out of theſe, and to make a motion for it. That, as it is the time, when we from GOD, receive the fulneſſe of His Bounty: ſo it might be the time alſo, when He from us, may likewiſe receive the fulneſſe of our Duty. The time of His Bounty-fulneſſe, and the time, of our Thankfulneſſe: that it may be Plenitudo temporis, quà ad illum, quà ad nos; downward, and upward; from Him to us, and from us to Him againe: and ſo be, both wayes, The fulneſſe of time.

I Plenitudo temporis. Sap. 11. 17. Eph. 4. 13.

FIrſt there is a fulneſſe in time. The Terme, [Fulneſſe,] carrieth our conceit to Meaſure, ſtreight, from whence it is borrowed: which is then ſaid to be full, when it hath as much as it can hold. Now, God hath made all things in Meaſure: and if all things, then Time. Yea, Time it ſelf is by the Apoſtle called, Menſura temporis, the Meaſure of Time. As then, all other Meaſures have theirs; ſo the Meaſure of time alſo hath his fulneſſe, when it receiveth ſo much, as the capacity will containe no more. So, Time is a meaſure: it hath a capacity: that hath a fulneſſe. That, there is ſuch a thing as the fulneſſe of time.

2 Venit plenitudo. But, nothing is full at firſt: no more is Time by and by. Venit plenitudo, it cometh, not at once, or ſtraightwayes, but by ſteps and paces, nearer and nearer: Fils, firſt a quarter, and then half, till at laſt it come to the brim. And degrees there be, by which it commeth. Ecce palmares poſuiſti dies meos, (Pſal. 39. 6.) From which word [palmares] it is an obſervation of one of the Fathers, a man may read his Time: In his own hand, viſibly, there in an aſcent, the fingers riſe ſtill, till they come to the top of the middle finger; and when they be come thither, down againe by like deſcent, till they come to the

the little, which is the loweſt of all. So is it in our time. It riſeth ſtill by degrees, till we come to the full pitch of our Age, and then declineth againe, till we grow to the lower end of our dayes. But howſoever it may be (as it oft fals out) the deſcent is ſudden, we go down headlong without degrees, go away in a moment; yet ever this holdeth; to our fulneſſe we come not but by degrees.

Now thirdly, this comming hath a Quando venit, a time, when it commeth thither. As a time there is a great while, when we may ſay, [a] Nondum venit hora, the time is not yet come, while the meaſure is yet but in filling: So at the laſt, a time too, that we may ſay, [b] Venit hora, the time is now come, when the meaſure is full: that is, a time there is, when time commeth to the full. As in the day, when the Sun commeth to the Meridian Line: in the moneth, when it commeth to the point of oppoſition with the Moone: in the yeare, when to the Solſtice: In man, when he commeth to his full yeares: for that is the fulneſſe of time the Apoſtle alledgeth in three verſes before. 3 Quando venit. [a] Ioh. 7. 6. [b] Iohn 12. 23.

And when is that When, that time thus commeth to his fulneſſe? Quando miſit Deus, when GOD ſends it: for Time receives his filling from GOD. Of it ſelfe, time is but an empty meaſure, hath nothing in it: Many dayes and moneths run over our heads, Dies inanes, (ſaith the Pſalmiſt:) Menſes vacui, (ſaith Iob:) Empty dayes, Pſal. 78. Ver. 33. Void moneths, without any thing to fill them, Iob 7. ver. 3.

That which filleth time, is ſome memorable thing of Gods powring into it, or (as it is in the Text) of His ſending, to fill it withall. Miſit Deus is it: and ſo commeth time to be more or leſſe full; thereafter as that is, which God ſends to fill it. 4 Quando.

Now, many memorable miſſions did God make before this here, whereby in ſome meaſure, He filled up certaine times of the yeare under Moſes, and the Prophets: all which may well be termed, The implements of time.

But for all them, the meaſure was not yet full: filled perhaps to a certaine degree, but not full to the brimme: full it was not (ſeeing it might be ſtill fuller) till God ſent That, than which a more full could not be ſent.

And, That He ſent, when He ſent His Sonne, a fuller than whom He could not ſend, nor Time could not receive. Therefore, with the ſending Him, when that was, Time was at the top, that was the Quando venit, then it was, plenitudo temporis, indeed.

And, well might that time, be called the fulneſſe of time. For when He was ſent into the world, in whom the fulneſſe of the God-head dwelt bodily: in whom the Spirit was not by meaſure: in whom was the fulneſſe of grace and truth: of whoſe fulneſſe we all receive: when He was ſent, that was thus full, then was time at the full. 1 Col. 2. 9. Iohn 3. 34. Iohn 1. 14. Iohn 1. 16.

And well alſo might it be called the fulneſſe of time, in another regard. For till then, all was but in promiſe, in ſhadowes, and figures, and prophecies onely, which fill not, God knowes. But when the Performance of thoſe promiſes, the body of thoſe ſhadowes, the ſubſtance of thoſe figures, the fulfilling or filling full of all thoſe prophecies came, then came the fulneſſe of time, truly ſo called. Till then it came not: then it came. 2

And, well might it be called the fulneſſe of time, in a third reſpect. For then the Heire, (that is, the World) was come to his full age: and ſo that the fitteſt time for Him to be ſent. For to that, compareth the Apoſtle their eſtate then; that the former times under Moſes and the Prophets were as the Nonage of the world; ſub Pædagogo, in the 3. Chapter, Ver. 24. ὑπὸ παιδαγωγόν, as their A. B. C. or rudiments, (as in the very laſt words before theſe.) Their eſtate then, as of Children in their minority, little differing from ſervants. For all this while, nondum venit, the fulneſſe of time was not yet come. But a time there was, as for man, ſo for mankind to come to his full yeares: that time came with CHRISTS comming, and CHRISTS comming with it, and never till then was the fulneſſe of time; but then it was. 3

And let this be enough for this point; more there is not in the Text. But if any ſhall farther ask, why then, at that age of the World, the World was at his full age, juſt then, and neither ſooner nor later? I know many heads have been full of devices, to ſatisfie mens curioſity in that point. But I hold it ſafeſt to reſt with the Apoſtle (in the ſecond verſe) on GODS προθεσμία. Let that content us. Then was the time, for that was Tempus præfinitum à Patre, the time appointed of the Father. For, even among men, though (the Father being dead) the Law ſetteth a time, for the Son to come to His heritage: yet the Father living, no time can be prefixed, but only when

Act. 1. 7. it liketh Him to appoint; and the Father here liveth; and therefore let this προθεσμία ſtay us. The Times and Seaſons He hath put in His own power. It is not for us to know them. This is for us to know, that with His appointment, we muſt come to a full point. So doth the Apoſtle, and ſo let us, and not buſie our ſelves much with it, time is but the meaſure or caske, that wherewith it is filled, doth more concerne us. To that therefore let us come.

2 God ſent. 1 The degrees are ſeven (as I ſaid.) To take them as they riſe. Miſit Deus, God ſent. That ſtandeth firſt; and at it, let our firſt ſtay be. That will fall out to make the firſt degree. For, even this, that GOD ſent at all, Ipſum mittere Dei, this very ſending it ſelf, is a degree. It is ſo; and ſo we would reckon of it, if we knew the Sender, and who He is; the Majeſtie of His preſence how great it is, and how glorious, how far ſurpaſſing all we can ſee on earth.

For Him, for ſuch an one as He, to condeſcend, but to ſend; is ſure a degree. For enough it had been, and more than enough for Him, to be ſent to; and not to ſend Himſelfe. To have ſit ſtill, and beene content, that we might ſend to Him, and have our meſſage and petition admitted, and not He ſend to us. That had beene as much as wee could looke for, and well, if we might have beene vouchſafed but that. But it was He that ſent: not we to Him firſt, nay, not we to Him at all, but He to us.

He to us? And what were we, that He to us? Vs, (as elſewhere he termeth us) meere
Eph. 2. 12. Aliens from Him, and His houſhold: Not that only, but us, in caſe of men, whom the Law had paſſed upon (ſo is our eſtate deſcribed in the end of the Text.) For Him, to ſend to us, ſo great as He, to ſuch as we; to think us, tanti, ſo much worth, as to make any miſſion, or motion, or to diſeaſe any about us; This may well be the firſt. Be it then ſo; that to us, or for us, or concerning us. GOD would trouble Himſelfe to make any ſending: A fulneſſe there is in this. Full He was, a fulneſſe there was in Him, (even the fulneſſe of compaſsion in His bowels over our eſtate) els ſuch a Sender would never once have ſent.

2 His Son. GOD ſent, Sent, and ſent His SONNE: That, (I make no queſtion,) will beare a ſecond. Others He might have ſent; and whoſoever it had beene He had ſent, it might well have ſerved our turnes. If ſent by the hand of any His Servants, any Patriarch, Prophet, any ordinary meſſenger, it had beene enough. So, hitherto had beene His ſending. So, and no otherwiſe, ever till now.

Then if to ſend by any may ſeeme ſufficient, to ſend His SONNE, muſt needs ſeeme full. For ever the more excellent the Perſon ſent, the more honourable the ſending: the
Col. 2. 9. greater He, the fuller it. Now, greater there is not than His Son, His firſt, His only begotten Son, in whom the fullnes of the God-head dwelt; In ſending Him, He ſent the greateſt, the beſt, the fulleſt thing He had.

To heap the meaſure up yet more, with the cauſe of His ſending, in the word χαρίσεται It was voluntary. He ſent Him not for need: but for meere love to us, and nothing els. There was no abſolute neceſsity that He ſhould have ſent Him. He might have done what He intended, by the meanes and miniſtery of ſome beſides. GOD could have enabled a Creature; a Creature enabled by GOD, and the power of His might, could ſoone have trod downe Sathan under our feet. But if it had beene any other He had ſent, His love and regard to us had not ſhewed ſo full. It had been, Oſtendit Deus charitatem, but
1 Ioh. 3. 1. not, Ecce quantam charitatem oſtendit Deus. Whomſoever He had ſent beſides, His love had not been full: at leaſt, not ſo full as it ſhould have been, if He had ſent his Son. That therefore it might be full, and ſo appeare to us for full, Miſit Deus filium ſuum. Enough it was, in compaſſion of our eſtate, to have relieved us by any: Men that are in need to be releived, care not who they be that do it. Enough then for compaſsion: but not enough to manifeſt the fulneſſe of His love, unleſſe to relieve us, He ſent His own Sonne.

3 Made. This is full one would think: Yet, the Manner of His ſending Him, is fuller ſtill, Miſit filium; Filium factum. Sent His Sonne; His Son made. Sent Him, and ſent Him made: This is a third, For if He would have ſent Him, He ſhould not have ſent Him made: but as He was, neither made nor created, but like Himſelf in His own eſtate eſtate, as was meet for the Sonne of God, to be ſent. To make Him any thing, is to marre Him, be it what it will be. To ſend Him made, is to ſend Him marred, and no better. Therefore I make no doubt, CHRISTS ſending is one degree, His making is another: So to ſend, as withall to make, are two diſtinct meaſures of this filling. As He is, He is a Maker, a Creator: If GOD make Him any thing, He muſt be a thing made, a Creature; and that is a great diſparagement. So that, howſoever the Time is the fuller, for this; He is the emptier: πλήρωμα χρόνου, κένωμα Χριστοῦ, the fulneſſe of time, is His emptineſſe; the exalting of that, His abaſing: And this very Exinanivit ſeipſum, emptying Himſelfe, for our ſake, is a preſſing downe the meaſure: and ſo, even by that, ſtill the meaſure is more full. Phil. 2. 7.

Yea, the very manner of this making, hath his increaſe too, addeth to it ſtill. In the word γενόμενον: which is not every making, but making it His Nature. To have made Him a body and taken it upon Him for a time, till He had performed His Embaſſage, and then laid it off againe, that had been much: But ſo to be made, as once made, and ever made; ſo to take it, as never lay it off more, but continue ſo ſtill γενέσθαι, it to become His very Nature; ſo to be made, is to make the union full. And to make the union with us full, He was content, not to be ſent alone, but to be made; and that γενέσθαι, to be made ſo, as never unmade more. Our Man-hood becomming His Nature, no leſſe than the God-head it ſelfe. This is Filium factum indeed.

Made and twice made, (for ſo it is in the Verſe) [1] Factum ex, and [2] Factum ſub; made of, and made under: Of a woman, under the Law. So, two makings there be; either of them, of it ſelfe, a filling to the meaſure, but both of them maketh it perfectly full.

Made, firſt of a woman: that, I take clearely to be one. For, if He, if the Sonne of GOD muſt be made a Creature: it were meet he ſhould be made the beſt Creature of all. And if made of any thing, (if any one thing better than another) of that: made ſome glorious Spirit, ſome of the orders of the Angels. Nay, made, but made no Spirit; Verbum caro factum eſt, the Word became fleſh: made, but made no Angell; Nuſquam Angelos, he in no wiſe took Angels nature upon him. 4 Made of a woman. John 1. 14. Heb. 2. 16.

But made man. Firſt, I will ask with David, Domine, quid eſt homo? Lord, what is man? And then, tell you his anſwer: Homo quaſi res nihili, Man is like a thing of nought. And this he was made, this he became, made man, made of a woman: did not abhorre the Virgins wombe, (as we ſing daily, to the high praiſe of the fulneſſe of His humility, to which His love brought Him for our ſakes.) For, whatſoever elſe He had beene made, it would have done us no good. In this then was the fulneſſe of His Love, as before of His Fathers, that He would be made, and was made, not what was fitteſt for Him, but what was beſt for us: not, what was moſt for His glory, but what was moſt for our benefit and behoofe. Pſal. 144. 5.

Made of a woman. For, Man He might have been made, and yet have had a body framed for Him in Heaven, and not made of a Woman. But when He ſaith, Factum ex muliere, it is evident, He paſſed not thorow her, as water thorow a Conduit Pipe, (as fondly dreameth the Anabaptiſt.) Made of, Factum ex: Ex dicit materiam. Made of her; She miniſtred the matter, Fleſh of her fleſh. Semen mulieris, the ſeed; and Semen intimum ſubſtantiæ, that is, the principall and very inward chiefe part of the ſubſtance. Made of that, made of her very ſubſtance. Gen. 3. 15.

And ſo have we here now in one, both twaine His Natures. God ſent His Sonne, there His Divine: Made of a woman, here His Humane Nature. That, from the boſome of His Father, before all worlds; this from the wombe of his mother, in the world. So that, as from eternity, GOD His Father might ſay that verſe of the Pſalme, Filius meus es tu, hodie genui te, Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee: So, in the fulneſſe of time, might the Virgin his mother, no leſſe truly, Filius meus es tu, hodie peperi te, Thou art my Sonne, this day have I brought thee into the world. Pſal. 2. 7.

And here now, at this word, made of a woman, He beginneth to concerne us ſomewhat. There groweth an alliance betweene us: For, we alſo are made of a woman. And our hope is, as, He will not be confounded, to be counted inter natos mulierum; no more will He be, (ſaith the Apoſtle) to ſay, in medio fratrum; to acknowledge Heb. 1. 11. Rom. 8. 29.

ledge us his Brethren. And ſo by this Time he groweth ſomewhat neare us.

5 Made under the Law.

This now is full for the union with our nature, to be made of a woman. But ſo to be made of a woman, without he be alſo made under the Law, is not neare enough yet. For, if He be out of the compaſſe of the Law, that the Law cannot take hold of Him, Factum ex muliere will do us ſmall pleaſure. And He was ſo born, ſo made of a woman; as the verity of His conception, is in this factum ex muliere: So the purity is in this, that it is but ex muliere, and no more; of the Virgin alone, by the power of the HOLY GHOST, without mixture of fleſhly generation. By vertue whereof, no originall

1 Tim. 1. 9. ſoile was in Him. Iuſt born He was, and Iuſto non eſt lex poſita, no law for the juſt, no law could touch Him. And ſo we, never the better, for factum ex muliere.

For if one be in debt and danger of the Law, to have a Brother, of the ſame bloud, made of the ſame woman; both (as we ſay) lying in one belly, will little availe him, except he will alſo come under the Law, that is, become his Surety, and undertake for him.

Col. 2. 14. And ſuch was our eſtate. As Debtors we were, by vertue of Chirographum contra nos, the hand-writing that was againſt us. Which was our Bond, and we had forfeited it. And ſo, factus ex muliere, to us, without factus ſub lege, would have been to ſmall purpoſe.

No remedy therefore, He muſt be new made; made againe once more. And ſo He was, caſt in a new mould; and at His ſecond making, made under the Law; under which if He had not been made, we had been marred; even quite undone for ever, if this had not been done for us too. Therefore, He became bound for us alſo, entred bond anew, took on Him, not only our Nature, but our Debt; our Nature, and Condition both. Nature, as men; Condition, as ſinfull men; expreſſed in the words following, [Them that were under the Law:] for that was our Condition. There had indeed been no capacity in Him, to do this, if the former had not gone before, factum ex muliere; if He had not been, as we, made of a Woman: But the former was for this; Made of a Woman He was, that He might be made under the Law: being ex muliere, He might then become ſub Lege, which before He could not, but then He might and did: And ſo this ſtill is the fuller.

Gal. 5. 3. And when did He this? When was He made under the Law? Even then, when He was circumciſed. For this doth S. Paul teſtifie, in the third of the next Chapter; Behold, I Paul teſtifie unto you, whoſoever is circumciſed, Factus eſt debitor univerſæ Legis, He becoms a debtor to the whole Law. At His Circumciſion then, He entred Bond anew with us; and in ſigne that ſo He did, He ſhed then a few drops of His bloud, wherby He ſigned the Bond (as it were) and gave thoſe few drops then, tanquam arrham univerſi ſanguinis effundendi, as a pledge or earneſt, that when the fulneſſe of time came, He would be ready to ſhed all the reſt; as He did. For I would not have you miſtake, though we ſpeak of this, [ſub Lege] being under the Law, in the termes of a Debt ſometimes: yet the truth is, this debt of ours was no money debt; we were not ſub lege pecuniariâ, but Capitali: and the debt of a Capitall Law is Death: and under that, under Death He went, and that the worſt death Law had to inflict, even the Death of the Croſſe, the moſt bitter, reproachfull, curſed death of the Croſſe. So that upon the matter, factus ſub lege, and factus in Cruce, come both to one; one amounts to as much as the other. Well, this He did undertake for us at His Circumciſion: and therefore then, and not till then, He had His

Luk. 2. 21. Col. 2. 14. name given Him, the Name of JESUS a SAVIOUR. For then took He on Him the Obligation to ſave us. And look what then at His Circumciſion He undertook, at His Paſſion He paid even to the full: and having paid it, delevit Chirographum, cancelled the ſentence of the Law, that till then was of record, and ſtood in full force againſt us.

Howbeit, all this was but one part of the Law; but He was made ſub lege univerſa, under the whole Law; and that not by His death only, but by his life too. The one halfe of the Law, (that is, the Directive part,) he was made under that, and ſatisfied it, by the Innocency of his Life, without breaking ſo much as one jot or tittle of the Law: and ſo anſwered that part (as it might be the Principall.) The other halfe of the Law, which is the Penalty: hee was under that part alſo, and ſatisfied it, by ſuffering a wrongfull death, no way deſerved, or due by him; and ſo anſwered that (as it might be the forfeiture.) So he was made under both, under the whole Law. Satisfying the Principall, there was no reaſon he ſhould be liable to the forfeiture forfeiture and penalty: yet, under that He was alſo. And all, that the whole Law might be ſatisfied fully, by His being under both parts; and ſo no part of it light upon us.

Theſe two then, (1 Made of a Woman, 2 Made under the Law,) ye ſee, are two ſeverall makings, and both very requiſite. Therefore, either hath a ſeverall Feaſt, they divide this Solemnitie between them: ſix dayes apeice, to either; as the ſeverall moities of this fulneſſe of time. This day, Verbum caro factum, the Word made fleſh: that day, Him that knew no ſin, He made ſin, (that is) made Him undertake to be handled as a ſinner, to be under the Law, and to indure what the Law could lay upon him. And ſo now, the thing ſent is full: and fully ſent, becauſe made: and fully made, becauſe made once and twice over: fully made ours, becauſe fully united to us. Made of a woman as well as we: Made under the Law as deep as we: both ex muliere, and ſub Lege. So of our nature (of a woman,) that of our condition alſo (under the Law:) So, fully united to us in nature, and condition both. John 1. 14. 2 Cor 5 21.

And ſo we are come to the full Meaſure of His ſending. And, that we are come to the full, ye ſhall plainly ſee, by the overflowing, by that which we receive from this fulneſſe; which is the latter part of the verſe, and is our fulneſſe, even the fulneſſe of all that we can deſire. For, if we come now to ask, for whom is all this adoe, this ſending, this making, over and over againe? It is for us. So is the concluſion, ut nos, that we might from this fulneſſe, receive the full of our wiſh. For in theſe two behind, 1 Redemption, & 2 Adoption; to be redeemed, and to be adopted, are the full of all we can wiſh our ſelves. Verſe 5.

The tranſcendent Diviſion, of Good and Evill, is it, that comprehendeth all. And here it is. Our deſire can extend it ſelf no farther than to be rid of all evill, and to attain all that good is. By theſe two, (being redeemed, and being adopted) we are made partakers of them both: To be redeemed from under the Law, is to be quit of all Evill. To receive the adoption of children, is to be ſtated in all that is Good. For, all Evill is, in being under the Law, from whence we are redeemed; and, all Good, in being inveſted in the heavenly Inheritance, whereunto we are adopted. Thus ſtood the caſe with us: Aliens we were from GOD, His Covenant, and His Kingdome: More than that, Priſoners we were, faſt layed up under the Law. From this latter we are freed: of the former we are ſeazed: and what would we more? Eph. 2. 12.

Onely, this you ſhall obſerve, that in the Idiom of the Scriptures it is uſuall; two points being ſet down, when they are reſumed againe, to begin with the later, and ſo end with the former. So is it here, at the firſt, made of a woman, made under the Law. At the reſuming, he begins with the later, made under the Law, that he might redeeme them that were under the Law. And then comes to the former, made of a woman, made the Sonne of man, that we by adoption might be made the Sonnes of GOD. But, this we are to mark, it is He that is at all the coſt and paine: and we, that have the benefit by it. At the redeeming it is, Vt ille: at the receiving it is, Vt nos.

Briefly of either: and firſt, of our Redeeming. Redeeming (as the word giveth it) is a ſecond buying, or buying back of a thing, before aliened or ſold. Ever, a former ſale is preſuppoſed before it. And ſuch a thing there had gone before. A kinde of alienation had formerly been, whereby we had made away our ſelves, (for, a ſale I cannot call it, it was for ſuch a trifle:) Our Nature aliened in Adam, for the forbidden fruit; a matter of no moment. Our Perſons likewiſe; daily we our ſelves alien them, for ſome trifling pleaſure, or profit; matters not much more worth. And, when we have thus paſſed our ſelves away, by this ſelling our ſelves under ſin, the Law ſeazeth on us, and under it we are συγκεκλεισμένοι (Chap. 3. v. 23.) even lock'd up, as it were, in a Dungeon, tied faſt with the cords of our ſins, (Pro. 5. 22.) The ſentence paſſeth on us, and we waiting but for execution. What evill is there not, in this eſtate, and on every ſoule that is in it? Well then, the firſt Vt, the firſt end is, to get us rid from under this eſtate.

That He redeem them that were under the Law.

Rom. 7. 14.

He did it: not by way of entreaty, ſtep in and beg our pardon: that would not ſerve. Sold we were, and bought we muſt be, a price muſt be laid downe for us. To get us from under the Law, it was not a matter of Interceſſion, to ſue for it, and have it. No, He muſt Purchaſe it, and pay for it. It was a matter of Redemption.

And, in Redemption or a Purchaſe, we look to the Price. For if it be at any eaſie rate, it is ſo much the better. But with a high price, He purchaſed us; it coſt Him deare to bring it about. Non auro, nec argento; Neither of them would ſerve; At an higher rate it was, even Pretioſo ſanguine. His precious bloud was the price we ſtood Him in. Which He payed, when He gave His life a ranſome for many.

1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. Mat. 20. 28.

It ſtood thus betweene Him and us, in this point of Redemption. Here are certaine malefactors under the Law, to ſuffer, to be executed: What ſay you to them? Why, I will become under the law, ſuffer that they ſhould, take upon me their execution, upon condition, they may be quit. In effect ſo much, at His Paſſion, He ſaid, Si ergo me quæritis, (Ioh. 18. 6.) If you lay hold on me, if I muſt diſcharge all, Sine hos abire, Let thoſe goe their way, Let the price I pay be their Redemption: and ſo it was. And ſo we come to be redeemed from under the Law.

And this is to be marked, that them that were under the Law, and We that are to receive, are but one, one and the ſame perſons both: but being ſo redeemed, then we are our ſelves. Till then, the Apoſtle ſpeaks of us, in the third perſon, (Them that were under the Law,) as of ſome ſtrangers, as of men of another world, none of our own. But now being redeemed, the ſtile changeth. He ſpeaketh of us in the firſt perſon, ut Nos, that We: For, till now, we were not our own, we were not our ſelves; but now we are: Till this, it was the old yeare ſtill with us; but with the new yeare commeth our new eſtate.

7 That wee might receive the Adoption of Children.

Being thus redeemed, we are got from under the Law: and that is much. Till a party come to be once under it, and feele the weight of it, he ſhall never underſtand this aright; but then he ſhall. And if any have been under it, he knowes what it is, and how great a benefit to be got thence. But is this all? No, He leaves us not here; but to make the meaſure compleat, yea, even to flow over, He gives us not over, when He had rid us out of this wretched eſtate, till He have brought us to an eſtate, as good as He Himſelfe is in. After our Redemption, we ſtood but as Priſoners inlarged; that was all: But ſtill we were as ſtrangers; no part nor portion in GOD, or His kingdome: nor no reaſon, we ſhould hope for any. He now goeth one ſtep further, which is the higheſt and furtheſt ſtep of all. For further than it he cannot go.

That we might receive the adoption, (that is) from the eſtate of Priſoners condemned, be tranſlated into the eſtate of Children Adopted. Of Adopted: for, of Naturall, we could not: That is His peculiar alone, and He therein onely above us, but els, fully to the joynt fruition of all that He hath, which is fully as much as we could deſire. And this is our Fieri out of His Factum ex muliere. We made the Sonnes of God, as He the Sonne of Man; We made partakers of His Divine, as He of our Humane nature. To purchaſe our pardon, to free us from death, and the Lawes ſentence, this ſeemed a ſmall thing to Him: yet this is Lex hominis. Mans goodneſſe goeth no farther; and gracious is the Prince that doth but ſo much. For, who ever heard of a condemned man, Adopted afterward; or that thought it not enough and enough, if he did but eſcape with his life? So farre then to exalt His bounty, to that fulneſſe, as Pardon, and Adopt both, Non eſt Lex hominis hæc; no ſuch meaſure amongſt men; Zelus Domini exercituum, The zeal of the Lord of Hoſts, was to performe this: The fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelt in Him, that brought this to paſſe.

2 Pet. 1. 4. 2 Sam. 7. 19. Eſa. 9. 7.

For, (to ſpeak of adopting:) We ſee it daily, no father adopts, unleſſe He be Orbe, have no child; or if he have one, for ſome deep diſlike have caſt him off. But GOD had a Sonne, The brightneſſe of His glory; The true Character of His Subſtance. And no diſpleaſure there was: No, In quo complacitum eſt, In whom He was abſolutely well pleaſed: yet would He, by adoption, for all that, bring many Sonnes to Glory. Is not this full on His part?

Heb. 1. 3. Mat. 17. 5. Heb. 2. 10.

We ſee againe, no Heire will endure to heare of Adoption, nay, nor divide his Inheritance, no, not with his naturall Brethren. Then, that the Heire of all things, ſhould admit joint Heires to the Kingdome He was borne to; and that admit them not out of ſuch, as were neare Him, but from ſuch as were ſtrangers, yea, ſuch as had beene condemned men under the Law; Is not this full on His part? To purchaſe us, and to purchaſe for us, both at once? And not to do this for us alone, but to

Heb. 1. 3. Rom. 8. 17.

aſſure it to us: For as his Father, in this Verſe, ſends Him; So, in the next Verſe, He ſends the Spirit of his Son, to give us ſeiſin of this our Adoption: whereby we now call Him, the Jewes Abba, the Gentiles Pater, as Children all, and He our Father, which is the priviledge of the Adoption, we here receive.

And now we are to come to the fulneſſe indeed. For this Adoption, is the fulneſſe of our option: we cannot extend; we, our wiſh; or He, His love and goodneſſe any further. For what can we aske, or He give more, ſeeing in giving this, He giveth all he is worth? By this time, it is full Sea: All the banks are filled: It is now as Ezekiels waters that he ſaw flow from under the threſhold of the Temple: that took him to the ankels firſt, then to the knees, after to the loynes; at laſt ſo high riſen, there was no more paſſage.

1. From the fulneſſe of his Compaſſion, he ſent to releaſe us: 2. From the fulneſſe of his Love, He ſent his Son: 3. In the fulneſſe of Humility, He ſent him made: 4. Made of a Woman, to make a full union with our Nature: 5. Made under the Law, to make the union yet more perfectly full with our ſinfull condition: 6. That we might obtaine a full deliverance, from all Evill, by being redeemed: 7. And a full eſtate of the joy and Glory of his heavenly inheritance, by being Adopted. So, there is fulneſſe of all hands. and ſo much for the fulneſſe of the beneſit, we receive.

Now, for the fulneſſe of the Dutie, we are to performe this day. For, in the fulneſſe of time, all things are to be full. Plenitudo temporis, tempus plenitudinis. And ſeeing God hath ſuffered us to live, to ſee the yeare run about, to this plenitudo temporis: if it be ſo on GODS part; meet alſo, it be ſo on ours: and that we be not empty, in this fulneſſe of time. It is not fit, if He be at the brinke, that we be at the bottome. But that we be willing, to yeeld him of ours againe; of our duty (I mean:) that it, to Him, in a meaſure and proportion be like full, as his Bounty hath been full above meaſure toward us. That ſo from us, and on our parts, it may be plenitudo temporis, or tempus plenitudinis, the fulneſſe of time, or time of fulneſſe, chuſe you whether.

1. And a time of fulneſſe it will be, I know, in a ſenſe: of fulneſſe of bread, of fulneſſe of bravery, of fulneſſe of ſport and paſtime: and this it may be. And it hath been ever a joyfull time in appearance, for it ſhould be ſo. With the joy, (ſaith Eſay, a verſe or two before, Puer natus eſt nobis, unto us a child is born) that men rejoyce with in harveſt: Not to goe from our Text here, With the joy of men that are come out of priſon, have ſcaped the Law; with the joy of men that have got the reverſion of a goodly heritage. Only, that we forget not the principall; that this outward joy eat not up, evacuate not our ſpirituall joy, proper to the Feaſt: that we have in minde, in the middeſt of our mirth, the cauſe of it, CHRISTS ſending, and the benefits that come thereby. And it ſhall be a good ſign unto us, if we can thus rejoyce, if this our joy can be full, if we can make a ſpirituall bleſsing the object of our mirth. Beatus populus, qui ſcit jubilationem, Bleſſed is the people, that can rejoyce on this manner. Eſay 9. 3. Pſal. 89 15.

And after our joyfulneſſe, or fulneſſe of joy, our fulneſſe of thanks, or thankfulneſſe, is to enſue: For with that fulneſſe, we are to celebrate it likewiſe. Our mindes firſt, and then our mouths, to be filled with bleſſing, and praiſe, and thanks to Him that hath made our times not to fall into thoſe empty ages of the world, but to fall within this fulneſſe of time, which ſo many Kings and Prophets deſired to have lived in, but fell ſhort of; and lived then when the times were full of ſhadowes, and promiſes, and nothing elſe. How inſtantly they longed to have held ſuch a Feaſt, to have kept a Chriſtmas, it is evident by David's Inclina Cœlos, by Eſay's Vtinam diſrumpas Cœlos, Bow the heavens, and breake the heavens: How much (I ſay) they longed for it; And therefore, that we make not light account of it. 2 Luk. 10 2. Pſal. 144 5. Eſay 64. 1.

To render our thanks then, and to remember to doe it fully, To forget none: To him that was ſent, and to him that Sent; Sent his Son, in this, the Spirit of his Son, in the next verſe. To begin with oſculamini Filium, it is the firſt duty enjoyned us this day, to kiſſe the babe new borne, that when his Father would ſend him, ſaid, Ecce venio, ſo readily: and when he would make him, was content with, Corpus aptaſti mihi, to have a body made him, meet for him to ſuffer in: who willingly yeelded to be our SHILO; to this Pſal. 2. 12. Pſal. 40 7. Gen. 49 10.

ἀπόστολος here; yea, to be not only CHRIST, but an Apoſtle for us, Heb. 3. 1. even the Apoſtle of our profeſsion.

And not to him that was ſent and made alone, but to the FATHER that ſent him, and to the HOLY GHOST that made him, (as by whom he was conceived.) To the FATHER, for his miſsion; the SONNE, for his redemption; The HOLY GHOST, for his adoption; For, by him it is wrought. He that made him the Son of Man, doth likewiſe regenerate us, to the ſtate of the Sons of God. And this for our thankfulneſse.

3. And to theſe two, (to make the meaſure full) to joyne, the fulneſſe of duty, even whatſoever dutifull minded perſons may yeeld to a bountifull minded, and a bountifull handed Benefactor. And with this to begin, to conſecrate this firſt day of this fulneſſe of time: even with our ſervice to him at the full; which is then at the full, when no part is miſſing: when all our duties of preaching, and praying, of hymns, of offering, of Sacrament; and all, meet together. No fulneſſe there is of our Liturgie, or publike ſolemne Service without a Sacrament. Some part, yea, the chief part is wanting, if that be wanting. But our thanks are ſurely not full, without the holy Euchariſt, which is by interpretation, Thanksgiving it ſelfe. Fully we cannot ſay, Quid retribuam Domino? but we
Pſa. 116 12. 13 muſt anſwer, Calicem ſalutaris accipiam, we will take the cup of Salvation, and with it in our hands give thanks to him, render him our true Euchariſt, or reall thankſgiving indeed. In which Cup is the Blood, not only of our redemption, of the Covenant, that free-
Mat. 26. 28. eth us from the Law, and maketh the Deſtroyer paſſe over us: but of our Adoption, of the New Teſtament alſo, which entitles us, and conveyes unto us (Teſtament-wiſe, or by way of Legacy) the eſtate we have in the joy and bliſſe of his heavenly Kingdome, whereto wea re adopted. We are then made partakers of him, and with him of both theſe his
1 Cor. 12. 13. Eph 4 30. benefits. We there are made to drink of the Spirit, by which we are ſealed to the day of our redemption and Adoption both. So that, our freeing from under the Law, our inveſtiture into our new adopted ſtate, are not fully conſummate without it.

And what? Shall this be all? No, when this is done; there is allowance of twelve dayes more, for this fulneſſe of time: that we ſhrink not up our duty into this day alone, but in the reſt alſo remember, to redeeme ſome part of the day, to adopt ſome houre at the leaſt, to bethink our ſelves of the duty, the Time calleth to us for: that ſo, we have 2 Cor 6. 2. not IOBS dies vacuos, no day quite empty in this fulneſſe of time. Hereof aſſuring our ſelves, that what we do in this fulneſſe of time, will have full acceptance at his hands. It is the time of his Birth, which is ever a time, as accepted, ſo of accepting; wherein, what is done, will be acceptably taken to the full: Fully accepted, and fully rewarded by him,
Ioh. 1. 16. of whoſe fulneſſe we all receive: With this condition, of grace for grace, ever, one grace for another.

And ſo, growing from grace to grace, finally from this fulneſſe, we ſhall come to be partakers of another yet behinde, to which we aſpire. For, all this is but the fulneſſe of Apoc. 10. 6. time: But that, the fulneſſe of eternity, when time ſhall be run out, and his glaſſe empty, Et tempus non erit amplius; which is, at his next ſending. For yet once more ſhall God ſend him, and he come againe. At which comming, we ſhall then indeed receive the fulneſſe of our redemption, not from the Law (that we have already) but from Corruption, to which our bodies are yet ſubject; and receive the full fruition of the Inheritance, whereto we are here but adopted. And then it will be perfect, compleat, abſolute fulnes indeed, when we ſhall all be filled with the fulneſſe of him that filleth all in all. For ſo ſhall all be, when nothing ſhall be wanting in any: for GOD ſhall be all in all. Not as here he is, ſomething (and, but ſomething,) in every one; but then omnia in omnibus. And Eph 1 23. 1 Cor. 15. 28. Mat 25 21. then, the meaſure ſhall be ſo full, as it cannot enter into us, we cannot hold it: We muſt enter into it; Intra in gaudium Domini tui.

To this we aſpire, and to this, in the fulneſſe appointed of every one of our times, Almighty GOD bring us, by Him and for His ſake, that in this fulneſſe of time, was ſent to worke it for us, in His perſon: and worke it in us, by the operation of His Bleſſed SPIRIT. To whom, &c.

being CHRISTMAS day.

LUKE Chap. II. Ver. X, XI.

The Angell ſaid unto them, Be not afraid, for behold, I bring you good tydings, of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.
That, there is borne, unto you, this day, a SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST, the LORD, in the City of David.

THere is a Word in this Text, and it is hodiè, by vertue whereof this Day, may ſeeme to challenge a ſpeciall property in this Text, and this Text in this Day. CHRIST was borne, is true any day: but this day CHRIST was borne, never, but to day only. For, of no day in the yeare can it be ſaid, Hodiè natus, but of this. By which word, the HOLY GHOST may ſeeme to have marked it out, and make it the peculiar Text of the day.

Then, it will not be amiſſe, Donec cognominatur hodiè, (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) while it is called, to day, to heare it. To morrow, the word hodiè will be loſt: This day, and not any day elſe, it is in ſeaſon. Let us then heare it this day, which we can heare no day beſides. Heb. 3. 13.

IT is then the firſt report, the very firſt newes, that came (as this day) of that, which maketh this day, ſo high a Feaſt; the birth of Chriſt.

It came by an Angell then: No Man was meet to be the meſſenger of it. And look how it came then, ſo it ſhould come ſtill; and none but an Angell bring it: as, more fit for the tongues of Angels than of men. Yet ſince, GOD hath allowed ſinfull men, to be the Reporters of it at the ſecond hand; and the newes never the worſe; for that good newes is good newes and welcome, by any, though the perſon be but eyen a foule Leper that brings it. Yet that the meanneſſe of the meſſenger offend us not, ever we are to remember this; Be the party who he will, that brings it, the newes of CHRISTS birth, is a meſſage for an Angell. 1 Dixit Angelus. 2 Reg 7. 9.

This had been news for the beſt Prince on the Earth. That theſe Illis here, theſe parties were Shepheards, that this Meſſage came to them, needs not ſeeme ſtrange: It found none elſe (at the time) to come to: The Angell was glad to find any to tell it to; even to tell it the firſt he could meet withall: None were then awake, none in caſe to receive it, but a ſort of poore Shepheards; and to them he told it. 2 Dixit illis.

Yet, it fell not out amiſſe, that Shepheards they were; the newes fitted them well. It well agreed, to tell Shepheards of the yeaning of a ſtrange Lamb: ſuch a Lamb, as ſhould take away the ſins of the world: ſuch a Lamb, as they might ſend to the Ruler of the World for a preſent, Mitte Agnum Dominatori terræ: Eſay's Lamb. Or (if you will) to tell Shepheards, Ioh 1. 29. Eſa. 16. 1.

Ezec. 34.23. [a] 1 Pet. 5.4. [b] Heb. 13.20. [c] Ioh. 10.11.

Shepheards, of the birth of a Shepheard; Ezechiels Shepheard; Ecce ſuſcitabo vobis Paſtorem; Behold I will raiſe you a Shepheard: the [a] Chiefe Shepheard, the [b] Great Shepheard, and the [c] Good Shepheard that gave his life for his flock. And ſo it was not unfit newes, for the Perſons to whom it came.

3 Dixit Evangelizo.

For the Manner: the Angell delivereth it Evangelizando, Church-wiſe, (and that was a ſign this place ſhould ever be the Exchange for this newes:) Church-wiſe (I ſay) for he doth it by a Sermon: here at this Verſe: and then by Hymne or Antheme after, at the XIV. Verſe. A Sermon: the Angell himſelfe cals it ſo, Evangelizo vobis, I come to Evangelize, to preach you a Goſpell: that firſt. And preſently after he had done his Sermon, there is the Hymne, Gloria in excelſis, taken up by the Quiere of Heaven. An Angell makes the one: A multitude of Angels ſing the other. The whole ſervice of this day, the Sermon, the Antheme, by Angels, all.

4 Evangelizo gaudium magnum.

Now, the end of both Sermon and Antheme, and of the Angels, in publiſhing it, and of the Shepheards, and us, in hearing it, is gaudium, joy, for the Benefit, and Honour; Gaudium magnum, great joy, for the great Benefit, and great Honour vouchſafed our Nature, and us this day. Ioy, is in the Text, and if joy be in the time, it is no harme: We keep the Text, if we hold the Time with Ioy, For ſo the Angell doth warrant us to hold it.

Of this Angelicall, or Evangelicall meſſage, or (as not I, but the Angell calleth it) Sermon; theſe two Verſes, I have read, are a part. Whereof the former is but an

2 Ecce, exciting them to heare it, by magnifying the meſſage, as well worth their hearing, Be not afraid, for behold I bring you good tydings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people. The latter, is the very meſſage it ſelf, That, there is born unto you, this day a SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST the LORD, in the City of David.

1 In the former, are theſe points: 1. Feare not. (it is no ill newes, I bring you) 2. Nay, it it good newes. 3. Good, for it is newes of joy. 4. Joy, and that no ordinary, but great joy. 5. Not to ſome few, but to the whole people. 6. And not toti populo to all one people, but omni populo, to all people whatſoever. 7. And them, not for the preſent, but Quod erit omni populo, that is, and ſo ſhall be, to all, as long as there ſhall be any people, upon earth. And, by vertue of this [Quod erit,] to us, here this day. Ecce, Behold, ſuch is the newes I bring.

2 The meſſage it ſelfe.

In the latter, the Meſſage it ſelf. (The ſumm whereof is) the birth of a Child, A Child is borne. Three things are propoſed of Him. 1. This Child is a SAVIOUR. 2. A Saviour which is CHRIST. 3. Chriſt the Lord, Chriſtus dominus. For every Saviour is not CHRIST, nor every Chriſt CHRISTUS DOMINUS, CHRIST the LORD, or the LORD CHRIST. He, is all three.

2 The circumſtances

Then have we beſides, three circumſtances, of the [1] Perſons, [2] Time, and [3] Place,

I The Perſons.

1. The Perſons, for whom all this is: twiſe repeated; [1] Evangelizo vobis, in the firſt Verſe, [2] Natus vobis in the ſecond. But this, I make ſome doubt of, whether it be a

2 The Time.

Circumſtance or no: I rather hold it a principall part of the Subſtance, as, the word of conveyance, whereby it paſſeth to us. And ſure, there is no joy either in Evangelizo, the Meſſage; or Natus, the Birth, without it; without Vobis. But, if the Meſſage, and the Birth it ſelfe both, be ours; then it is Gaudium magnum indeed. Specially, if we adde (2.) the Time when, not many dayes hence, but even this very day. And (3.) the

3 The Place.

Place where, that it is in no remote Region far hence, but in the City of David, even here hard by.

3 Our duty reciprocall.

And then laſtly in a word; what our parts are to perform, to theſe two parts, [1] this dayes Meſſage, and [2] this dayes Birth of our SAVIOUR, CHRIST, the LORD.

Be not afraid.

They were afraid.

HEre is a ſtop, that the Meſſage cannot proceed: For the ſight of the Meſſenger, hath almoſt marred the hearing of the Meſſage. The parties to whom it comes: be in ſuch feare, as they be not in caſe to receive it. They were afraid, and that ſore afraid (as is ſaid in the Verſe before) at the ſight of the Angel, that came with the newes,

So were others

And this was not the caſe of theſe poore men only: Others and other manner of people people were ſo, as well as they. This Goſpell of S. Luke is ſcarce begun; we are yet but a little way in the ſecond Chapter; and we have already, three Noli timere's in it: and all, as here, at the comming of an Angell. [1] Feare not Zachary, (Chap. 1. 13.) So, he was afraid. [2] Feare not Mary, (Chap. 1. 30.) So, ſhe was afraid. [3] And now, Feare not theſe here, That it ſeemes to be generall, to feare, at an Angels appearing.

What was it? It was not the feare of an evill conſcience: They were about no harme. Zachary was at Church at his office; The bleſſed Virgin (I doubt not) bleſſedly imployed. Theſe here, doing their duty; Watching over their flocks by night: Yet, Feared, all. What ſhould the matter be? It is a plaine ſign, our nature is fallen from her originall: Heaven, and we are not in the terms, we ſhould be: not the beſt of us all. Of what not. Of what.

Angels are the meſſengers of Heaven. Meſſengers ever come with tydings; but whether good or bad we cannot tell. Here comes an Angel with newes from heaven: what newes he brings, we know not, and therefore we feare, becauſe we know not. Which ſhewes, all is not well betweene Heaven and us; that upon every comming of an Angell, we promiſe our ſelves no better newes from thence; but ſtill are afraid of the meſſages, and meſſengers that comes from that place. Why of the Angel.

That the meſſage then may proceed, this feare muſt be removed. In a troubled water, no face will well be ſeen: nor, by a troubled mind, no meſſage received, till it be ſetled. To ſettle them then for it; no other way, no other word to begin with, but Nolite timere, feare not, and that is ever the Angels beginning. Such is our infirmity, ever he muſt begin with theſe two words, Noli timere, feare not: And ſo he doth ſeven times in this Goſpell. Be not afraid.

But, feare will not be caſt out with a couple of words, till they ſee ſome reaſons to quiet them. And no better reaſon, than to ſhew they have no reaſon to feare. For, feare is the expectation of evill, and there is no evill toward them: and ſo they have no reaſon to feare; quòd trepidaverunt timore, ubi non erat timor. As if he ſhould ſay; Angels have come with weeping news, as Iude 2, v. 5. If I were ſuch an one, if I came with ſad tydings, ye had reaſon, ye might feare. But now your terror, groweth out of errour. You are miſtaken in me, I am no ſuch Angell; I am Angelus Evangelizans, an Angell with a Goſpell, one that comes with no bad newes. Feare not then. There is no evill toward. 1 For, no ill tydings. Pſal. 53 5.

No evill: and that were enough for feare not. But here is a further matter; Not only privativè, I bring no ill; but poſitivè, I bring you good newes. And good newes, is, Nolite timere, and ſomewhat beſides, (that is,) Feare not, but be of Good cheere. They be two degrees plainly, though one be inferred of the other. Feare no ill, there is none to fear; there is no ill, nay there is good towards. For, good newes is good, in that it repreſents the good it ſelfe to us before it come, It is but words: true: But ſuch words made Iacob revive againe, when he was more than halfe dead, even the good newes of Ioſephs welfare. If I might but heare good tydings (ſaith David, when his bones were broken) it would make me well againe: That Salomon ſaid well, A good meſſenger is a good medicine. 2 But, good tydings. Gen. 45. 17. Pſal 51. 8. Prov. 13 17.

Specially, this here which is ſo good, as it carrieth away the name from the reſt, to be called The Goſpell, or, the glad tydings, as if none ſo glad, nay, none glad at all without it. It is (ſaith the Apoſtle) odor ſuavitatis, a comfortable ſweet ſavour. It is (ſaith the wiſe man) dulcedo animæ, & ſanitas oſſium, the ſweetneſſe of the ſoule, the very health of the bones. It is ſuch (ſaith the Prophet) as the lips are precious, and the feet beautifull, of them that bring it, that a Saviour is borne, as by whom, things in heaven and things in earth, Men and Angels (which were in feare one of another) are ſet at peace and love: and Love caſteth out feare, giveth the true Nolite timere. 2 Cor. 2 1. 5. Prov. 16. 24. Eſay 52 7. Col. 1 20. 1 Ioh 14. 18.

Good newes of joy: For, of good newes, there are more ſorts than one. Good newes it had beene, if it had beene but Evangelizo vobis ſpem. Newes of good hope: that had beene enough, for Nolite timere. This is more, it is of joy. I wot well, there is a joy in hope; Spe gaudentes, ſaith the Apoſtle: But that joy is not full, till the fulneſſe of time come. Nor it is not perfect, for it is allayed ſomewhat, with an unpleaſing mixture, which is ſpes differtur, and that (as the wiſe man ſaith) affligit animam: Hope deferred afflicteth the ſoule. Gaudium Spei is nothing to Gaudium rei: the hope de futuro, of a thing 3 Tydings of joy Rom 12 13. Ioh 16. 24. Gal 4. 4. Prov. 13. 12.

And indeed, this dayes newes, it was ever Evangelium ſpei : ever in the future tenſe, before. Even the very laſt before this, to the bleſſed Virgin, Ecce concipies, Thou Luk. 1. 31. ſhalt conceive: Shalt. So it was yet to come. This is the firſt in the preſent tenſe: Not, is to be borne, is to be ſent, is to come, but, Natus eſt, Miſſus eſt, Venit, is borne, is ſent, is come, Hodiè, even to day, takes no time: In the City of David, not far hence, but even hard by. This is Evangelizo gaudium : This is joy indeed.

4 Of great joy. But even in Ioy, there be diverſe degrees: All are not of one ſize: Some there are leſſer; ſome (as this here) Gaudium magnum. The fire is, as the fuell is; and the joy is as the matter is. There is not like joy to a Shepheard, when his Ewe brings him a Lamb, as when his Wife brings him a Son; (yet that of a Lamb, is a joy, ſuch as it is.) But then, if that Son ſhould prove to be Princeps Paſtorum, the Chiefe Shepheard in all the Land, that were ſomewhat more: But then, if he ſhould prove to be a CYRUS, or a DAVID, a Prince, then certainly it were another manner of joy, Gaudium magnum indeed. As the matter is, ſo is the joy. If great the Benefit, great the Perſon, then great the joy. And here the Benefit is great; none greater, as much as the ſaving of us all, as much as all our lives and ſoules are worth; ther efore great. And the Perſon great, none ſo great: (it is the LORD Himſelfe) therefore primæ magnitudinis, great even as He is. Indeed ſo great it is, that the Prophet bids us plainly, remember no more former things, nor
Eſa. 45. 18. regard matters of old: This paſſeth them all, the joy of it puts them all down: ſo that none of them ſhall once be mentioned with it. Therefore well ſaid the Angell, Evangelizo gaudium magnum.

5 Ioy to the people And great, it may be intenſivè, in the parties themſelves: yet not great extenſivè, nor extend it ſelfe to many, not be gaudium magnum Populo. Yes, even that way alſo it is great; it is publike joy, it is joy to the people. And, well fare that joy where it is merry with all. It is added purpoſely, this, that they might not miſtake, when he ſaid, Evangelizo vobis, he brought them good news; That though he brought it them; yet not them only, it was not appropriate to them, it was common to others: They had their parts in it, but ſo ſhould others have no leſſe than they. And every good Shepheard, will like it the better for that; will be pro grege, and ſtill preferre the joy of the whole flocke.

In other joys, it fals out as Eſay tels, Multiply the Nation, and ye ſhall not increaſe their
Iſa. 9. 3. joy; for, that which one winns, another loſes. But, this joy, the joy of Puer natus eſt nobis, in it, they ſhall all rejoyce before Thee, as men make merry in harveſt, and be joyfull as men that divide the ſpoyle. In harveſt; And a good Harveſt all the Country is the better for. At a ſpoile; wherein every one hath his ſhare. That is gaudium populi, And ſuch is this. Well figured, in the place of His birth, an Inne, which is domus populi, open to all Paſſengers that will take it up; juris publici, wherein every one hath right. Yea, and the moſt common part of the Inne. For, though they ſort themſelves, and have every one their ſeverall Chambers; in the ſtable all have intereſt; that is common. And as the Place publike, ſo is the Benefit, and ſo is the joy publike of His Birth: Chriſtmas joy
Luk. 2. 7. right; All fare the better for this day. Salus populi is the beſt; and ſo is Gaudium populi too; and every good minde will like it ſo much the better, that All the people have their part in it.

6 Ioy to all people. And this were much, toti populo, to the whole people, if it were but one: but it is omni populo (ſay Theophylact and Beda) that is to all people; which is a larger extent by far. And if ye ſpeake of great joy that is great indeed, for it is univerſall, it is as great as the world is great: when, not the Iew onely but the Gentile, nor the Gentile but the Iew, not one people, but all, keepe a Feaſt. And at this word, omni populo, Nec vox homi-
Iſa. 49. 6. nem ſonat. It is not man that ſpeaketh now, whoſe good commonly, when it is at the greateſt, extendeth no further but to one Nation: But with GOD it is never great till it come to omni populo. It is but a ſmall thing (ſaith he by Eſay) to raiſe the Tribes of Iacob, or to reſtore the decayes of Iſrael: I will give thee a light to the Gentiles, and a ſalvation to the end of the World.

As we ſaid of the Inne, even now, the place of His Birth: So ſay we here, of the time of it, it is well ſet down by S. Luke, to have beene at the Deſcription of the whole world; for, that was a meet time for the SAVIOUR of the whole world to be born: The dew of whoſe birth is of the womb of the morning, (the Pſalmiſt in paſſion of joy miſplacing his words,) the meaning is, His birth from the womb, is as the morning dew, which watereth and refreſheth the face of the whole earth: Not Gideon's fleece, alone, but the whole earth. Not one part, not the Iews only: No partition now, but [a] utraque unum, one of two: Nay one of all: [d] all recapitulate in Himſelfe, and from Him as a Center, lines of joy drawn to all, and every part of the Circle.

And we may not paſſe by Quod erit, which ſhall be; which not only is, but ſhall be. For by this word, we hold; it is our beſt tenure. Not only to All that then were; then had we been out:) but that were, or ever ſhould be, to the worlds end. Omni populo, all people, is the latitude or extent: Quod erit, that ſhall be, in the longitude or continuance of the joy, Quod erit, that it ſhall be a Feaſt of joy, ſo long as any people ſhall be, to hold a feaſt on the face of the earth. In a word, That ſame Evangelium æternum, that S. Iohn ſaw in the Angels hand, we now heare from the Angels mouth, to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, that be, or ſhall be, while the world endureth.

To all people that ſhall be.

Apoc 14. 6

So, if we read Quod erit, with omni populo. But ſome read gaudium, with quod erit; gaudium quod erit; and make a note of that: The joy, quod erit, that is, and ſhall be. For commonly, all our earthly joy, is gaudium quod eſt, & non erit, that is, for the preſent, but continueth not; is, but ſhall not be: like the blaze of a bruſh faggot, all of a flame, and out again ſuddenly; in a moment. Gaudium quod erit, the joy that ſo is, as it ſhall be ſtill; is grounded upon the joy of this day, CHRIST, and His Birth. Without which, our joy is as the joy of men in priſon, merry for a while, but within a while, ſentence of death to paſſe upon them. Without which, Extrema gaudii luctus occupat, the end of all our mirth, will be but mourning. All joy elſe is, but ſhall not be within a while: At leaſtwiſe erit, quando non erit, A time ſhall be when it ſhall not be. Sed gaudium Meum nemo tollet à vobis; But my joy, mine, grounded on Me, none ſhall ever take from you; not death it ſelfe. Other it ſhall, this it ſhall not; but now ye ſhall, this Day, and evermore ye ſhall rejoyce in the holy comfort of it.

Joy that ſhall be

Eccl. 7 8.

Ioh. 16 22.

And this is the magnifying of the Meſſage. 1. No evill newes, Feare not. 2. Nay good, Be of good cheere. 3. Good newes of joy. 4. Of great joy. 5. Publike joy, toti populo. 6. Vniverſall joy, omni populo. 7. Joy to all, that are or ſhall be; And againe joy, which now is, and ſhall be ſo for ever.

Now, upon all theſe He ſetteth an Ecce, and well He may, And, that is never ſet by the HOLY GHOST, but ſuper res magna entitatis, upon matters of great moment. But upon this hill upon the top of it, that hath ſo many aſcents, a Beacon would do wel, For look, how many Ecce's in the Scripture, ſo many Beacons; and between them, as between theſe, ye ſhall obſerve a good correſpondence ſtill. This Ecce here, to the laſt, [a] Ecce concipies of the bleſſed Virgin; That, to Eſay's, [b] Ecce concipiet Virgo; That, to Davids, [c] Ecce de fructu ventris tui; That, to Abrahams [d] Ecce in ſemine tuo; and ſo up, till ye come to Semen mulieris*: There they firſt beginne, and take light one from another, till they come to the Ecce natus eſt hodiè, the Ecce of all Ecce's, the laſt and higheſt of them all. And as a Beacon ſerveth to call and ſtir up men to have regard, ſo is this here to excite them (and in them, us all) with good attention to heare, and to heed theſe ſo great good tydings, And indeed, who is not excited with it? whoſe eye is not turned to behold this Ecce? whoſe eareſtandeth not attent, to heare this Evangelizo? whoſe heart doth not muſe, what manner of meſſage this ſhould be?

This it is then, Quòd natus eſt. The birth of a Child: that there is one born this day, the cauſe of all this joy.

That there is borne.

There is a joy at every birth. Sorrow in the travaile (ſaith our SAVIOUR;) but after the delivery, the anguiſh is no more remembred, for joy that a man is borne into the world.

But the greater he is that is borne, and the more beneficiall his birth, the greater adoe is made. And among men, becauſe there are none greater than Princes, and great things are looked for at their hands, their Births are ever uſed to be kept with great

Gen.40.20. Mar.6.21. triumph. Pharoahs, in the Old; Herods, in the New: both their Natus est's, dayes of feasting.

Mat.11.24. Now of Him, that is borne here, it may truly be ſaid, Ecce major hîc, Behold a greater is borne here, One, whoſe Birth is good newes, even from the pooreſt Shepheard, to the richeſt Prince upon the earth.

Who is it? Three things are ſaid of this Child by the Angell. 1. He is a SAVIOUR. 2. Which is CHRIST. 3 CHRIST the LORD. Three of His Titles, well and orderly inferred one of another by good conſequence. We cannot miſſe one of them; they be neceſſary all. Our method, on earth, is to begin with great: In Heaven, they begin with good firſt.

A SAVIOVR. In Verrem. IV. Firſt then a SAVIOUR, that is his Name: JESUS, Soter; and in that name, His benefit, Salus, ſaving health, or Salvation. Such a name as the great Orator himſelfe ſaith of it, Soter, hoc quantum eſt? Ita magnum eſt, ut latino uno verbo exprimi non poſsit. The name SAVIOUR is ſo great, as no one word can expreſſe the force of it.

But we are not ſo much to regard the Ecce, how great it is, as gaudium, what joy is in it; that is the point we are to ſpeak to. And for that; men may take what they will, but, ſure, there is no joy in the world, to the joy of a man ſaved: no joy ſo great, no newes ſo welcome, as to one ready to periſh, in caſe of a loſt man to hear of one that wil ſave him. In danger of periſhing by ſickneſſe, to heare of one will make him well again. By ſentence of the Law, of one with a pardon to ſave his life. By enemies, of one that will reſcue and ſet him in ſafety. Tell any of theſe, aſſure them but of a Saviour, it is the beſt news he ever heard in his life. There is joy in the name of a Saviour. And even this way, this Child is a SAVIOUR too. Poteſt hoc facere, ſed hoc non eſt opus ejus, This He can do, but this is not his worke: a further matter there is, a greater Salvation He came for. And it may be, we need not any of theſe; we are not preſently ſick, in no feare of the Law, in no danger of enemies, and it may be if we were, we phanſie to our ſelvs to be relieved ſome other way. But that which he came for, that ſaving we need all; and none but He can help us to it. We have therefore (all) cauſe to be glad for the birth of this SAVIOUR.

I know not how, but when we hear of ſaving, or mention of a Saviour, preſently our mind is carried to the ſaving of our skin, of our temporall ſtate, of our bodily life, and further ſaving we think not of. But, ther is another life, not to be forgotten; and, greater the dangers; and the deſtruction ther, more to be feared then of this here; and it would be well, ſomtimes we were remembred of it. Beſides our skin and fleſh, a ſoul we have, and it is our better part by far; that alſo hath need of a Saviour; that hath her deſtruction, out of which; that hath her deſtroyer, from which ſhe would be ſaved; and thoſe would be thought on. Indeed our chiefe thought and care would be for that; how to eſcape the wrath, how to be ſaved from the deſtruction to come, whether our ſinnes will certainly bring us.

Sin it is, will deſtroy us all. And (to ſpeak of a Saviour) there is no perſon on earth hath ſo much need of a Saviour as hath a ſinner. Nothing ſo dangerous, ſo deadly unto us, as is the ſin in our boſome; nothing from which we have ſo much need to be ſaved, whatſoever account we make of it. From it commeth upon us all the evill of this life: and from it all the evill of the life to come: in compariſon whereof, theſe here are not worth the ſpeaking of. Above all then we need a Saviour, for our ſouls, and from our ſins; and from the everlaſting deſtruction, which ſin will bring upon us in the other life, not farre from us, not from him of us, that thinketh it fartheſt off.

Then if it be good tydings to hear of a Saviour, where it is but a matter of the loſſe of earth, or of this life here: how then, when it commeth to the loſſe of Heaven; to the danger of Hell, when our ſoule is at the ſtake, and the well-doing or undoing of it for ever? He that could ſave our ſoules from that deſtroyer, were not the birth of ſuch an one good newes trow? Is not ſuch a Saviour worth the hearkning after? Is he not? It is then becauſe we have not that ſenſe of our ſoules, and the dangers of them, that we have of our bodies: nor that feare of our ghoſtly enemies, nor that lively apprehenſion of the eternall torments of that place, and how neare we are to it, (nothing being betwixt twixt us and it, but this poore puffe of breath which is in our nosthrils:) Our carnall part is quick, and sensible: our spirituall is dead and dull. We have not the feeling of our sins, that we have of our sickneſſe: if we had, we would heare this newes with greater chearefulneſſe, and hold this Day of the Birth of such a Saviour, with joy indeed. We cannot conceive it yet, this destruction is not neere enough to affect us. But, in noviſsimo intelligetis planè, in the end, when the Destroyer shall come, and we shall finde the want of a Saviour, we shall plainly understand this, and value this benefit and the joy of it, as we ought; and find, there is no joy in the earth to the joy of a Saviour. Ier. 30. 24.

There is born a Saviour, is the first. The Angell addeth further, A Saviour which is Christ. For many Saviours had been born, many had God sent them, that at diverse times had set them free from divers dangers of their enemies; Moses, from the Egyptians; Ioshua, from the Canaanites; Gideon, from the Madianites; Ieptha, from the Amonites; Sampson, from the Philistims. And indeed, the whole story of the Bible is nothing else, but a Calender of Saviours; that God from time to time still stirred them up. 2 Which is Christ.

But these all were but petty Saviours; there was one yet behinde, that was worth them all. One, that should save His people from their sins; save, not their bodies for a time, but their soules for ever, which none of those Saviours could do. One therefore much spoken of, wished for, and waited for, a SAVIOUR which was CHRIST: when He came they looked for great matters, as said the woman at the Wells-side: for He was the most famous and greatest Saviour of all. And this is He, A Saviour which is Christ. He, of whom all the Promises made mention, and He the performance of them all: of whom all the Types under the Law were shadowes, and He the substance of them all: Of whom all the Prophecies ran, and He the fulfilling of them all: He, of whom all those inferiour Saviours were the figures and fore-runners, and He the accomplishment of them all, that in them was wanting. This is He: Iacobs [a]Shilo, Esay's [b]Immanuel, Ieremies [c] Branch, Daniels [d]Messias, Zacharies [e]Oriens ab alto, Aggies [f] Desideratus cunctis Gentibus. The desire of all the Nations, then; and now the joy of all Nations, A Saviour which is CHRIST. Mat. 1. 21. Ioh. 4. 25.

And what is meant by this term CHRIST? A Saviour Annointed, or, (as in another place it is said, more agreeable to our phrase of speaking) a [*]Saviour sealed, a Saviour under Gods Great seale. That is, not as those other were, Saviours raised up of a sudden, upon some occasion; to serve the turn for the present, and never heard of till they came: but a Saviour in GODS fore-counsell resolved on, and given forth, from the beginning; promised and fore-told, and now signed and sent, with absolute commission and fulnesse of power, to be the perfect and compleat SAVIOUR of all.

And to be it, ex officio; His Office, His very profession; to be one, that all may have right to repaire unto Him, and find it at His hands. Not a Saviour incidently, as it fell out: but one, ex professo, annointed to that end, and by vertue of His Annointing appointed, set forth and sent into the world, to exercise this function of a Saviour: Not for a time, but for ever, not to the Iews (as did the rest) but even to all the ends of the earth. So runs His Bill, [a]Venite ad me omnes, Come all: and [b] Qui ad me venerit non ejiciam foras, of them that come to me, I will cast none out. [c] Servator omnium hominum, the Saviour of all men (and as the Samaritans said of Him, [d] Servator mundi, The Saviour of the world,) of Samaritans, Iewes, Gentiles: of Kings, of Shepheards and all.

And yet there is more particularity in this word CHRIST: Three Offices did GOD from the beginning erect to save His people by, and that by three acts, (The very Heathen tooke notice of them,) [1] Purgare, [2] Illuminare, [3] Perficere. [1] Priests, to purge or expiate: [2] Prophets, to illuminate or direct them; [3] Kings, to set all right, and keepe all right, in that perfection, which this world admitteth. And all these three had their severall Anointings. Aaron the Priest, Levit. 8. 12. Elisha the Prophet, 1 Reg. 19. 16. Saul the King, 1 Sam. 10. 1. In the Saviour which is Christ, his will was, all should meet, that nothing in Him might want to the perfecting of this worke, that He might be a perfect Saviour of all, He was all. A Priest after the order of Melchisedek, Psal. 110. 4. A Prophet to be heard when Moses should hold his peace, Deut. 18. 18. A King to save His people, whose name should be IEHOVAH Iustitia nostra, Ier. 23. 6. Davids Priest, Moses Prophet, Ieremies King.

And theſe formerly had met double, two of them in ſome other; Melchiſedek, King and Prieſt; Samuel, Prieſt and Prophet; David, Prophet and King. Never all three, but in Him alone; and ſo, no perfect Chriſt but He: but He all, and ſo perfect. By His Prieſthood, to purge, expiate, and ſave us from our ſins, being a propitiation to God for them: By His Prophecy, to illuminate, and ſave us from the by-paths of errour, guiding our feet in the way of peace. By His Kingdome, protecting and conducting us thorow the miſeries of this life, till He perfect us eternally by Himſelfe in the joyes of His heavenly Kingdome. Rightly then, a Saviour which is Chriſt.

Luk. 1. 79.

Now, as in the Name SAVIOUR there was, ſo is there likewiſe joy in this Name CHRIST; and that, many wayes: 1. Firſt, that we ſhall hang no more in expectation, We ſhall be no longer Vincti ſpei, Hopes priſoners. He that ſhould come, is come. The promiſed SAVIOUR, The SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST, is now borne, and when ſpes becomes res, then our joy is full. 2. That now, there is a ſaving Office erected; one Anointed to that end, a profeſſed Saviour, to whom all may reſort. We ſhall not be to ſeek; there is a Name given under Heaven, whereby we may be ſure of ſalvation, the Name of Chriſt. 3. That to this our ſaving we have the joynt conſent and good will of all parties; in this Name CHRIST. CHRIST (that is Anointed, what perſon is He? The SONNE, the ſecond Perſon. Anointed, by whom? By the FATHER: Quem unxiſti, (Act. 4. 27.) the firſt Perſon. Anointed, with what? With the HOLY GHOST, Act. 10. 38. the third Perſon. So a concurrence of all Perſons in this Name; all willing and well-pleaſed, with the worke of our ſalvation. 4. If we would be ſaved, we would be ſaved, unctione, by Oile, not by Vineger. Et unguentum effuſum, Nomen, Ejus. And His Name is CHRIST, one that ſaveth by anointing. 5. And if by Oyle, (there be hot Oyles) with a gentle lenitive Oyle. And the Oyle which He uſeth, wherewith He is anointed, is the Oyle of Gladneſſe. Gladneſſe therefore muſt needs go with this Name. Which Oyle of Gladneſſe is not for Himſelf, but for us: not for His uſe, but for ours. So He ſaith Himſelf in His firſt Sermon at Nazareth, upon His text out of Eſay 61. 2. The anointing (this oyle of gladneſſe) was upon Him to beſtow it upon us, and of us: Upon them eſpecially, that through a wounded conſcience, were troubled with the ſpirit of heavineſſe, to turne their heavineſſe into joy. Glad then, that He is come, that by His Office is to ſave: and come with the good liking of all: to ſave us by Oyle, and that, the Oyle of Gladneſſe.

Zach. 9. 12.
Cant. 1. 2.

3 Chriſt the Lord.

And yet to make our joy more full, the Angel addeth the third, A SAVIOUR which is CHRIST; CHRIST the LORD. For neither is this all. He is not CHRIST only. We muſt not ſtay there. For the Name CHRIST will agree, hath been, and may be imparted to others beſides. Many a King in Scripture, hath had the honour to carry the Name of Chriſt; But with a difference. The King, Chriſtus Domini, the Lords Chriſt; He Chriſtus Dominus, the Lord Chriſt, or Chriſt the Lord. Conſider then how great this Childe is, whoſe anointed, Kings themſelves are. For if they be Chriſti Domini, the Lords Anointed; His they are, for He is the LORD. The LORD abſolute without any addition; ye may put it to what ye will, LORD of men and Angels, Lord of Heaven and Earth, and all the Hoſt of them, Dominus Chriſtorum, and Dominus Dominorum, LORD paramount over all.

Heb. 7. 4.

But why the Lord? Becauſe this Name of Chriſt will ſort with men. Nay, as He is Chriſt (that is Anointed) He is Man only. It is His name as Man, for God cannot be Anointed. But He that ſhould ſave us would be more than Man, and ſo more than Chriſt. Indeed, Chriſt cannot ſave us: He that muſt ſave us muſt be the Lord. For, ſuch a Saviour it behooveth us to have, as might not begin the work of our Salvation, and leave it in the mid'ſt, but go through with it, and make an end too; which the former Saviours could not do. Formerly, ever their complaint was, that their Saviours, their Chriſts died ſtill, and left them to ſeek: their Kings, and Prieſts, and Prophets dropt away ſtill; for they were not ſuffered to endure by reaſon of death. But this Saviour, this Chriſt, becauſe He is the LORD, endureth for ever, hath an everLaſting Prieſthood, Kingdom and Prophecie, and ſo is able perfectly to ſave them, that come to God by Him. This is one reaſon, why, hither we muſt come at the laſt to Chriſt the Lord, and till we be at it, we be, not where we ſhould, Elſe, our Saviours will die, and leave us deſtitute.

Heb. 7. 28.
Heb. 7. 23. 24.

But

But the main reaſon is ſet down by Eſay, Ego ſum, Ego ſum, (ſaith GOD Himſelf) & prater me, non eſt ſervator: It is I, I that am the Saviour, I am, and beſides Me there is no Saviour. None indeed, no true Saviour, but the LORD. All other are thoſe, Vana ſalus hominis, ſaith the Pſalm, Mans ſalvation is vain, any ſalvation is vain, if it be not the LORDS. 1. Thoſe Chriſts, that were not the LORD, could not ſave but the body, and not one of them quicken his own ſoule: CHRIST, that is the LORD, can ſave ſoules and bodies, His own and others both. 2. Thoſe Chriſts, that were not the LORD, could ſave but from carnall enemies, with armes of fleſh: He, from our ghoſtly enemies, even ſpirituall wickedneſſes in heavenly places, from Abaddon the great deſtroyer of the bottomleſſe pit. 3. They, that were not the LORD, could ſave but from worldly calamities, could but prune and take off the twigs, (as it were:) He, from ſin it ſelf, and ſo plucketh it up by the roots. 4. They, that were not the LORD, put it off but for a time, and after it came againe, Temporall only. He for ever, once for all: and is become Author of eternall ſalvation, to all that depend on Him. And mark that word [eternall:] For none but the Lord can work eternall ſalvation. 5. They all had need of a Saviour themſelves, and of this Saviour: He needs none, receives of none, imparts to all; as being not a Saviour only, but Salus ipſa in abſtracto, Salvation it ſelf, (as Simeon calleth Him) of whoſe fulneſſe we all receive. To ſave, may agree to man: To be ſalvation, can agree to none but to CHRIST the LORD. To begin and to end; To ſave ſoule and body, from the bodily and ghoſtly enemies; from ſin the root, and miſery the branches; for a time, and for ever; to be a Saviour, and to be Salvation it ſelf CHRIST, the LORD is all this, and can doe all this. Now then we are right, and never till now. A Saviour which is CHRIST the LORD.

Eſa. 43. 11.

Verſ. 20. Iohn 1.

But the name [LORD] goeth yet further: not only to ſave us, and ſet us free from danger, to deliver us from evill; but to ſtate us in as good and better condition, than we forfeited by our fall; or elſe though we were ſaved, we ſhould not ſave by the match. To make us then ſavers, and not ſavers only, but gainers, and that great gainers by our ſalvation, He doth further impart alſo the eſtate annexed of this laſt title, even whatſoever He is Lord of Himſelf. And He is Lord of life, (ſaith S. Peter, Act. 3. 15.) Life then He imparts. And He is Lord of glory, (ſaith S. Paul 1 Cor. 2. 8.) Glory then He imparts, And He is Lord of joy, (Intra in gaudium Domini, Enter into the joy of the Lord, Mat. 25. 21.) Joy then He imparts. Life, and Glory, and Joy, and makes us Lords of them, and of whatſoever is within the Name, and title of Lord. For having thereto a double right, [1] by Inheritance, as the Son, (Heb. 12.) [2] And by Purchaſe, as a Redeemer (for, therefore He died, and roſe again, that he might be Lord of all, Rom. 14. 9.) contenting himſelf with the former; He is well pleaſed to ſet over the latter to us, and admit us with Himſelf into His eſtate of joynt purchaſe of Heaven, or whatſoever He is owner of; that, in right of it, we may enter into the Life, Glory, and Joy of our Lord, and ſo be ſaved and be ſavers, and more than ſavers every way. This alſo, is in the word Lord: this benefit further we have by it.

And now if we will put together, Natus and Servator, Servator and Chriſtus, Chriſtus and Dominus, Dominus and Natus: Borne and Saviour, Saviour and Chriſt, Chriſt and the Lord, the Lord and Borne: take them which way you will in combination, any of the foure, then have we His two Natures in one perſon. In Servator, His God-head, None but GOD is a SAVIOUR. In Chriſtus His Man-hood: GOD cannot be Anointed, Man may. In Dominus, His Divine againe, the Lord from heaven. In Natus, His Humane Nature, directly, borne of a woman: Both (ever) carefully joyned, and to be joyned together. When S. Matthew had begun his Goſpell thus: The Booke of the generation of IESUS CHRIST the Sonne of David, one Nature, His humanity; S. Marke was carefull to begin his thus; The beginning of the Goſpell of JESUS: CHRIST the Sonn of GOD, the other Nature his Divinity. But S. Iohn, he joyns them, Verbum caro factum eſt, the Word became fleſh. Verbum the Word, there is Dominus; and Caro the fleſh, that is, Natus.

Mat. 1. 1. Mar. 1. 1. Ioh. 1, 14.

And even this very conjunction is a new Joy. For, that ſuch an one, that the LORD would condeſcend to be borne, beſides the benefit there is alſo matter of Honour. Even that He, ſo great a Perſon, would become ſuch as we are, would ſo eſteeme our Nature, as to take it upon Him; This certainly it is a great dignity and exaltation of our nature; And it is a matter of new joy: That He would so highly value it, as to assume, associate, and unite it into one Person, with the Son of God. By this we see, why a Saviour: why Christ: why the Lord. A SAVIOUR, His name of benefit, wherby He is to deliver us. CHRIST, His name of Office, whereby He is bound to undertake it. The Lord, His name of Power, whereby He is able to effect it. We see also why Man and why GOD: First, So it should be; for of right none was to make satisfaction for man, but man. And in very deed, none was able to give satisfaction to God, but God. So that being to satisfie GOD for Man, He was to be GOD and Man. Secondly, So we would wish it our selves: If we would be saved, we would be saved by one of our nature, not by any stranger. He is borne, and so one of our owne nature. Againe, if we would be saved, we would be saved by no inferiour, but by the best: He is the Lord, and so the very best of all, And so, our desire is satisfied every way.

This blessed Birth of this Saviour, which is Christ the Lord, thus furnished in every point, to save us throughly, body and soule, from sin, the destruction, and Satan the destroyer of both, and that both here, and for ever; this blessed, and thrise blessed birth is the substance of this Dayes solemnity, of the Angels Message, and of our joy.

The Circumstance of the persons to whom.

And now to the Circumstances: and first of the Persons, vobis, I bring you good tydings: That to you is borne, &c.

We find not any word through all, but there is joy in it: and yet all is suspended, till we come to this one word [vobis:] this makes up all. This word therefore we shall do well ever to look for, and when we find it, to make much of it. Nothing passeth without it; it is the word of application. But for it, all the rest are loose; this girds it on; this fastens it to us, and makes it ours. But for it, we are but in their case, Quid nobis & tibi, what have we to do with thee? This Saviour Christ the Lord, in this good time and fit place, Quid ad nos? what are we the better? Omni populo, is somewhat too generall, and the hundreth part of them shall not be benefited by Him. We would heare it in more particularity. Why, vobis, for you it is, Borne for you: Yea, now ye say somewhat.

Mat. 8. 29.

Evangelizo vobis and Natus vobis.

And twise it is repeated for failing, in every verse once. Evangelizo vobis, and natus vobis, that ye may know the Message is yours, and the birth is yours; therefore the message is sent to you, because the birth concerneth you. But yours they be, both.

The use we have of it.

May we then be bold to change the person, and utter it in the first, which he doth in the second, and say Nobis! We may sure, Puer natus est nobis; Esay* hath said it before us. And thereby, lyeth a mystery: the Angels they say, Vobis; The Prophets were men; men say, Nobis. Bid the Angell say, Nobis, he cannot, neither sing nor say it; Angelis he cannot, to Angels, Nusquam Angelos: but Hominibus unto men, he can and doth. And this is a speciall high Prerogative; that which the Angels can neither sing nor say, we can do both.

* Esay 9. 6. Heb 2. 16. Vers. 14.

Luk. 15. 31.

If then He be born to us, it is to some end. Esay tels us, what it is, when he expoundeth Natus, by Datus, borne to us, by given us. Born, to be bestowed upon us. And if given us, bestowed upon us, then He is ours. Ours His benefit, His Office, His Power: His benefit, to save us; His Office, to undertake us, His power, to assure us. Ours His salvation, as JESUS; His anointing, as CHRIST; His Dominion, as the LORD. And if He be ours, then all His are ours: Omnia Ejus nostra sunt: His Birth ours, and if His Birth, all that follow His Birth, ours too.

Now then, seeing He and they be ours, will it not be well done, to make our entry, to take seisin of Him and them, and dispose them to our best benefit? And how can we doe that better, Than as God hath offered Him to us this day, that He was borne for us: so we reciprocally this day, that He is borne, offer Him againe to God, as the best pleasing Oblation that we can offer Him. To day, as in the Temple alive, for our morning Oblation: And when the time commeth of His death, offer Him as on the Crosse, slain for our evening Sacrifice. So shall we, as Bernard wisheth us, uti nostro, in utilitatem nostram, & de Salvatore salutem operari, Imploy or make use of Him for our best behoofe: draw His proper extract from Him, and worke salvation out of this our SAVIOUR.

Now

Now, a word onely, what is to be done on our parts, and that reſpectively to theſe two points, what we are to returne to them; what to this Meſſage, and what to this Birth. Our duty reciprocall.

To the Meſſage, Euangelizo vobis, this we are to returne, this is due to a meſſage, to heare it. And that we do, and that is all: we come to the Sermon, we heare it, and little we do beſides. But we heare it but heavily, with a faint affection (God knoweth:) we heare it not as an Ecce, as matter of high admiration: we heare it not as Gaudium magnum, with that alacrity and cheerfulneſſe we ſhould. We heare it not as nobis, as if it neerly touched us, but as a matter that little concerned us, it skilled not much whether we heard it or no. Many meaner things affect us more, but this ſhould be the joyfulleſt hearing that we ever heard. 1 To heare the Meſſage.

And ſhall we not likewiſe performe ſome duty to Natus eſt? yes, even to that alſo. And not heare of Him, and let Him alone: heare his tydings, and let Himſelfe go. 2 To receive him.

He was borne for us, and given us, Natus nobis, and, Donatus nobis (both go together in the Prophet.) To a gift the duty that belongeth properly, is to receive it. If He be Natus nobis, and Donatus nobis, I truſt we will take order, He be Acceptus à nobis. If born for us, and given us, it is our part then, we can do no leſſe than receive Him. We evacuate the gift, diſgrace both the Giver and it, if we vouchſafe not to accept of it.

How is that? how ſhall we receive Him? who ſhall give Him us? That ſhall one, that will ſay unto us within a while, Accipe, Take, This is my body, by the offering whereof ye are ſanctified. Take, this is my Bloud, by the ſhedding whereof ye are ſaved. Both, in the holy Myſteries ordained by GOD, as pledges to aſſure us, and as Conduit-pipes to conveigh into us, this, and all other the benefits, that come by this our Saviour. Heb. 10. 10.

Verily, upon His memorable dayes, (of which this is the firſt) we are bound to do ſomthing in memory, or remembrance of Him; What is that? Will ye know what it is? Hoc facite, Do this in remembrance of me.

Something would be thought on, to returne Him for all His benefits, and this day for this firſt; the fountaine of all the reſt; His Birth. Some thanks would be rendred Him for it. And how can we do that better, than as we are taught by him, that ſtudied the point of Quid retribuam, and reſolved it thus, no way ſo well, as by Accipiam Calicem: I will take the cup of ſalvation. And ſo do it: So, with it taken into our hands, give thanks to the name of the Lord. And when better, than to day? Hodiè, as we are here directed. What better day than on this day? the very day He was beſtowed on us. To deferre Him, no longer, than He did us. He deferred not us at all, but aſſoon as He was born, ſent us word the ſame inſtant: and ſhall we deferre Him to heare of us another time; and not be as ready on our part to receive Him inſtantly, as He was on His, to beſtow Himſelfe, even preſently, aſſoone as He was born? Sure, ſomwhat would be done more than ordinary, this day of His Birth; the day it ſelfe is more than ordinary. Pſal. 116. 13.

And let this move us. If ever there be a day of ſalvation, Ecce hic eſt dies ſalutis, Behold this is it, when a Saviour is borne unto us. If ever an accepted time, Ecce tempus acceptum, Behold, now it is, this is that time. The Birth-day hath ever been a time accepted. Then, one King forgave the treſpaſſe of his Servant, and received Him to Grace. Another, being pleaſed, was ready in his bounty to have given away the one halfe of his kingdome. Our Saviour CHRIST, Our Lord, on His Birth-day, will be no worſe than they. His bounty, then, no leſſe than theirs. Gen. 40. 21. Mar. 6. 23.

Let us then make this ſo accepted a time in it ſelfe, twice acceptable, by our accepting: which, He will acceptably take at our hands. Let us honour this day, with our receiving: which He hath honoured by His firſt giving: Yeelding Him evermore, (but this day, the day of it, chiefly,) our unfained hearty thankſgiving for this ſo good newes; for this ſo great a Gift; both of them this day vouchſafed us: in Him and for Him, who was Himſelfe the gift, our SAVIOUR, CHRIST, the LORD. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, three Perſons, One Immortall, Everliving, Inviſible, onely Wiſe GOD; be all honour, glory, bleſſing, praiſe, and thankſgiving, this day and for ever.

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Wednesday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCXI.
being CHRISTMAS day.

IOHN, Chap. I. Ver. XIV.

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we saw the Glory thereof, as the Glory of the Onely begotten SONNE of the FATHER ) full of Grace and Truth.

Ezek. 10.14. Apo. 4.6,7.

Iob 39.30,33.

Mat. 24.28.

Gen. 1.1. Verse 1.

Luke 17.37.

HEre is, in the Old Testament (in the 10. of Ezekiel) and in the New (in the 4. of the Revelation,) a Vision of foure sundry shapes, A Man, a Lion, an Oxe, and an Eagle. It hath been usually received, to apply these foure to the foure Euangelists, and of them, the Eagle, to S. Iohn. The nature of the Eagle is, by GOD Himselfe, described (Iob 39.) by two properties; [1] Elevare ad ardua, no fowle under heaven towreth so high: [2] and ubicunque fuerit cadaver, statim adest; None so soone or so suddenly downe upon the body, as he. Both these doe lively expresse themselves in S. Iohn: and no where more lively than in this Gospell. Wherein, as an Eagle in the Clouds, he first mounteth wonderfully high, beyond Moses and his In principio, with an higher In principio than it; beyond Genesis and the Worlds Creation: That the Word was then with GOD, and was GOD. This may well be termed the Eagles flight, so exceeding high, as the cleareſt eye hath much adoe, to follow him. Yet so farre as they can follow him, the very Philosophers have been driven to admire the penning of this Gospell. But after this, as an Eagle againe, (Vbi corpus, ibi Aquila,) downe he commeth directly from the height of heaven, and lights upon the body of His flesh, the mystery of His Incarnation: and tels us, that He that in the beginning, was apud Deum, and Deus, He, in the fulnesse of time, was apud homines, and Homo. He dwelt not long aloft; He knew, it was not to purpose: Verbum Deus is farre above our reach. Verbum caro, that concernes us. No time, but it concernes us: but, this time, above others. This Feast is held, this Assembly met, for no other end, but to celebrate the contents of the Text, that the Word, being made flesh, this day, came to dwell among us.

The Division

I. 1. 2. 3.

Two parts there be in the Text, sensibly parted by a Parentheſis. [1] That without the Parentheſis, is, that he would have us believe, Verbum caro, &c. [2] That, within, is the Affidavit, Vidimus, &c. In the former three things are affirmed of the Word. [1] Factum è nobis; [2] habitavit in nobis; [3] plenum pro nobis: [1] That the Word was made flesh of us; [2] dwelt with us; [3] was full for us.

II.

Then followeth the Affidavit of these. That S. Iohn (and other more, besides,) saw;

ſaw; and ſo ſpake no more than they knew; not teſtifie no more, than they had ſeene. 1 Iohn 1. 3.
The beſt Proofe that can be. They ſaw (though, not the Word Himſelfe, yet) His glory: We ſaw His glory. And that glory ſuch, as would ſuit with none but Him; and ſo, every way ſufficient, to demonſtrate Him, the onely Sonne of GOD.

And, after all this, one more there is, without which, His Making, Dwelling, and Seeing were to little purpoſe: That is, that as He came not obſcurely, but was ſeene; ſo He came not empty, but full of grace and truth. This fulneſſe was not for Himſelfe, Verſe 16.
but for us: Et de plenitudine Ejus omnes accepimus.

There is not any thing, that concerneth this Myſtery, but is within this Text. His two Natures, The Word, and Fleſh: [1] Word, Divine; [2] Fleſh, Humane. The Union of them in factum eſt; union into a Perſon, in Habitavit: Habitare, eſt Perſonæ. [3] Then, His Office alſo, Ἐσκήνωσε, which is not only habitavit, but caſtrametavit in nobis: not onely, tooke a houſe, but pitched a pavilion in us: Not onely, factus Incola, made our Neighbour; but, made a Champion, for us, to undertake our quarrell, and to fight a combate. [4] And laſt, the Benefit: Made, that He might Dwell; and Dwell, that He might impart to us, (and we derive from Him) that, whereof He was full, and we were empty; we had need, and He had ſtore; grace and truth.

All reducible to theſe three: [1] Quòd Verbum, caro: [2] Quid Verbum, Carni: I.
[3] Quid Caro, Verbo. [1] That the Word became fleſh; the Myſtery: [2] What the Word II.
did for fleſh; the Benefit: [3] And, what fleſh is to do to the Word againe; the duty. III.

I.
Quòd Verbum Caro.
Verbum, The Word.

We are in a deepe point, and a dangerous. It will not be amiſſe to pauſe a little on the three termes, Verbum Caro, and factum eſt. The Word. [1] There be, that take this name to be given Him, as who ſhould ſay: He, of whom ſo many excellent Words are ſpoken, all along this Booke; ſo many words of promiſe, and propheſie, and all of Him: So, the word Objectivè. [2] Others: for that He diſcloſeth to us all GODS counſell, even as the word openeth the minde of man; by whom as His Word, we know whatſoever we know of the Fathers minde. So the word Effectivè. [3] A third; for that He commeth, not onely as JESUS, to ſave us; but, as the Word, to teach us: We, as to honour Him; ſo learne His Word, as the way to our Salvation. So, the word, Præceptivè.

4 Theſe are all well, and true all: but, all ſhort. We may have uſe of them; but there is a farther matter, than all theſe. This Word (as we finde, in the Affidavit) is the onely begotten of the Father. Theſe two are one, and the ſame; but need to bee ſet in two termes, that what is wanting in the one, may be ſupplied by the other: (So high is the Divine Nature above our reach, as no one terme is able to expreſſe it: It is well, if diverſe will doe it.) In this they agree: As the Sonne is, to the Father; ſo is the Word to the Minde. The Sonne, Proles Parentis; the Word, Proles mentis: They proceed, both: the Sonne, from the Father; the Word, from the minde: and ſo note out unto us, a Party proceeding, a ſecond perſon, from the firſt: from Him that begetteth, the Sonne; from Him that ſpeaketh, the Word; Againſt Sabellius.

The Word, and The onely begotten of the Father.

To ſhew His proceeding.

The Sonne referreth to a living nature: The Word addeth farther an intellectuall nature: Generare eſt viventium, Loqui intelligentium: That, there is in Him, not onely the Nature, and Life, but the Wiſdome of the Father.

Both Proceed. The Word ſheweth the Manner; the Sonne, the truth of His proceeding. With us the Sonne is not begot, but by fleſh, by propagation: The Word therefore requiſite, to ſhew, his proceeding was after no carnall manner; but, as the word from the minde. A better terme could not be deviſed. For, there is not in all the World a more pure, ſimple, inconcrete procreation, than that, whereby the minde conceiveth the word within it, by dixit in corde. For, in it ſelfe, and of it ſelfe doth the mind produce it, without help of any mixture of ought, without any paſſion ſtirring or agitation at all. Such was the iſſue of the word eternall. But then, leſt we might imagine Gods word to be, to Him, no other than ours is to us, not of our ſubſtance; He makes amends for that, and tels us, He is the onely begotten, and ſo of the ſubſtance of His Father, (very God, of very God,) as all begotten ſonnes be. The Word, to ſhew His proceeding pure, and meerely ſpirituall: the Sonne, to ſhew, that for all that, it is true and ſubſtantiall. Truly conſubſtantiall with the Father, as the Sonne; but in all cleane and pure manner conceived, as the word.

The Sonne, though He be conſubſtantiall; yet the perſon of His Father may have a being long before Him. The Word makes amends for that. For, the minde conceiving, and the minde cannot be ſevered a moment; if one be eternall, both are. So then, as the Sonne, He is conſubſtantiall: as the Word, He is coëternall.

But, he begins with the Word. His care being, firſt to tell us of the pureneſſe of His generation, before of His generation it ſelfe: but after, by little and little, unfoldeth Himſelfe and tels, He is ſo the Word, as the Sonne alſo. Indeed, it was beſt beginning with the Word. That terme the Heathen Wiſe-men, the Philoſophers, would never ſtumble at, but brook it well enough: As (indeed) they did, not with approbation onely, (but with high admiration) read and magnifie the beginning of this Goſpell. Witneſſe Tert. in Apol. Euſ. in præpar. Auguſt. de Civit. 10. and Theodoret. It was conforme to their reaſon: Quod Deus ab æterno intelligit, and that Νοῦς and Λόγος, the conceiving of the minde, and the minde muſt needs be coëternall: the minde never without it: as the Prophet ſaith, Egreſſus ejus à diebus æternitatis. This for the Word, of much more that might be ſaid of it.

1 As the Word, and the Only begotten referre to one: ſo doth Caro, and in nobis, Fleſh and in us; that is, ſuch fleſh as is in us, Humane fleſh. 1. To expreſſe the Vnion fully, a better word could not be choſen. It is a part, for the whole; and the worſer part, for the whole, of purpoſe. For, in this caſe, our nature is beſt ſet out, by the worſer part. For, this we know; if the worſe be taken, the better will not be left behinde. If He abhorre not the fleſh, of the Spirit there will be no queſtion. More forcible it is, to ſay, He was made fleſh, than He was made man, though both be true. He vouchſafed to become man, nothing ſo much, as to become fleſh, the very loweſt and baſeſt part of man.

2 Beſides, from the Fleſh (as from Eve) came the beginning of tranſgreſſion, longing after the forbidden fruit, refuſed the Word quite; ſo, of all other, leaſt likely to be taken. The Word not refuſing it, the reſt have good hope.

3 But, there is a kinde of neceſſity, to uſe the terme fleſh. If He had ſaid Man, man may be taken for a Perſon. He tooke no Perſon, but our Nature He tooke: fleſh, is no Perſon, but Nature onely; and ſo beſt expreſſeth it. And if ſoule, it might have beene taken, as if He took not the fleſh, but mediante animâ; but, ſo He did not, but as immediately, and as ſoone, the fleſh, as the ſoule: in one inſtant both.

4 Yet one more. It will not be amiſſe to tell you; The word, that is Hebrew for fleſh, the ſame is alſo Hebrew, for good tydings, (as we call it, the Goſpell:) Sure, not without the Holy Ghoſt ſo diſpenſing it. There could be no other meaning; but that, ſome Incarnation, or Making fleſh, ſhould be generally good newes for the whole world. To let us know, this good tidings is come to paſſe, He tels us, the Word is now become fleſh.

2 Verbum Caro. The Word became Fleſh.

Thus, why fleſh: now, why the Word, fleſh. Caro Verbum was our bane; fleſh would be the Word; nay, wiſer than the Word, and know what was evill, better than it. If Caro Verbum, our bane; then, Verbum Caro, our remedy.

2 Surely, if the Word would become fleſh, it were (ſo) moſt kindly. The Word, was pars læſa, the party that was moſt offended. If He would undertake it; if He, againſt whom the offence was, would be Authour of the reconciliation, there were none to that: it were (ſo) moſt proper.

3 But, in another reſpect, He were fit too. He had ſaid above: All things were made by Him: a kinde of meetneſſe there were, ut per quem facta omnia, per eundem refecta, He that firſt made them, ſhould reſtore them; He that built, repaire; So is beſt, ever.

Verſe 3. Col. 1. 16, 17.

4 And indeed, Sic oportet implere omnem juſtitiam, that were the way to fulfill all juſtice; if the word would take fleſh, he might make full amends for the fleſhes fault, in rejecting the Word. So is juſtice; that, fleſh for fleſh; and not the fleſh of oxen and ſheepe; but even that fleſh, that ſinneth, (our fleſh) ſhould ſuffer for it, and ſo ſuffering make ſatisfaction to Iuſtice.

Why then, factum eſt caro; the Word is made fleſh: This makes up all. For, factum eſt, ergo, eſt, He is made fleſh, therefore, is fleſh: Fieri terminatur ad eſſe, the end of making, is being. And per modum naturæ: (ſo is γέγονε, the Greek word:) this being is naturall, Et nativitas eſt via ad naturam, and nativity is the way to nature. So, to be borne: as, this day, He was: Venit per carnem, ſanat per verbum, that all fleſh may ſee the Salvation of GOD. Made it was; againſt Manicheus holding that He had no true body: as if, factum had been fictum, or making were mocking. Made it was: but, how made? Not convertendo, the Word converted into fleſh, (as Cerinthus;) or fleſh converted into the Word, Verbum caro facta eſt (as Valentinus:) for, the Deity cannot be changed into any thing; nor any thing, into it. Nor made conciliando, (as friends are made,) ſo as, they continue two ſeverall perſons ſtill: and while the fleſh ſuffered, the Word ſtood by and looked on, (as Neſtorius.) That is cum carne, not caro, made with fleſh, not fleſh: And, never was one perſon ſaid to be made another. Nor made, by compounding; and ſo, a third thing produced of both (as Eutyches:) For ſo, He ſhould be neither of both, Word nor fleſh, neither GOD, nor man.

1 Factum eſt caro. Was made.

But, made He was; Saint Paul tels us, how: aſſumendo, by taking the ſeed of Abraham (Heb. 11.) His generation eternall, (as verbum Deus) is, as the enditing the Word, within the heart. His generation in time (verbum caro) is, as the uttering it forth with the voice. The inward motion of the minde taketh unto it a naturall body of ayre, and ſo becommeth vocall; it is not changed into it, the Word remaineth ſtill, as it was; yet they two become one voice. Take a ſimilitude from our ſelves. Our ſoule is not turned into, nor compounded with the body: yet, they two, though diſtinct in natures, grow into one man: So, into the God-head, was the man-hood taken; the Natures preſerved, without confuſion; the Perſon entire, without diviſion. Take the definition of the fourth Generall Councell: Sic factum eſt caro, ut maneret verbum: non immutando, quod erat, ſed ſuſcipiendo, quod non erat: noſtra auxit; ſua non minuit; nec Sacramentum pietatis, Detrimentum Deitatis: He was ſo made fleſh, that He ceaſed not to be the Word; never changing that He was, but taking that He was not: We were the better, He was never the worſe; the Myſtery of Godlineſſe was no detriment to the God-head, nor the honour of the creature wrong to the CREATOR.

Heb. 2. 16.

And now, being paſt theſe points of beliefe, I come to that, which I had much rather ſtand on, (and ſo it is beſt for us;) that which may ſtirre up our love to Him, that thus became fleſh for us.

Firſt, comparing Factum with Dictum. For, if we were ſo much beholden for verbum dictum, the word ſpoken, the Promiſe; how much more for verbum factum, the Performance? If, for factum carni, the Word that came to fleſh; how then for factum caro, became fleſh?

Then, taking factum abſolutely. The Word, by whom all things were made, to come to be made it ſelfe. It is more for Him, fieri, to be made any thing, than facere, to make another World, yea, many Worlds more. There is more a great deale, in this factum eſt, than in omnia per Ipſum facta ſunt: in He made, than in All things by Him were made.

Iohn 4. 24. Pſal: 8. 4. Hebr. 2. 7.

Factum eſt, with What He was made. For, if made; made the moſt compleat thing of all, that ever He had made: Made a Spirit, for God is a Spirit; ſome degree of neareneſſe betweene them: But what is man, that He ſhould be made Him, or the Son of man, that He ſhould take his Nature upon Him!

If man, yet the more noble part, the immortall part, the ſoule: What elſe? There are ſome points of His Image in that: it underſtandeth, it loveth; hath a kinde of capacity of the Word. So hath not the fleſh: it is res bruta, common to them with us; neither able to underſtand, or love, or in any degree capable of it. Make it the Soule, the precious ſoule (ſo calleth it Salomon;) not the body, the vile body (ſo the Apoſtle calleth it.) Of the Word He ſaid ever, vidimus gloriam Ejus, we ſaw the glory of it: of the fleſh

we may ſay, vidimus ſordes ejus, we daily ſee that comes from it, as non eſt vilius ſterquilinium, on the dung-hill, worſe is not to be ſeene. Set not ſo precious a ſtone in ſo baſe metall.

5 But this is not all. If He muſt be made, for love of GOD, make him ſomething wherein is ſome good: For, in our fleſh (Saint Paul ſaith) there dwelleth no good: yea, the very wiſdome of the fleſh at flat defiance with the Word. Make it ſomwhat elſe. For there is not onely a huge diſtance, but maine repugnancy between them. Yet, for all this, non poteſt ſolvi Scriptura: the Word was made fleſh.

Rom. 7. 18. Rom. 8. 7. Iohn 10. 35.

I add yet further: what fleſh? The fleſh of an Infant. What, Verbum Infans, the Word an Infant? The Word, and not be able to ſpeak a word? How evill agreeth this? This He put up. How borne, how entertained? In a ſtately Palace, Cradle of Ivory, Robes of eſtate? No: but a ſtable for His Palace; a manger for His Cradle; poore clouts for His array. This was His beginning. Follow Him farther, if any better afterward, what fleſh afterward? Sudans & algens, in cold and heat; hungry and thirſty; faint and weary. Is His end any better, (that maketh up all:) what fleſh then? Cujus livore ſanati; blacke and blew; bloody and ſwolne; rent and torne; the thornes, and nayles ſticking in His fleſh: And ſuch fleſh He was made. A great factum certainly, and much to be made of. To have been made caput Angelorum, had been an abaſement: To be [a] minoratus Angelis, is more: But, to be [b] noviſſimus Virorum, in worſt caſe of all men, nay, [c] a worme and no man: So to be borne, ſo arrayed, and ſo houſed, and ſo handled; there is not the meaneſt fleſh but is better. So to be made, and ſo unmade; to take it on, and lay it off, with ſo great indignity; weigh it, and wonder at it, that ever He would indure to be made fleſh, and to be made it on this manner. What was it made the Word thus to be made fleſh? Non eſt lex hominis iſta, fleſh would never have beene brought to it. It was GOD, and in GOD, nothing but Love: Dilexit, with Sic, Charitas, with an Ecce: Fecit amor, ut Verbum caro fieret: Zelus Domini exercituum fecit hoc. Love only did it. Quid ſit, poſſit, debeat, non recipit jus amoris: That only cares not for any exinanivit, any humiliavit ſe, any emptying, humbling, loſſe of reputation: Love reſpects it not, cares not, what fleſh He be made, ſo the fleſh be made by it.

2 Habitavit, and dwelt.

And dwelt. Factum eſt is the Word of Nature; Habitavit, of Perſon: Habitare eſt Perſonæ. And, two there are not. It is not Habitaverunt: therefore, but one Perſon.

And, habitavit is a Word of continuance: that which was begun in factum, is continued in habitavit. Not onely made, but made ſtay, made His abode with us: Not appeared, and was gone againe ſtraight; but, for a time took up His dwelling; Factus caro, Factus incola. And this word concernes this day properly. This is the day, the firſt day of habitavit in nobis. Incarnate he was in the Virgins wombe; His taking fleſh could not be ſeen, but this draweth after it a vidimus; dwelt and was ſeen viſibly.

3 Rom. 10. 8. Phil. 2. 7.

And this leadeth us to a third: converſatus eſt. Factum, and factum familiare: that He withdrew not Himſelfe into ſome ſolitary place, but was verbum prope nos, neare us, neare neighbours to us. Habitu inventus ut homo, In His habit, and in his habitation, found as a man. One might ask Him (as they, at Verſe 38.) ubi habitas, Sir where dwell you? and He invited them to come and ſee.

4 ἐσκήνωσε, dwelt, as in a Tent.

And ἐσκήνωσε is not every dwelling, but a dwelling in σκήνη a tent, that is, but for a time. Not a houſe, to ſtand for ever; but a tent, to be taken down againe. Which, as it ſheweth His Tabernacle, of the nature of ours, mortall; ſo withall, that He came but of an errand, to ſojourne till He had done it: A work He had for which he was ſent; that being done, He laid His Tabernacle off againe.

5 ἐσκήνωσε, pitched his tent as a Souldier. Gen. 3. 15. Rom. 7. 23.

And, even that work it ſelfe, is in σκηνῶσαι: For, it is a word militare: Souldiers dwell in tents: As if He were now factus caro, incola, miles; as if ſome battell were toward. And (indeed) from the beginning, (the very third of Geneſis,) there was warre proclaimed betweene the Womans ſeed, and the Serpents. An enemy we had, ſtrong and mighty; had, and have ſtill: not one, but many, a whole campe of them. They had prevailed, and led us away captive under the Law of ſinne. Dux nobis opus eſt. A Champion we ſtood in need of, to reſcue us. And here we have one now, even Dux Meſſias, as Daniel calleth Him. He, as this day, came into the campe, ſet up His pavilion among us. The Tabernacle of GOD was with men. He might not ſtay eight days in the campe; but He muſt take Sacramentum militare: So He did. And the ceremonie of it was to be ſtricken, and to bleed ſome ſmall quantity: So He was, at His Circumciſion: And after, He performed the battell at His Paſsion. Where, though it coſt Him His life, yet the victory fell on His ſide, Captivity was led captive, and we were delivered. His Tent was but a forerunner of His combate. This for His dwelling. Now the Affidavit.

Champion

Eph. 4. 8.

As the word Habitavit pointeth us to this firſt day of the Feaſt; and His Tent, to the middle day; when he undertooke our quarrell: So vidimus (now) is proper to the laſt day, the day of Manifeſtation, or Epiphany. He dwelt; and not inviſibly, or obſcurely, but ſo, as He might be (and was) ſeene. Even, this very firſt day, vidimus, might the Shepheards ſay, we ſaw his Angels, and heard them ſing, and then went to Bethlem and ſaw Himſelfe. Vidimus, might the Wiſe-men ſay, we ſaw His ſtarre in the Eaſt, and we are come to ſee Himſelfe. This they might ſay, and truly: for, theſe things were not done in obſcuro. But (as we ſaid) This clauſe is the Affidavit, it is inferred, as a proofe, You tell us of His making, and His dwelling: Quomodo conſtat? How ſhall it appeare? Vidimus is the beſt proofe that can be; He ſaw it; was an eye-witneſſe of what he teſtified.

The Affidavit Vidimus, We ſaw.

Mat. 2. 2. Acts 26. 26.

Ioh 19. 35.

2 Vidimus, not vidi, We ſaw.

And it is not vidi, but vidimus; more eyes than one: Not he alone, others more ſaw it, beſides him. In the mouth [a] of two or three witneſſes: Peter, Iames, and He, (vidimus) were in the Holy Mount together, and ſaw him transfigured. Nay, a whole [b] cloud of witneſſes (CXX.) ſaw Him taken up into Heaven, out of their ſight, in the Mount of Olives. Well might He ſay, vidimus.

a Mat. 17.. 1 Ioh. 1. 3. b Act. 1. 9. Heb. 12. 1.

3 ἐθεασάμεθα Saw it intentively.

And that not per tranſennam, at a bluſh, paſſing by; but had a full ſight, looked well upon Him, at leaſure; did it throughly for a good time together. It is not ὁρᾶν but θεᾶσθαι (the word, whence a Theater is derived:) As men with good heed behold things there: ſo did we, intentively, all the acts and ſcenes of His life.

4 Saw His glory. Verſ. 18.

But I ask: What ſaw they? The fleſh peradventure: The Word, they could not ſee. He is God; and God hath no man ever ſeene. True: that, they could not; yet His glory they might, and did. Which glory was an infallible demonſtration of His preſence, there. Thorow the veile of His fleſh, ſuch beames He caſt, as behinde thoſe clouds, they might know, there was a Sun; as, that way only, could He be made viſible to the eyes of fleſh, which otherwiſe could not behold Him.

Heb. 10. 20.

5 Quaſi unigeniti Dei,

But it may be it was ſome wrong, this, but ſuch, as was ſeene in Moſes, or in Stephen's countenance. He anſwers that, and tels us: It was not, quaſi ſervi, like a Servant; nay, nor quaſi Filii, like any adopted ſons: but, this glory was every way ſuch, as well might it beſeeme the Word, or Only Son: but could agree to no creature though never ſo glorious. To none but Him: and ſo being proprium quarto modo, might be a medius terminus, in a demonſtration.

6 What this glory was.

And if you aske, what that glory might be? With a word, to ſay to the wind and ſtorme [a] Obmutеſce: and to diſeaſes, [b] Volo, mundare: And to Death it ſelfe, [c] Tibi dico, ſurge. His Miracles, they ſhewed His glory, is expreſly ſaid, (in the next Chap. v. 11.) The Star, at His birth; the eclipſe, at His death; the glory, at His changing in the Mount: but, above all. His glorious Aſcenſion, and receiving up into Heaven. All which they ſaw; as being in the Theater all the while, from the Epitaſis to the very Cataſtrophe: Therefore he tels us here, (and again in his Epiſtle) he writes nothing, but what he ſaw and beheld; and even his hands had handled of the Word of Life. Wee may believe him: He, and his Conteſtes, ſuffered many things for the truth of their witneſſe: and the whole world (ſince) hath believed this their Affidavit. Now are we paſt the Parentheſis.

a Mar. 4. 39. b Mat. 8. 3. c Luk. 7. 14.

1 Ioh. 1. 3.

The Conſequence. full of grace and truth.

But what, is all that a vidimus? Nothing but a maſk, to be ſeene? Came he only to make a glorious ſhew to them all? No: but as he came not obſcure, but was ſeene: ſo, he came not empty, but full, and was felt of them, that ſaw him not. Vidimus is not all: a Verſe after there is accepimus; To ſee his glory, they receive of His fulneſſe: They, and we.

Full of Grace and Truth both

Many are the perfections, whereof he is full: Two only here choſen out, as two ſtreames, [1] Grace, and [2] Truth. With them he commeth, with the fulneſſe of them: Not of one of them, but of both. Grace referreth to the Sonne: Truth to the word. Grace, is to adopt us: Truth, to beget us anew; for, of His own will He hath begotten us, by the word of Truth.

Iam. 1. 18.

2 And theſe doe very fitly follow after glory. Glory of it ſelfe terrifies, and makes ſtand aloofe; Grace invites: And his glory is ſuch, as is full of grace. His Mercy, as great as his Majeſtie full out. A bleſſed thing it is, when theſe two meet; and they that are in glory are full of grace too. It is not ſo with every one, that is in glory: But, though there be Grace, unleſſe there be Truth too, all is nothing. For Grace, becauſe it is plauſible, and pleaſeth the people, it is affected: there is a taking on grace in face and phraſe, but when all is done, it wanteth ſound truth. That is right grace, that hath truth joyned to it. Verbum gratiæ, and Verbum charitatis both, and it is both. Yea, verbum caro, his word is not wind, it hath fleſh on it: his Truth is (as it were) the fleſh of his Grace. Thus may be the conſequence.

3 But of theſe two choiſe is made, as of thoſe, our nature ſtood moſt in need of. Out of grace we were; and without grace, as Sinners and in errours, wandring up and downe; as even the beſt of our nature did at his comming into the fleſh. This is the ſtate he found us in, when he came among us.

Eph 1. 6. Verſ. 16.

Againſt the firſt, gratificavit nos in Dilecto, he brought us in grace again, through His Beloved Son: Gratiam pro gratiâ (he ſaith after ſtraight,) for the grace his Son had with him, he received us to grace.

Againſt the later, he brought us truth, to ſet us in the right way. Via, Veritas, & Vita; Veritas, between both: Via & Veritas, or veritas viæ, the true way: Vita & veritas, or veritas vitæ, the true life (that is) Life eternall: We cannot be without either.

Ioh. 14. 6.

4 Verſ. 17. This for our need. But, within a verſe after, I finde theſe two ſet in oppoſition to the Law, and the Law to them: as if S. Iohn pointed us whereto we ſhould refer them. The Law full of rigour, many threats, and curſes in it: Chriſt bringeth the word of grace, oppoſeth to that. The Law full of empty ſhadowes, and Ceremonies; which Truth is ſet againſt: Corpus autem Chriſtus, Chriſt the very body, to Lex habens umbram: So, requiſite to quit us of the Law; The Law, the word, that married fleſh.

Col 2. 17. Heb. 10. 1.

The bringing of theſe two together is a great matter; and together they muſt be. Grace, take it from truth, and it is fallax, but a vizour, but a meere illuſion: Truth, ſever it from grace, and it is ingrata, but an unpleaſing thing. Grace and truth kept in ſunder, and never met before: But, when the word and fleſh met, then did they meet and Kiſſe each other (ſaith the Prophet, and doth with a whole Pſalme celebrate this meeting.)

Pſal 85. 10.

5 Grace firſt, then Truth They muſt meet, and Grace be firſt; as here. We ſhall never endure the ſeverity of his Truth, unleſſe Grace come before, and allay it. But, when Grace hath brought us to Him, Truth will hold us with Him. By Grace we ſhall accompliſh, what Truth requireth at our hands: that ſo, receiving Grace, and walking in Truth, we may come to the third, the reward of both, Glory.

6 Full of both. Luk. 1. 28. Act. 7. 55. Ioh. 3 34 Full of them; and the word would not be paſſed. We find others full of grace, as his bleſſed Mother, and as S. Stephen. Theirs reacheth not to us: None of them have more than ſerves for themſelves. For, the Spirit is given them, but, by meaſure; but plenitudo vaſis, in them, the fulneſſe of a Veſſell; if ye take any thing out, to powre into another, it is the leſſe for it. But, his is plenitudo fontis, the fulneſſe of a fountaine, which is never drawne drie: qui implet abyſſum, & non minoratur, fills a great poole and it ſelfe never the leſſe. Of which fulneſſe they all received, and he never the emptier tier. We ſhall not need to go to any other ſtore-houſe, or help to ſupply, or fill up Chriſt with any other, as if He were but half full. He is full, full of both. Our care is to be, to make our ſelves fit Veſſels, and there is all.

Thus far Quòd verbum factum caro. Now, Quid verbum carni, the benefit, and (that which the benefit ever draweth with it) the Duty, Quid caro verbo? 1. Factus caro benefaciet carni, being made fleſh He will be a benefactor to it. No man ever hated his fleſh, and no more can He us, who are fleſh of His fleſh, or rather, He of ours. He ſeeth us daily in Himſelfe; He cannot looke upon His fleſh, but he muſt think upon us. And GOD the Father cannot now hate the fleſh, which the word is made; which is now taken into one perſon with His only Son, and united to the Deitie it ſelfe. If he love the word, he muſt love it too, for the word is become it; either love both, or hate both. But, love it certainly: for, as this day, when He brought his Sonne cloathed with it, into the world, he gave expreſſe commandement, all his Angels ſhould worſhip him ſo cloathed, and our fleſh in him: A new dignity which is this day accrued to our Nature, to be adored of the bleſſed Angels. Our Nature queſtionleſſe is ſet in high favour with GOD; GOD ſend our perſons ſo too, and all ſhall be well.

II
Quid verbum Carni, The Benefit, Eph. 5. 29.

Heb. 1. 6.

Beſides, good hope we now have, that he being now fleſh, All fleſh may come to him, to preſent him with their requeſts. Time was, when they fled from him; but ad factum carnem jam veniet omnis caro. For, ſince he dwelt among ſt us, all may reſort unto him: Yea, even Sinners; and of them it is ſaid, hic recipit peccatores, & comedit cum eis, he receiveth them, receiveth them even to his Table.

1

Luke 15. 2.

A ſecond hope, that ſeeing he hath made our fleſh his Tabernacle, he will not ſuffer this of ours, the ſame with that of his, to fall downe quite and come to nothing; the ſame, he dwelleth in himſelfe, not to periſh utterly; but repaire it againe, and raiſe it out of the duſt. So that inſuper Caro noſtra requieſcet in ſpe, our very body may reſt in hope to be reſtored againe, and made like to his glorious body.

2

Phil 3. 21

A third; that where it was, fleſh and blood ſhall not inherit the kingdome of God, it is reverſed; fleſh and blood ſhall; for fleſh and blood already doth. It is that S. Iohn is about, to inferre the former verſe out of this, viz. to them gave hee power to be made the Sons of God: For, Ex quo hoc verum eſt, Filium Dei, Filium hominis fieri potuiſſe, non eſt incredibile, &c. Since, ſure it is, that the Sonne of God, is made the Sonne of man, it is not incredible, but that the Sonnes of men may be made the Sonnes of God. Not incredible, nay, Securitas nobis data eſt, a kind of bond is entred, ſecurity given; Seeing this verſe is true, ſo is the laſt, Dedit poteſtatem, he gave power; and well might. Why? for the word is made fleſh, and therefore fleſh may have reciprocall hope to be regenerate by the word, and adopted through grace, and ſo exalted to the glorious dignity of the Sons of God.

Verſe 12

And becauſe Grace and Truth do this, we ſhall faile of neither of them. He is full; and not for himſelf; he needs them not. He hath them for us, and hath ſufficient. Neither ſhall be wanting, if we be not wanting to our ſelves. His grace ſhall prevent us, and his truth follow us, all the dayes of our life.

Pſalm 23. 6

So we ſee Quid verbum carni, what he hath done for us: Now our Duty reciprocall, Quid caro verbo, what we for him againe. If the word become fleſh, we to take order, that fleſh of ours, that the word hath taken, we take it not, and make it una caro with you know whom, or may read (1 Cor. 6.) God forbid: Know you not, the word is become fleſh? That fleſh is then ſo to be preſerved, that, as he ſaith, we ſaw the Glory, ſo may we, we ſaw his fleſh, as the fleſh of the only begotten Son of God. Kept with ſuch care, and in ſuch cleanneſſe, as it might beſeeme his fleſh to be kept. And as much may be ſaid, for habitavit: the houſe would be ſomewhat handſome; as handſome as we could, that is to receive him; we blame them, that this day received him in a ſtable; take heed we do not worſe our ſelves.

III.
Quid caro verbo
Our Duty
1 Cor. 6. 16.

But the Fathers preſſe a further matter yet, out of verbum caro factum: that we alſo are (after our manner) verbum carnem facere, to incarnate the word. We have a word, we may doe it too, which is the type or abſtract of the very Word, or wiſdome on GOD, and that is the Word which is preached unto us. That Word we may, and are to incarnate, according to this dayes patterne. That we ſo do. That Word is then incarnate, quando verbum in opus, Scripturas in operas convertimus, when we doe what is ſpoken, or written; and turne the Vocall Word, into a reall Worke. The Word with us, turneth to nothing but wind: To give it S. Iohns fleſh, and S. Iames Vidimus, make it both be felt and ſeene. Eſpecially, ſince our Saviour Himſelfe ſaith, He reckoneth of this as His ſecond birth; and of every one that ſo doth, eſteemeth as His Mother. That is the duty properly belonging to this Day, the Day of His Birth.

Iam. 1. 2. 18.
Ioh. 12. 48, 49.

3 And to looke alſo to habitavit; aſwell as factum eſt. Fit ſometimes, ſometimes ſomewhat is done; but non habitavit, it vaniſheth againe, it hath no ſtate in us, it continueth not in us, nor we in it. That it be not only; but remaine. By Faith factum eſt; Dwell, by perſeverance, the true free-hold indeed.

4 And that this we may, to provide for the fourth: To uſe meanes, to draw from Him that, whereof He hath ſuch plenty, grace and truth. The breſts, that are full, have as great pleaſure in being drawne, as the Child that draweth them. Aſſure our ſelves, it is ſo here. There is majus deſiderium deplendi in Him, than replendi in us: more, in Him, to part with, than in us to receive. And what meanes are thoſe? To goe to the Word and fleſh together. The Word it ſelfe doth well; and, of the twaine, the Word hath leſſe cauſe to complaine; But, this, at other times. But, at this now, we are not to content our ſelves with one alone, but, ſince He offereth to communicate Himſelfe both wayes, never reſtraine Him to one. The word we heare, is the abſtract of Verbum: The Sacrament, is the antitype to Caro, His fleſh. What better way, than where theſe are actually joyned, actually to partake them both? Not, either alone, the word or fleſh: but, the word and fleſh both, for they are both. If we regard habitavit, this is a ſure way, we have a plaine text for it; Qui manducat carnem, in me manet & ego in illo, He abides in me, and I in Him. If it be grace and truth we reſpect; how may we better eſtabliſh our hearts with grace, or ſettle our mindes in the Truth of His Promiſe, than by partaking theſe the Conduit pipes of His grace, and ſeales of His Truth unto us, Grace and Truth (now) proceeding, not from the word alone, but even from the fleſh thereto united; the fountaine of the word flowing into the ciſterne of His fleſh, and from thence deriving downe, to us, this Grace and Truth, to them that partake Him aright.

Ioh. 6. 56.

But ſetting them aſide, the day, the word was made fleſh, it is moſt kindly, that a memoriall be kept, aſwell of the fleſh as the word. On the Feaſt of their union; they would be united: The day, they were joyned by Him, they would not be ſundred, by any: but we to celebrate both, in honour of both. For, judge with your ſelves how inconvenient it is, to keepe a Feaſt in honour of His taking fleſh, and even that day abandon His fleſh, and never once take it. Verbum & caro (if ever) to be joyned, this day, the day of their joyning. Accordingly then, as well by the act, to teſtifie and repreſent the Words making fleſh; as to procure He may dwell in us; and dwelling repleniſh us with His Grace and Truth. And laſtly, that we may hold this Feaſt aright, and doe the duty that properly belongs to it, let us by both doe honour to both, that from both we may receive the fruite of both, Grace, to enable us; Truth, to guide us, to the hope of glory. Not to that, in the Parentheſis; that is but vidimus quaſi: but, to the other, videbimus ſicut eſt, to ſee Him as He is, and by ſeeing, to be transformed into the ſame Image of Glory.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Friday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCXII.
being CHRISTMAS day.

HEBR. Chap. I. Ver. I, II, III.

1. At ſundry times and in diverſe manners, God ſpake in the old time to our Fathers, by the Prophets:
2. In theſe laſt dayes, He hath ſpoken to us by His Sonne, whom He hath made Heire of all things; by whom alſo He made the worlds;
3. Who being the brightneſſe of His glory, and the ingraved forme of His Perſon, and bearing up all things by His mighty word, hath by Himſelfe purged our ſinnes, and ſitteth at the right hand of the Majeſtie in the higheſt places.

ERUNT noviſſimi, primi (ſaith our Saviour,) And the laſt ſhall be firſt. Matth. 19. 30. And this Text tels us of a great Prerogative, of theſe laſt dayes, above the firſt. Of which laſt dayes, this is the firſt day; the day of CHRISTS Birth. For, make a partition of the two times, Olim, and Dies noviſſimi; and this day will be found to end Olim, and to begin Dies noviſſimi; to be the firſt day of theſe laſt dayes; the very Kalends of Chriſtianity, from whence, we begin our Æra, or Chriſtian computation.

The Dignity of this day, (and ours in it) is here ſet out two wayes: Firſt, by a caſe of compariſon: of compariſon, between the times paſt, and theſe now; betweene the Fathers and Vs. The point, wherein, is Gods ſpeaking, ſpeaking, to both: but, in a more excellent manner, and by a farre more excellent perſon, to us, than to them. The end: that ſo we might know, know and acknowledge, quæ à Deo data ſunt nobis, what God hath done for us, and done for us, this day. For all the difference is, in this Day: all the dignity we have above them, is by it: that ſo we may be highly thankfull to God for it, and hold the day it ſelfe as an high Feaſt. The Summe and Diviſion I.

GOD is the ſame in both; He that ſpeaketh to both: 1 of old, to them: 2 of late, to Vs. Thus farre, even; they and we. One GOD, one ſpeaker, to both. The odds: Both ſpoken to; but not both ſpoken to, alike: Not alike in three Points: 1 Not in the Matter, or Parts, of which: 2 Not in the Forme, or Manner, after which: 3 Not in the Perſons, by whom. 1 To the Fathers, He ſpake πολυμέρως, by many peeces; not entirely. 2 To them, πολυτρόπως, after ſundry faſhions; not uniformely. 3 To them, by His Servants, the Prophets; not by His Sonne.

But, when the Apoſtle commeth to rejoyne upon theſe three, he repeateth not the two firſt, but pitcheth only on the Perſon: That He; that, the Perſon, by whom, is without all compariſon, more honourable, and excellent, than the Prophets, His Servants: (He will doe as much to the Angels, by and by after:) that looke how much a Sonne is better than a Servant, ſo much, our eſtate above theirs.

II. This, for the Comparative. But then, fearing, it might be, we would not conceive high enough, of this Son, or weigh Him, as He is worthy; He goeth to it, Poſitivè; and (as it were) ſets up His Armes, conſiſting of eight ſeverall Coats; or proclaimeth His ſtile, of as many ſeverall Titles. Which we may reduce, to foure ſeverall combinations. [1] Son and Heire; [2] the Brightneſſe and Character: [3] Maker and Supporter of all things: [4] That purgeth our ſins, and, that is ſet downe in the throne. And theſe againe
1 may be abridged to theſe two: [1] what He is, in Himſelfe; [2] and, what, to us. In Himſelfe, all the reſt: 2. To us, [1] made Heire: [2] purgeth our ſins; and ſo cleanſeth
2 our Nature; that being ſo cleanſed, He may exalt it. For, it is for us, and not for Himſelfe, He taketh up the place mentioned, at the right hand on high.

III. Then, our duty: Bona ſi ſua nôrint, If we can skill of our own good, to finde our eſtate greatly dignified by it; and, to honour this day, the beginning of this dignity to us; wherein, God gave His Son, to ſpeake, vivâ voce unto us: to purge our ſins; and to exalt us to His throne on high.

I. The comparative part and difference.

GOD in times paſt ſpake to the Fathers; and His ſpeech was πολυμερῶς, of many ſeverall parcels; to ſeverall perſons; at ſeverall times; ſome at one time, ſome at another. And as the time grew, ſo grew their knowledge (peece and peece) of the great myſtery, this day manifeſted.

1 In the Matter.
[b] Gen. 22. 18.
[c] Gen. 49. 9. 10, 11, &c.
[d] Pſal. 132. 11, 12, &c.

God in times paſt, &c. in many parts, ſpake, concerning His Perſon. Firſt, one peece: Man, He ſhould be; [a] of the Womans ſeed; that, ſhould bruize the Serpents head; and there was all: Gen. 3. Then another peece: Of what Nation he ſhould be; [b] of the ſeed of Abraham, (Gen. 22.) Then, another yet: Of what Tribe, [c] of the Tribe of Iuda: (Gen. 49.) 2. Then againe, a fourth peece, of what Family; [d] of the houſe of David: (Pſal. 132.)

[g] Ier. 23. 5, 6.

So likewiſe GOD, in times paſt ſpake of His Offices. To Moſes, one peece, He ſhould be [e] A Prophet: (Deut. 18.) To David another; He ſhould be [f] A Prieſt: (Pſal. 110.) To Ieremie, a third, He ſhould be [g] A King, and his Name, IEHOVA juſtitia noſtra: (Ier. 23.)

[h] Eſay 9 6.
[i] Mica 5. 2.
[k] Dan 9 25, 26, &c.

And, (not to hold you long in this) GOD, in times paſt, in ſundry parts, ſpake concerning this Dayes worke: That, came by peeces, too. One parcell, to ESAY, of His Birth: (Eſa. 9.) To [i] Mica, the Place of it: (Mica 5.) To [k] Daniel, the Time of it, by weekes: (Dan. 9.) So you ſee, it was by peeces, and by many peeces, they had it. Well ſaid the [l] Apoſtle, that, Prophecying is in part: One may now, in a few houres come to as much, as came to them in many hundred yeares. This for the Matter.

2 In the Manner.
Iob 33. 15.
Eſay 6. 1.
Dan. 10. 7, &c.
1 Reg. 19. 12.
Zach. 1. 9.

Now, for the Manner. It was multiformis. GOD, &c. Many manner wayes.

One manner, by dreames in the night, (Iob 33.) Another manner, by viſions. And thoſe againe of two manners [1] Either preſented to the outward ſenſe, as Eſay 6. [2] Or, in an extaſie, repreſented to the inward; as Dan. 10. Another yet, by Vrim, in the breſt of your Prieſt. And yet another, by a ſmall ſtill voice, in the eares of the Prophet, 1 Reg. 19. And ſomtime, by an Angell, ſpeaking in him (Zach. 1.) But, moſt-what, by His Spirit. And, (to trouble you no more) very ſure it is; that as, for the matter, in many broken peeces: ſo, for the Manner, in many diverſe faſhions, ſpake He to them.

[m] Exod. 12. 4. 5, &c.
[n] Levit. 16. 10.
[o] Numb. 19. 1, 2, &c.
Luke 1. 78.

But then, if, in πολυτρόπως, you underſtand Tropos, figures; then were they yet many more. The Paſchall Lamb: [m] (Exod. 12.) the Scape-goat: [n] (Levit. 16.) The Red Cow: [o] (Numb. 19.) and, I know not how many, even a world of them. Many they were; and tropes they were; ſhadowed out darkly, rather than clearely expreſſed. Theirs, was but candle-light, to our day-light; but Veſpertina cognitio, in compariſon of ours, whom the Day hath viſited, ſprung from on high. This, for the Matter and Manner: Now, for the Men.

GOD

GOD, in times paſt ſpake by Prophets: and but by Prophets, He ſpake not, from Moſes, to Iohn Baptiſt (who was the Horizon of the Law and Goſpell.) I will not ſtand to run through them all. And now, the Apoſtle, when he is come to us in the laſt dayes; when he ſhould oppoſe three more, to match the former three, he doth not; but paſſeth by the two firſt, the Parts, and the Manner; leaveth out πολυμέρως and πολυτρόπως; and ſo inſinuates thereby thus much; that, He hath ſpoken to us entirely, without reſervation; and uniformly, without variation. But, thoſe two he waveth, and inſiſteth only on this laſt, (as the faireſt marke of difference) the Prophets, and His Son. 3 In the Mem.

The Prophets were holy men; but, men. And there is a nature more perfect, than that of man; even the nature of GOD. And, in the Houſe of God, they were faithfull ſervants; but yet, ſervants: and that (we know) is but an imperfect condition, in compariſon of a SONNE. To us in the laſt dayes is given, that what we have, we have not from any Prophet, though never ſo excellent; but from the Lord of the Prophets: Not from any Servant, though in never ſo great place; but, from the SON: And, not from any of the ſons of men: but, from His own Son, the SON of GOD. From His mouth wee have received notice of GODS will: He Himſelfe ore tenus, imparted it to us. 2 Pet. 1. 21. Heb. 3. 6. Mat. 21. 37. Mat. 21. 38.

But then, If any aske: Seeing, GOD, in times paſt, and God, in theſe laſt dayes, is the ſame God; He that ſpake to the Fathers, and He, that, to us, but one Speaker: why not, by His Sonne, at firſt? I will give a reaſon fit for this place. A Decorum was to be kept, and ſome kinde of correſpondence with State. That as, at the proceeding of a great Prince, before He Himſelfe commeth in ſight, many there be, that goe before Him, and thoſe, of diverſe degrees; and at laſt, Himſelf doth appeare: So, this Prince, that Sits in the Throne, ſhould not ſtart out at the firſt, and ſhew Himſelfe; but be allowed His traine of Patriarkes, and Prophets, to be His Anteambulones; and, in the fulneſſe of time, Himſelfe ſhould come, with the fulneſſe of grace and truth, and eſtabliſh one entire uniforme way, to continue for ever. Gal. 4. 4. Ioh. 1. 14. 16.

From this compariſon, theſe are the points, we learne: We muſt ferri ad perfectionem. And, theſe are notes of imperfection: There be too many parts, and too many manners, in that, to be a perfect, State. If the Matter were full, no more would he added: If the Manner were perfect, it would no more be altered. Never then, to reſt in theſe. Moſes himſelfe pointeth us, to one after him, by his Ipſum audite, (Deut. 18.) Who is that? God Himſelfe, in the Mount, tels us by His Ipſum audite. And, when God ſaid it, Moſes and Elias was there in the Mount, and reſigned up both their ſeverall audiences: Moſes, for himſelfe; and Elias, as well in his owne name, as in the name of all the Prophets. Deut. 18. 18. Mat. 17. 5

This, againſt the Iewes; that will, no further then Moſes: that will reſt in the Law. For, nihil ad perfectum adducit Lex, the Law brings nothing to perfection: But Finis legis, CHRISTUS. And, all Prophecy hangs in ſuſpence (as imperfect,) till the fulfilling of it; which was done by Chriſt, to whom they all gave witneſſe. Now, when that, is perfect, is come, that, that is imperfect, muſt away. Not to reſt, in them, then: But, to CHRIST; and never reſt, till we come to Him. Rom. 10. 4. 1 Cor. 13. 10

And, as never to reſt, till we come to him: So, there to reſt, when we are come to Him: As ſoone as His voyce hath ſounded in our eares, that they itch no more after any new revelations. For, in, Him, are all the treaſures of wiſdome, and knowledge. Col. 2. 3

God ſpake once and twiſe: A third time, He will not ſpeake. This, is His laſt time: He will ſpeake no more. Look for no more peeces, nor phanſie no more faſhions: Conſummatum eſt, there are no more, to looke for. He is the truth: and, he that hath found the truth, and ſeekes further, no remedy, he muſt needs finde a lie: he can finde nothing elſe. To get us therefore to Chriſt; and never be got from Him; but, there, hold us. Pſal. 62. 12. Ioh. 19. 20.

We cannot follow a better patterne, than the Apoſtle here: We ſee, what haſte he makes. For, (as if he were upon thornes, till he were with Chriſt,) without any Exordium, or preamble, here, in the beginning of his Epiſtle, he hits on the Point ſtreit; as if all time were loſt, till he were there. Yea, having named the parts, and manners of the times paſt, for very haſt to be at Him, he forgets both parts and manners, only for deſire to be with Him, the ſooner.

II
The Poſitive part.

And (ſo with him) I haſt to paſſe to the ſecond Poſitive part. Wherin being careful, we ſhould take perfect notice of Him; and fearing we would not weigh theſe words [by His Son] as were meet, but heare them ſlightly, and paſſe them lightly over; the reſt of the Text he ſpends, in making a commentary of this word Son: that we may conſider, how great this Party is; and conſequently, how much it imports us, to regard His ſpeech, and to eſteeme of His feaſt with no meane accompt. And (to ſay truth) it was more than needfull, conſidering the meannes of His birth to day: the He ſhould thus proclaime His ſtile of eight titles, and over the place of it, ſtick them up, as ſo many ſcutcheons, to give us true notice of the greatneſſe of the Party.

But withall, his meaning was to deſcribe Chriſt at all points: as (indeed) theſe eight conteine a perfect deſcription, of His Natures, His Perſon, His Offices, His Agency.

1 His Natures, in the very beginning: Quem fecit, is Man; Per quem fecit, is GOD. Not, quem only, Man alone, but, Per quem ſæcula, GOD alſo. But, for His Divine Nature, He is more full yet; That, He is His Son, the Splendor of His glory, the Character of His Subſtance, the Maker and Vpholder of the world, and all in it.

2 His Perſon: in this word ſemetipſo; He did it Himſelfe, (that is,) in His own perſon. Himſelfe, is ever ſaid of a Perſon.

3 His Offices: In His ſpeaking, His Prophecy; by which, He unfoldeth the Myſteries of GOD. In His purging our ſins, is His Prieſthood: And, His Kingdome, in the throne of Majeſtie, wherein He ſits.

4 His Agency, (or quid ad nos,) In locutus eſt nobis. To us, He ſpeaketh: and, purgans peccata noſtra, Our ſins He purgeth. Nobis, and noſtra: To us, and for us, he is, that he is. All his ſpeaking, and doing, propter nos homines, & propter ſalutem noſtram, for us men, and for our ſalvation; and, our part, in him, and his.

What Chriſt is in Himſelfe.

We reduced all theſe eight, to two. [1] What in himſelfe; [2] and what, referendo to us. In himſelfe: what by Nature; Son and heire: What by excellency; Splendor and Character: What by power; Maker and Vpholder of all. To us; What in love already performed; he hath purged our ſins: In hope yet expected; he is ſet, and in poſſeſſion of the throne of glory; which is, in our names, and to our behoofe, and not his owne.

In his Divine nature

His Divine Nature hath no leſſe than three, to expreſſe it: [1] Son, [2] Brightneſſe, and [3] Character: and two, to prove it, the [1] making and [2] ſupporting of all.

I have heretofore remembred you, that the high perfections of that nature are ſuch and ſo many, as no one terme will ſuffice, to ſet it forth: we are glad to borrow from many to do it; and yet, but brokenly, too. And that though there be not any reſemblance tranſlated from the creatures, (though never ſo excellent,) that will hold full aſſay, yet withall, this we are to think, that, ſince the Holy Ghoſt, hath made choice of theſe termes, they are no idle ſpeculations, that are drawne from them.

1 Sonne,

Of theſe three then: [1] Son, [2] Brightneſſe, [3] Character. [1] In Son, there is a true identity of Nature: upon it is grounded, ὁμοούσιον, being of one ſubſtance; even as the Son is with the Father.

2 Brightneſſe.

[2] But the Son commeth after the Father, in time, and that a good time: Amends is made for that, in the next terme, (Brightneſſe.) For, it is not to be imagined, that there ever was, or could be a light body, but, in the very ſame inſtant there muſt ſtreame from it, a brightneſſe. So, upon this is grounded Coëternall.

3 Character.

[3] But then, there is ſome inequality, between the light body it ſelfe, and the beame or brightneſſe of it: The beame not full out ſo cleere. This, is the imperfection in the terme Brightneſſe. But, that is ſupplyed by the next, Character: For, that, is (ever) juſt equall; neither bigger, nor leſſer than the type, or ſtamp, that made it. Upon this (then)

(then) is grounded Coequall, and like per omnia ὁμοούσιος: So like, as, Shew us the Father (ſaith Philip:) why, He that ſees the Character, never deſires to ſee the ſtampe; if yee ſee the one, yee ſee the other: Hee that ſeeth me, ſeeth the Father, whoſe expreſſe forme I am. Ioh. 14.8. Verſ. 9.

Agreeable to theſe three, we beleeve of Him, that He is conſubſtantiall, as the SON; Coeternall, as the Brightneſſe; Coequall, as the Character: Againſt the new heads of the old Hydra ſprung up againe in our dayes.

This terme (SONNE of GOD) is ſometimes communicated to Saints, ſometime to Magiſtrates. Leſt we might underſtand it, as we do in Saints, or as we do in Magiſtrates, he addeth two words; [1] the one, Glory; [2] the other, Subſtance. Of which, Glory is imparted to others: Subſtance to none but him. His Glory on earth He impart-eth to Magiſtrates; and they are called the Sons of the moſt High. His heavenly Grace, (which is Glory inchoate) He imparteth to His Saints; and, to them, gave He power to be Sons of GOD. Pſal. 81.6. Ioh. 1.12.

But, His ſubſtance is in neither. For, the firſt (Magiſtrates) are, by Ego dixi: but He, by Ego genui. And, the ſecond (Saints,) to them He giveth priviledge or prerogative ſo to be. So, they, κατ' ἐξουσίαν: but He, κατ' οὐσίαν: Per præſtantiam, they; Per ſubſtantiam, He. Pſal. 2.7.

He, the brightneſſe of His glory, and Character of His ſubſtance: that is, not in glory onely, which may be imparted to another; but even, in His very ſubſtance (too) it ſelfe.

And again: not in ſubſtance of the Deity alone, but (in that, which belongeth to it,) the glory alſo. Subſtance is Deus, Glory is Dei. All, that He is, and all, that He hath; Subſtance and Glory both.

The brightneſſe of His glory: He was ſuch a ſonne, as did no way eclipſe His Fathers glory; but (as a beame) made it ſhine more bright. The Character, the true ſtamp of His ſubſtance: Nor, he rendred not a broken image, as if the ſtamp had beene ſet on, or driven awry: but, was His very true expreſſe forme.

Another myſtery, yet, Theſe three note a proceeding: The Son, from the Father: the Brightneſſe, from a Light: the Character, from the Type: And ſo, a econd perſon. I proceeded, and came from the Father, (He ſaith it Himſelfe.) Ioh. 15.28.

Firſt, a true and naturall proceeding from Him, as the Sonne. Secondly, (to take away all conceit of groſſe or carnall generation,) by a pure and cleane proceeding, as De luce, lux; in which, there is nothing but pure, and undefiled. Thirdly, Character-wiſe, from His hypoſtaſis, (it is the word in the Text, mark it well:) Not, from His οὐσία (that is) not from His ſubſtance at large; but, from His determinate Perſonall eſſence; (for, ſo is hypoſtaſis, properly:) That is, not from the Deity, or eſſence of it, (which neither begets, nor is begotten;) but, from a Perſon in the Deity.

Now theſe three, if we referre them to Olim, the times paſt; Then, as the Sonne He is oppoſed, to His ſervants (that is) the Prophets. As He is a Beame of light, to the many parts (as it were many ſparkes:) That, was all the light before. As the Character (or firm impreſſion) to the many vaniſhing ſhadowes under the Law.

But if, to the preſent, we referre them: As He is the Sonne: we ſhall finde no eſtate but ſervitude; no adoption, but in Him. As the brightneſſe: no cleere light of knowledge, nothing but myſts and darkneſſe, but by Him. And, as the Character: no true ſoundneſſe, or ſound truth, but figures and flitting ſhadowes, without Him. From Him, as the Sonne, receive we grace, whereby we are adopted: As the Beame, the cleerneſſe of faith, whereby lightned: As the Character, the true ſignature of charity, whereby ſtamped, to know (our ſelves) and be known of others, that wee have heard Him aright, and are His true Diſciples. Eph. 1.5. Ioh. 1.9.

Theſe three expreſſe His Divine Nature: Two more, to prove it. In them, His excellency: in theſe, His Power. Which is ſet out two wayes: [1] In the Creation: Omnia per Ipſum facta, & ſine Ipſo nihil, all made by Him; nothing without Him. [2] And againe in the Preſervation, (by vertue of His Et ego uſque operor,) which is His worke The two to prove it. Ioh. 1.3. Ioh. 5.17.

to this day; to continue and uphold in their being, all that He hath made to be. One, by His word ſpoken; So, made: the other, by His Law given: So made faſt to continue. In a word: all had bin nothing, but for Him: and all would fall to nothing, without Him:

Pſal 148.5.6.

Now, in that He thus made all, and makes all to laſt, the meeteſt perſon, He was, to make all new; to reſtore that He had made. And, it was a convenience, that He ſhould; and it was an inducement, that He would undertake the buſineſſe, and goe through with it.

2 What Chriſt is to us.

All this He is, in Himſelf: Yet not ſo, but, in all His ſplendor and glory, He mindeth us. And that ſo, as He is deſirous to bring us, to the joynt partaking of His inheritance, as Son; of His glory, as the brightneſſe; yea, of the very Divine nature, as the Character of His ſubſtance. The ground whereof is laid, in [quem fecit hæredem,] whom He made heire; and that was, as man: For, per quem fecit (we ſaid) is God; quem fecit, is man.

1 He is made Heire.

Made Him heire.] Heires, are either borne, or made: So borne, by nature; or, ſo made, by purchaſe. He was His Son; and, His only Son: and ſo borne His heire. He was borne; and yet He would be made. There is a myſtery, in this: we are to looke to it; It will fall out, to concern us. Heire borne He was; and ſo claimeth all, as His inheritance, by due of birth-right. But, it is further (here) ſaid, He was made: what meanes this? Quem fecit? Nay, quem genuit. That, is true: But, quem fecit is true likewiſe. Fecit hæredem, qui prius fuit hæres: So borne, and ſo made, too; Hæres natus, and hæres factus. So commeth He to a double right, two titles. How ſo? He needed but one: He would have two. To what end? Not, for Himſelf; for Himſelf, one was enough. Belike His meaning was to have two, that He might ſet over one to ſome body elſe There, is the point. He was borne heire, for Himſelfe: but, made heire, for us. Hæres natus, that ſerveth Him; that He reteines to himſelfe; Hæres factus, that he diſpoſeth of, to us. By this, we hold; even by Quem fecit: that, is our tenure, and beſt hope. He is, and ever was, in the boſome of his Father, as hæres natus: he now is, but on our behalfe, and to our behoofe, at the right hand of His Father, as Hæres factus. And now followeth, He purged our ſins.

2 He purgeth our ſins.

For, he could not bring us to ſit with Him in His throne (thus purchaſed) being ſo ſpotted and foule, as we were, by meanes of the pollution of our ſins. He was then to purge and make cleane our Nature firſt, that He might exalt it to partake His purchaſe, being ſo cleanſed. Where firſt our caſe is ſet down, wherein He found us, and wherein we are, without Him. A ſinners caſe (how glorioufly ſoever he or ſhe gliſter in the eyes of men) being in GODS eyes, as the caſe of a foule diſeaſed perſon: And we thereby taught ſo to conceive of ſins, as, of foule ſpots without; or, of ſuch humours (within) as go from us by purging. Inquinamenta carnis & Spiritus (as S. Paul terms them right) defiling both fleſh and Spirit: which unleſſe they be purged, there is no entring into the heavenly Ieruſalem (where, the throne is,) into which, nihil inquinatum, no polluted thing ſhall ever enter.

Apoc. 21. 27.

Exalt us He could not, being in that plight: for love or pity therefore, purge us He would. And here now, is the top, or higheſt point of elevation, in this Text. VVho being the brightneſſe (or, though He were the Brightneſſe) that is, a Party ſo excellent in Nature, Glory, Perſon, and Power; Nature as Son, Glory as brightneſſe, Perſon as Character; Power, as maker and ſupporter of all: who though He were all this, did not abhor to come, and viſite us, being in that foule and wretched caſe. This will teach us, Domine quid eſt homo? what is man that thou ſhouldeſt viſit him? Viſit him; not as the day-ſpring from an high doth the earth; but viſite him, as if a great Prince ſhould go into an Hoſpitall, to viſit and look on a foule diſeaſed creature.

Pſal. 8. 4.

Luk. 1. 78.

2 And not only viſit him; but not refuſe the baſe office, to looke to his purging from that his uncleanneſſe.

3 And thirdly, not cauſe it to be done by another; but to come and do it in Semet ipſo, by his owne ſelfe, in perſon.

4 And fourthly, in doing, not to ſtand by, and preſcribe; but Himſelfe to miniſter and make the medicine.

5. And

5 And fifthly, to make it Himſelfe, and make it of Himſelfe; in ſemetipſo, and de ſemetipſo; to make the medicine, and be the medicine.

6 And how, or of what? Spots will out with water; Some will not, with any thing but with blood: Without ſhedding of blood there is no taking away ſin, as Chap. 9. ver. 22. And not every blood will ſerve; but, it muſt be Lambs blood; And a Lamb without ſpot. And not every Lamb neither; but the Lamb of God: or (to ſpeak plainly) a Lamb, that is God: His blood, and nothing elſe will ſerve to do this. 1 Pet. 1. 19. Ioh. 1. 29.

7 And ſeventhly, not any blood of His; not of a veine, (one may live ſtill, for all that:) but, His beſt, moſt precious, His heart-blood, which bringeth certaine death with it. With that blood He was to make the medicine. Die He muſt: and his ſide be opened, that there might iſſue both the water and the blood, that was to be the ingredients of it. By Himſelfe, His owne ſelfe; and by Himſelfe ſlaine: by His death, and by His blood-ſhedding, and by no other meanes: Quis audivit talia? The Phyſitian ſlaine; and of His fleſh and blood, a receipt made, that the patient might recover!

And now we may be at our choiſe, whether we will conceive of ſin, as of ſome outward ſoile, in the ſoule; And then the purging of it, to be per viam balnei, needs a bath, with ſome cleanſing ingredients, as the Prophet ſpeakes, of the herbe Borith: And, this way purged He us; made a bath of the water that came out of His ſide, to that end opened, that from thence might flow a fountaine for ſin, and for uncleanneſſe, (Zach. 13. 1.) Water, and mixed with His blood; as forcible, to take out the ſtaines of the ſoule, as any herbe Borith in the world, to take away the ſoile of the skinne. Ier. 2. 22. Zach. 13. 1.

Or, whether we will conceive of ſin, as of ſome inward peſtilent humour, in the ſoule and conſcience, caſting us into perill of mortall (or rather, immortall) death: Then, the purging of us, to be by way of ſome Electuary, or Potion: (And ſo, Hee purgeth our ſins too.) To that end He hath made an Electuary of his own body [Take, eate it:] and tempered a cup with his owne blood, [Drink ye all of it:] which by the operation of his eternall Spirit in it, is able effectually to purge the conſcience from dead works (or actuall ſins) and from the deadly effect of them: No balſame, or medicine in the world like it. Mat. 26. 26, 27. Heb. 9. 14.

The Summe of all is: There be two defiling ſinnes, and two wayes he purgeth them. Cleane we are, from the firſt, as waſhed from the originall uncleanneſſe of our Nature, and that by the Laver of regeneration. And whole we are, as purged within, from the actuall ſins of our perſons; and that, by the Cup of the New Teſtament, which we bleſſe in His Name, And the blood of JESUS CHRIST purgeth us from our ſins. By both, he purgeth us from both. And this, for his Purging. Tit. 3. 5. 1 Cor 10. 16. 1 Ioh. 1. 7.

And is ſet downe.] Of which, we are not to conceive, as of a thing meerly touching him; (that, his labour being done, he tooke his reſt; and there is all:) But, that this his ſitting down is, a taking poſſeſſion of that his deare made purchaſe: And that, not in his owne Name. He had it before; he was in glory; and in the ſelfe-ſame glory with his Father, before ever the world was. 3 And ſitteth at the right hand, &c.

This Hares factus pertaineth to us, as, done for us; not, for himſelfe, who needed it not, nor could have any uſe of it.

Theſe two (betweene them) comprehend all, even all we can wiſh: [1] To be purged of the one; [2] and, to be ſeated of the other. They follow well: For, to what end purged he us? To leave us, there? No, but for ſome further matter: which though it be laſt in execution, was firſt in intention. Having ſo cleanſed us, not content with that, it was his purpoſe further, to bring us to glory; that is, to no leſſe matter, than to ſit on his throne with him, purchaſed by him for no other end.

And theſe two, Purging, and Sitting down in the throne, as the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt of that he doth for us. And ſo, in them, is all well repreſented; Purging our ſins, the firſt; Sitting in the throne, the laſt. To purge our ſins, he began, this day, the firſt day, the day of His birth: wherein He purified, and ſanctified, by his holy Nativity, the originall uncleanneſſe of ours. And, Sit in the throne, was his laſt work, on the laſt day of His Aſcenſion: Then tooke he poſſeſſion, in our names, ὡς πρόδρομος (ſaith the Apoſtle) as forerunner for us. Chap. 6. ver. ult.

The

The degrees of this exaltation be theſe: [1] Firſt, a throne it is: and that is not every ſeat; but, a ſpeciall, and chiefe, and honourable ſeat. [2] And ſecondly, of thrones, there be ſome inferiour, as the thrones of Iuſtice: This is the higheſt, for it is a throne of Majeſtie. [3] Thirdly, It is in excelſis; and that maketh up all. For the thrones here below (even of Majeſtie) ſooner or later, they that ſit in them, muſt come downe from them.

Pſal. 45. 7. But the throne on high, Thy ſeat O God, is for ever and ever: Not fading, and tranſitory, as ours here. [4] Fourthly, in this throne, ſet He is: and ſitting is the ſite or poſition of reſt; that is, reſt in glory. Here, where moſt glory, leaſt reſt. [5] And fifthly, on the right hand,

Ver. 13. which is, on the throne, the beſt, and next place to God Himſelfe. And, by this, are we above the Angels: For, to which of them (as the Apoſtle after deduceth) ſaid He at any time, ſit on my right hand:

Ver. 14. No, but ſtand before me, as miniſtring ſpirits, all. Or; when they reſt, it is on the other hand: the right hand is kept for us, and poſſeſſed already by one in our Nature, who, in this ſeat will not ſit alone, Sed conſedere nos ſecum fecit in cœleſtibus, (Eph. 2. 6.) Even now, we ſit there, in Him; and ſhall there ſit with Him in the end. So He promiſeth, in expreſſe termes (Apoc. 3. 21.) that we ſhall ſit with Him in His throne, as He doth in His Fathers. And ſo not in the throne, will He be above us, but only, that, He, in the middeſt, and we, on His right hand.

Our duty to Chriſt.

Our duty then is, for His excellency, to honour Him; for His power, to feare Him; for His love ſhewed, reciprocally to love Him againe; for His hope promiſed, truly to ſerve Him. GOD, for his part, would have His ſervants the Prophets well uſed: but however they, in times paſt, were regarded by them, this he makes full account of,

Mat. 21. 17. If He ſend His Son, we will not faile, but reverence Him. Specially ſuch a Son; of ſuch glory, ſuch power, and above all, of ſuch love towards us, to provoke ours againe. And againe, of ſuch ability, to reward with eternall glory, as he will even buy our ſervice, at Who gives more: and pay us for it to the full, with no leſſe wages than a throne of glory.

I
As a Prophet ſpeaking.

This in generall. More particular: in three termes, he is ſet out to us (here) in the text: [1] Speaking, [2] Purging, [3] Sitting: as a Prophet, He ſpeakes; as a Prieſt, purges; as a King, ſits ſpeaking; our duty is to heare him, to lay up His ſayings in our heart. Two marks his word hath here, [1] feeit, and [2] ſuſtinet; made and makes continue; Let it have the ſame, in us. In the Sermon time ſomething is begun to be made in us, but, it continueth not: which ſheweth, it is not verbum vincutis, to us. Againe, let it not be, as a Brightneſſe, only to be ſeene by us, but as a Character too, to leave a mark behind it, to be ſeene on us; and then it is right.

Pſal. 95. 8. Now, hodie ſi vocem, To day if ye will heare his voyce, ye can heare none but vagitum infantis, ſuch a voice as uſeth to come from a new borne babe. And even ſo, He ſpeaks to us, if we can underſtand. For, even this Verbum to be infans, and Tonans to be vagiens; he, to ſend forth ſuch a voyce; it ſpeaketh humility, (I am ſure) and great love, that ſo would humble it ſelfe; if we have eares to heare it. When he, that was the brightneſſe of His Fathers glory, ſhould be ſo eclipſed: he that ſits on the throne, thus be thrown in a manger.

As a Prieſt purging.

Prophets ſpake; but purged not. Purging was ever the Prieſts office. It is true: the word he ſpeakes, hath a mundifying vertue: Iam mundi eſtis, Now ye are cleane. It cleanſeth then. But, not that only, nor principally. For, the medicine, which purgeth ex proprietate, his fleſh and blood goe to it. By which will we are ſanctified even by the offering of the body of Ieſus. That blood of Ieſus Chriſt, cleanſeth us from all ſin (1 Ioh. 1, 7.)

Col. 10. 10. Theſe, the true ingredients into this medicine. But better yet, if both goe together. And, this day, they firſt came together, the Word, and Fleſh: therefore, (of all dayes,) this day they would not be parted. For, will you ſever the fleſh from the Word, that day, on which GOD joyned them? GOD forbid. There is a correſpondency, betweene the Word, and His Brightneſſe; and betweene the Sacrament, and His Character. The Word giveth a light, and His brightneſſe ſheweth in it ad horam, and not much longer. The parts of the Sacrament, they are permanent, and ſtick by us:

they, are a remembrance of the Characters made in His skin and fleſh. And, if yee ſeeke to be rid of your ſins, this was broken for you, and this was ſhed for you, for that very end, for the remiſsion of ſins. And ſo, ye receive His Perſon; even Semetipſum: And, in Semetipſo, in His Perſon it was, He purged our ſins. And ſo, that, a ſure way.

Laſtly, for ſitting: that, is His kingdome; that is kept for dies noviſsimorum noviſsimus, the laſt day indeed. That, is yet in hope only. The ſame fleſh that cleanſed our ſins, the ſame now ſitteth on the throne: and ſo, hath both vertues: for the preſent, a power to purge; for the future, a power likewiſe to exalt. The ſame blood, is the blood of ſacrifice for remiſſion of ſins; and, the blood of the New Teſtament, for the paſſing to us the bequeſt, which is, the right of His Purchaſe, for which, He was made Heire. And the very Angels, who (this day) adored Him in our fleſh; and it, in Him; thereby ſhewed plainly, not the purging only, but the exalting of it alſo, by this dayes worke. And that, to day, wherein they ſang alowd in the skie, we have cauſe, to make much of, and to rejoyce in it; the Day of the greateſt glory to God, peace to the earth, and good will towards men, that ever roſe upon the world.

Luk. 2. 13, 14.

GOD grant, that we may ſo hold this firſt feaſt with Chriſtian joy, as we may hold that laſt, with like joy: and be found as cheerefull in it.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Saturday the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCXIII.
being CHRISTMAS day.

IOHN Chap. VIII. Ver. LVI.

ABRAHAM Pater veſter exultavit ut videret Diem meum: & vidit, & gaviſus eſt.

Your Father Abraham rejoyced to ſee my Day: and he ſaw it, and was glad.

HERE is Ioy, Ioy at a ſight, at the ſight of a Day, and that day Chriſts. It is CHRIST that calleth it, here, Diem meum, His day: And, no day, ſo properly His, as His Birth Day. So, the Text comes full upon the day.

But, to reduce it poynt by poynt.

Firſt, CHRIST hath a Day, proper to Him, which in expreſſe termes, He calleth (here) diem meum, my day.

Secondly, This Day, to be ſeene, is a day of Ioy. Double joy; [1] Exultavit, and [2] Gaviſus eſt: both, in the Text.

And thirdly, (which is ſomewhat ſtrange,) It was ſo, to the Patriarke Abraham. Him we finde (here) doing that, which we now are about; Seeing, and rejoycing, at the ſight of CHRISTS Day: taking notice of it; and taking joy in it.

Laſtly, all this nothing diſpleaſing to our Saviour Chriſt: for it is ſpoken by Him. to the praiſe of Abraham that did it; and, to the diſlike of the Iewes, that did it not. To them is this ſpeech: Chriſt tels them of Abrahams doing it: and blames them, for not doing the like.

And, what are we (now) diſpoſing our ſelves to doe, but even the very ſame, that is in the Text here, to rejoyce, to ſee CHRISTS Day?

And a threefold warrant we have, in this verſe, to do, as we do. 1. The Patriarks doing it. 2. Chriſts allowance of the doing of it. 3. And His diſlike of the Iewes for not doing it.

We have Abraham for our example; we do but as he did. In his time, Chriſts Day was a Day of Ioy; and a Day of Ioy is a Feaſt, and ſo holden by Him, we ſee. Which falls out much to our content For, the ſame Feaſts, the ſame Religion. So, we finde by this, that he and we are of one Religion. One, in ſubſtance, which is CHRIST: One in circumſtance, which is His Day. CHRIST Himſelfe, Abrahams Ioy; Nay, His Day Abrahams Ioy too. The ſame meum; that is CHRIST: the ſame Diem; that is, Chriſtmaſſe.

Then (which is another degree) Abrahams example approved of, by CHRIST; and and that, after ſomewhat a ſtrange manner: For, it is not here (if you marke it) Exultavit, ut videret Me; But, ut videret Diem meum. He makes His Day, the object of all this exultation and joy. His Day (I ſay) and not Himſelfe: commends him, that he rejoyced at the ſight, not of himſelfe, but of it. Verily, this ſpeech of His is much to the honour of His Day; and the very ſolemnity of the Feaſt, and all the Ioy and gladneſſe thereon, may well be thought, to have beene founded upon this ſpeech of His. Alwayes, if Exultavit ut videret, were a praiſe to Him; We may be ſure; Exultavit cum videret, can be no diſpraiſe, to us.

Add thirdly: Abrahams example approved by CHRIST. Not ſo approved, as he leaves it at liberty: They, that will, may doe the like. But that, He reproves them, that doe it not. For; He blames the Iewes here, for not doing herein as Abraham: Your father Abraham did it, you doe it not. Which is againſt them, that have a ſpleene at this Feaſt: that thinke they can Ioy in Him well enough, and ſet His Day by; Nay, and abrogate it quite: and in ſo doing, they Ioy in Him all the better. Nay; love Him, love His feaſt: Ioy not in it, nor in Him, neither.

You ſhall ſee, how they are miſtaken. Therefore they doe ſo (they tell us,) leſt obſerving dayes and times, they ſhould ſeeme to Iudaize. It falls out quite contrary. Gal. 4. 10.
For, who are they, whom Chriſt here blameth? are they not Iewes? And, wherefore blameth He them? For not doing, as Abraham: And, what did Abraham? Rejoyce on his Day. So, upon the point, it will fall out, that, not to rejoyce on His Day, that, is indeed to Iudaize, and they little better, than theſe Iewes, that follow them in it.

Nay, here is another thing yet, will grieve them more: Iewes they ſhall be; But, none of Abrahams Children; no more, than theſe were. Obſerve it well. It is the Occaſion of this ſpeech, the very iſſue Chriſt takes with them: Pater noſter Abraham was ſtill in their mouths (in the 33, 39, 53. Verſes:) If (ſaith Chriſt) you were his Children (marke that If,) ye would patriſſare; deſire what he deſired, and Ioy what he Ioyed in. Now, My Day he ſo highly eſteemed, as glad he was, that he might ſee it: And you, that would ſo faine father your ſelves, upon him, are ſo far from that, as what he deſired abſent, ye deſpiſe preſent: what he would have beene the better to ſee; ye are the worſe, that ye ſee it. Now then, how are theſe Abrahams Children, that have nothing of Abraham in them? Before, (at the 40. Verſe,) Ye ſeeke to kill me, for telling the truth. This did not Abraham, and ye do it. Here now againe: He rejoyced in my day; And, ye do it not. Do that, he did not; do not that, he did: How can theſe be Abrahams ſons? Verily, as it is in Eſay 63. Abraham neſcivit nos: Abraham would Eſay 63. 16.
never know them for his. None of His Sonnes, theſe. Thoſe are his ſonnes, that doe, as he did. And, here now, come in we. They, Iewes; but, not Abrahams Children: Wee, Abrahams Children, but, not Iewes: For, as he did, ſo doe wee. There is Ioy with us, at the ſight of His Day: we renew our Ioy, ſo oft, as, by the Revolution of the yeare, it commeth about. And, for this very point, wee finde our ſelves the neerer to Abraham: Even for the joy of His day. Alwaies, ſure we are, ſince [1] Abraham did it, and [2] CHRIST allowed it, and [3] diſallowed the contrary: by theſe three, we have good warrant to doe, as we doe: To make it a time of Ioy. And ſo, a time of Ioy, GOD make it to us.

Thus it ſtands, for the Order. There be, in the Text, three acts ſpecified, from one, The Diviſion iſſuing; from Abraham all: All directed, to one marke; falling all upon one Object. I That Object is Diem meum, My day: Of that then firſt. The three Acts be, [1] Exultavit II ut videret: [2] Vidit: and [3] gaviſus eſt. [1] Firſt, would be glad, ut videret, that He might ſee; that is, was deſirous to ſee it: [2] Then, had his deſire, did ſee it: [3] And laſtly, ſeeing it, tooke joy of his ſight.

Of which three, the firſt and laſt, Deſiderium and gaudium, deſire and joy are two affections attending upon Love; and are ever ſure ſignes of it. Deſire, when we want and have not, what we love. And Ioy, when we now poſſeſſe, or (as the terme is) enjoy it. The middle, which is Sight, that, pertaines to faith: Faiths light it was he ſaw it by. Gal. 5. 6.
So, here is fides per Charitatem operans: Abrahams faith right.

But I keepe the order in the Text, I change it not, it cannot be mended. All goes by a right line. [1] Desire first, that, is the way, to see. [2] Seeing next; that, brings Ioy. [3] And Ioy is the end; and a good end it is to end in Ioy.

These three with reference, first, to Abraham; and then after, to our selves.

I
The Object. Diem meum, My day.

TO finde our marke first, that, all this desire is, to see; all this Ioy when it is seene; It is Diem meum, Christ's Day. Christ is GOD and Man; Son to both: His day, as the Son of GOD; or as the son of Man, Which of these?

I
Not, as the Son of God.
Mic. 5. 3.
1 Tim. 1. 16

Not as the Sonne of GOD, As the Sonne of GOD, He hath no day. Day and night are parts of time; And Egressus Ejus, His goings out are from all eternity. 2. If we would improperly call it a day; no day, to be seene: The light of it is inaccessible, not to be approached to; it would strike any man blind, to behold it. 3. If we could see it, and Him, in His Deity; yet, there is small Ioy, to see CHRIST so: Small ioy to see Him, but, by the light of this Day. All the desire was, that He might be; All the joy, that He was to be seene, as the Son of man. As the Son of Man, then: His Day so.

But, as the Son of Man.
Luk. 17. 22.

But as the Son of man he hath more dayes than one: So He saith, (Luk. 17.) They shall desire to see one day of the Sonne of man: one, of many; any one of them. But this (here) notes some one eminent Day, above the rest: It is a day, with a double article, Τὴν ἡμέραν, τὴν ἐκείνην, That day; that same day: That, if any one day mine, more than other, I would, by speciall prerogative call; τὴν ἐμὴν, Mine indeed.

Now, there be but two such eminent dayes, to stand for this: [1] The first, and the [2] last. First, of His Genesis; or last, of His Exodus. Genesis, His comming into the world; or Exodus His going out. That is, the first, of His Nativity: or the last, of His Passion. Which of these?

Not the day of His Passion.
Luk. 22. 53.

Not of His Passion. First: that, was none of His. For, He saith to them that took Him: Hæc est hora vestra, Yours: So, theirs it was; not, His. Secondly, It was not His Day; Nay, it was no day, neither, but Tenebrarum, as he there addeth: So, night rather then day. But thirdly, without all question, no day of Ioy. The Heavens are darkned; the Earth quaking; the stones renting; every one going their wayes beating their brests, for sorrow: That, was no sight, to rejoyce at; That, no day, to rejoyce in.

But of His Birth.
Luk. 2. 11.

Then is it, of necessity, to be His Birth day. That was a Day; the Angell cals it To day, To day is borne: And His day it was: for every man claimes a kind of propriety, in his birth day. Men, in the day of the beginning of their life: As Kings, in the day of the beginning of their Reigns: As Cities, their Palilia, when the trench is first cast: As Churches, their Encænia when they are first dedicate: So Men their γενέθλια, when they first come into the world. It is too plaine, this. His day then: And sure, a day of Ioy, withall. Ioy in Heaven, Ioy in Earth. In Heaven, for a day of Glory to GOD on high. In Earth: for, a day of Peace here below, and for good will towards men; as ever, nay more than ever, was any. The Angell so proclaimed it. Gaudium omni populo, A day, of Ioy to all people: And proclaimed, why? Quia hodiè natus est. And, this omni

Luk. 2. 14.

Luk. 2. 10.

Luk. 2. 11.

populo (as appeares now, by this text) was not only all people, then, in being, or after to be: but, (as Leo well expresseth it) in præteritas se refudit ætates, the Ioy of it went back, up to the ages past; up even to Abraham's time, two thousand yeares and more, before ever it came. I know well, this day may be taken for the whole time of His life: but it must be by a figure then. And, no man but seeth, that a day doth more literally and properly signifie a day, then the time of ones whole life, at large. Yet, that time too had his beginning, on a day: And, that day, even for that very beginning, may well challenge a better right, and nearer property in this word [day] then any longer time whatsoever. As, the very day, whereon He was first seene, first shewed to the world, as the Son of man; As the very day, whereon the first fruits of all the joy then, and ever since: sure I am, the Fathers fix it all upon one day, and upon this day by name. So

[a] Irenæ. 4. 15.
[c] Cyril. 6 11.

[a] Irenæus, [b] Augustine, [c] Cyril set it down; that this day it was. This day then be it: the day of His birth. So have ye the Object.

Now to the three Acts: And first of desire. Exultavit ut: that [Vt] is desire. Glad and and faigne; Vt, that, he might ſee; that is, he deſired, he longed much, to ſee it. Gaudere ut, and vellem ut, expound one another. This day then, is dies deſiderii, or deſiderabilis. To be deſired, even of Abraham; and, if of him, of all. Of the Cauſe firſt, why: and then of the Manner, How, he deſired it.

II. The Acts of Abraham. 1 His Deſire: exultavit ut. The cauſe of it.

The Cauſe why ſhould Abraham ſo deſire to ſee this day, two thouſand yeares and more, after his dayes were at an end, and he in his grave? What was it, to him? how was he concerned, in it? We ſay; Omnia bonum appetunt: what good had he, by it? We ſay againe, Indigentia deſiderii parens: what need had he, of it, that he ſhould ſo deſire it? Yes: Chriſts birth he needed; he had good by; and, conſequently, His Birthday.

Ye remember Iobe's Eaſter; that in all his heavineſſe, this was ſpes in ſinu, his only comfort and joy, That well yet, his Redeemer ſhould riſe againe one day. The joy of Iobs Eaſter, the ſame is the joy of Abraham's Chriſtmas: Even, that a day ſhould come, wherein his Redeemer ſhould come into the world. For, Abrahams caſe was not ſuch, but that, a Redeemer he ſtood in need of. One he ſtood in need of, and one he had: you may read it totidem verbis (Eſay 29.22.) Thus ſaith He that Redeemes Abraham. That party; Him, he needed: and Him he deſired: And deſired His day, for His ſake: diem for Meum; the day for Him that was borne on the day. Iob 19.1.

Will ye heare it from his owne mouth? Thus he ſetteth downe his owne caſe, Gen. 18. (that very time, when he had this day firſt ſhewed him, the firſt glimpſe of it:) Thus complains he there, of his need, (and complaining, implies his deſire:) Et ecce ego pulvis, & cinis: And lo I am but duſt and aſhes. Duſt, is plain: it refers us to Pulvis es & in pulverem: He was that, by nature; by his very creation. But, why aſhes? how come they in? Aſhes, he was not made of; That, is not naturall; That (ſure) refers to ſomewhat els. Aſhes (we know) come of fire, without it they are not made; ever preſuppoſe a fire precedent. So that beſides death to reſolve him into duſt, he ſaw a fire to turn him into aſhes. He ſaw it in his viſion, Gen. 15. when the ſun was down, and it was night; and a great feare or horrour fell upon him; he ſaw Clibanum fumantem, a fiery furnace. Blame him not, if after ſuch a night, he deſired to ſee day, and this day; dies contra noctem; a day to viſite him from on high, after ſo fearefull a night, as this. But, this was but a viſion of the night: But, when all dayes and nights ſhould be at an end he ſaw, there was yet a day to ſucceed that day, which Enoch taught the world, wherein the Lord ſhould come with thouſands of his Saints to execute judgement upon ſinners. Which day (it ſeemes) Abraham tooke notice of. For ſpeaking to God (in the ſame Chap.) He calleth Him by this title Iudge of the world. Of which day a viſible ſigne he had, before his eyes, waking, in the conſuming of the five Cities, immediately after. No marvaile then, though he deſired dies contra diem, a day that ſhould quit him, of the feare of that day. Inaſmuch then as duſt he was, and aſhes he was to be; duſt by creation, aſhes by condemnation; (and both theſe he confeſſeth himſelf lyable unto:) he needed one, as to reſtore the ruines of the firſt, ſo to prevent the danger of the ſecond. Being in need, he deſired; deſiring, he was glad to heare of; but more glad would be, to ſee that day, that ſhould bring him into the world: And, O when ſhall that day be? And ſure, the ſun muſt goe down with us too, and what feare we ſhall then be in, or whether we ſhall ſee the furnace, I know not: but, ſure I am, that joyfull it will be then, to have a comfortable ſight and apprehenſion of the benefit and beginning of this day: when the world ſhall bid us good-night, then (as S. Auguſtine expreſſeth it) videre in nocte ſæculi, diem CHRISTI. Gen. 18.20. Gen. 15.17. Luk. 1.78. Iud. 14.15.

This, for the cauſe, why Abraham himſelfe ſhould deſire this Vt; to ſee this day: Why but for this day, Abraham had bin but aſhes of the furnace. Which ſheweth, it is a benefit to ſee this day: And as a benefit, deſired by him; and as a benefit, and no ſmall benefit, vouchſafed him, (the ſight of this day.) Now, for his Manner how, how greatly he deſired it. We may take meaſure, of the greatnes of the day, by the greatnes of his deſire. It was no day of ſmall things; for, Exultavit ut is no ſmall deſire: there is vigour, there is both paſſion and action in it. The nature of the word [Exultavit] is, he did even fetch a ſpring for joy that he ſhould ſee it. And it is not exiliit neither, but exultavit. And that is a frequentative: and ſo, he did it more than once. To give a ſpring; and not once but often; this, was much, if all be well conſidered. For one to doe it, one in yeares, faſt 2 The Manner of it.

upon an hundred, as Abraham then was; for ſuch an one to doe it, it was very much.

1. Much. Firſt, that he ſhould not containe his affection; nor keepe it in, but, out it muſt, even break forth into an externall act, into a bodily geſture, that all that ſtood by, muſt ſee him do it.

2. Into a bodily geſture (I ſay;) But then againe, that, into ſuch a bodily geſture; a geſture on this faſhion. It muſt needs be, he was greatly, yea ſtrangely affected with it, that it made him forget his gravity, and put a kind of Indecorum upon his age, at thoſe yeares to fall on ſpringing. All men will eaſily know, that (ſuch as he was) ſtayed, diſcreet, grave men will never be ſo exceeding moved, as to be brought to fetch a ſpring, but upon ſome very exceeding great occaſion.

3. Thirdly, to doe all this, but only in deſire, and nothing but deſire, is yet more ſtrange, then the reſt. In the fruition, to joy is kindly; but, in the deſire, altogether unuſuall; Exultavit, cum videret may well be underſtood: Exultavit, ut videret, not ſo well. For, deſire, of it ſelfe is a reſtleſſe thing, unquiet, and complaining: but a very affliction of the ſoule, it makes men, yea the very creature it ſelfe (ſaith the Apoſtle) ingemiſcere (which is far from exultare) to grone for griefe, not to ſpring for Ioy; Sad rather than glad, in that they want their deſire. Judge then, how great a good is the good of this Day; that, not in the enjoying, but, even in the deſiring; and that againſt the nature of deſire, did put old father Abraham into this Paſsion; and brought from him this act, the act of exultation, and made him even young againe.

Rom. 4. 22.

But I will tell you yet of another as ſtrang. For, the ſame word, you ſhall obſerve is uſed, of the Baptiſt, while he was yet but an Embryo, and in his mothers belly. That; at the enter-view, and voice of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, he (then, a babe) gave a ſpring in the womb of Elizabeth his Mother. So that we ſee, both old and young, Abraham and Iohn Baptiſt, from the eldeſt in yeares, to the child unborne; it concernes all; All need it: All are bound to be glad of it: All is for the joy and honour of this Day.

Luk. 1. 44.

And this for the firſt act, and firſt joy, joy of deſire, for there be two. There is another in the laſt word ἰχάρην. As there be two ſights; [1] Vt videret, and [2] Et vidit: ſo, two joyes anſwerable; either hath his joy. And, this firſt is but Iohn Baptiſts fore-runner, to the ſecond. For, all this is but the Apoſtles Spe gaudentes, yet; but the joy of hope only, anticipating the other, before it come; and joying (as it were) that it ſhall joy, when that joyfull time ſhall be.

Rom. 12. 12.

And, with this, we muſt begin; even with deſire, and ſeek to poſſeſſe our ſoules of it. This carrieth the next, the eye: for, where the deſire is, there will the eye be alſo, and, where it is not, no proſpect thitherward; no window open, that way. Therefore, ſet that (as the needle point) right, and all the reſt will follow. For, the truth is; therefore we joy not, becauſe we ſee not; and therefore we ſee not, becauſe we deſire not. True it is, and pitie it is, Millions there be, never have true ſight of Him: Why? they have no deſire to Him. We muſt then begin there, with deſire, with ut videret, or we ſhall never come to & vidit. And, for our comfort, the very deſire of this day, or of any other good thing els, (if it be true, and uncounterfeit,) a firſt degree it is, and it is not lightly to be accompted of. It is not nothing, to ſay, (if one can ſay, and ſay it true) exultarem ut viderem. For, of this deſire, Exultarem ut is (among other) one Character. Three there be beſides; (and lightly they goe together,) and they be Succedanea (as we call them) to any good thing, which we have not, but wiſh that we had, or that we might have. As, if we cannot repent, cannot abſtaine, cannot believe, or live as we ought, theſe come in place, and expreſſe yet, how we ſtand inwardly affected toward them: Even theſe foure: [1] Exultarem or gauderem ſi: [2] vellem ut: [3] metuo ne: [4] doleo quòd non. Gauderem ſi, Glad I would be, if it were: Vellem ut, and I heartily wiſh, that it were: Metuo ne, but ſure I doubt, it be not: and Doleo quòd non, ſorry I am, that it is not. Characters they be all: and, if they be hearty and true, a ſigne it is, the flax ſmoketh yet: Et linum fumigans (ſo gracious He is) the flax, if it do but ſmoke, He will not quench it. But, of all the reſt, ſpecially if it be this. For there is vigour and vehemency, in exultarem ut. It is a fervent deſire, a kind of hunger and thirſt, a deſiderio deſideravi, this. Exultarem ut, I would doe any thing; I would give any thing, to have a ſight of it. And, ſuch a deſire ſhall never be fruſtrate: It ſhall ſee certainely.

Of Exultare ut videas, the reward ſhall be videre ut exultes: of deſiring that, we ſee not, to ſee that, we deſire. We have Abraham, the Father, in the Text; take Zachee, the ſon; for an example of it, too. He, out of a deſire to ſee CHRIST, at his comming to Iericho, and could not for the preſſe, exultavit, gave a ſpring, got him up into a tree, ſo to have a ſight of Him. It was ſo well taken, this very deſire, as, he not only ſaw Him, but received Him to houſe. And our Saviour pronounceth, this Text was fulfilled in him; He was even thereby become the Son of Abraham. For, howſoever in things temporall, it may be, and is oft defeated; In things pertaining to CHRIST, and His ſight, Exultavit ut videret ſhall ever end (as here it doth) in Et vidit. And ſo we paſſe to the next point of Et vidit.

Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.
Luke 19.9.

II.
Abraham ſecond Act.
Et vidit.
And he ſaw it.
* Heb. 11.13.
† 1 Cor. 13.12

It is here (firſt) directly avouched, the Patriarchs (and Abraham, by name) they did not onely deſire to ſee this day; but, ſee it they did. See it, though they did but ſee it and ſalute it * πόῤῥω afarre off; or † ὡς ἐν κατόπτρῳ, as in a perſpective glaſſe; yet ſee it they did. It is but Vidit; Vidit, in genere. Any ſight, any deſcrying will ſerve to verifie the Text. I ſay not, they did preciſely know the very day of the moneth; I would not, ſo, be underſtood. But, this they did: They knew and ſaw in genere, ſuch a day there ſhould come, and then, come when it would; or what day of the yeare, it would; all Ioy they wiſhed to that day, for the joy, it was to bring them. This was enough, for them in their eſtate: And, more particular notice had they had, of the Moneth and day, this I am ſure, they would never have ſcraped it out of their Kalender.

How, he ſaw it.

He ſaw it. But then, if you ask, how he ſaw it? Sure, not (as they were miſtaken, in the Text) as if Abraham could not ſee His day; unleſſe CHRIST had beene in the fleſh, in the dayes of Abraham. That is one kinde of ſeeing indeed. For, ſo Simeon ſaw: (For mine eyes have ſeene.) But, this text muſt be true: vidit Abraham. Then, another there is beſide. This is ſure, what Simeon ſaw, the ſame ſaw Abraham: What Simeon ſaw, (I ſay;) but, not, as Simeon ſaw. The ſame Chriſt, both; and the ſame Day: though, not both, in the ſame manner.

Luke 2.30.

But let me tell you, this of Abrahams was the better. And, if Simeon had not ſeen Him, in the ſame manner, Abraham did, for all his viderunt oculi, he had beene never the nearer. No more than were the Iewes here, that hurled ſtones at Him, and ſo ſaw Him; but, to no benefit, no matter of Exultation at all; of condemnation, rather.

Then, if not with his eyes, how? Yes; with his eyes too, though not of the body. Which to conceive, we are to take notice, that there is in every man of us two men: (Plato had ſeene ſo much, and ſet it downe: and (it is thought) the Apoſtle tooke it from him:) [1] An outward, and [2] an inward man: (Rom. 7. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 6.) Now, if there be an inward man, we muſt allow him ſenſes, as a man; he muſt have eyes. So he hath: (Epheſ. 1. 18.) Having the eyes of your underſtanding lightned. Here are eyes: by them did Abraham; and, even by them (and by no other) doe wee ſee Him.

Thoſe eyes many have beſide, but ſee Him not, for want of light. By what light ſaw He? He was a Prophet; and, as a Prophet, he might be in the Spirit, and have the viſion clearely repreſented before him, in luce prophetiæ. But, without all queſtion, a faithfull man he was, and ſo, certaine it is, he ſaw it in lumine fidei, the light of faith, which faith is the cleareneſſe or evidence of things not ſeene, (Yee know the place.) Not ſeene: Nay even of things inviſible. In the 27. Verſe of the ſame Chapter, it is ſaid, Moſes was as if he had ſeene the inviſible. By faith, that was: and, in Abraham the Father of the faithfull, the ſame faith was. Both ſaw, by the ſame light, and by it CHRIST was as verily preſent unto them, as if they had ſeene Him, this day, in the manger with the Shepheards; or, with Simeon, had had Him in their armes, and beheld Him. Thus, He; and thus we. For it is all the light, he had, or we have, to ſee Him by.

Gal. 3.9.
Heb. 11.1.
Rom. 4.11.

But, where was this, and when? The text is enough, ſo it was, if we reſt not in that, but would know what the Fathers have conceived of the place and time; This they hold: That he ſaw His Birth, at the valley of Mamre, (*Gen.*18.) And he ſaw His Paſſion in the Mount of Moria, (*Gen.*22.) But, this Day he ſaw at Mamre. (*Gen.*18.) Then was CHRIST, in perſon, there, one, of the three: Then made Abraham the confeſſion, we before ſpoke of. Then is twice mention of the time of life: which is this time, if ever any. Then Iſaac was delivered as a gage; and then was his feaſt of joy, downe went his fat heifer: So, all met at the time juſt.

Gen. 17 19. 18.10.

And, ſo certainly He then ſaw it there, as after (we ſee) he ſware his ſervant on his thigh: His thigh became Ad ſancta Dei Euangelia: He bade his ſervant lay his hand on his thigh, and ſweare by the GOD of Heaven. Et quid vult Deus Cœli, ad femur Abrahæ? What hath the GOD of Heaven to do with Abrahams thigh? (ſaith S. Auguſtine:) And his anſwer is, Niſi quia, But only, becauſe he ſaw (certainly) the Sonne of GOD was, from thence, to take fleſh: Semen Abrahæ, de femore Abrahæ: and ſo, to make us this bleſſed day. And this, of Chriſt's viſus: And now of Abraham's gaviſus, the end of his ſight and deſire both.

3 Abrahams third Act, Et gaviſus eſt.

He that was glad, he ſhould ſee it, muſt needs be glad, when he did ſee it. If Exultavit, ut videret; then Vt vidit, Vt exultavit? when he ſaw, how glad a man was He, now his deſire was accompliſhed? And the deſire accompliſhed (ſaith Salomon) is a Tree of life; and the tree of life (we know) is in the midſt, is the very center of all the joyes of Paradiſe. Now, we cannot poſſibly take a view of theſe his joyes better, than out of the promiſe; which was the very liſt (or briefe) of all, he was either to ſee, or to joy in.

Prov. 13. 12. Gen. 2. 9.

We begin with the bleſſed joy of Benedicentur omnes gentes in ſemine tuo: Benedicentur, ſhall be bleſſed. And that is of two ſorts: [1] Bleſſed from: And [2] Bleſſed with: and either hath his joyes.

[1, 2.] Bleſſed from: from pulvis & cinis; duſt of the grave, and aſhes of the furnace. His ſoule bleſſed from the Clibanus fumans, which he ſaw. Moreover alſo his fleſh ſhould reſt in hope; hope of riſing againe, from the duſt. Els, how could GOD be called the GOD of Abraham? GOD is not the GOD of the dead, but of the living. Abraham then being dead, ſhould live againe, and then Nunc dimittis may he ſay, no leſſe than Simeon. Theſe two joyes firſt. And theſe two fit well the words of Ioy in the Verſe: [1] Exultavit, that is a motion of the body; for the bodies deliverance from duſt: [2] Gaviſus, that, is a fruit of the Spirit; for the Spirits redemption from the furnace. Theſe are his two firſt joyes.

Pſal. 16. 9. Mat. 22. 32. Luke 2.

3, 4. Then two more, in bleſſed with, or concerning. Concerning firſt his two gages, Iſaac and Canaan: Iſaac, of Chriſt; Canaan, of the Kingdome of Heaven. And, this Ioy was ſurely great; and, if the joy of the Pledge, (or Gage,) were great, far greater was the joy of the Inheritance it ſelfe which he ſo greatly deſired. For, both he was, (ſaith the Apoſtle) and he bare himſelfe like a ſtranger here upon earth: ſhewing thereby that he ſought for another, a better, an abiding City, whoſe builder is God, and that in Heaven. For, that it was no earthly thing, which was the object of his Ioy, nothing but Heaven; thence it may appeare, that when God promiſed him, his ſeed ſhould be as the duſt of the Earth, (*Gen.*13.) It never moved him; it was no object, that, of his faith, or deſire: not ſo much as a Credidit followes upon it. But after, (in the 15. Chap.) when God bade him looke up, and told him, they ſhould be as the ſtarres of heaven: then preſently followes, Credidit Abraham Deo, He caught hold of that; believed that, ſtraight; and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: even that his faith, touching (no duſt of the earth, but touching) heaven, and heavenly bleſſings. And theſe are the two next Ioyes, of bleſſed with: And theſe two anſwer the two ſights, Vt videret, the Pledge: and Et vidit, the Inheritance.

Heb. 11. 13. Gen. 13. 16. Gen. 15. 5. Verſe 6.

5 Now theſe foure, had they been granted to himſelfe, and to his owne houſe, well might it haue been gaviſus, with him: how much more then, that it ſhould, by him, have his extent, and ſtretch to Omnes familiæ, Omnes gentes, all kindreds, all nations of the Earth: be gaudium omni populo; be a day of Ioy to both Hemiſpheres; the joy of generality; that all the world ſhould be the better for him? And this, his fifth, the joy of Omnes gentes.

Gen. 26. 4.

And

And glad might he have beene, to have received all theſe, by whomſoever: yea, though a meere ſtranger. That all theſe then ſhould come to him, not, by any ſtrange party, but by one to come out of his owne bowels; that his ſeed ſhould be his Saviour, and, out of his root, ſhould riſe his Redeemer; All his Ioy ſhould grow from the fruit of his owne body: That He, that Nuſquam Angelos, in no wiſe, them; would take on Him, the ſeed of Abraham: This may (I doubt not) be reckoned, for the ſixth, even the joy of in ſemine tuo. 6 Heb. 2. 16.

Now, to in Semine Abrahæ, add in ſinu Abrahæ, and ſo have we ſeven complete: That His boſome ſhould be the receptacle of all, that ſhould enter into bliſſe: Whoſoever there entertained, in ſinu Abrahæ it is to be. This, is the laſt; that Semen Abrahæ ſhall bring us to ſinus Abrahæ, and make us partakers of his heavenly joyes there. But, we muſt begin with in Semine, to day; that after, in his good time, in ſinu may follow. And this for Gaviſus eſt, and for Abraham. 7 Luke 16. 23.

Now to our ſelves. And the firſt point is, whether we will be out with the Iewes, or in with Abraham, in the fellowſhip of this dayes joy. In, with Abraham, we ſure. If all be well weighed, we have greater cauſe to deſire the day, than he; we have more need of it (I am ſure:) Duſt, as he; but more in danger to be made aſhes than he, by Manaſſe's argument, in his prayer. The benefit of his Day, and the like, they doe nothing ſo much concerne the Juſt, (ſuch as Abraham,) as they doe ſinfull Manaſſes, and ſuch as he. And ſuch are we: and ever, the more ſinner, the more it imports him, to love the dawning of this day. Greater cauſe we have than he. The Reference to us. 1. Our deſire.

And for our ſight we have that clearer than he by much. For, though we ſee, as he; and he, as we; both by the light of Faith: yet, he in the faith of Prophecie, yet to come; we in the faith of Hiſtory, now paſt: and there is great odds between theſe two. We have the record of humane Writers, many; but, of Divine, all; that this day is come and gone: Even of ſuch, as ſaw Him with the eyes, both of the inward and outward man. 2. Our ſight.

The greater cauſe, and the better ſight: Then is our joy alſo to abound, and be above his. So it ſhould, (ſure.) And we would ſeeme as if it ſo were; we multiply the dayes, and where he had but one, we hold twelve together, as if we would exceed him, twelve to one, in this Ioy. Being then ſo bound, Ioy agreeth well with us at this time. The Text invites us to it, the whole ſtreigne from the firſt word to the laſt. It begins with Exultavit, and ends in Gaviſus eſt. 3. Our Joy.

Only, that from whence we take our joy, from thence we take the rules of it: Which be three. [1] One of the two parts, Exultavit, and Gaviſus eſt: [2] One of the end; Diem meum: And [3] the laſt of our patterne, ſicut Abraham pater noſter, to expreſſe it as he did.

Here be two ſorts: [1] One, Exultation a motion of the body: [2] The other, Ioy a fruit of the Spirit: I am for both. I ſpeake not againſt Exultavit; let the body have his part. Reaſon would, the body and the fleſh ſhould be allowed their parts, ſince all the joy is for Corpus aptâſti mihi, and that Verbum caro factum eſt, the Word is become fleſh: that CHRIST hath gotten him a body. But, let not Exultavit be all whole and ſole. Then we joy but by halves: we looſe half our joy; and the better halfe: for, the joy of the ſpirit is the better part, when all is done. The fleſh fades daily; ſo do the joyes of it: the ſpirits is the better part, that ſhall not be taken from us. That of the ſpirit ſhould exceed the joy of the outward man, as far, as Et vidit (to which it is joyned,) doth exceed ut videret. It ſhould ſo: Well, in the meane while, I would they might but part equally: At leaſt not to ſtay ſo long, not to make ſo large allowance of time, and coſt, for the fleſh, as we leave little or nothing, for the ſpirit's part. Sure ſomewhat would be done; ſome ſpeciall uſe of this Feaſt, that may tarry by us, when theſe, of the fleſh, we ſhall either have forgotten, or remember but with ſmall joy. Time will come, that one leſſon in this kind, learned this day, and laid up well, will doe us more 1

1. The firſt rule of it. That Exultavit exceed not Gaviſus eſt.

Luke 10. 42.

pleaſure,

pleaſure, than all the ſports we ſhall ſee, the whole twelve dayes after: That we come not behinde Abraham halfe in halfe.

2 The ſecond: that it be for Diem meum.

Our next Caveat would be, that we look this our joy be for Diem meum, and that our Ioy in Diem, be for Meum. For, Meum is here the Subſtantive, it is Chriſt: and Diem, but an accident, or adjective to it. That is, that we joy in it; as it is His, (Chriſts.) As, His; do we not ſo? As whoſe elſe? To ſpeake plainely the common ſort generally all (ſome few except) wiſh for it, and joy in it; not, as it is CHRISTS; but, as it is ſomewhat elſe: That is, as it is a time of cheare, and feaſting, as it is a time of ſports and revelling. Exultavit ut Videret, what? Why, that we ſhall now fare well: look you, that is it: As it is dies epuli, not CHRISTI. What farther? that we ſhall now ſee paſtimes: that is, as it is dies ludi, not CHRISTI. Put both together; downe they ſate to feaſt, up they roſe to play: ſo have you the Golden Calves Holy-day right. As it is dies vituli, not CHRISTI. This is not diem, for meum: In very deed, this is to deſire Him, for the Day; not the Day, for Him. CHRISTS day is not deſired for CHRIST, CHRIST is the leaſt part of His owne Feaſt. If it be but matter of the belly, the Iewes here could have been entreated to have kept this day, ſo as dies Epuli. For, before (at the 6. Chap.) When their bellies were filled, then, (and never but then,) This is the Prophet, This is he that ſhould come into the world. This was all, they then made; all that many now do make, of CHRISTS comming into the world: That they may fill their bellies. Never care for Benedicentur, no more than Eſau: but for bene veſcentur; and if bene veſtientur too, then all is well.

Exod. 32. 6.

Or, if it be but ſhewes and matter of ſight, Herod he was glad to ſee Chriſt, too: and it is the ſame word, which is here, glad, and very glad, λίαν ἐχάρη: But, why was it? Becauſe he hoped to have ſeene him done ſome ſtrange feats. This pertaineth rather to Sara's laughter, than Abrahams joy. There is a difference between Sara's laughter, and Abrahams joy. Take heed, that we change not Abrahams joy, into Sara's laughter.

Luke 23. 8.

The III Rule. Sicut Abraham.

Now laſt, ſicut Abraham. He is propounded here to us, as our patterne, we to expreſſe our joy, as he did his, upon the day of his ſight, at the plaine of Mamre. So we ſhall begin right. Two things, he did: Firſt, he got them (the three) to turne into him. The ſame would Chriſt do, to us, this day. That our joy may be ſutable, to turne in hither: The beginning of the joy of His day would be, in his Houſe, So the place and the time would agree well. So He ſaith Himſelfe, Lætificabo eos in domo mea, the firſt thing I will do, I will make them joyfull in mine Houſe. There firſt to ſatisfie us with the pleaſures of His houſe, wherewith (God He knowes) we are ſoone ſatisfied. Well, this is done; here we are, (and much adoe too, and long it is firſt) but, here we are.

2 Gen. 18. 5.

The next was, when they were turned in, Abraham ſaid, Let me ſet ſomewhat before you, Ideo enim declinâſtis. For, even for this, are ye turned in hither: and ſo made his Feaſt. There is indeed no ſolemne entertainment, or Ioy, without a Feaſt. CHRIST will be, in all reſpects, as courteous as Abraham. He ſaith, Let me ſet ſomething before you too, for therefore are you turned in hither, He invites us, to His Feaſt, (His Church (ſo) doth in His name:) Even this day, prepares and ſets Chriſts Feaſt before us, wherein He offers Himſelfe to us. Not, as the object of one ſenſe only, (of ſight,) as to Abraham in the Text: but, as the object of two, Sight and Taſte; Guſtate & videte, both. And we may not take the one, and leave the other; but, ſince both be offered, receive both. For, we are come hither for this cauſe: Here then, ſhew your Ioy, in His Feaſt day, by partaking His Feaſt, on His Day, the onely Feaſt, of all the reſt, for which the ſoule is the better. Thus ſhall we with joy keepe this day aright.

Pſal. 34. 8.

And here now one day cals another: this day of His cals to minde another day of His, called ſo in twenty places (His Day:) And called [That day,] in plaine reference to this. So to joy this day, as, that day, we may joy alſo. As this, His Day, becauſe it is the day of His firſt comming: ſo that, His likewiſe, becauſe it is the day of His comming againe. A day (howſoever we do with this) which we muſt all ſee: Abraham, the Iewes, we and all. Only, that we ſee that Day with joy: that we ſo demeane our ſelves, in this, as that alſo may prove a Feſtivall with us, even the laſt, and greateſt day of the Feaſt now begun in this. All will be, how to make that a Day of Ioy, to us, when we ſee it: To have that day riſe cleare and chearefull to us, will be the Ioy of all joyes. For, here, firſt as wee ſee but in part, ſo we can joy but in part: as our ſight, ſo our joy unperfect. But, there, we ſhall ſee as we are ſeene; our ſight being perfect, ſo ſhall our joy be: Perfect Sight, and perfect Ioy. And beſides, that, is another manner of day, than this, or any day here: a day, that ſhall never go downe: No more ſhall the Ioy of it. And it ſhall not endure for twelve daies, or be a feaſt of a fortnight; but ſhall be from moneth to moneth, from Iubilee to Iubilee, for ever and ever. To the joy of which Feaſt; or to the Feaſt of which Ioy, by, &c. 1 Cor. 13. 12.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Sunday, the XXV. of December,
A. D. MDCXIV. being CHRISTMAS Day.

ESAY Chap. VIII. Ver. XIV.

Ecce, Virgo concipiet, & pariet filium, & vocabitur nomen Ejus IMMANUEL.

Behold, a Virgin ſhall conceive, and beare a Sonne; and She ſhall call His Name, IMMANUEL.

Matth. 1. 23.

OF all the Writers of the Old Teſtament, the Prophet ESAY hath the honour, to be the firſt, that is vouched in the New. And, of all the places, this place, the honour to be the firſt of all; even, in the firſt Euangeliſt, S. Matthew; and, in the very firſt Chapter of him. We may well think, S. Matthew would be carefull, to make choice of a very prime and pregnant place, to ſet it (as it were) in the front of his Goſpell. This, is much honour, S. Matthew doth it.

Luk. 1. 31.

But, the Angell GABRIEL doth it more, (Luk. 1.) who takes this verſe, as it ſtands, word for word, and makes it ſerve for his Annuntiation, or Meſſage, to the Bleſſed Virgin without any alteration: not ſo much, as the Ecce left out.

The tenour of it is, all about a Child to be borne; a child with an Ecce: in whom, and in whoſe birth, God ſhould be with us: So, with us, as never before. On whoſe ſo being with us, depends all our well or evill being, here, and for ever. For, better not be at all, then be without Him: and, having Him, we need nothing elſe: for, in ipſo omnia, in Him is all.

Acts 8. 34.

The Eunuch's queſtion fals fitly in, here: Of whom ſpeaks the Prophet this? Who is His Mother? Who, the Child? S. Matthew will be as good to us, as S. Philip was to him: who, where he enrols it, tels us, who, the Mother, the bleſſed Virgin: who, the Child, our bleſſed Saviour. Who elſe? No Virgin ever bare child, but She: no Child, ever, nobiſcum Deus, (and, ſo Deus) but He. There is none other to lay claime to it, but they.

The Diviſion

Ecce hath in it, two Powers. 1 One for the eare; to awake it to ſome matter more than ordinary. 2 Another, for the eye; to direct it, by poynting to ſome certainty: As here; to two certaine perſons: the Mother, and the Child. And ſhewes us, two ſtrange

I. ſights, in them, Mater, Virgo; and Deus homo: A virgin, to become a Mother; God, to

II. become man. A Virgin, to beare; God, to be borne. In both, and in either of them, three points points are offered to us. 1 Ecce concipiet: 2 Ecce pariet: 3 Ecce vocabit nomen. Our Saviour CHRIST's firſt triplicity: 1 The Myſtery of His holy Incarnation, in concipiet: 2 His holy Nativity, in pariet: 3 His Circumciſion, in vocabit nomen. And, every one, of theſe three, makes a ſeverall Feaſt. Ecce concipiet, the Annunciation: Et pariet, this Feaſt, of the Birth of our LORD: Et vocabit nomen, New-yeares Day, when His Name was given. 1.2.3.

But, we apply it, to this Feaſt. So doth S. Matthew, in his Inſpeximus of it: to the Birth of CHRIST. The birth of CHRIST (ſaith he) was on this faſhion: And then, brings in this Record out of Eſay. As if, this Ecce did in particular point at this day. As (in truth) we ſtand not much upon His conceiving, (now He is borne ſpecially, as, borne He is:) Ecce pariet is the Point. For, then we ſee Him, take Him in our armes; then, He is with us, indeed. And, when was that? Ecce pariet (ſaith the Text.) Ecce peperit, (ſaith the day,) this very day. This is the chiefe. Matth. 1. 18.

But, finding them here all, we will deale with them all. 1 CHRIST, as Embrio, in His conception: 2 CHRIST as ἀρτιγέννητον βρέφος, a new-borne babe, but yet ἀνώνυμος without a name: 3 And CHRIST with His full Chriſtendome, as named; and named with this name here in the Text, the Name of Immanuel.

Of which three, ye may reduce the firſt two [conceived, and borne] to His Nature: And (to make two, to two) of the later, make two more; Vocabit, and Nomen, His Name, and His Vocation, (For, in His Name, is His Vocation,) To bring GOD to us; to make GOD with us: Him to be with us: that we may be with Him for ever. Nobiſcum Deus, the way: Nos cum Deo, the end: which is (and ſo may be) the end of the Text, and of the day, and of us all. Nothing more worth our ſight, than this Birth: nor more worth our hearing, than this Name.

I.

Ecce Virgo concipiet.
1 Ecce Virgo.
2 Cor. 3. 15.

ECce ſpreads it ſelfe over the whole Text, may be repeated, at every point of it: But, it firſt points to Ecce Virgo. There, we may make a ſtay: there, is a block in our way, by the Iewes. In no one place, doth that of the Apoſtle's ſpeech appeare, that, at the reading of the Prophecies of CHRIST, the veile is laid over their hearts: no where, how true the Proverbe is, that Malice will even blinde a man, as, here in this. This Verſe ſo dazles them, as, faine would they turne another way, and not ſee, that they do. They ſee no Virgin here: Eſay's word [Alma] ſay they, is but a young woman; and, not a Virgin, properly. But, they ſay againſt their owne knowledge, in ſo ſaying. For, firſt: Beſide the nature of the word, the very energie gives as much. For, it is, of Alam, and, that is, to cover: and ſo (properly) is one, that is yet covered, and never yet knowne: oppoſed to them, that have beene uncovered, and knowne, after the Hebrew phraſe.

And, beſide the uſe of the word, for a virgin, in other places. Rebecca (then, a virgin) called by this name, Gen. 24. And Miriam (then, but ſix yeare old) called by it, likewiſe, Exod. 2.

Gen. 24. 43. 55. 57.
Exod. 2. 8.

And, beſide their owne taking of the word, they themſelves (the more ancient of them, ſo) in their Targum, this very word Alamoth (Cant. 2.) they gloſſe and paraphraſe it by Betuloth, the proper word for virgins: where it ſtands, this day, to be ſeene.

Beſides all this, ſee, whither their malice carrieth them, by denying this; even, to over-turne Prophecie, and Prophet, and all. For, he cals us, to ſee a ſigne; and that with an Ecce: And, what is that? if it be but a young woman, to conceive, and, no virgin; where is the ſigne? what is become of the Ecce? It is no ſigne, or wonder, unleſſe it be beſide the courſe of Nature: And, is it any whit, beſide the courſe of Nature, for a young woman, to be with childe? Therefore take away Virgo, and away with the Ecce; downe with the ſigne. Thus, rather than to beare witneſſe to the truth, ſtickt they not, to expoſe the Word of GOD (and ſo, GOD Himſelfe) to ſcorn: Make the Prophet, or (as S. Matthew well ſaith) GOD, by the Prophet, to ſpeak idly: give them a ſigne, that is no ſigne; tell them, of a marvell, not to be marvelled at.

Matth. 1. 22. Reject them then, and read confidently, as S. Matthew doth, Behold, a Virgin: With Him, reſt hardly, on the skill and integrity of all the Seventy; that more than an hundred yeares, before it came to paſſe, turned it παρθενος (in Greeke) that is, a Virgin; who could skill of their owne tongue, better than any Kimchi, or Albo, or any Rabbin of them all. This, for Ecce Virgo.

2 And, look what worke we had with the Iew, about Ecce Virgo, the like ſhall we
2 Ecce concipiet. have with the Gentile, about Virgo concipiet. To conceive this conceiving; to joyne theſe two, a Virgin, and yet conceive, or beare; or, conceive and beare, and yet be a Virgin. For, before the birth; yea, before the conceiving come, the Virginitie is gone. True, in Nature: But, this is a ſigne; and ſo, above Nature. And, in Reaſon, ſo: but this, is niſi credideritis, non intelligetis, to be believed, otherwiſe not to be underſtood, (as, a little before was ſaid.) For, what GOD can do, Faith can beleeve; Reaſon cannot comprehend. But, this, it can: that, we do GOD no great favour (as, well ſaith S. Auguſtine) Si Deum fatemur, &c. If we confeſſe, GOD can do ſomewhat, which we confeſſe, our reaſon cannot reach.

Luke 1. 34. The Bleſſed Virgin her ſelfe, while ſhe ſtood upon a reaſon, upon quia non cognoſco virum, Luke 1. 35. asked, How it might be? But, reſted in the Angels reſolution: and ſo let us. Which was of two ſorts: Firſt, That the HOLY GHOST ſhould be Agent in it, and the Power of the moſt High bring it to paſſe. That, which, of it ſelfe, ſeemeth not credible, put the Author to it, put to Ex Spiritu Sancto, and it will ſeeme not incredible.

2 Specially (and, that is the ſecond;) If we ſet another by it, as unlikely as it, and done, though: As, this Ecce of the Virgins, the Angell exemplifies, by another Ecce, of Zacharies, in a manner, as hard; which yet fell out, at the ſame time. For, Elizabeth, being barren, firſt by nature, then by age; and ſo, wanting power, to conceive: ſhee,
Luke 1. 36. was (then) gone ſixe moneths with childe. Now, the want of power to conceive, is no leſſe materiall, to hinder the conception, every way; than, want of the ſoile, no leſſe, than the want of ſeed. He, that could ſupply that; could alſo, this. He, that do it, without one; do it, without the other. They were Couſins, (the Bleſſed Virgin, and ſhe:) And, their Signes were ſo, too. One of them made credible, by the other.

Acts 26. 8. But, I ask S. Pauls queſtion: Why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible, this to the Gentiles; If, (as their Religion taught them) they admitted, of Minerva's birth, or Pyrrha's progeny, they need not make ſtrange, at this. If they ſay, the GOD of Nature is not bound to the rules of Nature: we ſay the ſame. And yet, even in nature, we ſee it made not altogether incredible. The light paſſing thorow a body, the body yet remaining whole: And it is put therefore into the Verſe, to patterne this, Luce penetratur, &c. The light commeth thorow the glaſſe, yet the glaſſe is not periſhed. No more, than the light of Heaven, paſſing thorow, breaketh the glaſſe; no more, did the GOD of Heaven, by His paſſage, violate any whit, the Virginity of His Mother; if we will allow GOD the maker of the light, to do as much, as the light, He hath made.

But, I hold ever beſt, to let every thing reſt upon his owne baſe, or bottome: Naturall, upon Reaſon; Supernaturall, upon Faith. And, this is Supernaturall: In which, tota ratio facti eſt in potentia facientis: the power of the doer, is the reaſon of the thing done. GOD is the Doer; cujus dicere, eſt facere, to whom, it is as eaſie to do it, as to Luke 1. 37. ſay it. As the Angell concluded, ſo do I: With GOD is nothing impoßible: And that Mark 9. 23. of CHRIST, To faith, all things are poßible: And here are both: and, where they meet, they make no leſſe a miracle than Mater and Virgo, or Deus and Homo; Even Fides and Ratio. And this, for Virgo concipiet.

Now,

II. 1 Christ an Embrio. Et concipiet.

Now, to the three particulars: and firſt, concipiet. To make Him man, it is well knowne, there wanted not other wayes: from the mold, as Adam: from a rib of fleſh, as Eve. No need then, of concipiet. Yes: for, He was not to be man only; but, to be the SONNE of man; the name in the text, Filius, and the name that for the moſt part, He giveth Himſelfe, and ſeems moſt to delight in. But, Adam was not ſonne to the mold; nor Eve, daughter to Adam. And, a Sonne, no way but by concipiet. And, howſoever, of the body of man, there may ingender that, which is not of the ſame kinde: yet by way of conception, there commeth of man, nothing but man; nothing, but of the ſame nature and ſubſtance, with that, he was conceived of.

This we are to hold: To conceive, is more than to receive. It is, ſo to receive, as we yeeld ſomwhat of our own alſo. A veſſell is not ſaid, to conceive the liquor that is put into it: why? becauſe it yeeldeth nothing from it ſelfe. The bleſſed Virgin, is; and therefore is, becauſe ſhe did: She did both give, and take. Give, of her owne ſubſtance, whereof His body was framed: and take or receive power, from the Holy Ghoſt, whereby was ſupplied the office and the efficacy, of the maſculine ſeed. This is concipiet.

And this word is the bane of diverſe hereſies. That of the Manichee; that held, He had no true body. That had beene, Virgo decipiet, not concipiet: Not, conceive Him, but deceive us. And that of the Valentinian (revived lately in the Anabaptiſt) that held, He had a true body; but made in heaven, and ſent into her. That had beene, recipiet, but not concipiet: Received Him ſhe had; conceived ſhe had not.

His love, in being.

From which His conceiving, we may conceive His great love to us-ward. Love, not onely condeſcending, to take our Nature upon Him; but to take it by the ſame way, and after the ſame manner, that we do; by being conceived. That, and no other better beſeeming way. The wombe of the Virgin is (ſurely) no ſuch place, but He might well have abhorred it. He did not: pudorem exordii noſtri non recuſavit (ſaith Hilarie,) He refuſed not that, our ſelves are aſhamed of: Sed naturæ noſtræ contumelias tranſcurrit, but, the very contumelies of our Nature (tranſcurrit is too quick a word,) He ran thorow them: Nay, He ſtayed in them; in this firſt, nine moneths. I ſay, the contumelies of our Nature, not to be named, they are ſo meane. So meane (indeed,) as it is verily thought, they made thoſe old Hereticks (I named) and others moe (who yet yeelded Him to be man) to run into ſuch phanſies, as they did; only to decline thoſe foule indignities (as they took them) for the great GOD of Heaven, to undergo.

This therefore, even this, would He have ſet downe, in termes terminant, of concipiet and pariet. Truſting, we would wiſely judge of them, and love him never the leſſe, but the more even for theſe. Μὴ διὰ τοῦτο ἄτιμος, ὅτι διὰ σὲ ταπεινός: Honour Him never the leſſe, becauſe He laid down His Honour for thy ſake. No: but quantò ille minus debita, tantò ego magis debitor: the leſſe due He took on Him, the more due from me to Him. In a word, quantò pro me vilior, tantò mihi charior: The lower, for me; the dearer to me. It brings to minde King Davids vilior adhuc fiam; and how GOD, even for that, regarded him the more. Concipiet & pariet, to conceive, and bring forth, in us, love, honour, and due regard, even for them. It teaches both.

Our benefit thereby.

This (ſure) is matter of love: But, came there any good to us, by it? There did. For, our conception being the root (as it were) the very grounſill of our nature; that He might go to the root, and repaire our nature from the very foundation, thither He went: that what had been there defiled and decayed, by the firſt Adam; might, by the ſecond, be cleanſed and ſet right againe. That, had our conception been ſtained, by Him? Therefore, primum ante omnia to be reſtored againe. He was not idle, all the time He was an Embrio; all the nine moneths, He was in the wombe; but then, and there, He even eat out the core of corruption, that cleft to our Nature and us, and made both us and it, an unpleaſing object, in the ſight of GOD.

And what came of this? We, that were abhorred by GOD, (Filii iræ, was our title) were, by this meanes, made beloved in Him. He cannot (we may be ſure) account evill of that Nature, that is now become the Nature of His owne Sonne: His now, no leſſe than ours. Nay farther, given this priviledge to the children of ſuch as are in Him (though but of one parent believing) that, they are not, as the ſeed of two infidels; but, are, in a degree, holy, eo ipſo; and have a farther right to the Laver of regeneration, to ſanctifie them throughout by the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. This honour is to us, by the diſhonour of Him: This, the good, by CHRIST an Embrio.

Titus 3.5.

2 Chriſt a new-borne Babe: Et pariet.

Et pariet: And this, no more than needs. There may be concipiet, and no pariet follow. Venerunt filii ad partum, &c. (ſaith the Prophet) * The children came to the birth, and no ſtrength to deliver: Pariet makes all ſure.

* Eſay 37.3.

And pariet makes all appeare. We could not tell, it was Filium; knew not, what it was, or what it would be. Till He came into the world, He was as theſaurus abſconditus, though we had it, we had it not. But, when He was borne; when, come into the world; we ſee Him and handle Him: then, He was with us, indeed. With us; not, as conceived of the ſame Nature with us; but, as borne, and now a Perſon among us. That which was potentiall in concipiet, made actuall by pariet.

Pſal. 19.6. Luke 1.78.

So that, this is the Θεοφανία, when He came forth, as a Bride-groome out of his chamber; or, as the Sun from his tabernacle, to run his race. And, it was with a Viſitavit ab alto. Thence, an Angell cried Ecce, and ſounded it on earth: and a Star cried Ecce, and proclaimed it from heaven. Poets, in the Weſt, write of it: and Wiſe-men, in the Eaſt, ſaw it, and came a long journey upon it, to ſee Him. And what did this pariet bring forth? No ſooner borne, but a multitude of heavenly Souldiers ſung, Peace to the earth (belike there had been warre, before; but) Peace, now: Nay, more than peace, εὐδοκία, That, GOD had conceived a good liking, was well pleaſed with men. The ſame terme, to men, that he uſeth, to CHRIST Himſelfe, In whom I am well pleaſed: εὐδοκία, to both. And, what would we more? What lack we now? His Name.

Luke 2.13. Matth. 3.17.

3 Chriſt Chriſtened: Et vocabitur nomen.

And now He is born, might we not leave here, and go no farther? Rem tenemus: what care we for the Name? Yes, we muſt: For, CHRISTUS anonymus will not ſerve. Therefore Eſay, therefore the Angell are carefull, to beare Him to His Baptiſme, to add His name; the Prophet, to intimate it: S. Matthew to interpret it. For, though we have ſaid much of CHRIST an Embrio; and CHRIST, a new-borne nameleſſe babe; yet, nothing to that that followeth; to the Ecce of His Name.

1 His Name given by God. Matth. 1.22.

This name, if it had beene of mans giving, I wot well, little heed had beene to be taken of it. Men ſet great titles upon empty boxes. Nay, many times, the Names, given by wiſe men, fall out quite contrary. Salomon called his ſonne Rehoboam, the Enlarger of People: He enlarged them from ten to two. But, His name (S. Matthew tels us) the Prophet but brought; It was GOD, that ſent it. And, the Names of His impoſing, there is no ſurer place, in Logick, than from them. His Nominals be Reals: as His dicere, facere; ſo His dici, fieri: what is ſaid, in them, comes ſurely to paſſe.

2 That Name, Immanuel. Gen. 49.10. Hebr. 1.9.

Now there were diverſe names given Him, at diverſe times. To expreſſe all His perfections, no one name was enough. There was Iacobs Name, SILO; That was, in reſpect of His Father, by whom, and from whom, He was ſent. There was Pauls name, MESSIAS, CHRIST: That was, regard had to the HOLY GHOST, by, or wherewith He was anointed. But, what were theſe? quid ad nos? We have no part in them: In this we have: and, till this came, all was in nubibus (as they ſay.) But, in this Immanuel, Nobiſcum Deus, (here) come we in firſt. For, in Immanu, is Anu; and, in Nobiſcum, Nos. And this is the firſt Nobis, and the firſt Cum, we finde, in any Name of His: and therefore of all other, we are to make much of it. A Virgin to beare; GOD, to be borne, matter of wonder, but no benefit at all. But when we heare, It is with us, and for us; that Ecce makes us looke up to it.

1 Two doubts about it. 1 How Immanuel, and not IESVS.

Before I come to it, I would cleare a doubt or two of it. [1] One of the Name it ſelfe: [2] The other of the interpretation, or meaning of the Name.

1 It

1 It will be ſaid; this, was not His Name in the end, for all this, but JESUS. True: and S. Matthew knew that well enough; for he ſets it downe ſo. Yet, even in that place he ſets it ſo downe, preſently he vouches this of Eſay, of Immanuel: as if Immanuel, and JESUS both came to one; as (indeed) they do; One inferres the other. Immanuel, GOD with us: Why? to what end? To ſave us from our ſins, and from periſhing by them. If there be any odds, it is in Immanuel, which is, of larger compaſſe. GOD with us, to ſave us; though that be worth all, yet, not that way onely, but, with us, other wayes, beſides; and all, in Immanuel.

1 How Immanuel, and not IESVS.

2 GOD with us; Why, was He not alſo with the Patriarchs, and Prophets, and Eſay himſelfe, as well, as with Vs? He was: but, not, as well. Some Prerogative we muſt allow this Name, if it be but for this Ecce. No Ecce belongs to theſe. Somewhat more to S. Matthew's Goſpell, than to Eſay's Prophecie. This name muſt needs imply a ſecret antitheſis to His former being with us. We ſay nothing, in ſaying, He is now with us, if He be not ſo with us now, as never before. With them, in types and figures of Himſelfe; His ſhadow was with them; but now, He Himſelfe. With them He was, even thus, in this very Immanu: but how? in the future tenſe, concipiet, pariet; as things to come are made preſent to hope. But now, conceptus eſt, partus eſt; Re, not in ſpe; all is paſt and done. So that, now, Ita nobiſcum, ut, de nobis; Nay, ut ipſi nos: So with us, as even of us now; of the ſame ſubſtance, nature, fleſh, and bone, that we: With us, in concipiet; conceived, as we: With us, in pariet; borne, as we. Now true, as never till now: now ſo, as never ſo before.

2 How with us, more than the Patriarchs.

And, now, to looke into the Name. It is compounded, and to be taken in peeces. Firſt, into Immanu, and El: of which, El, (the latter) is the more principall by farre: for, El, is GOD. Now, for any thing yet ſaid in concipiet and pariet, all is but man with us: not, GOD with us, till now. By the name, we take our firſt notice, that this Childe is GOD: And, this is a great addition, and here (loe) is the wonder: For, as for any childe of a woman, to eat butter and honey, (the words, that next follow) where is the Ecce? But, for El, for GOD, to do it; that, is worth an Ecce indeed.

The parts of that Name.
1 El, Deus.

Verſe 15.

El, is GOD: And, not GOD, every way; but (as the force of the word is) GOD, in His full ſtrength and vertue: GOD, cum plenitudine poteſtatis (as we ſay) with all that ever He can do: and that is enough, I am ſure.

For the other, Immanu: though El be the more principall, yet I cannot tell, whether it, or Immanu do more concerne us. For, as in El, is might: ſo, in Immanu, is our right to His might, and to all He hath, or is worth: By that word, we hold; therefore we to lay hold of it. The very ſtanding of it, thus before; thus, in the firſt place, toucheth us ſomewhat. The firſt thing ever, that we to look for, is Nos, Nobis, and Noſter, the Poſſeſſives: For, they do mittere in poſſeſſionem, put us in poſſeſſion. We looke for it firſt; and lo; it ſtands here firſt: Nobiſcum, firſt; and then, Deus, after.

2 Immanu, Nobiſcum: wherein 1 Anu, Nobis.

I ſhall not need to tell you, that, in nobiſcum, there is mecum; in nobiſcum for us all, a mecum, for every one of us. Out of this generality, of with us, in groſſe, may every one deduce his owne particular; with me, and me, and me. For, all put together make but nobiſcum.

The Wiſe-man (Prov. 30.) out of Immanuel (that is, nobiſcum Deus) doth deduce Ittiel, (that is,) Mecum Deus, GOD with me; his owne private intereſt. And S. Paul, when he had ſaid to the Epheſians, of CHRIST, Who loved us, and gave Himſelfe for us: might with good right, ſay to the Galatians, Who loved me, and gave Himſelfe for me.

Gal. 2. 20.

This Immanu is a compound againe: we may take it in ſunder, into Nobis, and cum: And ſo then have we three peeces. 1 El, the mighty GOD: 2 and Anu, we, poore we; (poore indeed, if we have all the world beſide, if we have not Him to be with us:) 3 And, Im, which is cum, and that cum, in the midſt betweene nobis and Deus, GOD and Us; to couple GOD and us: thereby to conveigh the things of the one, to the other. (Ours, to GOD: Alas, they be not worth the ſpeaking of:) Chiefly then, to conveigh to us, the things of GOD. For, that is worth the while: they are (indeed) worth the conveighing.

2 Im, Cum. This Cum we ſhall never conceive to purpoſe, but carendo: the value of With, no way ſo well, as by Without: by ſtripping off Cum, from nobis. And ſo, let nobis, (us) ſtand by our ſelves, without Him, to ſee, what our caſe is, but for this Immanuel, what, if this Virgin's Childe had not this day been borne us: Nobiſcum (after) will be the better eſteemed. For, if this Childe be Immanuel, GOD with us; then without this Childe, this Immanuel, we be without GOD. Without Him, in this World (ſaith the Apoſtle;) and, if without Him, in this, without Him, in the next: And, if without Him there, if it be not Immanu-el, it will be Immanu-hel; and that, and no other place, will fall (I feare me) to our ſhare. Without Him, this we are: What, with Him? Why, if we have Him; and GOD, by Him; we need no more: Immanu-el, and Immanu-all. All that we can deſire is, for us to be with Him, with GOD; and He to be with us: And we, from Him, or He, from us, never to be parted. We were, with Him, once before, and we were well: and when we left Him, and He no longer, with us, then began all our miſery: Whenſoever we go from Him, ſo ſhall we be; in evill caſe: and never be well, till we be back with Him againe.

Eph. 2. 12.

CHRIST, that Cum. Then, if this be our caſe, that we cannot be without Him; no remedy then, but to get a Cum, by whoſe meanes, Nobis and Deus may come together againe. And, CHRIST is that Cum, to bring it to paſſe. The parties are, GOD, and We: And now, this day, He is both. GOD, before, eternally; and, now to day, Man: and ſo, both, and takes hold of both, and brings both together againe. For, two Natures here are in Him: If conceived and borne of a woman, then, a Man: If GOD with us, then, GOD. So Eſay offered His ſigne, from the height above, or from the depth beneath: Here, it is. From above, El; From beneath, Anu; one of us, now: And ſo, His ſigne, from both. And, both theſe Natures in the Unity of one Perſon, called by one Name, even this name Immanuel.

Verſe 11.

It is His Vocation, to be with us:
1 In Nature.
Gal. 3. 20.

Vocabit nomen: I told you, in His Name, is His Vocation or Office, to be cum, to come betweene, (that is) to be a Mediatour; to make Him, that was contra nos, nobiſcum againe. A Mediatour is not of one, but GOD is one. GOD and Man, are two; and they were two (as they ſay:) Were two, and two will be, till He make them one; recapitulate and caſt up both into one ſumme: to knit Anu, (that is, We) and, El (that is, GOD) with His Im, into one: One word, and one thing, univocè, againe.

So, upon the point, in theſe three peeces, there be three Perſons; ſo, a ſecond kinde of Trinity: GOD, We, and CHRIST. El, is GOD: Anu, We: for CHRIST, nothing left but Im, that is Cum, or With. For it is He, that maketh the Unity in this Trinity, maketh GOD with us, and us, with GOD: and both, in and by Him, to our eternall comfort and joy.

2 In Name. Thus is He with us: And yet, all this is but Nature ſtill. But, the nobiſcum of His Name, bodeth yet a farther matter. For (indeed) the With us, of His Name, is more than the With us, of His Nature. If we make a great matter of that (as, great it is, and very great) behold, the Ecce of His Name, is farre beyond it. With us in His Nature, that is, with us, as Man, that is ſhort: We are more, ſinfull men: a wretched condition added to a Nature corrupt: Will He be with us, in that too? Els, this (of Nature,) will ſmally availe us.

In Sinne, as Surety.
* Heb. 4. 15.
Iohn 1. 14.
1 Cor. 5. 21.

What, in Sin? Nay, * in all things, ſinne only except. Yea, that is, in being like us; but not, in being with us. For, in being with us, except ſin, and except all: The ridding us of our ſin, is the only matter, (ſaith Eſay, after.) Therefore, to be with us, in all things, ſin it ſelfe not except. S. Iohn's Caro factum eſt, will not ſerve: S. Paul's fuit peccatum, muſt come too. In, with us, there too. I ſay it over againe: Unity of Nature is not enough; He is to be with us, in Unity of Perſon, likewiſe. So, He was. The Debtor and Surety, make but one perſon, in Law. That, He was: and then, He was cum, with us throughly, as deepe in, as we.

And this is the proper Immanu, of His Name. And this, the Immanu indeed. And, till He was thus with us, no name He had; He was Chriſtus anonymus, CHRIST unchriſtned (as it were.) For, His Name came not, till He became one with us in perſon:

Not,

Not, till His Circumciſion: Not, till for us, and in our names, He became debtor of the whole Law; Principall, Forfeiture, and all. To the hand-writing He then ſigned, with the firſt fruits of His blood. And then, name the childe, and give Him this Name, Immanuel. For, thus He was a right Immanuel; truly, With us: With us, as men: With us, as ſinfull men: With us, in all things, ſin it ſelf not excepted. Col. 2. 14.

May I not adde this: It is ſaid in the Text, She ſhall call: She, that is, His Mother. Why, She? To let us underſtand, that She might give Him the Name, while He undertooke this for us. But, His Father, till all was diſcharged, and the hand-writing cancelled; till then, He ſuſpended, He gave it Him not. His Mother, She did; when He dropped a little blood, at the ſealing of the Bond. But, He was faine not to drop blood, but to ſweat blood, and to ſhed His blood, every drop of it, yer this With us were full anſwered. And then, His Father did it too; dedit illi nomen ſuper omne nomen: Then, and not before. His Mother, now: His Father, not till then. But, then, He had proved Himſelfe fully with us, per omnia, when neither Wombe nor Birth, Cratch nor Croſſe, Croſſe nor Curſe could pluck Him away from us, or make Him not to be with us. Then, vocabit illi nomen, both She and He: Mother, Father, and all. With us, to eat butter and honey, ſeemeth much: And it is ſo, for GOD. What ſay ye, to drinke vineger and gall? That is much more, (I am ſure:) yet, that He did: I cannot (here) ſay with us, but for us. Even, drunk of the cup with the dregs of the wrath of GOD: which paſſed not from Him, that it might paſſe from us, and we not drink it. This name given by His Mother. Phil. 2. 9. Verſ. 15. Pſal. 69. 21. Mat. 27. 48.

This, this is the great With us: For, of this, follow all the reſt. With us, once thus, and then, with us in His oblation on the Altar of the Temple; With us, in His ſacrifice, on the Altar of the Croſſe: With us, in all the vertues and merits of His life: With us, in the ſatisfaction and ſatiſ-paſsion (both) of His death: With us, in His Reſurrection, to raiſe us up from the earth; With us, in His Aſcenſion, to exalt us to heaven: With us, even then, when He ſeemed to be taken from us: That day, by His Spirit; as, this day, by His fleſh. Et ecce vobiſcum, and loe, I am true Immanuel, With you, by the love of my Man-hood; With you, by the power of my God-head, ſtill to the end of the world. Mat. 28. 20.

One more yet. He wonne it, and He weares this name; and, in it, He weares us. And it is both a comfort to us, and a glory, that ſo He weares us. That, Hee is not, cannot be named, without us: that when He is named, Et nos unà tecum Domine, we alſo are named with Him. In Immanu, is anu, and that is we. This is not it; but this; That He hath ſet us in the fore-part of it; Immanu before El, Nobiſcum before Deus. This note is not out of place, in this place, where precedence is made a great matter of: That Immanu is before El: That is, Wee firſt, and GOD laſt. It is Immanuel and therein We with Him.

Good manners would, in a name compound of Him and us, that He ſhould have ſtood before us, and it have beene Elimmanu, (at leaſt,) Deus nobiſcum, and Deus before nobiſcum; Not, Immanuel, Nobiſcum, before Deus: He, before us; He the priority of the place, in all reaſon: Booz, he placed them ſo, Ruth 2. and ſo ſhould we (I dare ſay) if it had beene of our impoſing, Elimmanu: It had beene great arrogancy otherwiſe. But, He giving it Himſelfe, would have it ſtand thus; Vs ſet before Him. There is a meaning in it. And what can it be but this? That, in the very name we might read, that we are dearer to him than Himſelfe; that He ſo preferred us; and that His own name doth præ ſe ferre no leſſe, but give out to all the world, the Ecce of S. Iohns Goſpell, Ecce quomodo dilexit! the Ecce of his Epiſtle, Ecce quantam charitatem habuit! See, how he loved them! Behold, how great love He bare to them! See it, in His very name: We are a part of it; We are the fore-part of it, and He the later; He behinde, and we, before: Before Himſelfe, and that by order from Himſelfe: He would have it Immanuel. O, whether was greater, humility, or charity in Him! Hard, to ſay whether, but both unſpeakable. Not Elimmanu, but we before Him. Ruth 2 4. Ioh 11. 36. 1 Ioh. 3. 1.

Let us examine this Sine nobis a little. How came GOD from us? Nay, ask not that: but, how we came from Him? For we went from Him; not He from us: We made it Sine nobis.

Ionas 2.8. We forſooke Him, firſt. Ionas tells us, how: By following lying vanities, we forſooke our owne mercy.

Nobiſcum from Deus. If we went from him firſt, then ſhould it be (in reaſon) nos cum Deo; Not, Nobiſcum Deus: We, to Him, not He to us. Did we ſo? No indeed: We ſought not Him, He was faine to ſeeke us. Nos cum Deo, that would not be: It muſt be nobiſcum Deus firſt, or Nos cum Deo will never be. This ſecond, then: That, we began the ſeparation; that, long of us: But He begins the reconciliation.

Who hath the hurt, if GOD be without us? We, not He. Who gets by Nobiſcum? What gets GOD by nobiſcum? Nothing, He: What get we? Multum per omnem modum. Why then doth He begin, doth He ſeeke to be with us? No reaſon, but Sic dilexit, And no reaſon of that.

Rom. 3.2.

But, when He ſought and offered to be with us, did we regard it? Nor that neither. You ſee, the Propher here offers Ahaz a ſigne; bids him, ask it: Ahaz would none. And, as he, to the Signe, ſo we, to the Signatum, the thing ſignified: Care as little for Him, or, His being with us, as Ahaz did for his ſigne. We can be content, He in any ſort will ceaſe from us, come not at us ſo long as the world can be with us, or we with it: Care not for His being with us, till world and all forſake us. How He was faine even to force it on him.

Verſ. 12.

Caſt up theſe then: That, He forſakes not, but being forſaken firſt. That, being forſaken, yet He forſakes not, though. That He, which ſhould be ſought to, ſeekes firſt: And ſeekes us, by whom he ſhall get nothing. Yea, when we neglect Him ſo ſeeking, when Ahaz will no ſigne, tels him, He will give him one, whether he aske or ask not: that is, will do us good, not only without our ſeeking, but even in a manner againſt our wills. And tell me, if there be not as much love in nobiſcum, as in all the reſt.

Ver. 14. initio.

1 To ſave us from our enemies.

With us; how, we ſee. Now, with us, why; to what end? To more, than I have now time, to tell you of. Two only I name. 1 One that of the place; To ſave them from their enemies: As them, ſo us. Them from Razin and Romelie's ſon: Us, from the ſon of Romelie, or Romulus, or whomſoever. If He with us, on our ſide, then will He be againſt them, that are againſt us: and, that, let us never feare: Neither our owne weakneſſe, nor the enemies ſtrength. For, though we be weake, and they be ſtrong, yet Immanuel (I am ſure) that is with us, is ſtronger than they.

Our feare moſt-what groweth, both in ſin and in danger, that we look upon our ſelves: As if it were only nobis; as if, never a Cum; or that Cum were not El, the mighty GOD. As if, with that great EL, all the inferiour Els were not attendant, Micha-el, and Gabri-el; and (if he will) twelve Legions of Angels. Or, as if He alone, with one word of his mouth, one Ego ſum, could not blow them all downe, could not make them all, as thoſe in the Text, as the tailes of a couple of fire-brands that have ſpent themſelves, ſmoke a little, and there is all. No: if He be with us, we need not feare, what theſe two, Nay, not what all the firebrands of hell can do againſt us.

Mat. 26.53. Ioh. 18.5.

And (ſure) ſtrange it is, The Saints of GOD, what courage and confidence they have taken, from the very name Immanuel. Go to, (ſaith Eſay in the next Chapter) Take your counſell, it ſhall be brought to nought, Pronounce a Decree, it ſhall not ſtand. Why? For, Immanuel, God is with us: Nothing but this Name. For, as it is a Name, ſo, it is a whole Propoſition, if you will. And after (in the 50. Chapter) he ſeeks for enemies, cals them out, who will contend with me? where is my adverſary? let him come neere: So little doth he feare them. And, theſe were ghoſtly enemies: And this was, in the point of Iuſtification. This, for the Prophet.

Eſay 8.10. Eſay 50.8.

Now, for the Apoſtle. Never did Champion, in more couragious manner, caſt his glove, than doth he to his ghoſtly enemies, to height, to depth, to things preſent, to things to come, to all, that none of them ſhall be able, to ſever him, from this Cum, from His love. And all, in confidence of Si Deus nobiſcum: in whom hee makes full accompt, to conquer; Nay, conquer, will not ſerve: more than conquer, hee, ὑπερνικῶμεν.

Rom. 8.39. Rom. 8.37.

Prov. 30.1. The reaſon is ſet downe, Prov. 30. where, he betakes himſelf to Ittiel firſt, (which is, is, but a ſlip of Immanuel) Deus mecum; And then, to Ittiel, ſtraight joynes Vcal, I ſhall prevaile; not I, but El with me. Ittiel goeth never alone: Vcal attends it ſtill. Get Ittiel, if Ittiel be with us, Vcal will not be away: For, Ittiel and Vcal part not.

Is this all? No: there is another in the very body of the word it ſelfe: With us, to make us that to GOD, that He was (this day) made to man. And this indeed) was the cheife End of His being with us; To give us, a poſſe fieri, a capacity, a power to be made the Sons of God, by being borne againe of water, and of the Spirit: For Originem, quam ſumpſit ex utero Virginis, poſuit in fonte Baptiſmatis, The ſame Originall, that Himſelfe tooke, in the Womb of the Virgin to us-ward; the ſame hath he placed for us in the fountaine of Baptiſme, to GOD-ward. Well therefore called, the wombe of the Church συσοιχον to the Virgins wombe, with a power given it of concipiet & pariet filios, to GOD. So, His being conceived, and borne the Sonne of man, doth conceive, and bring forth, (Filiatio, Filiationem,) our being borne, our being the Sonnes of GOD. His participation of our Humane, our participation of His Divine Nature.

2 To make us the Sons of God.

Ioh. 1. 12.

And, ſhall He be with us, thus many wayes; and ſhall not we be with Him, (as many, I ſay not, but) ſome, as many as we can? We, with Him; as, He with us? Specially, ſince upon this iſſue, the Prophet puts King Aſa, The LORD is with you, if you be with him: With you to ſave you, if you with Him to ſerve Him. It holds reciprocè, in all duties of love (as here was love, if ever,) Immanuel, GOD with us, requires Immelanu, Vs with GOD againe.

Our Duty: To be with Him.

2 Chron. 15. 2.

He with us, now (I hope:) For, where two or three are gathered together in His Name, there is He with them. But, that is in His God-head. And, we are with Him; our Prayers, our Prayſes are with Him: But, that is in our ſpirits, whence they come.

In prayer, &c. Mat. 18. 20.

Theſe are well: but theſe are not all we can: And, none of theſe, the proper with Him of the Day. That hath a ſpeciall Cum of it ſelfe, peculiar to it. Namely, that wee be ſo with Him, as Hee (this day) was with us: that was, in fleſh; not in Spirit only. That fleſh that was conceived and this day borne, Corpus aptaſti mihi, that body that was (this day,) fitted to Him. And, if we be not with Him, thus; If this His fleſh be not with us; If we partake it not; which way ſoever elſe we be with Him, we come ſhort of the Im, of this day. Im, otherwiſe it may be; but not that way, which is proper to this Feaſt. Thy Land O Immanuel, (ſaith the Prophet in the next Chapter:) And may not I ſay, This thy Feaſt O Immanuel? Sure, no being with Him, ſo kindly, ſo pleaſing to Him, ſo fitting this Feaſt, as, to grow into one, with Him: as, upon the ſame day, ſo, the very ſame way, He did with us.

Eſay 8. 8.

This, as it is moſt proper; ſo, it is the moſt ſtreight and neere that can be: the ſureſt being withall, that can be: Nihil tam nobiſcum, tam noſtrum, quàm alimentum noſtrum, Nothing ſo with us, ſo ours, as that we eat and drink down; which goeth, and groweth one with us. For, alimentum & alitum doe coaleſcere in unum, grow into an union; and that union is unſeparable ever after. This then, I commend to you: Even the being with Him in the Sacrament of His Body: That body, that was conceived and borne, (as for other ends, ſo) for this ſpecially, to be with you: And, this day, as for other intents, ſo even for this, for the Holy Euchariſt. This, as the kindlieſt, for the time; as, the ſureſt, for the manner, of being with.

And, this is the furtheſt: And this is all, we can come to heare; neere upon earth. But, this is not all: there is a further to come ſtill. For, wee are not together: wee are parted, He and we. He, in heaven; and we, in earth. But it ſhall not alway ſo be. Beſide this day, Immanuel hath another day: And that day will come; And when it doth come, He will come, and take us to himſelf. That, as he hath been our Immanuel upon earth, So he may be our Immanuel in heaven; He with us, and we with him, there, for ever.

In Heaven.

This

This (of the Sacrament) is a preparative to that; will conceive and bring forth the other. For, immediately, after He had given them the holy Euchariſt, He prayed ſtraight, that they that had ſo beene with Him in the Bleſſed Sacrament, Father, my will is, my prayer, my laſt prayer, that where I am, they may be alſo.

Ioh. 17. 24.

And He is in heaven, in the joy and glory there: and there He would have us. So nobiſcum Deus in terris, brings us to nos cum Deo in cælis, even thither. Thither may it bring us; and thither may we come, and there be; He with us, and we with Him for ever. Immanuel, is the end of the Verſe:

The ſame be our end, that ſo we may be happy and bleſſed without end.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Munday, the XXV. of December,
A. D. MDCXV. being CHRISTMAS Day.

MICA Chap. V. Ver. XII.

Et tu BETHLEHEM EPHRATA, parvulus es in millibus JVDA: ex te mihi egredietur qui sit * Dominator in ISRAEL; & egressus Ejus ab initio a diebus æternitatis.

And thou BETHLEHEM EPHRATA art little to be among the thousands of JVDA; yet, out of thee shall He come forth unto me, that shall be the Ruler in ISRAEL: whose goings forth have beene from the beginning, and from everlasting.

* Ἡγούμενος.

THE Prophet ESAY had the honour to be the first, that is vouched, and whose words are enrolled in the New Testament. The Prophet Mica hath the honour to be the second. That of Esay, Ecce virgo, &c. in the end of the first Chapter. This of Mica, Et tu Bethlehem, &c. in the beginning of the second, of the first of all the Evangelists S, Matthew. Esay 7.14. Mat.1.23.26.

They follow one the other: and they follow well, one on the other. That of Esay, His Birth: This, of Mica, the place of His Birth. Behold a Virgin shall beare (saith Esay:) and Bethlehem shall be the place, where she shall do it (saith Mica:) His name (saith Esay) shall be God with us: VVith us (saith Mica) to be our guid, and conduct us: He, with us, in Bethlehem, in the beginning of the Verse; that we, with Him, in eternity, in the end of it.

We have (first) a most sure word and warrant of the Evangelist, that the testimony of JESUS is the Spirit of this Prophecy: that, this day, this Scripture was fulfilled, when He was borne at Bethlehem. In S. Matthews steps we tread, when we so apply it: and, so treading alwayes, (sure we are) we tread safely. No ἰδία ἐπιλύσεως, private interpretation of our own head; but, Mica, by Matthew, the Prophet, by the Evangelist: ever the best. Apoc.19.20. Mat.2.1. 2 Pet.1,20.

To say truth, there is no applying it to any, but to CHRIST: None, to give it away to, from Him.

1. From David, to the SON of DAVID, (that is, to Him.) We read not of any other borne at Bethlehem. No Record to be shewed, but of them two.

2. But,

2. But, what ever become of that, this is ſure: None had ever His goings out from everlaſting, but He. None, of whom thoſe words can be verified, but of Him onely: as, who only is the Son of the ever-living God.

3. Theſe might ſerve: But, it is yet more cleare, this: For howſoever, about Eſay's Ecce virgo, the Iewes and we are not of one minde: yet, for this (here) of Mica, the coaſt is cleare: the Jewes will not quarrell us, touching it: there is, on all ſides, betweene them and us, good agreement.

Mat 2.4. For, upon the comming of the Wiſe-men, from the Eaſt, there was a Synod of the High Prieſts and Scribes, called at Ieruſalem, (the very firſt, that we read of, in the New Mat. 2.5. Teſtament:) and called, by the King; to reſolve the point, about the place of CHRISTS Birth. And, then and there, it was reſolved, Conciliariter, that, at Bethlehem; And reſolved, from this very place, for that, theſe words were a knowne Prophecy, of the Birth of CHRIST.

Upon which ſo famous an occaſion, this reſolution grew ſo notorious, as it did Ioh. 7.42. manare in vulgus; the very people could tell this: They argue, in the ſeventh of Iohn, againſt our Saviour, by it, that He could not be the CHRIST: for CHRIST was to come out of Bethlehem (that was taken, as granted:) and he came out of Galile (as they, in errour, thought.) But, that was plaine ignoratio elenchi: For, though He were there brought up, He might be borne at Bethlehem: and ſo, He was. But ſo: Prieſt and People (both) knew, Bethlehem was CHRISTS natale ſolum; and that this Prophecy was the evidence for it.

4. Though theſe be enough: yet have we a greater witneſſe, than all theſe, from Mat 2.9. heaven: even the Starre. For, whither this Scripture doth ſend us, thither, the Starre
Pſal. 87.4. doth lead us: to Bethlehem, ſtraight. Never ſtood ſtill, till it came thither; and there, it ſtood directly over the place (as much to ſay, as) * Lo, there He is borne. And, in this will we reſt: ſince Mica and Matthew, Prophet and Apoſtle, Prieſt and People, Chriſtians and Iews, Heaven and Earth are all with us; all teſtifie, this Text pertains to CHRISTS Birth; and ſo, to this day, properly.

It is, of a place: And place and time are held weighty circumſtances. (Specially, in Luk 17.37. Mark. 13.4. matter of fact or ſtory.) Vbi & quando, materiall queſtions. The Apoſtles asked them both: Vbi Domine? Where Lord? (Luke 17.) Quando, & quod erit Signum? When and what ſhall be the Signe? (Marke 13.)

1 Of the time, when, ſome other time may give occaſion, if it ſo pleaſe GOD. Now of Vbi Domine? the place where: There we are to day; whereto, this is a direct anſwer, Bethlehem is the place. That, firſt.

2 But then ſecondly, this circumſtance leads us further, to matter of Subſtance: the place of the Birth, to the Birth it ſelfe; and the Birth to the Party borne: who is, here, ſet forth, as a perſon: He comes forth once and againe, He leades, He feeds; all, acts of a perſon entire.

3 Thirdly, this perſon is here ſaid to have two commings forth: [1] Egreditur ex te, one: [2] Egreſſus Ejus ab æterno, the other. In which two are expreſly ſet downe His two Natures. [1] Ex te, from Bethlehem, on earth; thence, He came according to His Man-hood. [2] A diebus æternitatis, from everlaſting, or from eternity; thence, He came, according to His God-head.

4 And laſt (to make it a full and compleat Chriſtmas, in Text:) Beſides His Place, Perſon, and Natures (in theſe two commings forth:) Here is His Office alſo, to bee
Mat. 2.6. Ἡγούμενος, ὅστις ποιμανεῖ, (So doth S. Matthew turne מושל the Prophets word; I follow no other; for, ſure I am, I cannot follow a better Tranſlator;) Dux, qui paſcet. One to [1] lead us, and to [2] feed us, and ſo, to conduct us from Bethlehem (where, this day, we come firſt acquainted with Him) to the ſtate of eternity, whence Hee came out, to bring us in; there, to live and reigne with Him, for ever.

The Diviſion So: [1] of the Place: [2] Perſon: [3] Natures: and [4] Office of CHRIST. I. The Place
I of His Birth, Bethlehem; with her two Epithetes or twins (as it were) [1] Parvula, little;
II. III. and [2] Ephrata, fruitfull. 2. Then, of His Perſon, that did come forth. 3. After, of
IV. both His Natures: [1] As man, from Bethlehem: [2] As GOD, from everlaſting. 4. Laſt, of His office.[1] To be our guide, to leade us (ſaith Mica:)[2] Dux, qui paſcet; Lead us, and feed us (ſaith Matthew) both. And, ſo leading and feeding us, to conduct and bring us, to the joyes and joyfull dayes of eternity: whither, without Him, we can never come: and, whither till we come, we ſhall never be, as we would be, that is, truly happy indeed. This is His Office. And, as His Office to lead and to feed us: ſo, our Duty, to be led, and to be fed by Him. That followes of it ſelfe

of

Mat. 2. 6.

ET tu Bethlehem. A word, of the Character, or manner of the ſpeech. For, this Verſe hath no dependance at all, on that, went before. The Prophet breakes off the diſcourſe, he was in, and breakes into this of Bethlehem (here,) all of a ſudden. This we call an Apoſtrophe; and, it is one of the figures, that be ſtirrers of attention.

The Manner of the ſpeech: Et tu Bethlehem.

For, this we finde; that, when one goes on ſtill with a tale in a continued tenour of ſpeech, attention growes dull; and, no readier way, to wake it, (as the Maſters of that Art tell us) than, ſuddenly to break off the point, we were in hand with, and turne us to quite another matter; which with the ſtrangeneſſe, will affect the hearer, and make him liſten afreſh, whether he will or no.

The Prophet doth ſo, in this. He was (but the Verſe before,) muſtering garriſons and laying Siege to Ieruſalem: and, in the midſt of his tale, falls from that, and preſently is at Bethlehem: tels us, of a new matter; about a Child to be borne there. This muſt needs move attention. Any Apoſtrophe will doe it, more or leſſe. 1

But, of all, none to that, which is framed in the Second Perſon: as, this is. For, it is not a ſpeech of, or concerning Bethlehem, in the Third Perſon, (as that of Eſay, Behold a Virgin; ſo here, Behold, out of Bethlehem, ſhall come:) Not, Enuntiative. But it is a ſpeech, to Bethlehem, in the Second perſon: Et tu, and thou Bethlehem, out of thee ſhall there come: Annuntiativè; which hath more vigour in it. If Eſay had ſaid [And thou Virgin ſhalt conceive,] it had been more effectuall, than [Behold a Virgin ſhall conceive] More a great deale. 2

But more ſpecially yet; if in the ſecond perſon, we turne our ſpeech ad inanimata, to things that can neither heare, nor underſtand. Not, that we hold them capable of that which is ſpoken: but that if in any degree they were ſo, it is ſuch, as ſurely would move them. Such is the Prophets here: turnes him to the Towne-walls of Bethlehem; makes a ſet ſpeech to them; tells them of all this matter: And thou Bethlehem, to thee be it ſpoken, out of thee, ſhall there come. And this is very forcible, and full of life: For it, intends, that if the very walls and ſtones in them could heare, or could rejoyce, there is good cauſe, they ſhould doe both: in that there ſhould come, out of them, One, for whom, Ieruſalem and all the Cities of Iuda, Nay, all the world ſhould be the better. Weigh it well, and you ſhall finde, there is more in this [Et tu] than is, or can be in any Ecce of them all. And this for Et tu, the Manner of the ſpeech. 3

The Matter of it.

For the Matter: It is an anſwer to the queſtion, (Vbi natus eſt;) of the Wiſe-men, Where is He that is borne? Born He was, (that they knew:) Where borne, (that they knew not:) The Starre told them one; the Prophet, the other. Et claritas claritatem clarificat, and, a cleere Starre is made more cleere, by a Prophecy as cleare, or clearer than it. For, very cleare it is (the prophecy) without all circuitie, noting, naming, (and in a manner) pointing to it: And thou Bethlehem.

I

The Place Bethlehem.

And, becauſe there were two Bethlehems, One in the Tribe of Zabulon, Ioſ. 19. 31. Another, of the Tribe of Iuda: He ſaith, it was Bethlehem Ephrata, which is that in the Tribe of Iuda, as S. Matthew (rather giving the ſenſe, then ſtanding on the words) cites it. There can be no errour: Rachels Sepulcher was there by: Rachel was buried, by Ephrata; Ephrata, the ſame is Bethlehem, Moſes tels us, more than a thouſand

Ioſ. 19. 13.
Gen 35. 19.

Gen. 48. 7. yeares before, Gen. 48. 7. As plaine (this) as plaine may be: No Oracle of Delphos; without any equivocation at all.

2 Bethlehem parva. We have the Place: Now, what manner place is it? Et tu Bethlehem, parvula. Parvula, this little, doth a little trouble us: Why, it is a ſorry poore Village, ſcarce worth an Apoſtrophe; ſpecially, to turne from Ieruſalem, to turne to it. And, as little likelihood, that ſo great a State as the Guid of the whole world ſhould come creeping out of ſuch a corner: Locus, & locatum (ever) are equall. That Birth is (ſure) too big for this place. The Prophet diſſembles it not; ſaw, what fleſh and blood would except ſtraight: As, (ever) they carry a conceit, againſt ſome Places and Perſons. And, can any great matter come from them? What, from Bethlehem? What, out of Galile? Nay, if ſo great a State, He would come from another manner place, than that. Et tu Ieruſalem, from Ieruſalem, Damaſcus, Cæſarea; from ſome ſtately City, much better beſeeming Him. Theſe are Dictata carnis.

Ioh. 7. 52. 1. 46

First, He denyes not, Little it was; and, not ὀλίγος, but ὀλίγιστος, not parva, but parvula; diminutively little. So little (ſaith the Prophet) that it was not be reckoned una de millibus, not one of a thouſand, for the meanneſſe of it. And the Evangeliſt makes it rather worſe, than better: for, the Prophets word parvula, he turnes ἐλαχίστη, that is, minima, even the very leaſt of all.

Mat. 2. 6.

This he confeſſes: but then, joynes this iſſue, that though the Tu be little, the Ex te may be great. Ex te parvâ egredietur non parvus: As little as it is, no little Perſon ſhall come out of it. Though it be not una de millibus, for the meanneſſe, (as ſaith Mica:) Notwithſtanding, He that is to come out of it, may be, and is, electus unus de millibus, One of a thouſand, for his choiſe, for his excellency. Though it, not worthy to be one of the Thouſands of Iuda, it ſhould ſend forth one, that ſhould rule the thouſands of Iuda, and the ten thouſands of Iſrael: And not of Iſrael only, after the fleſh, (but a handfull, in compariſon of them, He ſhould lead,) but, the Iſrael of God, His faithfull choſen people, all the world over. Indeed, He had anſwered the objection, before He made it, in Ephrata: that little it was, but fruitfull, and not a little fruitfull.

Cant. 5. 10.

Which two counterpoints make (in ſhew) a conflict, or contradiction betweene the Prophet, and the Evangeliſt: The Prophet ſaith, Thou art the leaſt: The Evangeliſt (citing him) ſaith the cleane contrary, Thou art not the leaſt. Bethlehem, minima, & non minima; leaſt, and not leaſt; how may both be? Well enough, both: So, both be not ſaid, regard had to one and the ſame thing.

Mat. 2. 6.

Leaſt (ſaith Mica, and ſaith true,) for the compaſſe of the territory, leaſt; for the ſmall number of the Inhabitants, leaſt; for the thinneſſe and meanneſſe of the buildings, (as was ſeene at CHRISTS Birth, not able to give Lodging to any number:) So leaſt. But then againe, not leaſt (ſaith S. Matthew, and ſaith truly too:) Not, in regard of any of the three now mentioned, but of another, able (of it ſelf alone) to weigh them all down: in that it ſhould yeeld Alumnum tam grandem, ſo great a birth, as the great Meſsias of the world: One, whoſe only comming forth of it was able to make it, not the leaſt, nay, the greateſt and moſt famous of all the dwellings of Iacob; of the whole Land; Nay, of the whole world, then. And thus, not the leaſt. Though minima, for the Tu: non minima, for the ex te: Non minima, if it were but for him, and for nothing elſe.

Luk. 2. 7.

What ſhall we make of this? Nothing, but what commeth from it of it ſelfe, without ſtraining. That, with God, it is no new thing; (Nay, very familiar, as even the Heathen have obſerved; ſo familiar, as GOD ſeemes to take delight in it;) to bring maxima, de minimis; great, out of little; CHRIST, out of Bethlehem. Which is plaine, even in Nature. How huge an Oke, from how ſmall an Acorne! (But, that asks great time:) From how little a graine of muſtard-ſeed (the very Bethlehem minima, the leaſt of all ſeeds) how large a plant! Of how faire a ſpread! and that, in little time, a moneth or two at moſt.

Mat. 13. 32.

But, we are not in Nature, now: in this very point (here) of Guides and Rulers, therein (too) it hath beene no unuſuall thing with Him, out of ſmall beginnings, to raiſe mighty States. Their firſt Guid (Moſes,) whence came he? out of a basket of bul-ruſhes, forlorne and floating among the flagges; taken up, even by chance. The great beginner of their Monarchie: and not of theirs alone, but the two beginners of the two mighty Monarchies of the Persians, and Romanes; (Cyrus and Romulus) from the Shepheards scrip, from the Sheepcoat all three. Those great Magnalia, from parva ma palia. And, as the Kingdomes of the earth from a sheepcoate: So, His own (of the Church) from a fisherbote. We may well turne to them, with this Apostrophe: And thou sheepcoate, out of thee have come mighty Monarchs: And thou fisherbote, out of thee, foure of the chiefe and principall Apostles. Mat. 4. 18. 21.

Even so Lord (saith our Saviour) for, so is thy pleasure. And, since it is His pleasure so to deale, it is His further pleasure, (and it is our lesson, out of this Bethlehem minima, Even this) Ne minima minimi, that we set not little by that which is little, unles we will so set by Bethlehem, and by CHRIST and all. He will not have little places vilified; little Zoar will save the body; little Bethlehem, the soule. Nor have (saith Zachary) dies parvos, little times despised; unlesse we will despise this Day, the Feast of Humility: Nor have one of these little ones offended: Why? for, Ephrata may make amends for parvula; ex te, for tu. Mat. 11. 26. Gen. 19. 20. Zach. 4. 10. Mat. 18. 6.

This is on GODS behalfe. On CHRISTS yet further, (to stay a little upon this little.) for though there want not divers other good congruences, why CHRIST should come from Bethlehem, rather than from another place: For that, it was the Towne of David; and He was the Sonne of David; and so a place not unmeet for Him to come from, even in that respect, being sedes avita. Out of thee came David, and (well) therefore, out of thee shall come Davids Sonne; Davids Sonne, and Davids Lord both. Ioh. 7. 42.

2 The Surname of Ephrata puts me in mind of another; Lo, we heard of it at Ephrata, (saith the Psalme) there, the first newes of the Temple: And Lo, we heard of Him at Ephrata, (to day by the Angell,) there, the first word of the Lord of the Temple. The Temple was the type of the Church: and that was heard of, at Ephrata first; and, no wayes incongruent, that, where the Church; there, the Head of the Church, Christ, and CHRISTS Church (both) at one place. Psal. 132. 6. Luk. 2. 11.

3 There is a third in the very name of Bethlehem (that is) the house of bread. For Hee that was borne there, was bread. But, that will bee more proper anon at Qui pascet.

But these though they agree well, yet none of them, so well, as this, that it was minima: the very minimenesse (as I may say) of it. For, in so being, it was a place well suting with His estate now, (at His egredietur ex te,) which was the state of Humility, eminent in His (if ever, in any) Birth. Bethlehem was not so little, but He as little as it. Looke, what Apostrophe Mica made to the Towne, may we make to Him; and that with better reason: And thou Bethlemite, thou wert as little among the Sons of men: as ever was Bethlehem among the villages of Iuda. So, novissimum oppidorum (as Mica cals it) suits well with novissimus virorum, (as Esay cals Him.) Esay. 53. 3.

And it was not the Place alone, but, all were little, then. The time, in solstitio brumali, the deep of Winter, when the dayes are at the shortest and least. And the people, (He came of) little: Amos saith, Who shall raise up Iacob, for he is small? Small, ever: but, never so small, never so low brought, as, at His comming forth. Then, at the lowest, and the very least: as being (then) brought under the bondage of a stranger: and he, one of the children of Edom, that cryed, Down with them, down to the ground. One, that made Rachel mourne in her grave (her grave was there hard by) for the slaughter of the poore innocents, within a while after. So, Place, and Time, and People, and all, little: and, He Himselfe lesse than all. Amos 7. 2. 5. Psal. 137. 7. Mic. 2. 12.

For, even in the place, Mica hath not said all: for, He is lesse yet. If little Bethlehem offend: what could have beene said, if he had gone further (any yet not further, than S. Luke) And thou, the stable, in the Inne at Bethlehem, And thou, the manger in the stable, Ex te egredietur, out of thee shall He come. These are beyond Bethlehem parva; lesse yet: yet thence did He come too, at His entrance into the world. And all these nothing, to His going out: Another manner of diminution, there, than all these. Such was His Humility, on this Feast of Humility. Luk. 2. 7.

And O thou little Bethlehem, And O thou little Bethlemite, how do you both (both Place, and Perſon) confound the haughtineſſe of many, that (yet) would be called Chriſtians, and even neere Chriſt Himſelfe. There is in both of you (if it were, well taken to heart) enough to prick the ſwelling, and let out the apoſtumed matter of pride, from a many of us, whoſe looke, geſture, gate, and ſwelling words of vanity are too big for Bethlehem: whoſe whole carriage and courſe is, as if they were to be ſaved, by one that came out of the great City Ninive or Grand Cayre, rather, than out of the little Hamlet of Bethlehem.

But, all this was done to bring that vertue in credit. I finde no reaſon rendred of it, but this: That, by what manner place, He made choiſe of, to be borne at, He would teach us, what manner of ſpirits, He doth affect, to take up His reſidence, and to reſt in. The High and Excellent, ſaith Eſay, that inhabits eternity, He alſo will reſt with the lowly; with thoſe, that be no higher than Bethlehem, in their owne eyes. [a] To them He looke: [b] gives grace to them, [c] to them He reveales, what He keepes from the great ones of this world. And when He ſhall ſit in all His glory, He ſhall ſay, Quòd minimis hiis & mihi. Say it forward, affirmativè: And ſay it backward negativè, Quòd nec minimis hiis, nec mihi: What to theſe minims, to mee: What not to them, not to mee neither.

[c] Mat. 11.25.
Mat. 25.40.
Mat. 25.45.

To end this point then: For little Bethlehems ſake, to love the vertue that is like it. And for the vertues ſake, to honour it. Honour it, there is a Starre over it, there is a Saviour in it: Honour it, for that which comes out of it; for the fruit it yeelds: More good comes forth out of that poore Towne, (mihi, ſaith the Prophet, to me: nobis, may, we ſay, to us all) than from all the great and glorious Cities in the world. What good, Nazianzen tells us: Bethlehem honora parvam, quæ te inducit in Paradiſum, It gives us our introduction, to Paradiſe (Bethlehem:) it gives us a Guid, to day, if we will follow Him, will bring us thither to our originall happineſſe: Nay, further than ſo, to the dayes of eternity. And, Him we muſt follow, and it we muſt honour, (even this vertue,) if ever we meane, to come there.

II. The Perſon.

This for the Place. Now for the Perſon, that commeth from this Place. For, being in ſpeech of a place, He continues in locall termes fit for a place, Egreditur ex te. Egredi, is to come forth; and that is properly from, or out of a Place. And, the rather He doth it, becauſe withall, it is a terme that fitteth His Birth well: So, the Scripture ſaith, Naked came I forth, (that is) was I borne. The child that firſt comes forth (that is) the firſt is borne. This word is twiſe repeated: [1] Once, out of Bethlehem, Ex te: [2] Another, from everlaſting, ab æterno. Theſe two ſet out to us His two commings forth (that is) His two Nativities: (Nativity is nothing but a comming forth.) Thoſe two, His two Natures: ſince Mativitas eſt ad naturam via, Nativity is but the way that leads to Nature. [1] Egreditur ex te, as the Son of man, as Davids Son: [2] Egreſſus Ejus ab æterno, as the Son of GOD, as Davids LORD.

Iob. 1.21.
Gen. 38.28.

III. His Natures. 1 As Man from Bethlehem.

Egredietur ex te. Egredietur is the tenſe of the time to come: To come, when Micah wrote this, and in the Future: but come, when * S. Matthew cited it, and in the Præter: When JESUS was borne at Bethlehem. But, future and præter (both) are in time: So, this, His Birth in time.

* Mat. 2.1.

But, the other hath neither Future nor Præter, neither moode nor tenſe; nay, No Verbe, at all! It is expreſſed by a Subſtantive: to ſhew His ſubſiſtence before all time, from all eternity.

2 Ex, is a Place; out of it Hee came; ſo, in it Hee was: and this Birth, locall, as (before) temporall. So was not His other; that hath no ex: that is ab. ab æterno: For, as eternall, no place containes Him; He is every where; fills both Heaven and earth.

3 Te; that place is Bethlehem, a place upon earth. According to which it is ſaid, there

ſhall

ſhall come a Root out of Ieſſe (Eſay's terme, Chap. 11. Ver. 1.) and out of it, a Branch, Ieremie's, Chap. 23. Ver. 5.) Thence, Germen, a Flower or bloſſome, (Zacharie's, Chap. 6. v. 12.) and from it this Fruit of Ephrata, the Fruit of the Virgins womb. Root, branch, bloſſome, and fruit, all of the earth, earthly. But there came forth, at the ſame time a Starre; too: to ſhew He had another more high and heavenly being.

Eſay. 11. 1. Ier 23. 5. Zach. 6. 12. Luk. 1. 42.

For, this of Bethlehem was not His firſt flight (as we ſay:) the other, though it ſtand behinde in the Verſe, was before that, by far: Ex utero, ante luciferum: Ante luciferum, before the Star of His birth; nay, before any morning ſtar came forth, He was come forth. A principio (ſaith Mica.) And it is S. Iohn's In principio, (the two firſt words of his Goſpell,) long before Moſes In principio (the two firſt words of Geneſis.) But, to leave no place to doubt of his meaning, he gloſſeth his à principio, with, ab æterno, (that is) from everlaſting. By which very words, [from eternity] Arius errour (of erat, quando non erat) falls to the ground. For, nunquam erat, quando non erat æternitas: Never was there (call it, what you will) when eternity was not. For, as everlaſting, forwards, is, to quando tempus non erit amplius, there ſhall be no more time: So everlaſting, backward, is, to quando tempus non erat adhuc, when there was yet no time at all.

As God from everlaſting. Pſal. 110. 3.

Now, let it not trouble you, that this His eternall, is the plurall number (outgoings) as if they were more than one: It is but the Hebrew phraſe: They uſe, to expreſſe the Superlative, (ever) by the Subſtantive of the plurall number, to call that man אשרי bleſſings, whom they meane to be moſt bleſſed. So that, outgoings, which is but one; but ſo high after ſuch a manner, ſo paſt our reach, as Eſay askes, Generationem Ejus quis enarrabit, Who ſhall declare His generation? No one, no ſingular will reach it: and ſo, it is expreſſed plurally.

Eſay. 53. 8.

So uſe they alſo, to note our continuance. And ſo it ſets out to us, the continuall emanation, or proceeding of Him, from His Father, ὡσπαύγασμα (the Apoſtles word) as a beame of brightneſſe ſtreaming from Him unceſſantly: Never paſt, (His generation;) but, (as the Schoolemen call it) actus commenſuratus æternitati. For Hodiè genui te, is true of every day: yet, becauſe it hath co-exiſtence with many revolutions of time, (though it be indeed, in it ſelfe, but one drawn out along, yet according to the many ages it laſteth, it ſeemeth to multiply it ſelfe into many: And ſo is expreſſed plurally.

Pſal. 2. 7.

Though, (the principall ſenſe alwayes ſaved) we may referre this Plurall to both His outgoings; both, as Son of God before all times, and as Son of man in the fulneſſe of time. For, this latter (though executed in time) had his outgoing (that is, the Decree for it went forth) ab æterno. Even, that out of Bethlehem He ſhould come; be the Son of man; the Saviour of Mankind; and their Guide, to eternity. Even that way alſo (in a ſenſe) it may be ſaid; As Man, He came forth A principio, A diebus æternitatis: A principio, for the efficacy; ab æterno, for the Decree. From the beginning there went vertue forth of Him, which wrought, even then, when He was but forth-comming, as we ſay, and yet not come forth. His life, His death, ab origine mundi. So for the efficacy, à principio. As for the Decree; that was gone forth, from before the foundations of the world, from all eternity.

Apoc. 13. 8. Epheſ. 1. 4.

So now have we this Party, twiſe come forth; compound of Bethlehem, and eternity. And, now we have Him, what ſhall we do to Him? But firſt, what ſhall He do to us? With GOD, Officium fundatur in beneficio: He firſt doth for us, before he require ought of us. This He ſhall do for us: He ſhall be, to us, מרעה is the word of the Text; S. Matthew turnes it Ἡγούμενος. Which, in the firſt and native ſenſe, is a Guide for the way, Dux viæ, to leade us: [2] In a ſecond, is a Captaine, Dux militiæ, to guard us. [3] And to theſe two, by way of paraphraſe, S. Matthew addes, ὅστις ποιμανεῖ, qui paſcet, a Guide that ſhall feed us. [1] To leade us in the way. [2] To guard us in the way. [3] To feed us in the way. In theſe three, His Office. From a place, He came to be our guid, to a place: Still, he holds on which his locall terms, he began with. For a guide ſerves properly to bring one to a place. There is, in that word, both the Office, He to performe to us; and the Benefit, we to receive by Him, (guiding.) And it impleth

III. His Office.

I A Guide to lead us.

implieth alſo, our Duty to Him againe: for, if He to leade; we to be led by Him: *Hee is become the Author of eternall Salvation, (Heb.*5. ſaith the Apoſtle) to them, as will obey Him, and be guided by Him, and, to none other.

Heb.5.9.

Will ye ſee (firſt) the neceſſity of both thoſe His commings forth, for this Office, to be our Guide? Egredietur ex te, firſt; He was to be of us, being to guide us: for being of us, He would the better underſtand our wants, and *have the more compaſsion on them: Heb.*4.15. Therefore, if a Prophet: A Prophet ſhall the Lord raiſe up unto you, from among your brethren: (Moſes Egredietur ex te.) If a Prince: Your noble Ruler ſhall be of your ſelves, even from the midſt of you: (Ieremie: So he, Egredietur ex te.) If a Prieſt: then, to be taken from men, and be ordained for men, in things partaining unto God: (the Apoſtles egredietur ex te) To every one of theſe: And theſe three be the three great Guides of mankind.

Heb.4.15. Deut.18.18. Ier.30.21. Heb 5.1.

And againe: As meet, He ſhould come forth from eternity, if thither He to bring us. None can bring to a place, ſo well, as He, that hath beene there. There He had beene; had inhabited eternity (ſaith Eſay:) thence He came; and comming thence, beſt knowes the way thither againe. So neither of His outgoings more than needs.

Eſay 57.15.

Now to our Guide. Where, the termes of Way, and of walking, and leading, meet us ſo thick, are ſo frequent, all along the Scripture; as plaine it is, our very life is held as a Iourney; and we (as the Schoolemen term us) viatores, in ſtate of wayfaring men, or travellers, all, from our comming into the world, to the going out of it againe, ſtill going on, in the way, or out of the way, t'one, or t'other, If ſo: in a journey two things we are to looke to; [1] our Quo, and [2] our Qua: [1] Quo, our end, whither; [2] Qua, our way; by which. S. Thomas ſaid well; Lord, we know not whither thou goeſt; and how then can we know the way? Right: for, Ignoranti quem portum petat nullus ſecundus eſt ventus, No wind is good for him, that knows not, for what port, he is bound: he that knowes not, whither he goes, wanders, and is never in his way; is never in it, for hee hath none, to be in.

Ioh.14.5.

Firſt then, Quo; whither? Now, the end of the Verſe, is our journies end, Eternitie. Where, if we may arrive, happy we: that is agreed on preſently. So is not the way thither.

But yet, this (I take) is agreed; that, if it be a ready way, we care the leſſe for a guide: but if hard to hit, then Dux nobis opus, we need one.

And ſure, the way is not ready to hit; not ſo eaſie, a foole may find it: It is but a fooliſh imagination ſo to ween of it. By-wayes there be diverſe; many croſſe paths, and turnings in and out; and we like enough to miſſe it, if we venture on it, without a guide: If there be not one, to call to us, ever and anon, (as Eſay 30.21.) Hæc eſt via, ambulate in eâ, This is the right way, keepe it: if not, you go, you know not whither.

Eſay 30.21.

The firſt point then is, to finde our owne want; to think, we are in caſe, to need a Guide. For, if we need none, this Text is ſuperfluous: And thou Bethlehem, and thou CHRIST, ye may both well be ſpared. If we be able to goe the way, without a guide; to be guides to our ſelves; Nay, to be guides to our guides, then: (the world is come to that, now.)

Well he was a wiſe man, and a great Counſellor, that ſaid, when time was, How can I, without a Guide? And the Wiſemen, at this feaſt, were not ſo well perſwaded of their own skill, but they ſought and tooke directions. Let us follow them.

To get us one then. And, not any one, but one that is skilfull in the way: (no one thing need we ſo to be adviſed of, as this). For, ſtrange it is, but true it is; even they, that be blind themſelves, will take upon them to be guides to others. You know who ſaid, Si cæcus cæcum: that (Si) was no vaine (Si,) no idle Suppoſition: uſque hodiè, it is done daily. But the end (there) is, in foveam, a place we would not come to; and GOD keepe us from it.

Mat.15.14.

One then, that is skilfull: And where ſhall we have any ſo skilfull, as this; this of ours? He cannot but be ſo. It is ſure; there were no better guide, than the way it ſelfe, if the way could ſpeak to us, and tell us when we were right or wrong in it. Now, He, He is the way: The Way and the End both. As GOD, He is the end: (the fruition of the the God-head, the end of our journey.) As man, He is the way: both Way, and Guide too. His Doctrine our guide; His example, in the whole tract of His life, the very way thither.

Nothing remaineth, but that we now ſet forward in this way. For (as we daily ſing in the Benedictus) He came, (not to whet our wits, or to file our tongues, but) to guid our feet into the way. And, into what way? Not of queſtions and controverſies, whereof there is no end, about which we languiſh all our life long: but, into the way of peace, even of thoſe duties about which there is no diſagreement. Looke but to this Feaſt, (it is S. Auguſtines note) didicerunt Magi, & abierunt: decuerunt Scribæ & remanſerunt, The Wiſe men, they learnt the way, and on they went: The Scribes, they taught the way, but they tarried ſtill behinde. O doe, as did the Wiſe men, dimittunt Scribas inaniter lectitare, ipſi pergunt fideliter adorare, let the Scribes ſit ſtill, and ſcan and read lectures of the way; On went the Wiſe men on their way, and performed their worſhip, the end of their journey: and ſo let us. This for Dux viæ. Luk. 1.79.

2 A Captaine to guard us.

And, this would ſerve for the way; if there were nothing but the way: if that were all. But, if there be enemies beſet the way, to ſtop our paſſage; then will not dux (a guide) ſerve our turne, we muſt have Dux (a Captaine,) then: (the ſecond ſenſe of the word ἡγεμὼν:) one to guard us, and to make way for us. For, we are not only to be led ſurely, without errour: but ſafely, without danger alſo. Such a Guide we behove to have; as will ſee us ſafe, at the place, we would be at. And, Bethlehem breeds ſuch. Out of little Bethlehem came he that fetched downe great Golias. And againe, out of it, this day, He, that ſhall tread down Satan under our feet: dux Meſsias; Captaine Meſsias, (as the Angell in *Dan.*9.25. cals him.) 1 Sam. 17. 49. Rom. 16. 20. Dan. 9. 25.

3 A Shepheard to feed us.

And, for qui paſcet, we may not miſſe that neither. For, ſay, we be guarded from enemies; yet ſhall we goe our journey but evill, if we faint by the way, for hunger or thirſt, and have not to relieve us. He is not a good Guide, that, in that caſe, cannot lead us, where we may be purveyed of neceſſary food, for our reliefe. It is all one, to periſh out of the way, by errour; and to periſh in the way, by want of needfull refreſhing. S. Matthew therefore, to make Him a compleat Guide, by way of ſupply addes, Qui paſcet: Such an one, as ſhall leade, more Paſtoritio, as a Shepheard doth his flocke: not, leade them the way only: but leade them alſo to good greene paſture, beſides the waters of comfort; ſee, they want nothing, Dux qui paſcet, or Paſtor qui ducet, chuſe you whether; for, He is both. Pſal. 23. 2.

Of all the three, the name of the Place (He was borne in) ſeemes to favour this moſt; to be ominous toward qui paſcet. Beth, is a houſe; lehem, bread; and Ephrata, is plentie: Bread, plentie. And, there was, in Bethlehem, a well of ſuch water, as King David (we read) longed for it, (the beſt, in all the Countrey.) Bethlehem then (ſure) a fit place, for Qui paſcet to be borne in. And, Qui paſcet as fit a Perſon, to be borne in Bethlehem. He is not meet to be Ruler (ſaith Eſay) that ſaith, in domo mea non eſt panis: He can never ſay, that Bethlehem is his houſe: and that is domus panis: and in domo panis ſemper eſt panis. Never take Him without bread, His houſe is the houſe of bread, inaſmuch as He himſelf is bread: that, in the houſe, or out of it; whereſoever He is, there is Bethlehem. There can no bread want. 1 Chro. 11. 17. Eſay 3. 7.

Theſe three abilities then, are in Chriſt our Leader: 1 Skill; to be a Guide: 2 Valour, to be a Captaine: 3 and for Qui paſcet, Bethlehem, the houſe of bread, is his houſe. Of which, 1 Skill, ſerves for direction; 2 Strength, for defence: 3 food, for refreſhing.

1 Luce Sacerdotalis ſcientiæ, by the light of His Prieſtly knowledge; So, He guides us: for the Prieſts lips are to preſerve knowledge. Mal. 2. 7.

2 And, brachio Regalis Potentiæ, by the arme of his Royall power; So, He guards us: for Power pertaines to the Prince Principally.

3 And, for qui paſcet, He is Melchiſedek, King and Prieſt; ready to bring forth (as He did) bread and wine. But in another manner far, than he did. The bread and wine, Melchiſedek brought forth, were not His body and blood; Chriſts are: Both qui paſcet, and quo paſcet. As before, Dux, & via, the guid and the way: So, now, here, paſtor, & pabulum, the feeder and the food, both. Gen. 14. 18.

You may ſee all this repreſented, in the Shadowes of the Old Teſtament. There is a booke, there, called Exodus, of Iſraels egredietur out of Egypt: Therein, they had Moſes for their Guide; and he led them to the borders of the Holy land, and there he left them: To ſhew, the Law brought nothing to perfection. Then comes Ioſua (whom the Epiſtle to the Hebrews calls Ieſus,) the figure of ours here, and by his conduct, they were led, and put in poſſeſſion of the Land of promiſe.

Heb.4.8.

All this but in type of another Teſtament, after to de made, ſaith Ieremy; and upon better promiſes, ſaith the Apoſtle: Namely, our Spirituall leading through this vale of vanity, to the true land of promiſe, the heavenly Ieruſalem that is from above; whither this our Ieſus undertakes to bring all thoſe,, that will be guided by Him.

Gal.4.26.

Obſerve but the correſpondence, betweene the type and the truth. Moſes, when he came to leade the people, found them, how? ſcattered over all the land of Egypt, to ſeeke ſtubble for brick, to build him a City, that ſought the ruine of them all. Our caſe right: the very patterne of it: when our Guide finds us wandring in vanity, picking up ſtrawes, things that ſhall not profit us; ſeeking death in the errour of our life, till we be ſo happy, as to light into His guiding.

Sap.1.12.

Secondly, Moſes was to them, not alone Dux viæ, a Guide for the way; but, when enemies came forth againſt them, Dux militiæ, a Captaine for the warre. Chriſt was ſo too: and farre beyond Moſes; For, He made us way with the laying downe of His life: So did neither Moſes, nor Ioſua. Would die for it, but, He would open a paſſage to the place, He undertooke to bring us to. Was Dux, a guide, in His life, Dux, a Captaine, in His death.

Thirdly, Moſes when he fainted by the way, obtained, in their hunger, Manna from heaven; and, in their thirſt, water out of the rock for them. Chriſt is (Himſelfe) the true Mannah, Chriſt; the ſpirituall rock: whom He leads, He feeds: carries Bethlehem about Him.

3 Ioh.6.32. 1 Cor.10.4.

Heb 13.9 Ioh 6.33.48. Pſal. 110.13.

Plaine, by the ordaining of his laſt Sacrament, as the meanes to re-eſtabliſh our hearts with grace, and to repaire the decaies of our ſpirituall ſtrength: even, His owne fleſh, the bread of life; and His owne blood, the Cup of ſalvation. Bread made of Himſelf the true granum frumenti, wheat corne (*Ioh.*11.24.) Wine, made of Himſelf the true vine: Went under the Sickle, Flaile, Milſtone, and Oven, even to be made this bread: Trod (or was troden) in the winepreſſe alone, to prepare this cup for us.

Eſay 63.3.

And in this reſpect, it may well be ſaid, Bethlehem was never Bethlehem right; had never the name truly, till this day, this birth, this bread was borne, and brought forth there. Before it was the houſe of bread; but, of the bread that periſheth: but then, of the bread that endureth to everlaſting life. That, it might ſeeme (inter alia) to have beene one of the ends of His being borne there, to make it Bethlehem, veri nominis, Bethlehem truly ſo called.

Ioh 6.27.

The manner of His Leading.

And this is His Office. Now, all the doubt will be, how He can performe this Office to us; go before us and be our Guide; Seeing; He is now in Heaven, at His journies end: and we in Earth, by the way, ſtill. No matter for that: He hath left us (firſt) the way traced by the ſteps of His bleſſed life; which we keeping us to, ſure we are, we cannot goe amiſſe. And then, as, before He came in the fleſh, He led them by the hand of Moſes and Aaron, (Guides choſen, and ſent by Him;) So doth He, us, now, by the hands of thoſe whom the Apoſtle, (three ſeverall times, in one Chapter, *Heb.*13.) calleth, by this very name Ἡγουμένους our Guides: by whom He leades us, if He leades us, at all: And other leading we are not to looke for any. Only to pray, they may leade us right; and then all is well.

Pſal.77.20.

Heb.13.7. 17. 24.

And, they cannot but leade us right, ſo long as they but teach us, to follow the Lamb whither He goeth. For their Office is, but to lay forth before us, the way traced by the ſteps that He went. Thoſe ſteps when all is done, are ever our beſt directions. And, I meane to do but ſo now: as here (not to goe a ſtep out of the text) there are foure or five of theſe ſteps, as many as we ſhall well carry away at once. And theſe they be.

Apoc.14.4.

The

The maine point is: It is a place, and ſo to be gone to. We take this from the Shepherds, directed thither by the Angell, to reſolve of Tranſeamus uſque Bethlehem, that we get us to Bethlehem. There is the Rendez-vous, to day: there, He will be firſt ſeene, and ſaluted: there He begun with us; there we to begin with Him: Where He ſet forth, there our ſetting forth to be alſo. Indeed, there is no finding Him but there, this Feaſt. There, the Shepherds found Him, this day, the firſt: There, the Wiſe-men, on Twelfth-day, the laſt. But, thither they came both; both the Shepherds, directed by the Angell; and the Wiſe-men, guided by the Star. The Shepherds; in them, the Iewes: The Wiſe-men; in them the Gentiles. The Shepherds; in them unlettered perſons: The Wiſe-men; in them, the profoundeſt Clerkes. The Shepherds; in them, meane men: The Wiſe-men; in them, great States. Be, what we will be, at Bethlehem to begin, all. Thither to goe to Him; thence, to ſet out after Him. Tranſeamus uſque Bethlehem. Luke 2. 15.

How ſhall we doe that? What, ſhall we goe in pilgrimage to the place? We learne a ſhorter courſe of the Apoſtle, (Rom. 10.) The righteouſneſſe of faith (ſaith he) ſpeaketh on this wiſe: ſay not thou in thy heart, who ſhall goe over the ſea for me, that were to bring Chriſt againe into earth. But, What ſaith it? The word is neare thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart. And, this it is: Bethlehem hath here two twins: an Epithete, a vertue, or two. Get but them, get but your ſoules poſſeſſed of them, it will ſave you a journey: you ſhall never ſtirre hence, but be at Bethlehem, ſtanding where you do. Rom. 10. 6. 8.

Parvula is the firſt: you know, Bethlehem is little. And, look what little, and low is in quantity: that, is little in our owne eyes, and lowly in quality. Get that firſt, (humility:) it is the Bethlehem of vertues; where, He, in great humility was found, this day. If we begin not there, we loſe our way, at the firſt ſetting out. For this is ſure: where Eternity is the terminus ad quem, there, Humility is the terminus à quo. Humility, in the firſt Comma of the ſentence, where Eternity is the period (as in this Verſe, it is.) And even here now at the firſt, is Chriſt like to loſe a great part of His traine. The Phariſees are gone; all, too big, for Bethlehem, they: and with them, all that are τι μέγα, ſome great matter, in their owne ſight. Touching whom we may uſe the Apoſtrophe: And thou Bethlehem art too little, for theſe great conceits: None of them will come out of thee, or come at thee, by their will: every one of them is a cunning Guide, himſelfe; and, no Guide, they, but ſequuntur ſpiritum ſuum, their owne bold ſpirit: bid Bethlehem fare-well; at it, they come not. Well, parvula is the firſt. 1 By Humility. Parvula. Acts 8. 9. Ezek. 13. 3.

The next Station, is to the next vertue, and that is Ephrata, fruitfulneſſe; (ſo it ſignifies:) little it is, but fruitfull. Fruitfull, firſt, that it brought forth Him: for, He hath brought forth, ſeene come of Himſelfe (ſaith Eſay) longævum ſemen, a laſting ſeed: the fruit whereof, to this day, ſhaketh like Libanus, and as the greene graſſe covereth all the earth. I meane, the Chriſtians, that were, are, or ever ſhall be: how great an Ephrata, of how little a beginning! It is not onely little, but Ephrata too; and, by that, know it. For indeed, good heed would be taken, that we go not to the wrong Bethlehem: not to Bethlehem Zabulon, that is, Bethlehem on the Sands (ſo lay Zabulon by the Sea,) Bethlehem the barren: But, to Bethlehem Iuda, Bethlehem Ephrata, (that is) Bethlehem the fruitfull. That is, to Humility to add Fruitfulneſſe, (I meane,) Plenteouſneſſe in all good works. Elſe, it is not Ephrata; not right: not right Repentance, unleſſe it be Ephrata, bring forth fruits of repentance: nor Faith; without the worke of faith: nor, Love, without the Labour of love: nor any other vertue, without her Ephrata. Ephrata is not the Surname of Humility onely, but even of the reſt too: Repentance Ephrata, and Faith Ephrata; & ſic de cæteris, if they be true: Elſe be they but vites frondoſæ, leaves and nothing elſe: Simulachra virtutum, and not vertues indeed: Of Zabulon, not of Iuda; and ſo, not the right. 2 By fruitfulneſſe: Ephrata. Eſay 53. 10. Pſal. 72. 16. Luke 3. 8. 1 Theſſ. 1. 3. Hoſ. 10. 1.

Fruitfull then: and of what fruit? That is in the very name it ſelfe, [of Bethlehem.] Not the fruit of the lips (a few good words) but the precious fruit of the earth (as S. Iames calleth it) lehem, good bread: that fruit. Such fruit, as S. Paul carried to the poore Saints at Ieruſalem, Almes and offerings; that, is the right fruit; 3 In good works. Bethlehem. Iames 5. 7. Rom. 15. 28.

Cùm

Cùm ſignavero fructum hunc; it hath the Seale on it, for right. Such, as the Philippians ſent him, for ſupply of his want: whereby he knew, they were alive againe at the root; in that they thus fructified, yeelded this fruit, of a Sweet odour, and wherewith God was highly pleaſed (as, there, he tels them.)

Phil. 4. 18. 10.

Pſal. 13. 26.

It was not (ſure) without myſtery, that the Temple was firſt heard of at Ephrata, at this fruitfull place. No more was it (that which the Fathers obſerve) of the Trees, that were uſed about it: Not a poſt of the Temple, not a ſpar; nay, not ſo much as a pin, but was made of the wood of a fruit-bearing tree: No barren wood at all, in it. No more was it, that the very Altar of the Temple was founded upon a threſhing floore (Arauna's) where good corne was threſhed. All, to ſhew, it would be plenteous in feeding, and cloathing, and ſuch other pertaining to this of Ephrata. Which (how-ever they be with us,) will be the firſt, and principall point of inquiry at the day of Doome; even about feeding, and cloathing, and other works of mercy.

Matth. 25. 35. — 36. 42. 43.

Now, if we could bring theſe two together; make a conjunction of them in Gemini, it were worth all. For, (I know not how, but) if there be in us ought of Ephrata: if we happen to be any thing fruitfull, but in any degree; away goes parvula, ſtraight: Straight, we ceaſe to be little: We begin to talke of Merit, and worth, and I wote not what. Indeed, if wee be all barren and bare, it may be, then, (and ſcarce then neither, but peradventure, then) we grow not high-minded. But ſo, we fall ſtill upon one extreme or other: if fertile, then proud: if humble, then barren. We cannot get, to be humble, yet not fruitleſſe; or to be fruitfull, yet keepe our humility ſtill: Not Ephrata, and parvula together: But, that is the true Bethlehem, and there was he borne. And thus farre, (I hope) we have been led right, and are in our way.

His manner of feeding. By the Sacrament, Beth-lehem.

But, leading is not all: here is qui paſcet too, and we may not paſſe it. For, to that He leads us, alſo; Dux, qui paſcet. We followed a falſe Guide, at firſt, that led us to the forbidden fruit, the end whereof was morte moriemini. This (now) will lead us to a food of the nature of the Tree of life, even the bread of life; by eating whereof, we ſhall have life in our ſelves, even life immortall. That, is His food, He leads us to. And, if we would forget this, both the Perſon and the Place (the Perſon, qui paſcet, that ſhall feed; and the Place, Bethlehem, the houſe of bread,) would ſerve to put us in remembrance of it; Even of the breaking of bread, which the Church, as this day, ever hath, and ſtill uſeth, as the Child-houſe feaſt.

Gen. 3. 6.
Ioh. 6. 48.

We ſpeake of Tranſeamus uſque Bethlehem, going thither: that may we, even locally, doe, and never go out of this Roome: inaſmuch as here is to be had the true bread of life, that came downe from Heaven. Which is, His fleſh, this day borne, which He gave for the life of the world, (called by Him ſo, the true bread, the bread of Heaven, the bread of life:) And where that bread is, there is Bethlehem, ever. Even ſtrictè loquendo, it may be ſaid, and ſaid truly, the Church, in this ſenſe, is very Bethlehem, no leſſe than the Towne it ſelfe. For that, the Towne it ſelfe never had the name rightly, all the while there was but bread made there, bread (panis hominum) the bread of men: Not, till this Bread was borne there, which is Panis Angelorum (as the Pſalme calleth it,) and man did eat Angels food. Then, and never till then, was it Bethlehem: and that is, in the Church, as truly as ever in it. And accordingly, the Church takes order, we ſhall never faile of it: There ſhall ever be, this day, a Bethlehem, to go to: a houſe, wherein there is bread, and this bread. And, ſhall there be Bethlehem, and ſo neare us, and ſhall we not go to it? Or, ſhall we go to it, to the Houſe of Bread, (this bread,) and come away without it? Shall we forſake our Guide leading us to a place ſo much for our benefit?

Ioh. 6. 51.

Ioh. 6. 32. 41. 31.

Pſal. 78. 25.

Vbi Domine, was the Apoſtles queſtion: and His anſwer; Vbi corpus, ibi aquilæ, where the body is, there the Eagles will be. Let it appeare, wee are ſo: For, here is the Body.

Luke 17. 37.

Elſe

Elſe doe wee our duty to Him, but by halves. For, as our duty to Dux, is to be led: So, our duty to qui paſcet, is to be fed by Him. To end: And thus, ducendo paſcit, and paſcendo ducit; leading He feeds us, and feeding He leads us, till He bring us whither? Even to A principio, back againe to where we were at the beginning: and at the beginning, we were in Paradiſe. That our beginning ſhall be our end. Thither He will bring us: Nay, to a better eſtate than ſo: to that whereunto, even from Paradiſe, we ſhould have been tranſlated, to the State of eternity, to the joyes and joyfull dayes there: even, to glory, joy, and bliſſe eternall. To which He bring us, even our bleſſed guide, that this day, was in Bethlehem, borne to that end, JESUS CHRIST the Righteous.

A SER

before the KINGS MAIESTIE, at White-Hall, on Wedneſday, the XXV. of December, A. D. MDCXVI.
being CHRISTMAS day.

PSAL. LXXXV. Ver. X, XI.

Miſericordia & Veritas obviaverunt ſibi: Juſtitia & Pax oſculatæ ſunt.

Veritas de terra orta eſt: & Juſtitia de cœlo proſpexit.

Mercy and Truth ſhall meet: Righteouſneſſe and Peace ſhall kiſſe one another.

Truth ſhall budd out of the earth; and Righteouſneſſe ſhall looke downe from Heaven.

I Have here read you two Verſes, out of this Pſalme, which is one of the Pſalmes ſelected of old, by the Primitive Church, and ſo ſtill retained by ours, as part of our Office, or ſervice of this day: as being proper and pertinent to the matter of the Feaſt, and ſō to the Feaſt it ſelfe. For, the meeting here ſpecified was to be, at the birth of the Meſſias: So ſaith Rabbi Moſes, and other of the Jewes. Was, at the birth of our Saviour: ſo ſay the Fathers with uniforme conſent, and eo nomine, have made this a Chriſtmas day Pſalme.

As his manner is, the Pſalmiſt, in it, under one, compriſeth the type, and the truth, both. By thoſe things which befell the people of the Iewes, the Church typicall ſhadowing out thoſe things, which were to befall the Antitype of it, Chriſt and His Church. For, primâ & propriâ intentione, it cannot be denied, but the Pſalme was firſt ſet, according to the letter, upon the turning backe of the captivity of Babel. But, the Prophet knew well, that was not their worſt captivity, nor ſhould be their beſt delivery: there was another yet behinde, concerned them more (if they underſtood their own ſtate aright) which was reſerved, to the Meſſias, to free them from. To that, he points. Even that the Apoſtle complaines of (Rom. 7.) wherein the ſoule is led away captive under ſin and Satan (the very true Babel, indeed, as which bringeth with it everlaſting confuſion: From which, CHRIST (the true Zorobabel) is to ſet us free: us, and them both.

Rom. 7. 23.

There

There is a Meeting, here. A meeting at a Birth. A birth, that did them in Heaven (Righteouſneſſe by name) good to behold. The Meeting, in obviaverunt: The Birth, in orta eſt: The Pleaſure to behold it, in proſpexit de cælo. Proſpexit is to ſee with delight, as, when we looke into ſome pleaſant proſpect. The Summe.

A meeting qualified, for the manner. For, they do not meet, and paſſe by; but, meet, and Salute as friends, with an oſculatæ ſunt, a ſigne of love begun, or renewed.

This meeting is of foure. Foure, which of themſelves (propriè loquendo) are nothing but Attributes, or Properties, of the Divine Nature. But, are (here) by the Pſalmiſt brought in, and repreſented to us, as ſo many Perſonages. Perſonages (I ſay) inaſmuch as they have here perſonall acts aſcribed to them. For, to meet, to kiſſe, to looke downe, are all of them acts perſonall. And, look how the Pſalmiſt preſents them, ſo we treat of them; in the ſame termes, the Text doth.

At a Birth, at Orta eſt, theſe foure meet here: At Orta eſt veritas, the birth of truth; de terrâ, from the earth. For, two Ortus there were: and this, not His anteſæcularis ortus de cælo, His birth before all worlds, from Heaven; but, His Ortus de terrâ, His temporall birth, from the earth.

Laſtly, the birth of this birth (as I may ſay;) the effect it wrought. Of which, more there are in the neighbouring verſes: Here, in theſe (beſides the meeting occaſioned by it) there is but one. That, ſuch a ſpectacle it was, as it drew Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe from heaven, to looke at it. Time was, when Righteouſneſſe would not have done ſo much; not have vouchſafed a looke hitherward: Therefore reſpexit nos Iuſtitia, is good news: That, then, and ever ſince, She hath beheld the earth and the dwellers in it, with a far more favourable regard, then before. And all, for this births ſake.

And when was all this? When He that ſaith of Himſelf, I am the Truth, when He was borne upon earth: For, orta eſt Veritas; and natus eſt Chriſtus will fall out to be one Birth. What day ſoever that was, this meeting was upon it. And that was, this day, of all the dayes of the yeare. The meeting, and the Day of this meeting, here, all one: and the Birth of CHRIST, the cauſe of both. So, being this dayes work; this day, to be dealt with moſt properly. Ioh. 14. 16.

Onward we have here foure Honours of this Day, Every one of the foure giving it a bleſsing. [1] It is the day of ortus Veritatis, Truths birth: [2] And the ſame, the day of occurſus Miſericordiæ, the Meeting here mentioned: [3] And, of oſculum Pacis, the Kiſſe here expreſſed: And of proſpectus Iuſtitiæ, Righteouſneſſe's gracious reſpect of us. Theſe, from each of them in ſeverall. And generally, the day of reconciling them all.

Holding us to theſe, we are to ſpeak of the [1] Meeting, the [2] Parties, the [3] Birth, and the [4] Effect here ſpecified to come of it. Of this Meeting, in CHRIST: Then, in Chriſtianity, not to be broken off by us, but to be renewed, and ſpecially this day. The Diviſion
II.

I.

HEre is a Meeting: And that is no great matter, if it be no more. How many meet we, as we paſſe to and fro daily, and how little do we regard it? But that meeting is caſuall. 1. The Meeting Not caſuall.

Somewhat more there is, in Set Meetings. It was not, by hap: not obviaverunt, ſimply; but, obviaverunt ſibi. Sibi ſheweth, they had an intent; they came forth, on both ſides; Not to meet any fifth perſon, but to meet one another. But of purpoſe.

But, not every Set meeting is memorable: This, is. I finde a Pſalm (here) made, in remembrance of it. And (lightly) Songs be not made, but de raro contingentibus; not, of ordinary, but of ſome ſpeciall great Meetings. And that memorable.

The greatneſſe of a Meeting groweth three ways. [1] By the Parties, Who: [2] The Occaſion, Whereon: and [3] the End, Whereto they meet. All three are in this. The Parties, in the firſt Verſe: the Occaſion, and End, in the ſecond. The Occaſion, a birth; an occaſion oft, of making great Perſons meet: And the End that comes of it, that Righ- teouſneſſe, who is to be our Judge, and to give the laſt ſentence upon us, beholds us with an aſpect, that promiſes favour.

2 The Parties.

The Occaſion, and the End, we ſhall touch anon: Now of the Parties: If the Parties great, the Meeting great. The conjunction of the Great lights in heaven, The enterview of great States on earth, ever bodes ſome great matter. Who are the Parties here? Foure, as high, as excellent Attributes, as there be any in the God-head, or (to keepe the ſtile of the Text) foure, as great States, as any in the Court of Heaven.

The Manner of their meeting.

Theſe meet: and in what manner? Great States meet otherwhile, in a pitched field: Not ſo here, This is an obviaverunt, with an oſculatæ ſunt: they run not, one, at another, as enemies: they run, one, to another, and Kiſſe, as loving friends. And that which makes it memorable indeed, is, that theſe Parties, in this manner thus meet, who (if all were well known) were more like to turne taile, than to meet: one to run from another; Nay, one to run at another, to encounter: rather then run one to another, to embrace and kiſſe. Not meet at all: at leaſt, not meet thus, ſtanding in ſuch termes as they did.

Not, Mercy and Peace, or Truth and Righteouſnes

Mercy and Peace if they two had mett; or Truth and Righteouſneſſe, they two, it had not beene ſtrange. But, for thoſe, that ſeeme to be in oppoſition, to do it, that is it, that makes this Meeting marvelous in our eyes.

But Mercy and Truth, Righteouſnes and Peace.

Will you ſtay a little, and take a view of the Parties. Foure they are: theſe foure, [1]Mercy, [2]Truth, [3]Righteouſneſſe, and [4]Peace. Which quaternion, at the firſt ſight, divides it ſelfe into two and two. Mercy and Peace, they two paire well: they be collectaneæ (as Bernard ſaith of them in one place) bedfellowes, ſleepe together: collactaneæ (as, in another place) ſucked one milk, one breaſt, both. And, as theſe two; ſo, the other two (truth and righteouſneſſe) ſeeme to be of one complection and diſpoſition, and commonly take part together. Of theſe, Mercy ſeems to favour us; and Peace, no enemie to us, nor to any: (ſeeing we muſt ſpeake of them as of perſons) mild, and gentle perſons, both. For Righteouſneſſe, I know not well what to ſay: Geſtat gladium, and (I feare) non fruſtra. Nor of Truth, who is vera, and ſevera; ſevere too, otherwhile. Theſe (I doubt) are not like affected. The reaſon of my doubt. Of one of them (Righteouſnes) it is told, here, for great newes, that She (but) looked downe hitherwards from heaven. Before then, She would not have done that. A great ſigne it is of heart-burning, when one will not doe ſo much as looke at another; not endure his ſight: We cannot promiſe our ſelves much of her. No, nor of Truth. One was ſo bold, in a place, to ſay, Omnis homo mendax, and feared no challenge for it. By that, it ſeemes, all ſtands not well with her, neither. So then; two, for us; two; againſt us.

Their order, Mercy firſt Peace laſt.

For their order: Mercy is firſt, and Peace laſt. With both ends, we ſhall doe well enough: GOD ſend us to do but ſo with the midſt. Yet, this is not amiſſe, that they, which favour us leſſe, are in the midſt; hemmed in on both ſides, cloſed about with thoſe that wiſh us well; and, they between us and them. On the one ſide, Mercy before: On the other, Peace, behinde.

Their ſorting Mercy and Truth

Another; that, in this double meeting, Mercy ſorts not her ſelfe, goes not to Righteouſneſſe: nor Righteouſneſſe, to her, but to Peace. A kinde of croſſe meeting (as it were) there is: the better hope of accord. Mercy and Righteouſneſſe have no Symbolizing quality at all; no hope of them: but, Truth, with Mercy, hath. There is Truth as well, in the Promiſe of Mercy: as, in the threat of Iuſtice.

Righteouſnes and Peace.
Heb. 7. 2. 6. 20.

And it ſtands yet better, between the other two (Righteouſneſſe, and Peace.) Melchiſedek, which is by interpretation King of Righteouſnes, the ſame is King of Salem, (that is) of peace. He, that is after the order of melchiſedek, King of both, like enough, to ſet accord between them two: both of them his lieges. This, for the view of the Parties.

The Occaſion.

Theſe meet here: but, what is obviaverunt, without oſculatæ ſunt? Better, let them ſtand in ſunder ſtill, and never meet. There ſeemes to be two Meetings implyed. One obviaverunt, without: and another, with oſculatæ ſunt.

Before they mett here, they were parted, the one from the other. For, they that meet, come from diverſe coaſts. Before this meeting they have beene in diverſe quarters, one from the other, and not come together thus a good while.

Their

Their diſtance, in place, grew from their diſtance, in affection eſtranged one from the other. That they meet not, I will not ſay: but that they meet not thus, ever before. Elſe, what remarkable thing were there in this Meeting, or worth the compoſing of a Pſalme, if it had been familiar with them, thus to meet every other, nay, any other day?

How came they then aſunder, that it ſhould be a marvell to ſee them meet? Since (naturally) they are not ſtrangers; all foure, in the boſome of GOD from all etern iti, Attributes (all foure) of His undivided eſſence. So, not divided, of themſelves: No, of themſelves, then. That they were divided, it was about us; the quarrell ours, that, made them part company. Thus I gather it: If, at CHRISTS birth they met: at Adams fall, they parted, If, when Truth was borne on earth; they came together: when Truth periſhed from the earth, they fell in ſunder: That was, when the firſt lye was told, and believed, (and that was nequaquam moriemini, by Adam) and thereby GOD much wronged. So that Adams cauſe it was, (and ſo, ours) that firſt divided heaven; yea, the very Attributes, in GOD (we ſee,) and ſo (in a ſort) GOD Himſelfe. So they parted firſt. It could not be ſaid (by the Apoſtle) that CHRIST pacified all things in heaven and in earth: if there had not, in heaven, been ſomewhat to be taken up.

Of their ſevering: Not from themſelves.

Col. 1. 20.

For all this yet, I deny not, but they might and did meet, once before, But it was an obviaverunt, without an oſculatæ ſunt: Never, both theſe, till now. Out of CHRIST, and before His birth, they met in oppoſition: In CHRIST, and at His birth, did theſe foure Lights come to meet, and to be in conjunction, now. They mett before, obviaverunt: but, inſtead of oſculatæ, it was altercatæ ſunt. While Mercy and Peace would have Adams and our caſe relieved, Righteouſneſſe and Truth would by no meanes endure it. The plea is drawn up and reported at large, by Bernard, in his firſt Sermon upon the Annunciation. Mercy began: (for out of her readineſſe to do good, ſhe is, here, ſhe is ever formoſt:) Her inclination is, or rather, ſhe herſelfe is an inclination, to pity ſuch, as are in miſery; and, if ſhe can, to relieve them: yea, though they deſerve it not. For (which is the comfort of the miſerable ſinner) ſhe looks not to the party, what he is, or what he hath done, or deſerved; but, what he ſuffers, in how woful and wretched a caſe he is. And her plea is, Nunquid in vanum? What hath GOD made all men for nought? What profit is in their blood? It will make GODS enemies rejoyce, Thither it will come, if GOD caſt them cleane off: What then, Will He caſt them off for ever, will He be no more intreated? Hath GOD forgotten to be gracious? With theſe and ſuch like pii ſuſurri (as he calls them) did ſhe enter into GODS bowels, and make them yerne, and melt into compaſſion. And certainly, if there were none to ſtand againſt us, there were hope Mercy had prevailed.

So their firſt meeting was in oppoſition.

Mercies plea.

Pſal. 89. 47. 30.

Pſal. 74. 18. 9.

Pſal. 77. 7, 8.

But, Truth muſt be heard too, and ſhe layes in juſt matter of exception: Pleads, Deus erat Verbum; What is God but His Word? and His word was, as to ADAM, morte morieris; So, to his ſonnes, anima que peccaverit, The ſoule that ſinneth, that ſoule ſhall dye. GOD may not falſifie His word: His word is the Truth: falſifie the truth? that may not be.

Truths reply.

Gen. 2. 17.

Ezek. 18. 20.

And then ſteps up Righteouſneſſe, and ſeconds her: that GOD as He is true in His word, ſo is He Righteous in all His workes: So, to reddere ſuum cuique, to render each his own, to every one, that, is his due; and ſo to the ſinner ſtipendium peccati, the wages of ſin, (that is) death. God forbid, the Iudge of the world ſhould judge unjuſtly: that were as (before) to make Truth falſe, ſo (here) to do Right wrong.

Righteouſneſſe ſeconding her.

Pſal. 145. 17.

Rom. 6. 23.

Nay, it went further, and they made it their owne caſes. What ſhall become of me (ſaid Righteouſneſſe?) What uſe of Iuſtice, if God will doe no juſtice, if He ſpare ſinners? And what uſe of me (ſaith Mercy,) if He ſpare them not? Hard hold there was, inaſmuch as, Perii, niſi homo moriatur (ſaid Righteouſneſſe) I die, If he die not: And Perii, niſi Miſericordiam conſequatur (ſaid Mercy) if he die, I die too. To this it came: and in thoſe termes brake up the meeting, and away they went one from the other. Truth went into exile, as a ſtranger upon earth: —— Terras Aſtræa reliquit, ſhe confined her ſelf in Heaven: where, ſo aliened ſhe was, as ſhe would not ſo much as looke downe hither upon us.

The firſt meeting broken up.

Mercy, ſhe ſtayed below ſtill: ubi enim Miſericordia eſſet (ſaith Hugo well) ſi, cum cum miſero, non eſſet? Where ſhould Mercy be, if with miſery ſhe ſhould not be?

As for Peace, ſhe went betweene both, to ſee, if ſhe could make them meet againe in better termes. For, without ſuch a meeting, no good to be done for us.

For, meet they muſt, and that in other termes, or it will goe wrong with us; Our Salvation lies a bleeding, all this while. The Plea hangs, and we ſtand, as the priſoner at the bar, and know not what ſhall become of us. For though two be for us, there are two againſt us, as ſtrong and more ſtiffe than they. So that, much depends upon this ſecond Meeting; upon the compoſing or taking up this difference. For, theſe muſt be at peace between themſelves, before they be at peace with us, or with GOD. And this is ſure: we ſhall never meet in heaven, if they meet no more.

And many meanes were made for this meeting, many times; but, it would not be. Where ſtayed it? It was not long of Mercy, ſhe would be eaſily intreated, to give a new meeting: (no queſtion of her.) Oft did ſhe look up to heaven, but Righteouſneſſe would not look downe: Not, looke? not that? ſmall hope, ſhe would be got to meet, that would not look that way-ward.

Indeed, all the queſtion is of her. It is truth, and ſhe, that holds off: but, ſpecially She. Upon the Birth (you ſee) here is no mention of any in particular, but of Her; as much to ſay as, the reſt might be dealt with; ſhe only it was, that ſtood out. And yet, ſhe muſt be got to meet, or elſe no meeting.

No meeting till Juſtice ſatisfied.

All the hope is, that ſhe doth not refuſe ſimply, never to meet more: but ſtands upon ſatisfaction: Elſe Righteouſneſſe ſhould not be righteous. Being ſatisfied; then, ſhe will: remaining unſatisfied; ſo, ſhe will not meet.

All ſtands then on her ſatisfying; how to deviſe to give her ſatisfaction to her mind, that ſo ſhe may be content, once more (not to meet and argue, as yer-while, but) to meet, and kiſſe; meet in a joynt concurrence to ſave us, and ſet us free.

And (indeed) Hoc opus, there lies all: how to ſet a ſong of theſe foure parts, in good harmonie; how to make theſe meet, at a love-day; how to ſatisfie Juſtice, upon whom all the ſtay is.

Nor in any but the Chriſtian religion.

And this (ſay I) no Religion in the world doth, or can doe, but the Chriſtian. No Quier ſing this Pſalm, but ours: None make Juſtice meet, but it. Conſequently, None quiet the conſcience ſoundly, but it: Conſequently, no Religion but it. Withall religions elſe, at odds they be; and ſo, as they are faine to leave them ſo: For, meanes in the world have they none, how to make them meet: Not able for their lives to tender Juſtice a ſatisfaction, that will make her come in. The words next before are, that glory may dwell in our land. This glory dotlf dwell in our land indeed: And great cauſe have we all highly to bleſſe God, that hath made our lot to fall in ſo faire a ground: That we were not borne, to inherit a lie; that we were borne to keep this Feaſt of this Meeting. For, bid any of them all but ſhew you the way, how to ſatisfie Juſtice ſoundly, and to make her come to this meeting; how GODS Word may be true, and His worke juſt, and the Sinner finde mercy and be ſaved for all that: They cannot. The Chriſtian only can do it and none elſe. All beſide for lack of this, paſſe by the wounded man, and let him lie ſtill and bleed to death.

Ver. 9.

Pſal. 16. 1.

Luk. 10. 31, 32.

Bid the Turke: All he can ſay, is Mahomets prayer ſhall be upon you. Mahomets prayer, what is that? Say he were (that, he was not) a juſt man, a true Prophet; What can his prayers doe, but move Mercy. But, GODS Juſtice, how is that anſwered? Who ſhall ſatisfie that? Not prayers; Juſtice is not moved with them; heares them not; goes on to ſentence, for all them. He can goe no further: he cannot make juſtice meet.

Heb. 9. 22.

Heb. 10. 4.

Bid the Heathen; he ſayes better yet, than the Turk. They ſaw, that without ſhedding of blood there was no ſatisfying Juſtice; and ſo, no remiſſion of ſinne. To ſatisfie her, ſacrifices they had, of beaſts. But, it is impoſſible, (as the Apoſtle well notes) that the blood of Buls or Goats ſhould ſatisfie for our ſins: A man ſin, and a beaſt die? Juſtice will none of that. What then, will ye go as far as ſome did, the fruit of my body, for the ſin of my ſoule? Nor that neither. For, if it were the firſt born, the firſt borne was born in Sin, and Sin, for Sin, can never ſatisfie. This Meeting will not be there.

Mic. 6. 7.

Bid

Bid the Iew, he can but tell you of his Lamb, neither. And, while time was, that was not amiſſe; while it ſtood in reference, to Saint Iohn Baptiſts Lamb, the LAMBE of GOD, this day, yeaned: as having the operation, the working, in the vertue of that. That being now paſt, there is no more in the Iewe's, then in the Gentiles ſacrifice. Beaſts, both: both, ſhort of ſatisfying. So, for all that theſe can do, or ſay, no meeting will there be had. Ioh. 1. 29.

Only the Chriſtian Religion, that ſhews the true way. There is One, there, thus ſpeaketh to Iuſtice: Sacrifice and ſin offerings thou wouldeſt not have; then ſaid I, Lo I come. He, of whom it is written, in the volume of the booke, that He ſhould do that feat; Corpus autem aptaſti mihi, Make him a body to do it in, and he will do it. Give Him an ortus eſt, let Him be but borne, He will make them meet ſtreight; Iuſtice, and all. For, all the world ſees, if order could be taken, that He, that the Son of GOD, the Word and truth eternall, would ſay Lo I come; would take our nature upon Him; and, in it, lay downe his ſoule, an offering for ſin; there were good hope of contenting Iuſtice, and that the meeting would go forward. Deus ſanguine in ſuo, GOD with his blood; What ſin in the world would not that ſerve for? What Iuſtice, in heaven or earth, would not that ſatisfie? If ye ſpeake of an expiation, a ranſome, an ἀντάλλαγμα (CHRISTS own word) a perfect commutation, there it is. This had, Iuſtice will meet, embrace, kiſſe Mercy, ſhake hands, joyne (now) friends; Inveni enim in quo repropitier, I have found that now, wherewith I hold my ſelfe fully content and pleaſed. This way, ye ſhall make them meet; or els, let it alone for ever. Pſal. 40. 6. &c. Eph. 5. 2. Mat. 16. 26. Iob. 32. 13.

VER. XI.

Truth ſhall budde out of the earth; and Righteouſneſſe ſhall looke downe from Heaven.

3 The Birth. Veritas orta eſt de terrâ.

AND this is it, the Chriſtian Religion ſets before us: how the Sonne of the moſt High GOD of heaven and earth tooke on Him our Nature, that, in our nature, for our nature, He might make to GOD (even ſtando in terminis juſtitiæ ſuæ, as the Schoolemen ſpeake, ſtanding on the termes of his moſt exact ſtrict juſtice) a compleat, full, every way ſufficient ſatisfaction. And this (lo) makes the meeting. This honour hath the Chriſtian Religion above all other; this glory doth dwell in our land; that theſe foure, by CHRISTS Birth, in it, are brought, not only to obviaverunt ſibi, but even to & oſculatæ ſunt.

And, if this be the glory, be not they the ſhame of Chriſtian profeſſion, that cheriſh in their boſomes, and entertaine with ſtipends ſuch, as are come to this (phrenſie, I will call it) to ſay; what needs any ſatisfaction? what care we, whether Iuſtice meet or no? that is (in effect) what needs CHRIST? Cannot GOD forgive offences to Him made, of His free goodneſſe, of His meere mercy, without putting His SONNE to all this paine? Fond men! If He would quit His Iuſtice, or wave His truth, He could: But, His juſtice and truth are to Him as eſſentiall, as intrinſecally eſſentiall, as His Mercy: of equall regard every way as deare to Him. Iuſtice otherwiſe remains unſatisfied: and ſatisfied it muſt be, either on Him, or on us. For, with beaſts, or prayers it will not be: And it will hold off, till it be. If Iuſtice be not ſo met with, it will meet with them: And, they had better meet a ſhe beare robbed of her whelps, then meet Iuſtice out of CHRISTS perſence. Prov. 7. 2.

To us, they meet, this day, at the Child-houſe. For, theſe great Lights could not thus meet, but they muſt portend ſome great matter, as it might be ſome great birth toward. The Aſtrologers make us believe, that in the Horoſcope of CHRISTS Nativity there was a great Trigon of (I wot not what) Stars met together. Whether a Trigon or no; this Tetragon (I am ſure) there was, theſe were all (then) in conjunction, all in the aſcendent, all above the Horizon at once, At Orta eſt the Birth, of Veritas the truth, de terrâ from the earth; The Occaſion of drawing theſe foure together.

* Ioh. 14. 6.

Veritas will fit CHRIST well, who, of himſelfe ſaid, * Ego ſum veritas, I am the truth. So is He: Not that of the former Verſe, which is but veritas ſecunda, the truth ſpoken or uttered forth: He, the Veritas prima, the firſt truth, within. That depends upon this. Then are the words uttered true, when there is an adæquation between them and the mind. So, the firſt Truth He is.

And Veritas ſecunda, too.
2. Cor. 1. 2

The firſt and laſt both. For now, by His comming, He is the adæquation of the Word and the Worke, the Promiſe and the Performance. That way, He is truth too: The truth of all Types, the truth of all Prophecies: For, in Him, are all the Promiſes, yea and Amen: Yea, in the firſt truth, Amen, in the laſt. That actuall verifying is the truth, when all is done: and, that He is, by His birth.

And, as the truth fits His Nature, ſo doth earth, Man. Of whom, GOD; [a] Earth thou art: To whom the Prophet thriſe over; [b] Earth heare the word of the LORD: By whom, the Wiſe man, [c] Quid ſuperbis, Why ſhould earth be proud? [d] Germinet terra ſalvatorem, Let this earth bring forth a SAVIOUR, be the terra promiſſionis, the Bleſſed Virgin, who was, in this, the Land of Promiſe. So was this very place applyed by Irenæus in his time, who touched the Apoſtles times: So, by Lactantius. So, by S. Hierom, and S. Auguſtine. Thoſe foure meet in this ſenſe, as do the foure in the Text: Quid eſt veritas de terrâ orta? eſt Chriſtus de fœminâ natus; Quid eſt veritas? Filius Dei: Quid terrâ? Caro noſtra: What, the Truth? CHRIST: What, the earth? Our fleſh: In thoſe words they finde this Feaſt all.

a a De terra.
b Orta de.

For Orta eſt it is double: Therefore de terrâ is well added. Another Ortus he had, de cœlo: to wit, His heavenly Divine nature, which, as the day, ſprung from on high; and He, in regard of it, called Oriens, by Zachary in the New Teſtament. But this (here) is de terrâ; for, the word (properly) ſignifies, the ſhooting forth of a ſprigg out of the ground: and He, in regard of this Ortus, called the Branch, by Zachary in the Old.

2 And, there is more in Orta. For (it is Rabbi Moſes note,) that is (properly) when it ſpringeth forth of it ſelfe, as the field flowers doe, without any ſeed caſt in by the hand of man; ſo (ſaith he) ſhould the MESSIAS come: Take His Nature not only in, but de, of the earth. Not bring it with Him from heaven (the errour of the brain-ſicke Anabaptiſt,) but take it of the earth: be the womans ſeed, made of a woman, out of the loynes of DAVID: Virga de radice Ieſſe, the Root of Ieſſe: Nothing more plaine.

a Orta eſt.

3 And yet more from orta eſt. For, that the truth, while it is yet unaccompliſht, but in promiſe only, it is but (as the Seed under ground) hid and covered with earth, as if no ſuch thing were: aſſone as ever it is actually accompliſhed (as this day) then doth it ſpring forth (as it were,) is to be ſeene above ground; then Orta eſt de terrâ, in very deed,

4 The Effect.

Of the effect, now. Births are and have beene, divers times, the ending of great diſſentions: As was this here: For, by this Birth, took end the two great Houſes: An union of them by it.

On Truth: ſhe is gained

Firſt, by this, Truth is gained; Truth will meet now. That truth will come to this truth, tanquam minus dignum, ad magis dignum, as the Abſtract to the Archetype. And, Truth, being now borne of our Nature it will never (we may be ſure) be againſt our Nature: being come of the earth, it will be true to his own countrey; being made man, will be for man now, all He can.

By this meanes, one of the oppoſites is drawne away, from the other: Got to be on our ſide. It is three to one, now. Righteouſneſſe is left all alone; and there is good hope, ſhe will not ſtand out long. For (lo) here is good newes; firſt, that reſpexit de cœlo, ſhe yet lookes down from heaven, now.

On Righteouſnes

So as, this birth in earth (you ſee) workes in heaven; and, by name, upon Righteouſneſſe, there. For, though there were none in heaven, but it wrought upon them; yet, the Pſalme mentions none, but Righteouſneſſe. For, (of all) ſhe the leaſt likely: and, if ſhe be wrought on, the reſt there is no doubt of. How can there? they are all woon to us already.

With

With Righteouſneſſe, it works two wayes: Firſt, down ſhe lookes. Whether is was, that ſhe miſſed Truth, to ſee what was become of her, and not finding her in heaven, caſt her eye to the earth. But there, when ſhe beheld Verbum caro factum, the word fleſh, the Truth freſhly ſprung there, where it had beene a ſtrange plant long time before, Aſpexit and Reſpexit, ſhe looked and looked againe at it. For, a Sight it was, to move, to draw the eye; yea, a ſight for Heaven to be a Spectator of; for the Angels, to come downe and looke at; for Righteouſneſſe it ſelf to do ſo too. Παρακύψαι is the Angels word (in S. Peter:) Διακύψαι is the Septuagint's word here: both meane one thing. The Greeke word is to looke (as we ſay) wiſhly at it, as if we would looke διὰ, even through it; the Hebrew word, (that) is, as if Righteouſneſſe did beat out a window: So deſirous was ſhe, to behold this Sight.

1 She lookes downe.

1 Pet. 1. 12.

And no mervaile; for, what could Righteouſneſſe deſire to ſee, and ſatisfie her ſelf with, that, in Him, was not to be ſeen? A cleane birth, an holy life, an innocent death; a Spirit and a mouth without guile; a ſoule and a body without ſinne. In Him, ſhe beheld them all. Them, and what ſoever els might yeeld her full ſatisfaction: Lay judgement to the rule, and righteouſneſſe in the ballance, nothing oblique, will be found in Him, nothing, but ſtreight for the rule; nothing minus habens, but full weight for the ballance.

Thus, when Truth, from the earth; then, Righteouſneſſe, from heaven. Then: but not before. Before, Righteouſneſſe had no proſpect, no window open this way. She turned away her face; ſhut her eyes; clapt to the caſement; would not abide ſo much as to look hither, at us a ſort of forlorn ſinners: not vouchſafe us once the caſt of her eye. The caſe is now altered. Upon this ſight, ſhe is not only content, in ſome ſort, to condeſcend to do it, but ſhe breaks a window through, to do it. And then, and ever ſince this [Orta eſt,] ſhe looks upon the earth with a good aſpect; and a good aſpect, in theſe cæleſtiall lights, is never without ſome good influence withall.

But then (within a verſe after,) not only downe ſhe lookes, but downe ſhe comes. Such a power attractive is there, in this Birth. And, comming, ſhe doth two things: 1 Meets firſt; for, upon the view of this birth, they all ran firſt, and Kiſſed the Sonne: 2 And that done Truth ran to Mercy, and embraced her; and Righteouſneſſe to Peace, and Kiſſed her. They that had ſo long beene parted, and ſtood out in difference, now meet, and are made friends: Howſoever (before) removed, in ortu veritatis, obviaverunt ſibi; howſoever (before) eſtranged, now, oſculatæ ſunt.

Verſ. 2.
1 To meet.
2 To kiſſe.

Luk. 1. 77.

And, at that birth of His, well met they all, in whom they meet all: The Truth He is; and per viſcera Miſericordiæ He came, through the tender mercies of our GOD; and He is made to us Righteouſneſſe; and He is our Peace. All meet in Him; for indeed, all He is; that, no marvaile, they all foure meet, where He is, that is all foure.

1 Cor. 1. 30.
Eph. 2. 14.

And, at this meeting, Righteouſneſſe, ſhe was not ſo of-ward before, but ſhe is now as forward; as forward, as any of the reſt. Mark theſe three.

Let not Peace prevent her (as Mercy did Truth;) but, as Mercy to Truth, firſt; ſo, ſhe (firſt) to Peace: as forward as Mercy every way.

2 Nay, more forward than Mercy: for Mercy doth but meet truth, and there is all; but ſhe, (as more affectionate) not only meets Peace, but Kiſſes her. And (indeed) Righteouſneſſe was to do more, (even, to kiſſe,) that it might be a pledge of forgetting all former unkindneſſe; that we may be ſure ſhe is perfectly reconciled now.

3 And one more yet (to ſhew her the moſt forward of them all,) out of the laſt Verſe. At this meeting, ſhe followes not, drawes not behind, ſhe will not goe with them: She is before, leaves them to come after, and beare the traine: She (as David) is before the Arke: puts S. Iohn Baptiſt from his office, for the time; Righteouſneſſe is his forerunner: Righteouſneſſe ſhall go before, tread the way before Him; the foremoſt now of all the company. By all which, ye may know, what a looke it was, ſhe looked with from Heaven.

Verſ. 13.

Thus ye ſee, CHRIST, by His comming, hath pacified the things in Heaven. A peece of Hoſanna, is pax in cælis: There cannot be pax in terris, till there it be, firſt. But, no ſooner there it is, but it is peace in earth ſtreight, which (accordingly) was,

Coloſ. 1. 20.

Luk.2.14. this day proclaimed by the Angels. So, by the vertue of this birth, heaven is at peace with it ſelf: and heaven, with earth, is now at peace. So is earth too, with it ſelf, and a fulfilling of the Text by this meeting is, there, too.

Rom 9.4. The Iewes they repreſent truth; to them it belongeth properly. For, Truth was, where were Eloquia Dei, the Oracles of GOD: and they were with the Iew. The Gentiles they claime by Mercy, that is their vertue: Where was Mercy, but where was miſery?

Luk.1.79. and where was miſery, but with them that lay in darkneſſe in the ſhadow of death? And, that was the Gentiles caſe, before this orta eſt. But, when the partition wall was broken down, and the two met in one, then alſo (in a ſenſe) Mercy and truth met together. So, theſe two.

And ſo, the other two likewiſe. For, Righteouſneſſe, ſhe was where the Law was, (for, that the rule of righteouſneſſe,) where the Covenant of the Old Teſtament was, doe this and live (the very voice of Iuſtice:) But, Peace was, where CHRIST was, in the Goſpell, Ipſe eſt Pax noſtra, for He is our Peace: Peace, and Peace-maker both, Qui fecit utrunque unum, that hath made the Law and the Goſpell, the Old Teſtament and the New, to be bound together (now) both in one volume.

II. Thus we have done with CHRIST. I would now apply this meeting to our ſelves another while. For, I aske; did this hold; did theſe meet only in CHRIST? Do they not in Chriſtianity likewiſe? Yes, there, too. With CHRIST came Chriſtianity: look, what in His Birth, now; in the new birth of every one, that ſhall be the better by it; even the ſame meeting of the very ſame vertues, all.

Of this meeting in Chriſtianity.

Mercy and Truth (firſt) to meet. Truth of confeſſion; confeſſion of our ſins; which if with fig-leaves we ſeek to cover, and confeſſe not, there is no truth in us. And, ſome

1 Ioh.1.8. truth there is to be (at leaſt this truth) or, no meeting with Mercy. But, when this truth commeth forth, mercy meeteth it ſtreight. Will ye ſee the meeting? Peccavi (ſaid DAVID) there is truth: Tranſtulit Dominus peccatum (ſaith Nathan,) there is mercy; Mercy

2 Sam.12.13. and Truth met together. Homo in terris, per veritatem ſtimulatus, peccaſſe ſe confitebatur; & Deus in cœlis, per miſericordiam flexus, confitentis miſerebatur. Truth pricked man to confeſſe his ſinnes; and Mercy moved God to pity him confeſſing, and ſend Mercy to meet Truth.

Will ye go on to the other Verſe? It holds there too (this.) For, where a true confeſſion is by man made, Veritas de terrâ orta eſt, Truth is budded out of the earth. And ſo it muſt, yet Righteouſneſſe will give us a good looke from Heaven. But will, aſſone as it is: for, when this truth ſprings freely from the earth, to our own condemnation; immediately upon it, Righteouſneſſe ſhews her ſelf from Heaven, to our juſtification. Will ye ſee

Luk.18.14. this too? Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner, (there is Truth from the earth;) deſcendit domum ſuam juſtificatus, (there is Righteouſneſſe from Heaven.)

But, (will ye mark:) Here are two truths, and in either Verſe one. This later, is the truth of Veritas orta eſt, of CHRISTS Religion. And in this treaty, it was an article of Inprimis, mercy not to meet any, but them that profeſſe the truth of CHRISTS birth from the earth. Both theſe were borne together: by and by, upon the birth of CHRIST (the truth,) the other birth alſo, of Chriſtian truth, did flouriſh and ſpread it ſelfe all over the earth. The whole world (before) given over, and even growne over, with Idolatry, quite covered with the miſt of errour and ignorance, began then to entertaine the Chriſtian profeſſion, (and by it to worſhip God in ſpirit and Truth,) the true Religion, which is never true, if it have not this meeting: And this meeting it cannot have, if it have not the meanes of it, ortus veritatis de terrâ.

The ſame ſay we likewiſe, for the Righteouſneſſe which looked downe, and ſhewed her ſelfe. It was not that of the Law, (which never came paſt the top of Mount Sinai,) but a new righteouſneſſe, caſt in a new mould; a heavenly one, which never ſaw the earth (nor the earth it) before, before this birth; which is, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt revealed in His Goſpell, when that Truth ſprang, this righteouſneſſe looked downe upon it.

Now,

Now, as this of Mercy and Truth enter us; ſo truth (not truth alone, but truth with truth's paire,) with righteouſneſſe, carry us forward to God. Truth is not enough; not the truth of Religion, never ſo knowne, never ſo profeſſed; not without Righteouſneſſe. Truth is but the light, to guide us; Righteouſneſſe is the way, to bring us thither. A light is to ſee by: A way is to goe in: So is righteouſneſſe. It followes ſtraight, ponet greſſus in viâ, Righteouſneſſe ſhall ſet us in the way of His ſteppes: Steppes, that is, the courſe of life. For, ſcienti (by knowledge of the truth,) and not facienti, (by the practiſe of righteouſneſſe;) peccatum eſt illi (ſaith S. Iames;) and plagæ multæ, ſaith S. Iames his Maſter. Sinne, in that man that ſerves theſe two, is leſſe pardonable, and more puniſhable, than in any other. Ver. 13. Iam. 4. 17. Luc. 12. 47.

And then turne Righteouſneſſe to Peace, and they will not meet barely, but (more than meet) Kiſſe, in ſigne, there is betweene them more than ordinary affection. Fac juſtitiam, & habebis pacem, (S. Auguſtine ſtands much on this.) Eſchew evill and doe good, ſaith he, (there is Righteouſneſſe:) and then, ſeeke peace, and ye ſhall not be long in ſeeking it; She will come forth, her ſelfe, to meet Righteouſneſſe and kiſſe her. And this he aſſures us, as a certaine ſigne, to know on the one ſide, true righteouſneſſe, (for, that tends to peace, not to queſtions and brabbles, whereof there never will be end:) So, on the other ſide, true peace; that kiſſes righteouſneſſe, comes not together (like Sampſons Foxes) by the tailes, by indirect meanes, but cleerely and fairely; Such meanes, as all the world will confeſſe, to be right and good. Pſal. 34. 14. Iud. 15. 4.

Now mark the order, how they ſtand. Mercy leades to Truth, and the knowledg of it; and Truth to righteouſneſſe, and the practiſe of it; and Righteouſneſſe to Peace, and the waies of it, Guides our feet (firſt) into the way of peace. And, ſuch a way ſhall there alwayes be (do all the Controverſies Writers what they can:) a faire way agreed upon of all ſides, queſtioned by none, in which, who ſo orders his ſteps aright, may ſee the ſalvation of our God, Even the way here chalked out before us: To ſhew mercy, and ſpeake truth; do righteouſneſſe, and follow peace. And by this rule proceeding in the points whereto we are come already, even thoſe truths, wherein we are otherwiſe minded, would in due time be revealed unto us. Luk. 1. 79.

This is Zacharies peace; and this of his well followed, in the end will bring us Simeons peace, Nunc dimittis in pace; to be diſmiſſed, to depart hence in peace: and Pax in noviſſimo, Peace at the latter end, is worth all. Peace, in the end, is a bleſſed end; and the beginning of a Peace, which never ſhall have end. Mercy our beginning, and Peace our end. This for the meeting; as in CHRIST, ſo in Chriſtianity, or the courſe of a Chriſtian mans life. Luk. 2. 29.

The cohtinuance of this meeting.

Now a word, for the continuance of this meeting. For, I aske again: Met they to part? By no meanes; but, as they be together (now,) ſo to continue ſtill. We had much adoe to get them together thus: Now we have them ſo, let us keep them ſo in any wiſe. For, as this meeting made Chriſtianity firſt: So, there is nothing marres it, but the breaking it off againe: No greater bane, to it, than the parting of theſe.

Let me tell you this: S. Auguſtine is very earneſt upon the point, of the keeping of righteouſneſſe and peace, (upon this Pſalme and this Verſe;) and of truth and mercy together, (in the next,) upon miſericors and verax, againſt them that would lay hold on mercy and let goe truth. O (ſaith he) that will not be: they met together, they will not part now; Either, without either, will not be had. And ſo, of the two others. There be, that would have Peace, and paſſe by Righteouſneſſe: Tu fortè unam habere vis, & alteram non vis (ſaith he,) you would gladly have one (Peace;) and for Righteouſneſſe, you could be contented to ſpare it. Aske any, would you have Peace? With all my heart, he will anſwer. There is no having one without the other; Oſculantur hæ, amant hæ; why they kiſſe, they love together. Si amicam pacis non amaveris, non amabit te pax, if ye love not her friend (that is, Righteouſneſſe) ſhe will none of your love. Take that from S. Auguſtine.

Set this downe then; Chriſtianity is a meeting: One cannot meet: Two there muſt be, and they may. But it is not a meeting of two; but, of two, with two: ſo, no

leſſe than foure. As CHRIST Himſelf was not one nature, So neither doth Chriſtianity conſiſt in any one vertue: Not under foure. There is a quaternion in CHTIST, His [1] Eſſence, and His [2] Perſon, (ἐσ α, and hypoſtaſis,) in divinis, His [3] fleſh, and His [4] reaſonable ſoule, in humanis. Anſwerable to theſe foure, are theſe here: theſe foure, to His foure.

And, as it is a meeting, ſo a Croſſe meeting, of foure Vertues, that ſeeme to be in a kind of oppoſition (as hath been noted.) No matter for that. They will make the better refraction; the coole of one, allay the heat; the moiſt of one, temper the drought of the other. The ſoft vertues, need to be quickned; the more forward, to be kept from. Altum ſapere. So are the elements, of which our bodie: So are the foure winds, of which our breath doth conſiſt, which gives us life. And theſe (in the Text) have an analogie, or correſpondence, with the elements, obſerved by the Ancients. [1] Truth, as the earth, which is not moved at anytime: [3] Quaſi fluvius Pax (ſaith Eſay) Peace as a water-ſtreame, the quills whereof make glad the City of our GOD. [3] Mercy, we breath and live by, no leſſe than we do by aire: and [4] Righteouſneſſe, the ventura eſt judicare ſæculum per ignem, in that element.

Eſay 66.12.
Eſay 66.16.

You may happen finde one of theſe, in Scripture, ſtood much upon, and of the other three nothing ſaid there, but all left out; Conceive of it, as a figure (Synecdoche they call it.) As, ye have (here) man called earth; yet is he not on earth alone, but all the other three elements as well. No more is Chriſtianity any one, but by Synecdoche: but in very deed, a meeting of them all foure.

Ioh. 17.3.

It deceived the Gnoſtique, this place: This is eternall life to know thee. Knowledge (ſaith he) is it; As if, it were all: and ſo, he bade care for nothing elſe, but to know, and knowing, live as they liſt. The Encratite, he was a far gone the other way; He lived ſtraightly, and his tenet was, non eſt curandum quid quiſque credat, Id curandum modò quod quiſque faciat: So that ye hold a ſtraight courſe of life, it skils not what ye hold in point of faith. No meeting, with theſe: Single vertues all.

Yes, it skils. For both theſe were wrong; both goe for Hereticks. Chriſtianity is a meeting; and to this meeting, there goe Pia dogmata, as well as, Bona opera; Righteouſneſſe, as well as Truth. Erre not this error then, to ſingle any out, (as it were) in diſgrace of the reſt; Say not, one will ſerve the turne, what ſhould we do with the reſt of the foure; Take not a figure, and make of it a plaine ſpeech; Seek not to be ſaved by Synecdoche. Each of theſe is a quarter of Chriſtianity, you ſhall never while you live make it ſerve for the whole.

The truth is, ſever them, and farwell all; take any one from the reſt, and it is as much as the whole is worth. For (as Bernard well obſerved) non ſunt virtutes ſi ſeparentur, upon their ſeparation they ceaſe to be vertues. For, how looſe a thing is mercy, if it be quite devoid of Iuſtice? We call it fooliſh pity. And how harſh a thing Iuſtice, if it be utterly without all temper of mercy? Summa injuria then (that is) Injuſtice at the higheſt. Mercy, take truth away, what hold is there of it, who will truſt it? Truth, take Mercy from it, it is Severity, rather than verity: Then Righteouſneſſe, without Peace; certainly wrong is much better; better than perpetuall brabling: And Peace without righteouſneſſe; better a ſword far. This, if you ſunder them. But, temper theſe together, and how bleſſed a mixture! Set a ſong of all foure, and how heavenly a melodie!

Entertain them then all foure; [1] Hope in mercy; [2] Faith in truth; [3] Feare of righteouſneſſe; [4] Love of peace: O quàm præclara concordia! O how loving a knot! how by all meanes to be maintained! how great pity to part it!

The time of his meeting.

A little of the Time (now,) when this meeting would be. No time amiſſe: no day in the yeare, but upon intreaty, they will be got to meet. Yet if any one day have a prerogative more than another, of all the dayes in the yeare, on this day moſt kindly; the day we hold holy to the memory of this meeting; the day of orta eſt, the occaſion of it.

In remembrance of the firſt meeting, then, they are apt and willing to meet upon it againe; forward (ever) to meet, this day, they firſt met of themſelves. But, CHRIST this day being born, this day, to meet of courſe. One ſpeciall end, that He was born, was that, that, at His birth, this meeting might be. If to day then they ſhould not meet, that were in a ſort to evacuate CHRISTS birth: if there ſhould be a Veritas orta, without an obviaverunt ſibi: So that if we procure it not, we had as good keep no Feaſt at all.

What is then the proper work of this day, but ſtill to renew this meeting on it? For, CHRISTS birth we cannot entertaine, but all theſe we muſt too; Neceſſarie attendants upon it, every one. They be the vertues of His Nativitie, theſe. At His birth, CHRIST bethought Himſelfe of all the vertues, which He would have to attend on Him, then; and theſe He made choiſe of, then, and for ever, to be the vertues of this Feaſt.

The ſooner and the better to procure this meeting, the Church meets us (as Melchiſedek did Abraham) with bread and wine; but, of a higher nature than his, far: prepares (ever) this day a love-feaſt, whereat they may the rather meet. Where, Truth from the earth, may looke up to heaven and confeſſe; and Righteouſneſſe from heaven, may looke down to earth and pardon: where we may ſhew Mercy, in giving where need is; and offer Peace, in forgiving where cauſe is; that ſo, there may be an obviaverunt, a meeting, of all hands.

And even ſo then let there be. So, may our end be as the end of the Firſt Verſe in peace; and as the end of the Second, in Heaven. So, may all the bleſsings that came to mankind by this meeting, or by the birth of CHRIST (the cauſe of it) meet in us and remaine upon us: till, as we now meet together, at the Birth; So we may then meet in a perfect man, in the meaſure of the fulneſſe of the age of CHRIST: As meet (now) at the LAMBES yeaning; ſo meet then, at the LAMBES marriage: be caught up in the cloudes (then) to meet Him and there to reigne for ever with Him, in His Kingdome of GLORY. Eph. 4. 13. 1 Theſ. 4. 17.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Friday, the XXV. of December,
A. D. MDCXVIII. being CHRISTMAS Day.

LUK. Chap. II. Ver. XII. XIII.

Et hoc erit vobis Signum, &c.

And this ſhall be a Signe unto you: ye ſhall finde the Childe ſwadled, and layed in a cratch.
And ſtreightway there was, with the Angell, a multitude of heavenly ſouldiers, praiſing GOD, and ſaying, Glory be to GOD on high, &c.

IF theſe three verſes, the points be two: [1] The Shepheards Signe: and [2] the Angels Song. The Signe is a remaine of Angelus ad Paſtores, the Angels ſpeech to the Shepheards: We called it, as the Angell himſelfe called it, a Sermon: Evangelizo (the word, he uſeth) is, to preach.

Of which Sermon there are two parts: [1] His Birth (the Verſe before,) [2] His Finding (in this.) For, this is a double Feaſt: not only, the Feaſt of His Nativity; but the Feaſt of His Invention alſo. Therefore the Angell makes not an end with [unto you is borne:] but tels them further; it is not enough, CHRIST is borne; but to take benefit by His Birth, we are to find Him. Natus eſt, His part; Invenietis, ours.

Of Natus eſt ſomewhat hath formerly been ſaid: Invenietis (now) followes: and followes well. For, what is Natus eſt, without Invenietis? Such a one there is borne; what ſhall we be the better, if we find Him not. As good, not borne, as, not known: To us, all one. Nobis naſcitur, cùm a nobis noſcitur. Borne He may be, before; but nobis, natus, to us He is Borne, when to us He is knowne, when we finde Him; and not before. CHRISTUS inventus, is more then CHRISTUS natus. Set down invenietis then firſt.

Invenietis leads us to Hoc erit Signum. For, how ſhall they finde Him without a Signe? So come we from CHRISTUS natus, to CHRISTUS ſignatus. Natus, borne borne to be found; Signatus, ſigned or marked, that He may be found. Borne He is, that they know: And, when, they know; (hodie.) And, where, they know, in Bethlehem. To Bethlehem they will: but when they come there, how then? In ſuch reſort, the Town ſo full of ſtrangers, as no roome in the Innes, whither ſhould they turn them? What could they wiſh, but O quod erit ſignum! Natus eſt, ô that He were Signatus! O that we had a ſigne to find Him by!

Their wiſh is honeſt and good: And pity, any that ſeekes Chriſt ſhould want a ſigne, to find Him by: the Angell will not ſuffer that; But, before he end his ſpeech, he takes order for their Signe: and this it is. When ye come to Bethlehem, never ſearch in any houſe, or chamber; In a ſtable, there, ſhall you find a Babe ſwadled and laid in a manger; You would little thinke it, but that is He. And ſo, Signo dato, this Sign given, the Sermon ends. For, to finde CHRIST is all: All, in all. The Diviſion I.

A Sermon would have an Antheme of courſe; It hath ſo. And one ſuitable, if it might be: an Angell preached it, and no man: It would be a Quiere of Angels, and not of men, to ſing it. So it is Gloria in excelſis, all the Fathers call it Hymnum Angelicum, the Angels Hymne, or Antheme.

This is ſet down in the two latter verſes: the [1] Quiere that ſing it, in the former: the [2] Song it ſelfe (the dittie of it ſo) in the latter. 1. The Quiere: in it five. 1 Who? That there were certaine heavenly Perſonages firſt. 2. In what habit? that in the habit of ſouldiers to ſee to. 3. What number? that a great multitude of them. 4. What they did: that they tooke up this Hymne and fell on praiſing God. 5. And fifthly, When? That they did it inſtantly, upon the ſpeech ended. I 1 1

The Song: That conſiſts of three ſtreines. There are in it [1] God, [2] Earth, and [3] Men, theſe three firſt. And then, three to theſe three: [1] Glory, [2] Peace, [3] Good-will: Each ſorted to other: [1] Glory, to GOD; [2] Peace, to the Earth; [3] to Men, a Good-Will. 2

So have you the ſign and the Song: the one to ballance or counterpeize the other; the Song to ſing away the Signe; to make amends, for the manger. The Signe, very poore and meane; the Song, exceeding high and heavenly. Paupertas in imis, the Sign; povertie at the loweſt: Gloria in excelſis, the Song, Glory at the higheſt. That well might Leo aske, Quis eſt iſte puer, tam parvus, tam magnus? What Child is this ſo little and ſo great withall? Tam parvus, ut in præſepi jaceat: Tam magnus, ut Ei concinant Angeli. So little, as He lies in a Cratch: So great though, as He hath Angels to ſing to Him; the whole Quiere of heaven, to make Him melodie. It is a courſe (this) the HOLY GHOST began it (here,) at His Birth, and after obſerved it all along, ſociare ima ſummis, & inſolita ſolitis temperare; to couple low, and high together, and to temper things meane and uſuall, with others as ſtrange every way.

Out of theſe we ſhall learne, Firſt, what our dutie is, to find CHRIST. The Angell preſuppoſes this; that, being borne we will not leave, till we have found Him; till we can ſay, (it was the firſt word of the firſt Apoſtle) εὑρήκαμεν, We have found, found the Meſſias. Invenietis: by all meanes to finde Chriſt. [2] Then, how to find Him, at what ſigne. [3] And laſt, when we have found Him, how to ſalute Him, with what words to praiſe GOD, for Him. For Him: both for His birth; and for His Invention. All conſidered, His Invention, to us, no leſſe behoofefull, then His Nativity. And this day to be no leſſe ſolemnized, for invenietis His finding, then for natus eſt His very Birth it ſelfe. It is more often found, in the firſt Fathers, by the name of Theophania, His appearance or being found; then by the name Genethlia, of being borne into the world. The Angels Evangelizo reacheth to both: their Gloria in excelſis is ſung for both. 3 Ioh 1.41.

I. THe worke of the day, is invenietis, to find Christ. We ſhall not be the better for natus eſt, if we find Him not. Find Him we cannot, if (firſt) we find not a Signe to find Him by. Erit vobis ſignum, and Hoc erit (ſaith the Angell) a Signe ye ſhall have; and this ſhall be it: Ye ſhall finde him ſwadled and laid in a Manger.

I The Signe. Signes never come amiſſe; but, are (then) ſo neceſſary, as we cannot miſſe them, when we ſhould miſſe without them: when, no Signe, no invenietis: As, here. For, if a Signe; if this Signe had not beene given, no invenietis: Christ had not beene found. Not beene found; for, never had beene ſought, in ſuch a place. Had not the Angell thither directed the Shepheards; had not the Star thither pointed the Magi, neither tone, nor tother would ever, there have ſought Him. A non eſt inventus had beene returned by both.

And reaſon: For ſome kind of proportion there would be betweene Signum, and Signatum: And, if the Signe be a place (as here) between Locus, and Locatus. A chiefe Perſon, in a chiefe Place; a Lord and Saviour, ſomthing Lord and Saviour-like. To Bethlehem they will. Set the Signe by, let them alone, ſay nothin g to them: When they came thither, they would never goe to an Inne, or Oſtrie, but to the very beſt houſe in the Towne. Or, if to an Inne, to the faireſt chamber in it: Or, to a Chamber at the leaſt: Never, to the Stable; there to look in the manger, for Chriſtus Dominus. To the ſtable we go to look for an horſe; To the Crib for bos cognovit & aſinus; for one of them; Eſay 1.3. Never, thither, to ſeek for the Saviour of the world.

Nay, if in their ſearch, paſſing by, by hap, they had lighted upon ſuch a Birth; a Child ſo lying; it may be they would have pitied the poore Babe and the Mother: but have gone on their way, and ſought farther: Never (I dare ſay) taken Him, for CHRIST the Lord. And if one ſhould have bid them, Stay, for this is the Child, the Angell ſpake of; they would have ſhaken him off, and ſaid, with as great skorne as 1 Sam.16. 27. they, 1 *Sam.*10. Nunquid poterit iſte ſalvare nos, what ſhall this be our Saviour trow? For, invenietis is not all, to find Him: but finding Him, to apply the Angels words unto Him; to believe, of this Child thus, there lying, that He ſhould be Chriſt the Saviour, Gaudium omni populo, the joy of the whole earth. It goes hard, this.

We ſaid (when time was) this meſſage was ſo high, as no man meet to bring it, but an Angell of heaven. We ſay now, ex alio capite, this ſigne was ſo unlikely, no man was meet to give it but an Angell only. And it was well, it was an Angell: if it had been any elſe, His Birth would have ſeemd (as His Reſurrection did) λῆρος, a fained tale: No mans Affidavit would have beene taken for it.

What were the Shepheards like to think of this? Sure, thank him for Natus eſt, the newes of His Birth; but, not for His Signe, Erit Signum, they like well: but not, Hoc erit. If He had given them no Signe, it would have troubled them: Now, the Signe given troubles them worſ. For, this Signe they know not what to make of it; It is ſo poore a one, it is enough, to make them halfe in the minde to give over their journey, as not caring for invenietis, whether they find Him or no: If His Signe be no better, as good loſt, as found. Alwayes, this is out of the Evangelizo vobis; no part of it; for, no good newes, thus to find Him.

And we, if we admit a conference with fleſh and blood, when we lay together the Signe, and of whom it is the Signe; we find, to our thinking, a great diſparagement, and (I know not how) thoughts ariſe in our hearts, as if ſome better Sign would have done better. The meaning is, we would find CHRIST (faign;) but we would finde Him, in ſome better place. Half Iewes we are all in this point; we would have a Meſſias in ſtate. Hoc erit, this it ſhall be (ſaith the Angell.) Shall be: but ſhould it be this? No: how ſhould it be, let us ſee; Why, this ſhall be the Signe; Ye ſhall find the Child, not in theſe clouts or cratch, but in a crimſon mantle; in a cradle of ivorie: That (lo) were ſomewhat Saviour-like: Hoc erit ſignum.

But,

But, in vaine take we upon us, to teach the Angell: We would have we know not what. We forget S. Auguſtines, diſtingue tempora: as the time is, the Angell is right; and a fitter Signe could not be aſſigned. VVould we have had Him come in power, and great glorie? and ſo he will come; but not now. He, that commeth here in clouts, He will come in the clouds, one day: But (now) His comming was for another end; and ſo, to be in another manner. His comming (now) was, (as we ſay in the Collect) to viſit us in great humility: and ſo, His Signe to be according.

Nay then, I ſay: Firſt goe to the nature of a Signe, if CHRIST had come in His excellency, that had beene no ſigne, no more than the Sun in the Firmament ſhining in his full ſtrength: Hoc non erit ſignum. Contrary to the courſe of Nature it would be, elſe it is no ſigne. The Sun eclipſed; the Sun in ſackcloth: that is, ſignum in ſole, the ſigne indeed: And that is the ſigne here, the Sun of righteouſneſſe entring into his eclipſe, begins to be darkned, in his firſt point, the point of his Nativity. This is the ſigne (ſay I:) and, that had been none. 1

I ſay againe: It is not only ſignum; that is not all, it is ſignum vobis: We ſhall doe well to looke to vobis. There is a matter, in that: For whom, this ſigne was given: (Not the perſons ſo much, as the condition.) For, if He had been ſo gloriouſly born, ſuch as theſe ſhould never have beene ſuffered to come neare Him. But, this is a ſigne, for you: You, that keepe ſheep and ſuch other poore people; you have a Saviour too. He is not the Saviour of Great ſtates only; but even of poore ſhepheards. The pooreſt of the earth may repaire to Him, being no other place but this; and by this ſigne to find Him: And ſo, hoc erit ſignum vobis. 2

I ſay thirdly, Vobis, and take in our ſelves too. So, Hoc erit ſignum. For, what praiſe or thanks had is beene for us, to have believed in Him, borne in all glorious manner? But, being thus borne, with this ſigne, if now we doe it τῶτο χάρις παρὰ θεῷ (to ſpeake in S. Peters phraſe) this hath thanks and praiſe with God: And ſo, Hoc erit ſignum. 3 1 Pet. 2. 19. 20.

Fourthly, without regard of them, or of us, I ſay, that even in regard of Himſelfe, Hoc erit ſignum. Would there be a proportion betweene the Signe and the Signatum? There is ſo. This holds good proportion with the enſuing courſe of his life, and death. And, (all conſidered,) it is even ſignum adæquatum. We may well begin with CHRIST in the Cratch: We muſt end with CHRIST on the Croſſe. The Cratch is a ſigne of the Croſſe. They that write, de re ruſticâ, deſcribe the forme of making a Cratch Croſſe-wiſe. The ſcandall of the Cratch is a good preparative to the ſcandall of the Croſſe. To be ſwadled thus, as a Child, doth that offend? What then, when ye ſhall ſee Him pinion'd and bound as a malefactor? To lye in a Manger, is that ſo much? how then, when ye ſhall ſee Him hang on the Croſſe? But ſo, -----primo ne diſcrepet imum; that His beginning, and His end may ſuite well and not diſagree, ſic oportuit Chriſtum naſci. Thus ought Chriſt to be borne, and this behoved to be His ſigne. 4

But then to remove this ſcandall, I ſay fiftly: that the leſſe glorious, the more glorious; the leſſe glorious His ſigne, the more glorious He. And even in this reſpect of His glory, He was to be borne under this ſigne. Had He come in the power and great glory, we ſpake of, what great matter had it beene for him (then,) to have done things powerfull, and glorious? But comming in this ſort, theſe ſame panni and præſepe were an evident ſigne, of the power of His might, in nothing ſo manifeſt, as in this, that, from ſo poore a beginning, He was able to advance ſo glorious a worke. It was much, from the babe floting in the flagges of Nilus, in a basket of bulruſhes (Moſes) to gather himſelfe a people, even the Nation and Kingdome of the Iewes, and to deliver His Law. It was infinitely much more, from this babe (here) lying in the Cratch, to work the bringing in of the Gentiles, and the turning about of the whole world, and to publiſh His Goſpell, the power of God to ſalvation. Herein, is power: from His Cratch, to do this. There to lay Him; and, there lying, to make ſo many nations come, and adore Him, as ſince He hath. That if ever in His humility, His judgement were exalted; if His power were ever made perfect in weakneſſe; if ever He ſhewed, that infirmum Dei fortius eſt hominibus, God at the weakeſt, is ſtronger then men in all their ſtrength; Hoc erit ſignum, in this ſigne it was. 5 Exod. 2. 5. Act. 8. 33. 2 Cor. 12. 9. 1 Cor. 1. 25.

A ſigne, cum externa rejicit quòd ſibi ſufficit; in that, He caſts from Him all outward ſignes and meanes, that He is, of himſelfe, all-ſufficient; & nulla indiget niſi ſe, and needs no power but his owne. His Cratch and He will bring this worke to paſſe. His gloria in excelſis will be hoc ipſo excelſior; His glory on high, ſo much the higher, for this, Ever; But now, more than ever: And, in all His ſignes; but, in this, more glorious, then in any, nay, then in all of them. And ſo Hoc erit ſignum, this ſhall be the ſigne: ſhall be, and ſhould be, both.

6 But, I waive all theſe, and ſay ſixthly: Make of the ſigne, what ye will; It skils not what it be; never ſo meane: In the nature of a ſigne, there is nothing, but it may be ſuch; All is, in the thing ſignified. So it carrie us to a rich ſignatum, and worth the finding, what makes it a matter, how meane the ſigne be? We are ſent to a Crib; Not, to an empty Crib; CHRIST is in it: Be the ſigne never ſo ſimple, the ſignatum it carries us to, makes amends. Any ſigne, with ſuch a Signatum.

And I know not the man ſo ſquemiſh, but if, in His ſtable, and under his manger, there were a treaſure hid, and he were ſure of it; but thither he would, and pluck up the planks, and digge and rake for it, and be never a whit offended with the homelineſſe of the place. If then Chriſt be a treaſure (as, in Him are all the treaſures of the wiſedome and bounty of God) what skills it, what be His ſigne. With this, with any other, CHRIST is worth the finding. Though the Cratch be not worth the going to, CHRIST is worth the going for. He is not worthy of CHRIST, that will not goe any whither, to find Chriſt.

7 Laſtly, I would faine know, why ſhould the ſhepheards, why ſhould any be aſhamed, of this Signe? the Angels are not: Non erubeſcit quis quod prædicat, No man proclaimes or preaches of that; makes a Hymne of that, he is aſhamed of. And (indeed,) why ſhould the Angels be aſhamed to report it, ſeeing Chriſtus non eſt confuſus, Chriſt is not aſhamed to weare it. And if He be not, ſo to be found, never let us be, ſo to finde Him.

I conclude then: they that will have a Saviour without ſuch a ſigne, beſt ſtay for the Jewes Meſsias, or get them, for their ſigne, to ſome body elſe. The Angell hath none; the Goſpell knowes none, but this: We muſt take Chriſt as we finde Him; cratch and all. The invention of the cratch, and the invention of Chriſt fall both upon one Feaſt; this day, both: No ſevering of them. All which (I truſt) by this, ſhew plainly, the ſigne was well aſſigned, by the Angell: and ſo (I hope) we will not let the ſhepheards go alone, but go along with them too, for company, to find Chriſt, in hoc ſigno, by this Signe.

But the cratch is gone, many yeares agoe: What is our ſigne now? Why, what was this Signe a ſigne of? There needs no ſtreining at all; of humility (cleere:) Signum humile, Signum humilis. Not alwaies ſo; not with us; where, the higheſt minds will uſe the loweſt ſignes: but, with Chriſt, with ſuch in whom is the minde of Chriſt, there is no odds at all. Ye may ſtrike a tally betweene the ſigne and the Signatum. Humility, then: We ſhall finde Him, by that ſigne, where we find Humility, and not faile: and where that is not, be ſure we ſhall never finde Him. This day, it is not poſſible to keepe of this theme: we cannot but we muſt fall upon it; it is ſo woven into every Text, there is no avoiding it: But, of all, into the Signe, moſt of all. Such a Signe, of ſuch Humility, as never was.

Mat. 12. 38. Signes are taken for wonders: (Maſter we would faine ſee a ſigne, that is, a miracle.) And, in this ſenſe, it is a Signe, to wonder at. Indeed, every word (here) is a wonder: Τὸ ἄρρητος an Infant, Verbum Infans, the Word without a word; the eternall word not able to ſpeak a word; [1] A wonder ſure. [2] And the σπαργανωθὸς, Swadled; and that a wonder too. He, that (as in the 38. of Iob he ſaith) taketh the vaſt body of the maine ſea, turnes is too and fro, as a little childe, and rolls it about with the ſwadling bonds of darknes; He, to come thus into clouts, Himſelfe! [3] But yet all is well; All children are ſo: But, in præſepi, that is it, there is the wonder. Children lye not there; He doth: There lieth He; the Lord of Glory, without all glory. Inſtead of a Palace, a poore ſtable; of a cradle of ſtate, a beaſts cratch; No pillow, but a locke of hay; No hangings, but duſt and and cobwebs; No attendants, but in medio animalium (as the Fathers reade the third of Abakuk:) For, if the Inne were full, the ſtable was not empty, we may be ſure. A Signe this, (nay three, in one,) able to amaze any. Abak. 3. 2.

And it is true (ſaith Solomon, and makes a wonder of it) will God accept a place in earth to receive Him? When he had built Him a ſtately ſumptuous Temple, and meant it by that.) And is that a wonder, if in ſuch a Temple? What is it then, if in a corner of a ſtable, in a cratch there? Will He accept of that trow? If He will, Hoc erit ſignum, indeed. O LORD, O LORD (ſaith King David (his Father) rapt with admiration) how wonderfull! What? why, minoraſti Eum ab Angelis, Thou mad'ſt Him lower than the Angels (for, to CHRIST, doth the Apoſtle apply that verſe Heb. 2.) Lower than the Angels? Nay lower yet (ſaith Eſay in his 53.) Noviſſimus virorum the loweſt of men: Nay, lower yet (ſaith the Angell here,) lower than the loweſt of men. For a ſtable, a cratch, is a place for beaſts not for men. So low. Well may this be ſaid a Signe, in this ſenſe, to wonder at: If it be well looked into, it is able to ſtrike any man into an extaſie. 1 Reg. 6. 27. Pſal. 8. 4. Heb. 2. 6. Eſay. 53. 3.

But if we ſtand but gazing and wondring at this ſigne, the Angell will blame us at the Nativity, As, they did the Apoſtles, for the like, at His Aſcenſion. What learne we by it. Acts 1. 11.

For, loquitur ſignis; ſignes have their ſpeech: and this is no dumb ſigne. VVhat ſaith it then to us? CHRIST (though as yet He cannot ſpeake, as a new borne babe, yet) by it He ſpeakes, and out of His crib (as a Pulpit) this day, preaches to us; and His theme is, Diſcite à me; learne of me, for I am humble: Humble, in my birth, ye all ſee. This is the Præcipe of the Præſepe (as I may call it;) the leſſon of CHRIST's cratch. 2 Vobis, To you. Mat. 11. 29.

A ſigne it is; but not a ſigne at large, indefinitely: Nothing, but hoc erit ſignum. But, ſignum, Vobis (for you:) limited, to ſome, not, to all. For not to ſome others; But, to you, and ſuch as you are, a ſigne it is: a ſigne it is, how to finde Him. A ſigne for whom He was borne, that thus was borne: To whom He, to whom His birth belongs. Sure, humilis naſcitur, humilibus. So He was borne; and, for them that are ſo, He was borne. Such He was found; and, of ſuch He will be found, and of none but ſuch.

But then (as S. Auguſtine ſaith well) ſignum Vobis, ſi ſignum in Vobis: A ſigne for you, if a ſigne in you. For in this ſenſe alſo, it is a ſigne to ſigne us with; a ſignature, to make a marke on us. Theirs, (in the IX. of Ezechiel) that were ſaved, they were marked with the ſigne of Tau in their foreheads: That, is this very ſigne, the marke of Humility, as being the laſt and loweſt letter of the whole Alphabet. Ezek. 9. 4.

And, this ſigne ſhall follow them that believe; and by this marke will Hee know them. By the ſigne, we finde Him; by the ſame will He find us: Invenietis, and inveniemini, by one and the ſame ſigne both. For, nunquam erit aliud Servatoris ſignum, aliud ſervati; Never, He that ſaves, one Signe; they, that ſaved, another. At leaſt, not a quite contrary, but the ſame ſigne, both. By the ſame, that CHRIST found, by the ſame a Chriſtian: Or, to ſpeake more neerely to the day, by the ſame that CHRIST's Birth, by the ſame, the Chriſtians new birth. For, as faith is the vertue appropriate to His Conception (by faith He was conceived, Beata quæ credidit:) So is Humilitie, as proper to His Nativitie: in great Humilitie, this Day, was He borne, and brought into the world. Then, if the ſigne of CHRIST's Birth, be the proper ſigne of a Chriſtians new birth, wherein CHRIST is faſhioned in us anew; Hoc erit ſignum, that they, who to faith have not joyned Humility, are not yet come ſo farre, as to be babes in CHRIST; not yet (as Saint Baſil ſpeakes) come to their σπάργανα σωτηρίας, their ſwadling clouts, in the ſtate of ſalvation. And what time (trow ye) will theſe be come to the meaſure of the full age in CHRIST, that yet are no further forward? Many a μειρακίσκος are there among us,, if this Signe hold. Mark. 16. 17. Luk. 1. 45. 2. 5. Gal. 4. 19. 2 Pet. 1. 5. 6. Mat. 18. 3. Epheſ. 4. 13.

But then, if it bee Signum vobis, to ſome; It is for ſome others, ſignum contra vos: and that is the proud. For, the VVord of God hath two edges: and, if it go one way thus for Humility; it cuts as deep the contrary, againſt Pride. And withall, under one leads us to the cauſe ſtreight, and ſhewes us the malignity of the diſeaſe of pride. For the cure whereof, this ſo profound humility was requiſite in CHRIST. There was one; when time was, tooke the diſeaſe of Ero ſimilis Altiſsimo: And He breathed upon our firſt parents, with this Eritis ſicut Dii, and infected them with it. To make themſelves equall with God, is plaine robberie (ſaith the Apoſtle, Phil. 2.) For that robberie of theirs, was the Son of God robbed (as I may ſay) and quite ſpoyled of His glory. For their puffing up, ἐκένωσε, He was made empty: For their lifting up, ἐταπείνωσε, was He brought thus low: for their comparing with GOD, came He to be compared to the beaſts that periſh: lay in their manger, we ſee.

Eſay 14.14. Gen.3.5. Phil.2.6. Phil.2.7.8. Pſal.49.12.

Never blame the Angell, for giving this ſigne; hee had no other to give. As Chriſt was borne, ſo was he to tender Him. Aske CHRIST, why He would be ſo borne. Of any other child, this could not be asked: They are borne, they neither know where nor how. Of Chriſt it may: He knew both. For, as oblatus eſt, quia voluit: So, natus eſt, He was ſo borne, becauſe he would ſo be. And why would He ſo be? His Ecce venio, His comming was to recover man. Man was to be recovered by the contrary of that, by which he periſhed. By pride he periſhed, that is confeſſed. Then, by Humilitie, to be recovered, according to the rule, Contraria curantur contrariis. So, He to come, in Humilitie. The pride was high; Eritis ſicut Dii: the contrary, as low. factus eſt ſicut jumenta, as low as they; lie in their cratch.

Eſa. 53 7. Zach. 2.10. Gen. 3.5. Pſal. 49 12.

It is ſtrange, this point of Chriſt in the cratch, how tedious, how harſh it is to be ſtood on. Harſh; but to none more, nay none ſo much, as to the proud: And they, of all other, have leaſt cauſe to be offended with it: It is they, that were the cauſe of it. They ſhould not (one would thinke) be offended with their own doing: It is long of them, all this. If there they finde Him, It is they, and none but they, that there laid Him, If He be otherwiſe than He ſhould, their pride is too blame for it. But for it, we had found Him in a better place. And fie upon pride (ſay I,) if it were but for this only: Enough to make us loath this vice, that laid this ſo great a diſgrace (as we count it) upon the Son of GOD.

But marvaile not, if this be ſignum contra, to them a ſigne againſt them; they are againſt it. Well ſaid Bernard: In ſignum poſitum eſt præſepe tuum Domine, ſed in ſignum cui à multis contradicitur; Thy cratch ô Lord is ſet for a ſigne; but, for a ſigne, which of many is ſpoken againſt (done againſt I am ſure:) alluding to that of Simeon (at the 34. Ver. after) that Chriſt ſhould be a ſigne (and, if Chriſt, His cratch ſure) to be ſpoken againſt. By many, Whoſe pride (ſaith the Prophet) teſtifies to their faces; you may take up the edges of their garments, and ſhew it them; yea, that, even this day, come hither, to make a ſhew of it as it were to affront this ſigne, and the Angell that gave it: come to celebrate the Feaſt of Humility, in exceſſe of pride. Should the Angell ever have perſwaded one of theſe, to have gone into the ſtable, and have ſought their Saviour there? Never: Doe but looke upon them; you would thinke they had ſome other Saviour by themſelves, that lay in an ivory Cradle; and never looked to be ſaved by Him that this day lay in a manger.

Cap. 2. 34. Oſe 5.5.

Sure, it is no good ſigne, to be ad oppoſitum to this Signe. If ſignum vobis, to the one; ſignum contra vos to the other. For, if humility be the ſigne of finding Chriſt, pride muſt needs be the ſigne of looſing Him; and who ſo looſeth Him, is (himſelf) even the child of perdition: and therefore looke to this ſigne, well.

But, humility is not all, we find in this ſigne. The Philoſopher ſaith, Signes are either indicant, or co-indicant. Indicant it is, of humility: Co-indicant of that which, in Him, and on His part, (as pride, on ours) was the cauſe that made Him ſtoope to this humility, and that was His Love. He left gloriam in excelſis, for δοξολογία ἐν ἀνθρώποις; His glory on high, for His good-will towards men. It was a ſigne of Love too (this.) A ſigne, nay an enſigne, His very colours as (in the 2 of Cant.) He termes it, love His banner, or enſigne over us. Signall love indeed; that for our ſakes, refuſed not, firſt our nature, our mortality (that alone had beene love enough:) But, not the baſeſt eſtate of our nature, not povertie: Povertie, and ſuch povertie, as the like was never heard of, uſque ad ſqualorem & fœtorem ſtabuli, to be found, where He was found; there to lie.

Thou

Thou didſt not abhor the Virgins wombe (ſo we ſing:) Thou didſt not abhorre the beaſts manger, (ſo we may ſing too:) And is not this Hoc erit ſignum, a very Enſigne of love? Hymn. Ambroſ.

Two wayes take we meaſure of Love. 1 Of quanti fecit nos (firſt) quanta fecit pro nobis; how much He made of us, by how much He did for us, (the ordinary way of the worlds meaſuring.)

2 But there is another, and that is, quanti fecit nos, by quantillus factus eſt pro nobis, how much he made of us, by how little He was made for us. This later we hold to be the more, by how much it is eaſier for Him many times, to make great, then once to be made little.

3 But then, will ye take in (this in the Text) nobis (to make up a third) For us. Vs that, even at that time, when He ſhewed ſo great love to us, ſhewed ſo little to Him; that, if the beaſts had not beene better to Him, then we, He had found no place to bee borne in. For us He came, and we thruſt Him out from us, and from all place with us, into the place of beaſts. And if He had not borrowed their ſtable, caruiſſet tecto. He had had no roofe to cover him: if He had not borrowed their crib, caruiſſet lecto, He had lyen on the cold ground, at this time of the yeare. Nobis (ſure) is ſomewhat.

And now, to quanta fecit pro nobis. For, all this was not ſo much, to ſhew the love in Himſelfe, as to work in GOD εὐδοκίαν ἐν ἀνθρώποις, Good-will toward men, (the foot of the Angels Song;) to regaine His Fathers love: to make Him well pleaſed toward men, by his Humility, with whom, for their pride, He was juſtly diſpleaſed. Thus unlovely He became, to make us beloved; thus poore, to make us rich: rich in the grace and favour of God, more worth (when the time comes) then all the riches of the world.

This (lo) is the co-indicant ſigne of love, theſe the colours of it. The cratch is the cradle of His love, no leſſe than of His humility, and able to provoke our love againe, The leſſe He made for us, the more we to make of Him: and that, not ſo much, for that He was made; as for the love, by which he was made it. And, theſe two Signatures made in us, This ſigne erit ſignum nobis, and nobis ſignum in bonum: A ſigne it ſhall be, to us, and to us for our good. And this for the Signe.

II. The Song.

Will ye now, to this inglorious Signe, heare a glorious Song; to this cratch of humility, a hymne of celeſtiall harmonie? If the ſigne miſlike you, ye cannot but like the ſong and the Quiere that ſing it. The ſong I ſhall not be able to reach to, will ye but ſee the Quiere? and that ſhall ſerve for this time: For, by all meanes, before I end, I would deale with ſome-what, that might ballance this ſigne of His low eſtate.

This, the Evangeliſts never faile to doe; Ever, they looke to this point carefully: if they mention ought, that may offend, to wipe it away ſtreight, and the Scandall of it, by ſome other high regard. See you a ſort of poore Shepheards? Stay, and ye ſhall ſee a troope of Gods Angels. Heare ye one ſay, laid in the cratch below? abide, and ye ſhall heare many ſing, Glory on high, in honour of Him that lyeth in it.

Vidiſti vilia (ſaith S. Ambroſe) audi mirifica: Were the things meane, you have ſeene? Wonderfull ſhall they be, ye now ſhall heare, and ſee both. Vileſcit præſepe, & ecce Angelicis cantibus honoratur: is the cratch meane? Meane as it is, it is honoured with the muſick of Angels; it hath the whole Quiere of Heaven to ſing about it. This alſo will prove a ſigne, if it be well looked into; a counter-ſigne to the other: That, of His humility; this, of His glory.

Surely, ſeeing the other three Evangeliſts omitted this ſigne, one would wonder, why S. Luke did not ſo too. In diſcretion, ſmall credit there was in it; better have concealed it, (one would thinke:) a great deale better. But, Saint Luke knew what he did; Hee would never have mentioned the ſigne, but that ſure he was, when he had laid Him ſo low, hee was able to up with Him againe, and ſing away all the diſgrace of the Signe with a ſtrange Carroll, and as ſtrange a Quiere ſent from Heaven to ſing it.

1 The Quiere. 1 Who?

To the Quiere then, VVho were they? VVhere, the first I pitch on, is the word Heavenly. For, thence they came, and thither they went againe, (15. Ver.) Quid præsepi & cælo? VVhat hath Heaven or heavenly Personages to doe here; with the Cratch? It should seeme, some cæleſtiall thing there is in it: as low as it seemes, it reacheth high, as high as Heaven; heavenly things, and heavenly Personages both. About it here comes divers from Heaven: For it, there goes Glory up to heaven. So that the ſigne is also, ſignum de cælo ſurſum, from on high, by reason of the Quiere: as well as a ſigne from the earth beneath, in respect of the Cratch here.

2 In what habit.

How appeare they, These Personages were Angels. It is said expresly, (v. 15.) Yet are they here said to be Souldiers. VVhat shall we have warre then? (for they are in the habit of the warre:) True, of war; but, it is war (not, that now is, or hereafter should be, but of war) that had been before even to the day of this birth; but now, to cease (witnesse Pax in terris.) There had been no peace with heaven, but plaine hostility, between earth and it; No good will toward men, but filii iræ, children of wrath all. Ever since the Cherubin first drew upon Adam, and with a ſhaken ſword kept the entry of Paradiſe; Ever since, in armes, till this very day. Their habit shewes, what was before: their ſong, what now should be. By vertue of Christs Nativitie, Peace to earth; from Heaven; Good-will, to men, from God. So now, upon His Birth, they were to disarme: but, before they put their armour off, yet being in it, they would have a Pæan, and sing of the new world, that was now to ensue. A signe this, and a strange one, (this conjunction,) ſpecies præliantium, and voces cantantium, the habit of war, and the ſong of peace. Souldiers make a campe, come to fight: These make a Quiere, come to ſing. They are not, in the habit of Quiere men, yet they sing: They are, in the habit of men of war, yet ſing of peace.

Eph. 2. 3. Gen. 3. 24.

3 What number?

VVhat number? A multitude there was of them. First, for the more authority: that, in the mouths of many, this might be establisht: many, to witnesse it. Then, for the better musicke; if, a full Quiere, many to sound it out. It was a matter of great weight; so, diverse to testifie it: It was a matter of high praise; divers therefore to celebrate and set it forth.

VVhen we heare of a multitude, we feare a confusion. But (you will observe,) this multitude was multitudo Militiæ; No confused rout: No; but acies ordinata,, a well ordered armie. There is order, in an armie: there is order, in a Quiere: there is order among Angels: coördinate among themselves, ſubordinate to their head and leader. So, a multitude without confuſion.

And yet there is a further matter in this same multitude. For, that there were not some few of them, but a great many; that was a signe, it was no pettie Saviour, that was borne. To have Angels come, by one, and by two, as at the birth of Sampſon, or Iſaac, and others; But the grand Saviour, of all, by his troops of them; the Lord of Hoſts Himſelfe, as attended by the whole Armie.

Heb. 1. 6.

For, at His birth was fulfilled that, the Apoſtle speaks of (Heb. 1. 6.) When he brings His only begotten Sonne into the world, He ſaith, Let all the Angels of GOD worſhip Him, Let the whole Hoſt of Heaven do him honour: As, honour Him (here) they do. For, they that offer up praiſe, honour Him; and praise they offer Him, the (next word is laudantium.) And even now they do it: even, here, is this honour done; Even to Him, in his cratch, is it done. And Heaven it selfe, for a while, left emptie, that it may be done. All which is but a signe, to shew, what a shew He could have made, if He had listed: that he might have had the Legions, he speakes of at his Death, that had them in such a multitude, to day, at His Birth. A signe He was not weake (what ever He seemed) that had these military forces, if He would, to take armes for Him. That He was not to be despised how ever He appeared, that had these consorts of Angels, to ſing about His cratch, and to praise God for Him.

Pſal. 50. 23.

Mat. 26. 53.

VVhat

What did they? Praiſed GOD. For Angels to praiſe GOD, is no new thing. From the beginning, it was their occupation, ſo to do (Iob 38.7.) But, to praiſe Him for a Child in a Cratch, that (lo) is new; A new thing; A new ſong, and (if you will) a new ſigne, too. For, never the like ſeene before. Before (in Iob,) their praiſe was for the creating; they had that only, then, to praiſe Him for: now, for the reſtoring of all things. For the birth of the world then; for the new birth of it now, by the birth of Him, by whom the world at firſt was made, and now (ne perderet quod condidit,) made againe, created anew, and many a new Creature in it. To Him, ſitting in the throne, ſing they their Sanctus, Eſay 6. (For, to Chriſt was the ſanctus ſung, ſaith S. Iohn directly in his 12.41.) Now, to Him, here lying in the manger; which is great odds: But indeed, to both; in imis, puero; in excelſis, Deo: For, he was both. And His being both, was an Ecce ſignum, if ever there were any upon earth.

4 What they did
Iob 38.7.
Eſay 6.3.
Ioh. 12.11.

And laſtly all the Καιρος, that inſtantly: No pauſe between; between Amen, and Hallelujah. No ſooner the ſpeech ended, but ſtreight, as if the word cratch had bin their reſt, immediately tooke they up the Hymne, and begun it. A plaine ſigne, that one of theſe did depend on the other. This the Antheme, that properly belongs to that Sermon: And back againe, this the Sermon, that requireth this Antheme: and both to the Child in the manger. The dittie meant by Him, and none but Him. For Him, this glory: By Him, this peace: Through Him, this good-will: Glory, Peace, and Good-will, from Him all three. And marke, that the word Cratch is the laſt word, in the Sermon; and the word glory the firſt, in the ſong; and nothing comes betweene to part theſe two. Nothing, to part Humility below, from glory on high. Even as he drew light out of darkneſſe; ſo doth He Glory on high, from Humility below, by a ſequence. Which when we heare, and heare it from the mouths of Angels, ſure we are, all that before ſeemed to tend to His diſgrace, were but the Auſpicia of His Glory: All that beneath appeare in Ignominia in imis, is pronounced gloria in excelſis, and for ſuch celebrated by the whole Quiere of Heaven. And this for the Quiere, and for this time.

2 Cor. 4.6.

But I aske; doe the Angels praiſe GOD for this Birth? Vt quid illis concio, vel cantio, What doe they preaching of Him, or praiſing God for Him? For them, all this is not; they put it not in the firſt, but in the ſecond perſon, Vobis. Here is now Vobis, the third time. 1 Evangelizo Vobis (ſaith the Angell firſt:) 2 Natus eſt Vobis (ſaith the ſecond:) And now Erit vobis ſignum, third. 1 Vobis, the newes: 2 Vobis, the Birth; 3 and Vobis, the ſigne; all three. And who are theſe Vobis? In the ſong it is expreſſly ſet downe, In hominibus, For men. What meane the Angels then, to make this adoe, with laudantium, and dicentium, and it concernes not them at all? What then; The bleſſed Angels, they rejoyce and ſing at the good of others, at the converſion but of one poore ſinner: Hoc Angelicum eſt. As, on the other ſide, the Divels manner is, to howle, and to grieve at others good; if Chriſt come to ſave men, to cry, He is come to torment them: Hoc eſt diabolicum.

Ver. 10. 11.
Luk. 16.7.
Mark. 1.24.

But well: from this yet, that the Angels thus ſing (whom in their owne particular it concernes not,) I riſe to make this inference; that they, whom it concerns, are to doe it with far greater reaſon: And that is, our ſelves, to whom ſolely and wholly this Birth, and the benefit of this Birth redounds. Shall they, for us, and not we for us, for our ſelves? Shall we be in at the other three, 1 at the Newes, 2 at the Birth, and 3 at the Signe; and be out at this of laudantium Deum? No, I truſt. The Quier of heaven did it but to ſet us in; We, to beare a part: and it ſhould be a chiefe part, ſince the beſt part of it is ours. They but tooke it up; we to keepe it up; and never to let it go down, or die on our hands, but from yeare to yeare, as we have occaſion, ſtill to renew it. The Angels began here; the Shepheards they follow, and praiſe God for that they had heard and ſeene; the Sermon they had heard, the Signe they had ſeene. We, to come in at our turne, and to doe the like.

Ver. 20.

You

You ſay well, for that we have heard, we may; but, not for any ſigne, (we.) Yes: For that too. The Sacrament we ſhall have beſides, and of the Sacrament we may well ſay, Hoc erit ſignum. For a ſigne it is; and by it, invenietis puerum ye ſhall finde this Child. For finding His fleſh and blood, ye cannot miſſe, but find Him too. And, a ſigne not much from this here. For, Chriſt in the Sacrament, is not altogether unlike Chriſt in the cratch. To the cratch we may well liken the husk or outward ſymbols of it. Outwardly, it ſeemes little worth; but is rich of contents; as was the crib, this day, with CHRIST in it. For, what are they, but infirma & egena elementa, weak and poor elements of themſelves: yet, in them finde we CHRIST. Even as they did, this day, in præſepi jumentorum, panem Angelorum, in the beaſts crib, the food of Angels: Which very food our ſignes both repreſent, and preſent unto us.

Let me ſay this further; It is the laſt word in the Sacrament, This is a ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving: and the whole text reſolves into laudantium Deum, to praiſe God: And not to praiſe Him alone, but to praiſe Him with this Hymne of the Angels. Now being to praiſe Him with the Angels Hymne, it behoves, to be in or as neere the State of Angels as we can; of very congruity, to be in our beſt ſtate, when they and we to make but one Quiere. And when are we ſo? if at any time, at that time when we have newly taken the holy Sacrament of His bleſſed body and moſt precious blood; when we come freſh from it. And, as if there were ſome neere alliance between this ſong of the Angels, and theſe ſignes; to ſhew that the ſignes or Sacrament have a ſpeciall intereſt in this Hymne; therefore it is, that even then, upon the adminiſtration of it, hath the Church ordered this very Hymne, ever to be ſung or ſaid, what ever day it fall in the whole yeare. For then (ſure) of all other times, are wee on earth moſt neere to Angelique perfection; then, meeteſt to give glory unto God; then, at peace with the whole earth; then, a good-will and purpoſe in us, if ever.

But, as the time falleth out, we have more inducements than one. The day it ſelf is one moſt proper: For, it is the very day, this Hymne was firſt ſung on. And, the celebration of the Sacrament, that is another. But the Sacrament now falling on the day, a double. Either of theſe, of it ſelfe apart; but together much more. For, the Sacrament, that comes at other times; the day, but once a yeare, On this Day, they both meet; and never but on this: Not to ſlip it then; but then, when it is moſt proper, moſt kindly, then to do it. I would to God, we were as meet to do it, as the Sacrament is to do it at, and as the time is to do it on. But as we may; let us endeavour to do it. So enuring our ſelves to record it, as oft as we may (ſpecially when moſt meetly we may) here on earth among men; that in His good time we may be counted worthy to doe it on high, with the Angels in the bliſſe of Heaven.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Saturday, the XXV. of December,

A. D. MDCXIX. being CHRISTMAS Day.

LUK. Chap. II. Ver. XIIII.

Gloria in altiſsimis DEO, & in terra pax, hominibus bonæ voluntatis (vel,* in homines bona voluntas.)

*Glory be to God in the high Heavens, and peace upon earth, and * towards men good will.*

*Vel in hominibus.

*Or, in men

THE Antheme of the Quiere of Heaven for this day. For, having heard the Angels Sermon at twiſe; * Of the Nativity, * Of the Invention of CHRIST: and ſeene the Quiere of Angels ſet, with their nature and condition: there remains nothing but the Antheme, to make up a full ſervice for the Day.

This is it. S. Luke, beſides that he is an Evangeliſt, hath the honour further, that he is the Pſalmiſt of the New Teſtament: foure Hymns more hath he added to thoſe of the Old: Of which foure, this is ſo much the more excellent than the reſt, in that it is not of any mans ſetting, though never ſo skilfull: the Dittie and it are both Angelicall; from the Angels both. That, we praiſe God with the tongue of Angels, whenſoever we praiſe Him with this, with Gloria in excelſis.

The Summe of it is: that though, all dayes of the yeare, and for all benefits; yet, this day, and for this (now) above all, GOD is highly to be glorified: More highly then in others; Nay moſt highly then; for, it is in altiſsimis, the higheſt of all. The Summe.

That Heaven and Earth, and men are to joyne in one conſort: Heaven and Earth firſt; Heaven on high, Earth beneath to take up one hymne: both in honour of his birth, both are better by it; Heaven hath glory, Earth peace, by meanes of it. Heaven hath glory; lætentur cœli: Earth, peace; exultet terra, at thy Nativity, O Lord. Warranted by this Song; at thy Nativity, O Lord, let the heavens rejoyce for the glory: let the Earth be glad for the peace, that come to them by it. Pſal. 96. 11.

And men, hominibus, though they reſt, and come in laſt after both, yet they to doe it as much; Nay, much more than both, for Gods good will toward them, which brought brought all this to paſſe in Heaven and Earth both: reſtoring men to Gods favour and grace, and all by meanes of this Child, their Reconciler to God that hath beene; their Pacifier on earth, that is; their Glorifier in Heaven that ſhall be. They therefore, if any: nay more than any: and now, if ever; nay more than ever, to beare their part in this glorious hymne at the cratch ſide.

Ita, canunt in Nativitate, quæ per Nativitatem: Thus ſing they at His Nativity, of thoſe things, that came by His Nativity. Came to Heaven, to Earth, to Men: Glory to Heaven, Peace to Earth; Grace and favour to men.

To take a Song right, it behoveth to know the parts of it. And they are eaſily known: They divide themſelves into the number bleſſed above all numbers, becauſe it is the number of the Bleſſed Trinity; and the myſteries of the Trinity doe the Fathers find in the parts of it: [1] In God on high, [2] the Father: In peace, Ipſa eſt pax noſtra, the Son: Eph. 2. 14. [3] And in Good-will, the HOLY GHOST, the Eſſentiall Love and Love-knot of the Godhead; and this day, of the Man-hood and it.

Being Ode natalitia, if we conſider it as a Nativity, they that calculate or caſt Nativities, in their calculations ſtand much upon Triplicities, and Trigons, and Trine aſpects And here they be all: A triplicity of things: [1] Glory, [2] Peace, and [3] Good-will. A Trigon of Parties: [1] God, [2] Earth, and [3] Men. And a Trine aſpect, referendo ſingula ſingulis; [1] To God, glory; [2] to Earth, peace; [3] to Men, favour, grace, or good-will.

II
III. But if (as it is moſt proper) we conſider the parts, as in a Song the three will well agree with the Scale in Muſique: [1] In excelſis, on high, Hypate: [2] On earth, Nete. [3] And men, howſoever they come in laſt, they make Meſe, the Meane: Moſt fitly; for they (as in the midſt of both the other) partake of both: [1] Their ſoule from on high; [2] Their body from the earth. Not the heathen, but did confeſſe, the ſoule divinæ particulam auræ. And, for the body, there needs no proofe, that earth it is: Earth to earth, we heare, we ſee before our eyes every day.

3 Of theſe three parts then, aſunder. And after, (as the nature of a Song requireth) of their [1] Conjunction, [2] Order, and [3] Diviſion. [1] Conjunction, Glory on high, and on earth peace. Then, the order, or Sequence: But, firſt glory; then Peace. [3] And laſt, the diviſion, ſorting them ſuum cuique, each to his owne: [1] To God, glory; [2] Peace, to the earth; [3] Δόξα to men. [4] Laſt; of the ſinging of the Hymne, [1] When, the time: [2] and by Whom.

The ſeverall acception of the Text.

THere are in this Hymne (as the Greekes read, and we with them) three Reſts. The ground of which three, are three Parties. [1] In excelſis Deo, God on high, [2] In terra, earth; [3] and Hominibus, men. To theſe three, other three; [1] Glory, [2] Peace, [3] Good-will, as it were three ſtreames having their head or ſpring in CHRIST'S cratch, and ſpreading themſelves thence, three ſundry wayes, having their influence into the three former; One of theſe into ſome of them. Glory, upward, in excelſis: Peace, downeward, to the earth: Good-will, to men, in the middeſt betweene both, compound of both.

By the Greeks.

You will mark: The Child (here) is GOD and Man. GOD, from on high; Man, from the earth. To heaven, whence He is GOD, thither goeth glory: To earth whence man, thither Peace. Then, as God and Man is one CHRIST; and as the reaſonable ſoule and fleſh is one man: So, CHRIST conſiſting of theſe two brings Δόξα the fulneſſe of Gods favour, the true and reall cauſe of both; yeelding them peace, while here on earth, and aſſuring them of Glory, when there on high; as thither on high, wee truſt to be delivered, after our time here ſpent in procuring Heaven glory, and earth peace. Thus, three Reſts.

By the Latines.

But, let me not keepe from you, that the Latine hath but two Reſts, and of the Greeke ſome likewiſe: To two they reduce all, and well. The Places are but two; On high, and in earth: The Perſons but two: [1] GOD, [2] and Men: So, the Parts to be but two; [1] Glory on high, to GOD; [2] Peace, on earth to Men. But then what

ſhall become of good-will? Good-will is a good word; would not be loſt or left out.

No more it ſhall. And indeed the diverſe reading of that one word makes the parts to be either two, or three. The Greekes read it in the Nominative caſe, εὐδοκία, which refers to men: then there muſt needs be three; there are two beſides. The Latines ſeem to have read it in the Genitive, εὐδοκίας; (but a Σ, but one letter more:) And ſo they make it of the nature of a limitation, Peace on earth to men: What, to men promiſcuè, good and bad, elect and reprobate? No: but to ſuch as pertaine to His εὐδοκία, Gods Beneplacitum, His good-will and purpoſe: to the children of it.

Εὐδοκία or εὐδοκίας, Nominative or Genitive, let it not trouble you: To men, a goodwill; or, To men of goodwill; no great matter, whether; ſo long as εὐδοκία referres to GOD, and to His good pleaſure; Not, to Men, or any will of theirs. And that ſo it is to be referred, I will uſe no other witneſſe but Cardinall Tolet himſelfe; who, in his Readings at Rome, and in the Popes own Chappell, and upon this very place confeſſeth as much, that ſo is the native ſignification of the word; and ſo, and no otherwiſe to be taken here, but in that ſenſe.

And in that ſenſe being taken, it goes well. Glory from us, to Him: Peace, from Him, to us: From men on earth, to God on high, glory; From God on high, to men on earth, Peace. Men, I ſay, toward whom He is now appeaſed, and with whom (now) he is well pleaſed; and both, for this Childs ſake here in the cratch, ἐν ᾧ εὐδόκησα, in whom He is ſo abſolutely well pleaſed, as, of the fulneſſe of his favour we all receive. GOD ſpake it once, and twiſe: [1] Once at His Baptiſme, [2] and againe in the Holy Mount. Mat 3.17 17.5

And Hoc erit ſignum. This may be a ſure ſigne, that he is well pleaſed with our Nature, that he hath in this Childe taken it, and united it to His owne; which, if He had not beene highly well pleaſed, he would never have done. What greater goodwill can there be than this? It paſſeth the greateſt, (even that of Marriage,) union of nature, unity of perſon.

Then riſeth there another doubt, what Verbe to put to here? For, never a Verbe there is at all. Whether ſome Indicative, Glory is, or ſhall be: and then, it is an Hymne of Gratulation, and agreeth well with laudantium, a praiſe to GOD, that theſe (now) are. Now, hath God glory: Now, earth peace: Men are now received to favour and grace. Thus: Or whether ſit or eſto, in the Optative: and then, it is Votum benè ominatum, a Vow or wiſh, that Glory may be to God; and ſo to the reſt.

I ſay againe here (as before I ſaid: it skil'd not then, whether Nominative or Genitive;) it skils not now, whether Indicative or Optative. Tehilla (a Praiſe, it is) and Tephilla (a Wiſh it may be) do commence. Either is well; But, both are beſt; For, both are moſt true.

By way of Gratulation: Glory now is, or ſhall be to GOD, for this Birth. Before it was not: at leaſt, not ſo, as after. Before it was Gloria in excelſis, but Deo was left out. All Nations (in a manner) worſhipping the hoſt of Heaven, the ſuperiour bodies; deifying the creature, paſſing by the CREATOR quite: Excelſa, they did; but Deum in excelſis they did not. But, by this Birth now, downe ſhould all Idolatrie go; as, down it went, whereſoever Chriſtian Religion tooke place. From the Creature there, all to the CREATOR. To none on high, but GOD on high. The point of Glory much mended; GOD more glory, than before. 1 By way of Gratulation. Glory is to God.

And the Earth more at peace, if you take peace in things ſpirituall, matters concerning the ſoule. One only I will mention. There was (as out of Varro, S. Auguſtine reckons them) no leſſe than two hundred ſixty and odde ſeverall Opinions, and that of the wiſeſt then on the earth, touching mans Soveraigne good, or chiefe end. The very higheſt point, and that did moſt concerne them; and leaſt peace, moſt variance in it. This miſt alſo was ſcattered, and that point well cleared, by Him that was the Way and the Truth: That this δόξα here is it; the favour of GOD it is, and the aſſurance of it, and nothing but it makes a man truly happy, when all is done. 2 Peace is in earth. Ioh. 14 6.

As for the point of GOD's goodwill, and favour, that was never in kind, till this Day. Many favours, much good will, before; Never ſo, as when GOD and Man, the 3 And Good-will toward men.

God-head and Man-hood meete both in one. GOD never ſo pleaſed, as when He was pleaſed to aſſume it, into one Perſon with Himſelfe, uniting both with the ſtreighteſt union that can be. Never that, till this day, when, for εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις, good-will toward men, He forſooke gloriam in excelſis, to come into the cratch for them. So that, for GODS favour, the gratulation is moſt juſt; more than both the reſt.

Biſhop Bradwardine did joyn a good iſſue: Let that be the Religion, let that prevaile, as beſt, and moſt true of all other; that is Deo honorabilior, brings more honour to GOD; Paci amicabilior, beſt friend to the earths peace; and Homini favorabilior, moſt favourable to man, as, ſhewing GOD better affected to him, and making men better affected to God, better one to another. That Religion is Chriſtian Religion: None ſings this Hymne in time, in true note, but it; all other are out. So that, we have a compendium of true Religion, and three notes of it, out of the three notes of the Song in this Antheme. And this, if it be the Indicative; or by way of Gratulation.

By way of wiſh.

But I confeſſe, it is more uſuall, per modum voti, by way of wiſh; by ſit, than by eſt. (Sit doth better become the Church Militant: Eſt is more fit for the Church triumphant.) Glory be to GOD, Peace be to the earth, &c. Exoptando that theſe may be ſo, and, ſo being, continue ſtill, and be daily more and more: And ſo taking it, to the triplicity againe.

Glory be to God on high.

Firſt, glory we wiſh to GOD. On high ſtands in the midſt, you may either caſt it to the firſt word Glory, Glory on high, and then the point, (that is, high glory:) Or, (with the point, after glory,) and caſt [on high] to GOD. A third variety, (but eaſily reconciled) if we take in both: Glory on high, to GOD on high. One [On high] may ſerve for the reaſon, why we wiſh glory to GOD: for GOD being Altiſſimus, the moſt High (as Melchiſedek firſt ſtiled Him;) and glory being the altitude, or higheſt pitch, we can fly or performe; by good reaſon, we wiſh Him that is Higheſt, the higheſt thing we have.

Gen. 14. 18.

But, not every glory doe we wiſh, but wiſh it Him at the higheſt. All glory is high: yet is there one glory higher than another. If any be ſo, that, they wiſh to GOD, the very height of it, even glory in altiſſimis, as high as it can goe.

1 Cor. 15. 41.

Now, the more He is glorified, the higher His glory: Higher, if, by Heaven and Earth, on high and below, by Men and Angels; than by either alone.

Pſal. 148.

This then they wiſh, when they ſay, glory be in the higheſt; that high and low, Heaven and Earth, Men and Angels would doe their parts, to make His praiſe glorious, glorious at the higheſt. On earth, ſound it out far and wide, all the world over, to the ends of the earth; and lift up our voices, and helpe them with inſtruments of all kinds, and make them to be heard up to the very Heavens, that ſo it may bee in altiſſimis, indeed. Yea, that all creatures, in both, raviſhed with the conſideration of the great favour and good-will of GOD, in this dayes birth teſtified, would take occaſion to fill their mouths with the praiſe of His goodneſſe, in reſolving; His wiſdome, in contriving; His mercy in promiſing; His truth in performing the work of this day, the bleſſed birth of his Sonne.

Pſal. 150. 4. 5.

For the worke of the Day, to make the day of the worke a glorious day: cauſing it to be attended with a number of dayes according to the number of the moneths of the yeare; as no Feaſt elſe. Glorious in all places, as well at home with Carolls, as in the Church with Anthemes. Glorious in all Ages; even this day, this yeare, as on the very day on which He was borne. Glorious in habit, in fare: But ſpecially, (as we ſee the Angels here doe) with the ſervice of GOD, the moſt ſolemne ſervice, the higheſt, the moſt melodious Hymnes, we have: and namely, with this here of the Quier of Heaven. In a word: all the wayes we can; all the wayes, GOD can have any glory from us, to let Him have it; and have it even at the height, in altiſſimis.

And good reaſon, we ſhould ſo wiſh: CHRIST loſt His glory, by being thus in the cratch. We tooke ſome from Him: to wiſh Him ſome for it againe. That was ignominia in infimis: to wiſh Him gloria in altiſſimis, in liew of it.

Againe,

Againe, we get glory by It; our Nature, ſo. For the glory, we get by GOD here below; to returne ſome glory to GOD there on high. This is votum gloriæ; this wiſh we, when we wiſh gloria in altiſsimis.

The next is votum pacis; they wiſh, Peace may be upon earth. [1] Even Auguſtus his peace, firſt, (that is the firſt, commeth to our minds when we heare that word;) the ſhutting of Ianus: for, that alſo was a bleſſed fruit of this Birth. Eſay fore-told it; There ſhould then be a bridge from Aſſur to Egypt, and from Canaan to them both, that is, from every nation to other, to traffique, and to trade together. 2 Peace in earth. Eſay 19.23.

That: but not only that, but the taking downe alſo of the partition wall, which formerly Moſes had ſet up, betweene the Iew and the Gentile; the making of them both one in the body of His fleſh: S. Pauls peace. Eph. 2.14.

And yet further. For both theſe are Peace upon earth, of earth with earth. Auguſtus can, the World can give that peace, though many times they will not. But he ſpeaks in a Place of the peace which the world cannot give, that is peace with heaven. That there ſhould not be Eſay's bridge only, but Iacob's ladder ſet up from Bethel to Heaven, a peaceable entercourſe with that place, by the Angels deſcending and aſcending betweene us and them. Gen. 28.16.

And further yet, peace at home with our ſelves, and with our owne conſciences. Turne againe to thy reſt O my ſoule; for, in finding him we ſhall finde reſt to our ſoules. Pſal. 116.7

And laſt, (to anſwer Gloria in altiſsimis) Pax in noviſsimis, peace at the parting, which is worth all; Simeon's peace, a good Nunc dimittis in pace, a departing hence in peace. And all, by meanes of viderunt oculi, the ſight of the ſalvation of this day. All theſe are in voto pacis. Ver. 29.

The third is, there may be, in GOD, a good-will toward men. And, good-will is a kinde of peace, but, ſomewhat more, with an extent or prorogation; a kinde of peace peculiar to men, which the other parts of the earth are not capable of. So, a further matter to men, than beare peace: Even δοκεῖν δ', to thinke well, to beare Good-will, to be well pleaſed with men. And, what greater wiſh can there be than In quo complacitum eſt? CHRIST hath no more, than ἐν ᾧ εὐδόκησα. It is His high glory, that for His (and this His births ſake, which we now celebrate) that which is verified of His Perſon, is verified of both His Natures: of Him, not only as Son of GOD, but even as Son of Man too. And, what is verified of Him, as Son of man, may be verified alſo of the Sons of men, of all Mankinde. This wiſh is at the higheſt, and more cannot be wiſhed, than that this favour to day begun, may ſtill and ever continue to us all. So have you now the three parts of the Angels wiſh, Summa votorum, Glory be to God. &c. 3 Good-will toward men. Mat. 3.17.

What is now to be done? Three things more: To ſee the [1] Connexion copulative, [2] the Sequence, [3] and the Diviſion. [1] The Connexion copulative, (a bleſſed couple) Glory and peace. [2] The Sequence: but, firſt Glory, and then Peace. [3] The Diviſion, which to which: [1] One, to God; [2] The other, to earth: [3] The third, to man. 1 The Connexion copulative, Glory and Peace.

Glory and Peace are coupled together with an [and:] And in earth peace: That, Glory would not be ſung alone, but Peace together with it. We will not, we may not skip the Copulative: that couples together high and low, heaven and earth; and in them GOD and Man: But, (that which I reſpect ſpecially,) Glory and Peace muſt be ſung together. If we ſing Glory without Peace, we ſing but to halves. No Glory on high will be admitted, without Peace upon earth. No gift on His altar (which is a ſpeciall part of His glory,) but lay downe your gift, and there leave it, and firſt goe your way and make peace on earth, and that done come againe, and you ſhall then be accepted, to give glory to Heaven; and not before. And ô, that we would goe and do the like, have like regard of His glory, that He hath of our peace. But, this knot of Gloria & Pax, is againſt thoſe, that are ſtill (ever wrangling with one thing or other; and all for the Mat. 5.24.

Glory of GOD (forsooth,) as if these two could not joyne; GOD could not have His glory, if the Church were at peace: as if (no remedie) the Angells Et must out.

2 The Sequence Glory before Peace.

Glory, and Peace: but, Glory first, and then Peace; There is much in the order. Glory to be first, else you change the Cleff; the cleff is in Glory; that, the key of the Song. That is to be first, and before all: Peace to give place to her; Glory is the elder Sister: And, no Pax in terris, unlesse it be first considered, how it will stand with gloria in excelsis. To set Peace before Glory, is to set earth above heaven. Keepe the order then; each in her place. So goeth the Song: The Child borne is GOD and Man; GOD, from on high; Man, from the earth; Cœlestem primo, dein & terrestrem celebrant: They keepe the right order in singing of Him; we to do the like: Heavens part ever to be first.

Psal. 34. 15. But then, next after His glory, nothing more deare, more precious; nay nothing so deare, so precious to us then, as peace. Set glory safe, and then by all meanes Inquire pacem (saith the Psalmist,) Seeke Peace; (if she hide her selfe, seek her out;) Et persequere eam, and pursue her,; (if she flye away, follow her hard.) Peace is not sought; No man followes her, to make any pursuit; they know not the vallue of peace, that loose her so easily, and follow her so faintly. Nay, in stead of pursuit, persecute her, and drive her away, and make the chasing her away, the seeking of GOD's glory. The second thing in the world is Peace: Only one, One only before it, the glory of God.

3 The Division. of the Song.

But, the Aire of the song is in the Division, wherein each is sorted to his owne: GOD, to His; the Earth, to hers; Men, to theirs. Iustices division (which makes peace in Heaven and Earth) skored here out so plainly, as it is easily seene, which pertaines to which. And we by all meanes so to distribute and deale them; and by all meanes to preserve and hold up this division. Else, we change the note, which is as much as the whole Harmony is worth.

1 Glory to God. Now, in this partition, glory goes whither? Up on high. To whom there? To God, and to none but God. The Place and the Person are both set forth. On high, there is the Place: To God, there is the Person. Earth is not the place of glory: It is in excelsis, on high. Earth is not on high. Here below it is, as it were the celler or vault of the world: Where though there be Excelsa and Excelsi, high places, and high persons both, yet the word is ἐν ὑψίστοις in altissimis; and Altissimi they be not; there be higher than they.

Eccles. 5. 7. And, as Earth is not the place; So Man is not the person: For, man is upon earth, and is earth. No glory to man then; Especially, none this day, of all dayes. Glory to Him; for what? For entertaining CHRIST, and lodging Him in a stable? Confusion rather, somewhat to be ashamed of, nothing to glory of. Had men deserved it, some to them: Now, let GOD above have the glory of this day.

Yet, conceive it aright: we wish it, as our dutie; not as any longing of His. It were a silly conceit to imagine of GOD, as if He were avidiōr gloriæ, did hunger or thirst for our glory. What is He the better for it? Only, nothing we have but that; and so, either that or nothing: for nothing but that can He receive from us. But we have,

1 Tim. 1. 17. Iude 25. Psal. 115. 1. Act. 14. 14. nothing to render Him for all His goodnesse, for his εὐδοκία, but δόξα. Give it Him then; but, give it entirely; give it none but Him. Soli Deo (saith S. Paul:) Soli (saith S. Iude) Soli, let us all say. Not unto us O Lord, not unto us: (It is David, as if he were afraid to touch any part of it:) No: But, as Paul and Barnabas, rend our cloaths, if any Divine honour be forced upon us.

Yet, glory we may, (I grant;) but not this, here: gloria in altissimis, if we sing to any but Him, we sing a false note. Men doe so now and then; but the Angels are never out: And thus sing they, and set out Glory for GOD's part.

2 On Earth, Peace. Let, earth be content with peace: Peace is her portion; and a blessed portion, if she may well hold it; a faire portion; a rich wish. For, I would faine know, what could be said more, to the praise of this portion, than is here in this song? First, that in generall it reacheth to the whole world: (Not, to men alone, though they have their share too, too, in whatſoever good commeth to the earth, but) it reacheth to all on earth : omni animantium or vegetantium generi, to all the beaſts, all the greene things on the earth; All are the better for it.

Secondly, what more for the credit of peace, than that it is votum militare, it comes from the mouths of Souldiers that were there in their military habit. Even they ſing of peace, and praiſe it, and wiſh it, where they wiſh any good ; and know not what better thing to wiſh to the earth, than it. It is the earths happineſſe, Peace ; it flouriſheth by it. Before, was the earth as the Garden of Paradiſe, (ſaith the Prophet) behinde, it was a waſte and barren wilderneſſe, all ſpoiled and burnt up. 2 Ioel 2.3.

Thirdly, that it is Votum Angelicum, An Angels wiſh, Peace. They being heavenly Spirits, wiſh not any thing at any time, but heavenly : So that a heavenly thing is Peace : And ſo it is, as Nazianzene here well obſerved, Pugnas & diſſidia neſcire Deum & Angelos ; No broiles, no brabbles in heaven : nothing but, peace there. And, a kind of heaven there is upon earth, when there is peace upon earth : and juſtly are they bleſſed, and rightly are they called the children of GOD, the moſt bleſſed that are, or ſhall be at any time, that are the procurers of it. This (lo) is the Angels diviſion, they ſing. 3

But here we are like to have no little adoe to maintaine this : As we ſaid before, Huic ſigno à multis contradicitur ; as the ſigne, ſo the ſong is gain-ſaid of many. The Divell doth all he can, to marre the Angels muſicke, to bring in his, his own black Sanctus ; to procure contempt to GODS glory on high, to bring GODS glory as low as he can, to make garboiles upon earth, to worke men all evill-will, miſchiefe, and malice that he can. Ver. 34.

And firſt, to make a confuſion in this diviſion, perſwades earth not to ſtand content with the Angels partition, but earth (forſooth) muſt have glory, muſt be dealing with heavens part. It is well ſaid, to God on high : There be certaine Gods, here below, aſpire to glory. And glory we would allow, but no glory will ſerve, unleſſe gloria in altiſsimis be ſung to it. Sicut Dii cannot be gotten out of us. We cannot yet get Dominus Deus noſter Papa out of the gloſſe, no, not now, after it is reformed. And King Herod would be content to be made more than a man, and to heare ----Nec vox hominem ſonat. And we beneath are too ready to ſing it, otherwhile ; to deifie thoſe, that are on high, and to give that belongs to GOD on high, to Gods below. Now, that earth is thus willing to entitle her ſelfe to Heavens part, this brings all out of tune. Gen. 3.5. Acts. 12.22.

But, in tune, or out of tune, to die for it, have it we will. What the Apoſtles rent their cloaths to put from them, we would rend our skins to pluck to us. So greedy are we, to be held for Gods upon earth. Nay, earth is content to thruſt from her, her owne part, (that is, peace) to invade GOD's part (that is, glory ;) Et dum gloriam uſurpant, pacem turbant, to uſurpe glory, they looſe peace : we can diſpenſe with that (ſhift GODS glory how it can) rather than our owne ſhould ſuffer the leaſt diſgrace, away with peace, moveatur terra, let all the world be on a welter. Acts 14.14.

What comes of this ? Pacem contemnentes & gloriam appetentes, & gloriam perdunt & pacem : Even this peace (their owne part) they ſet light by Glory (GODS part) they gape after, and looſe glory and peace (both) by the meanes ; and when they have brought all to confuſion, ſet downe by their loſſes. For firſt, by ſeeking glory, glory is loſt. The Heathen man well obſerved ; Glory is one of thoſe things, that to ſeeke them, is the very next way to looſe ; and to neglect them, the way to gaine them : Quærendo amittitur, No readier way to miſſe it, than eagerly to ſeeke it. And againe, by ſeeking glory, Peace is loſt cleare. Yeelding glory to GOD, doth bring with it pacem in terris ; diverting it from Him, doth take pacem de terris. In very deed, Peace upon earth, as it ſtands after it, ſo it hath a dependance upon GODS glory ; comes (as it were) in exchange for it. Da gloriam & accipe pacem (ſaith GOD :) Let men on earth ſend glory up to GOD on high, and GOD on high will ſend downe peace to men on earth, and will not faile : Heavens peace, for earths glory. Whereby we ſee, if we miſſe peace on earth at any time, what it is long of. It is that, which makes the Angels here keepe on their armour ſtill : upon glory detained from GOD or transferred whither it ſhould not, they are up in armes ſtraight, have power to take peace from the earth, till the point of glory be ſet right againe. The ſetting right of which point is the way to recover it. Let Heaven, let GOD be well ſerved with their part, peace will not long be away. It is coupled to it (you ſee,) it followeth cloſe, Et pax in terris. So much for that Diviſion.

Goodwill toward men.

To men a good will. For, beſides Earths peace, wherein they entercommon, Men have a part by themſelves, which is their prerogative. And firſt, I would have you

1 to note; that here it is entred firſt into the Muſicke of Heaven. In the Angels Hymne, in Eſay, in the Old Teſtament, Men are out there: No mention at all, not a word of Eſay 6 3. them, in that. Heaven is in, and Earth; but, no Men, there. In the Angels Hymne, here, in the New Teſtament, here, Men are in; that, all may know, that for this Childs ſake now made man, Men are now come into the Angels ſong; to be a part, and a principall part there, who before were left out.

2 A principall part (I ſay:) for, mark againe: They have never an Et, they ſtand by themſelves. For both thoſe former reſolve into this of Men; They, the Epitome of heaven and earth; The parties, from whom this glory, to whom this peace is principally intended to come. Glory to God, Glory and Peace: Why both? For, GOD hath received men to grace: Men are now in favour againe.

But heaven, and earth, and men, and all reſolve into the free grace and good-will to GOD. How ſhall they performe either peace or glory, but if there be toward them firſt; and ſecondly, but if there be in them this third of good-will. Thence iſſues Gods glory; thence the Earths peace. The fountaine of both, that: Nay, of CHRIST and all. For Him, this glory; for CHRIST: Through Him, this peace; through CHRIST: But, CHRIST Himſelfe whence? Whence, but from the good-will of God toward men? From whence alſo, the good-will in men, to GOD, and one to another, if any be in them. That if we goe higher yet, even of this Birth, Gods good-will was the cauſe, and becauſe His will was, men ſhould be reſtored, therefore His will was, CHRIST ſhould be incarnate and borne. Can we goe any higher? are we not in altiſsimis? Verily, as we ſaid, the humility of the Signe was ſo deepe, we could not ſound it: ſo may we now, that the ſublimitie of this point is ſo high we cannot reach it. There is a part of Divinitie that dazels: if we looke too long on it, we may well looſe our ſight.

Toward men. and in men.

Then to ἐν ἀνθρώποις, laſt. It may be turned two wayes, it will beare both: (and, for my part I wiſh no word ever narrowed by a tranſlation, but as much as might be, left in the latitude of the Originall tongue.) [1] Ἐν ἀνθρώποις will beare εἰς ἀνθρώπους in homines, to, or toward men. So we turne it, and we turne it well. [2] But ἐν ἀνθρώποις, is alſo in hominibus, in, or among men; ἐν ἀνθρώποις, as well as ἐν ὑψίστοις, and no leſſe properly. And no hurt, if we turne it ſo, in hominibus; provided, in, or erga homines goe firſt, be ſung before it. In hominibus ſo ever, as comming from in homines. For then Donum magnum bonæ voluntatis Dei, bona voluntas in hominibus; it is Auguſtine: Of the good-will of GOD towards men, a ſpeciall gift it is: this good-will in men, to GOD and man both. The beſt way is, where there are two, to take in both: So we ſhall be ſure, to leave out neither.

1 But Toward men, firſt.

Yet in their ſequence. To, or toward men then firſt: But, to, or toward them for this Childs ſake. In whom He is ſo well pleaſed, as, for His ſake, He is pleaſed, firſt, to receive men to pardon, though grievous ſinners, and ſo utterly unworthy of it.

Secondly, He is pleaſed to reward their workes alſo, otherwiſe (but for this good-will in GOD, in accepting them) that might juſtly be accepted too, for their many imperfections: to take them well in worth, though they want worth: and to vouchſafe them a reward, and that a high reward; for, it is your heavenly Fathers good pleaſure to give you a kingdome.

Chap. 12. 32.

Thirdly, beyond both theſe, He is further pleaſed, in ſome caſe to accept even of this εὐδοκία at our hands; and though skill and power both faile, and be wanting; yet a willing minde if there be, if there be but that, a man is accepted according to that, he hath, not according to that, he hath not. Mary Magdalens quod potuit fecit; the poore widowes

quod

quod habuit dedit (and God wot, it was but two mites) yet well taken though: One εὐδοκία by an other. That He placeth not acceptance, neither in εὐγνωσία deep capacity of wit; nor in εὐδυναμία, great ability of power; but in εὐδοκία, readineſſe of good-will, an honeſt true meaning, an unfeined hearty deſire: Vt ſi ſit actionis infirmitas, at ſi ſit voluntatis integritas, though there be weakneſſe in the act, yet if there be ſoundneſſe in the will, out of His good-will toward men, He will accept this good-will in men. [a] Nehemiah's deſire to feare Him. [b] Ezechias ſetting his heart to ſeeke; The [c] Servants but preparing to doe his Maſters will: And even in Davids ſecundùm cor meum, his honeſt true heart was the faireſt flower in his garland.

[b] 2 Reg 20. 3.
1 Sam. 13. 14.

And this, if it were well weighed and digeſted aright; If CHRIST, if all that comes by CHRIST (and that is all in all) be by His free grace and favour: If men were but rightly conceited in this point, it would ſoon bring them out of conceit with their own I wot not what; It would make them truly humble: And it is the humble man that gives GOD the true glory, that ſings this ſong right, when all is done. The glory that comes to GOD, is ὄξια δι' εὐδοκίαν, the firſt word, for the laſt. With glory it begins, with good-will it ends; and with good-will it begins, and with glory it ends: As the firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt firſt.

Mat. 19. 30.

But, when we have fixed bona voluntas in homines, what hurt will it doe, to wiſh bona voluntas in hominibus? Sure, none. Bona voluntas in homines is to work this bonam voluntatem in hominibus, and that by very courſe of kinde. For Suum Simile, grace to beget his owne like, is moſt naturall: Bene placitum Dei, to beget Bene placitum Deo; Who, out of His good pleaſure worketh in us both to will and to doe; and whoſe only work it is, Vt reſpondeat bonæ voluntati Dei, bona voluntas hominis.

2 Then in men.

Phil. 2. 13.

What harme then, if the Angell ſhould wiſh it or commend it to men, in whom if it be, it comes from that of GOD meerely, and from no other. Verily, what is praiſe-worthy in GOD, cannot but be ſo in men too. Summa Religionis eſt, aſſimiliari Ei quem colis, To become like to Him, we worſhip, is the pitch of all Religion.

Rom. 15. 26. 10. 1. Phil. 1. 15.

Now, an εὐδοκία at the ſecond hand there is in men. The word it ſelfe is aſcribed to them of Achaia, towards the poore Saints at Ieruſalem, To S. Paul, towards the Iews: to the Philippians, towards S. Paul: and in other places.

1 In men towards GOD.

To wiſh then in men this εὐδοκία toward GOD; which, where it is, makes men to δοκεῖν, have a good conceit or opinion of GOD; which will bring forth a good affection to GOD. It is well obſerved, it is not ἀγαθθέλησις (which is properly Greeke for good-will) but εὐδοκία, which is rather a good thinking, if we go to the very nature of the word: But, it will come all to one. Only, the affection that begins in the opinion, is noted for good; and the opinion, that is bred in the affection, not ſo.

From that good conceit of God, accepting well whatſoever it pleaſeth Him to ſend: If good, receiving it thankfully; if otherwiſe, taking it patiently; ever praiſing GOD for all. But, no waies entertaining, of Him, that opinion, for which they cannot but love Him the worſe, if, as of a Tyrant ſentencing men to death, only for His pleaſure, before they have offended him at all. That would prove no εὐδοκία, as it may be handled. And the Apoſtle tels us, the εὐδοκία, that is in God, is εὐδοκία ἀγαθωσύνης; it is not, but regulate by His goodneſſe (2 Theſ. 1.) for which ever may there be glory aſcribed to Him.

Then, to wiſh it in men towards men: An εὐδοκία, alſo, which, where it is, breeds an inclination to δοκεῖν, to take all in the better part; and if poſſibly we can, and as much as in us lyeth to have peace with all men. which if it were on earth, would make heaven on earth. Peace is not ſaid (as glory) to be ἐν, but ἐπὶ; and ἐπὶ is over: For, (indeed) it doth but hover aloft over the earth, would light, but cannot otherwhile. The Raven can, but the Dove cannot, for want of this Bona voluntas in hominibus, or theſe homines bonæ voluntatis. It finds them not well willing to peace, while every one ſtands more for his owne reputation, or other ends, than either for Churches or Countries peace. Baniſh the oppoſites of εὐδοκία, Envie (Ro. 10.) Malice (Phil. 1.) and peace will be no ſtranger upon earth. It would then be ἐν γῇ where it is ἐπὶ γῆς, the ſame Prepoſition in both. All depends upon the cadence εὐδοκία: perform that well, and it will be Muſick for an Angel.

2 In men towards MEN.

Rom. 10. 2. Phil. 1. 15.

And, now ye have heard all parts, what ſhall we doe with this Song? Sing it. But we have no Angels to ſing it, and it will be muſicke for an Angell. Angels it would be, as at firſt it was: But, when it is not, it will pleaſe them well, that men ſing it, whom it moſt concernes. But, if by men, of very congruity, an Angels ſong would be, by men, when in ſome degree they drew ſome thing near to the Angels eſtate. At leaſt, when nearer than at other times.

And when is that, that men on earth come ſo? at what time? Sure, if ever men doe riſe above themſelves, and approach in any ſort neare to thoſe bleſſed Spirits; if ever they be in ſtate with Angels and Arch-angels to laud and magnifie His glorious name; if in all their lives they be in peace and charity, the bond of perfection, the bona voluntas we ſpeake of; if at any time it be in men, and they homines bonæ voluntatis; upon the taking of the Sacrament it is: At that time, then, or never, they lift up their hearts in true devotion. So, then in beſt caſe, that in all our lives to ſing it: if CHRIST dwell in our hearts by faith, if we be temples of the Holy Ghoſt.

And that we might be in that caſe, and to ſing it, the Church is never unprovided, this day, of this meanes of elevating our minds: And it is operæ pretium, worth the while, if it were but for that; and there may be joy among the Angels in heaven, to heare their Hymne kept ſtill alive. Though, there is another congruity for the Sacrament; that the great Myſtery of Godlineſſe, which is GOD manifeſted in the fleſh, might not be celebrated without the Myſtery of His fleſh: that, the day, Hee came among us to be partaker of fleſh and blood, we alſo might be partakers of the fleſh and blood which he tooke from us, to give them us againe.

But otherwiſe, this Day, in this Hymne, and this Hymne in this Day continually have a ſpeciall intereſt. Time in Muſick is much. And if we will keepe time with the Angels, do it when they do it, this day they did it: And what fitter time to ſing it, than the day, it was firſt ſung, the day of the firſt ſinging of it, Canticum diei, in die cantici? When ſhould the Hymn of CHRIST s birth be better ſung, than on CHRISTS Birth-day?

But, becauſe it is not Vox, but Votum; the voice is not all, but the hearts deſire and wiſh it is that GOD chiefly reſpecteth; to adde that. And, what ſhould we wiſh from our hearts, but, that the Angels may have their wiſh; Every one may have his due, as it is here ſet out.

And, for that Nihil æquius eſt, quàm ut pro quo quis oret, pro eo laboret, what we wiſh for, we ſhould not ſtand wiſhing only, but endeavour withall, it may come to paſſe, that it be our labour too, with all our endeavours, to procure the glory of heaven, and the peace of the earth: To finde peace in the good-will of GOD, and to give Him all glory for it, who hath appointed peace our portion here, and glory our hope laid up there. Aſſuring our ſelves that the ſame εὐδοκία that was able to bring the Son of GOD from heaven into earth, ſhall have the like power to lift up the Sons of men from earth to the glory of heaven: There with the bleſſed Angels to ſing this glorious Hymn eternally. No more, of wiſh then, but of fruition, and ſo of everlaſting Gratulation.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Munday, the XXV. of December,

A.D. MDCXX. being CHRISTMAS Day.

MATT. Chap. II. Ver. I, II.

Cum ergo natus eſſet Jeſus in Bethlehem Judæ, in diebus Herodis Regis, Ecce Magi ab Oriente venerunt Jeroſolyman, dicentes.

Vbi eſt qui natus eſt Rex Judæorum? Vidimus enim ſtellam Ejus in Oriente, & venimus adorare Eum.

When Jeſus then was borne at Bethlehem in Judea, in the dayes of Herod the King, behold there came Wiſemen from the Eaſt to Jernſalem, ſaying.

Where is the King of the Jewes that is borne? For we have ſeene His Star in the Eaſt, and are come to worſhip Him.

WE paſſe now this yeare, from the Shepheards, and the Angels, to the Wiſemen, and their Star. This Star, and their comming no leſſe proper to this day, then thoſe other were. For, though they came not to Hieruſalem, this day; yet, this day, venerunt ab Oriente, from the Eaſt they came: They ſet forth, this very day. For, they came when JESUS was born; And, this day, was He borne. Howſoever the Starre brought them not to their journeyes end, till twelve dayes hence; yet this day it firſt ſhewd it ſelf: how ſoone JESUS was born, vidimus ſtellam, it appeared ſtraight. For which very appearing you ſhall find, the Fathers of the Eaſt-Church do call this firſt day τὴ ἐπιφάνια, as well as the laſt. This firſt, wherein His Starre appeared, and they began their journey. That laſt, wherein He appeared Himſelfe, and their journey was at an end. Firſt, and laſt, an appearing there was. One begins, the other ends the Feaſt.

We paſſe from one of them, to the other; but, from the leſſe to the greater:

For

For, of the twaine this is the greater. Greater, in it ſelfe: Greater, to us. Two wayes greater, in it ſelfe. Th'other (of the Shepheards) a poore one: poore and meane. This (of the Wiſe men) a Signe of ſome State: high and heavenly.

Eſay 7.11. GOD bade Ahaz ask a Signe; Aske one from here below, or one from the height above: He would ask neither, but GOD gave both. From below, Hoc erit ſignum, you ſhall finde the Babe in a manger: Low enough: (That we have done withall.) Now, from Luk. 2.12. above, Ecce vidimus ſtellam, the Signe from Heaven: His new ſtar.

Beſides, (to ſpeake uprightly) one might in ſome ſort complaine, of the priuateneſſe of the Angels appearing: Somewhat obſcure it was,; few privie to it: paſſed over in the night betweene the Angels and them. And, upon it, three or foure Shepheards got them into the ſtable; and, what there they did, no man could take notice of.

More famous, and more Manifeſtation-like was this here. A new Light kindled in heaven, A Star, never ſeene before. The world could not but looke up at it, and aske what it meant. Nothing appeareth there, but, the Sound of it goeth out into all Lands, Pſal. 19.4. and the newes of it to the utmoſt parts of the earth.

This made another manner venerunt: upon this came there to Hieruſalem (not a rout of Shepheards, but) a troope of Great perſons. And not from a heath, or Sheepcommon hard by; but, from a far, from the Eaſt, twelve dayes journey off. All Hieruſalem rang of it. The King, Prieſts, and People buſied with it. To this day, remembred in all Stories. It cannot be forgotten: For this was not done in a corner. This was (in deed) a Manifeſtation. Better, in it ſelfe, thus.

And, for us, Better: For us all. For we (all) hold by this. It was a bracke in the former; The Sermon was made, and the Antheme ſung, and none at it but the Iames 4.6. Shepheards. And what were they? Iewes: What is that to us? This Scripture offereth more grace. Theſe (here) that come from the Eaſt, firſt, they were Gentiles. Gentiles; that concernes us, for ſo are we. We may then looke out, if we can ſee this Star. It is ours, it is the Gentiles Star. We may ſet our courſe by it, to ſeek, and find, and worſhip Him, as well as they.

This is for us all. But there is yet more grace offered to ſome in particular. The Shepheards were a ſort of poore ſimple men altogether unlearned; But, here come a troope of men of great Place, high account in their countrey: And withall, of great learned men (their name gives them for no leſſe.) This (lo) falls ſomwhat proper to this Place and Preſence, that will be glad to heare it. It is fauſtum & ſalutare ſydus to ſuch; that wealth, worth, or wiſdome ſhall hinder none, but they may have their parts in CHRIST's Birth, as well as thoſe of low degree. It is not only Stella Gentium, but Stella Magorum: The Great mens, the Wiſe mens Star, this.

Eſay. 21.1. 2 Pet. 1.19. Pſal. 110.3. * Zach. 6.12. * Luk. 1.78. So, quoad nos, for us, it fitteth well. And, quoad ſe, of it ſelfe, it is fit every way. This Star leads us to another Star, even the Root and Generation of David, the bright morning ſtarre. He of whom * Zachary ſaith, in the old Teſtament, Ecce Vir, Oriens nomen ejus: Yea, Oriens ab alto (ſaith * Zachary, in the New:) Viſits thoſe of the Eaſt, whence the day ſpringeth; takes them that are neereſt Him; and His riſing works upon the place firſt, that beares His name. The Wiſdome of GOD the beginning of all his wayes is found by Wiſe men, of all other (becauſe they be Wiſe) moſt fit to finde Him. Prov. 8.22

The Diviſion I Two verſes I have read. In the former, after the Matter of the Feaſt firſt remembred, (When Ieſus was borne,) accompanied with the two circumſtances of Place and Time, (the place where, Bethlehem Iuda; the Time when, the dayes of Herod the King:) there is a memorable accident (that then happened) ſet downe: A Venerunt, A Comming or arrivall at Hieruſalem. And they, that ſo came, were a company of Magi, from the Eaſt. And this (lo) hath the Ecce on the head of it, Ecce, venerunt Magi ab Oriente, Behold, there came, &c. As the ſpeciall point, in the Text: and ſo, we to make it.

II. In the later, is ſet downe their Errand. Both the [1] Occaſion, and the [2] End: beſt expreſſed by themſelves, out of their own dicentes. 1. The Occaſion: Vidimus ſtellam, plam; They had ſeene His ſtarre. 2. The End, Venimus adorare, They are come to worſhip Him. Viderunt, Venerunt, Adoraverunt.

That they may come to their finis ultimus, they muſt have a medius finis: That is, to worſhip, they muſt finde Him where He is.

So they aske, Vbi eſt? Not, whether He be borne; but, where He is borne. For, borne He is, they are ſure, by the ſame token they have ſeene His Starre: His Starre is up; that is riſen; therefore He is riſen too.

So the Starre in Heaven kindled another Starre in earth, (S. Peter cals it the Day-ſtar which riſeth in the heart, that is, faith) which ſhined and manifeſted it ſelfe, by their labour in comming, diligence in enquiring, duty in worſhipping. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

CHRISTS birth made manifeſt, to them, by the Star in Heaven: Their faith (the ſtar in their hearts) made manifeſt to CHRIST, and to all, by the travell of it, which ſhewed it manifeſtly.

That (upon the matter) there fals a three-fold Manifeſtation, (you may call them three ſtars, if you pleaſe:) 1 The ſtar in Heaven: 2 the day-ſtar, in their hearts: 3 and, CHRIST Himſelfe, the bright morning-ſtar, whom both the other guide us to: the Star of this morning, which makes the Day, the greateſt Day in the yeare.

The ſumme of all riſeth to this: That GOD hath opened the doore of faith to the Gentiles: And, among them, to Wiſemen, and Great men, as well as to the ſimpler ſort. But with this condition; that they ſay with them, venite adoremus: And ſo, come, and ſeeke, and find, and worſhip Him; that is, do as they did. Act. 14. 27.

WHen JESUS was borne: That (when) is now. His Birth is the ground of the Feaſt, and the cauſe of our Venimus, our comming together. Where this we note firſt; It is the very firſt time, the firſt (was borne) in the Bible: was borne, never till now. Here, the tide turnes; the ſenſe changes, from ſhall be, to was. A bleſſed change; and, the day is bleſſed, on which it happened. The Matter.

Before He was borne, it was ſo ſure He ſhould be borne, as Eſay ſaid, Puer natus eſt nobis. But for all that, there is ſome odds between Eſays natus eſt, and S. Matthews. That was but vertually; as good as borne: This, actually borne indeed. Eſay. 9. 6.

JESUS CHRIST yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever. The ſame, yet not altogether after the ſame manner. There is as much betweene JESUS CHRIST, yeſterday, not come; and JESUS CHRIST, to day, cùm natus eſſet; as is betweene a ſtate in reverſion, and one in being. Heb. 13. 8.

The Fathers aptly reſemble their caſe, that were the ante-nati before CHRIST, and ours that came after, to the two men (Numb. 13.) that carried the great cluſter of grapes, upon a ſtaffe betweene them. Both carried; but, he that came behind ſaw that he carried: So did not he that went before. The poſt-nati (ſure) are of the ſurer hand: And ſo, for cùm natus eſſet (the day and time) to hold a Feaſt: for When JESUS was borne. Numb. 13. 24.

Weighty circumſtances are ever matter of moment; in a ſtory ſpecially. Three there are in the firſt Verſe: 1 The Place: 2 the Time: 3 the Perſons. 4 I adde a fourth (out of the Second verſe) the Occaſion. The place (Vbi,) Bethlehem Iuda. The time (Quando,) the dayes of Herod the King. The Perſons (Quibus,) Wiſe men from the Eaſt. The Occaſion, (whereupon) A new Starre appearing; every one of the foure having a ſeverall Prophecy running of it: and every Prophecy, a filling of it, in theſe words. The Circumſtances.

The Place: He was borne, in Bethlehem Iuda: And thou Bethlehem Iuda (ſaith the Prophet Mica,) out of thee ſhall He come. And now, come He is. Mica. 5. 2.

The time: the dayes of Herod the King. The Scepter ſhall not quite depart from Iuda, till SHILO come (ſaid old Father Iacob in his Prophecy:) SHILO then is (now) come. For, the Scepter is in Herods hand: His Father, an Edomite; His mother, an Iſmaelite: Iuda cleane gone. Gen. 49. 10.

The

Pſal 72.10. Eſay.60.6. The Perſons: Magi ab Oriente, Kings from the Eaſt. The Kings of Arabia and Saba, ſhall come and bring gifts (ſaith David:) And Eſay ſpecifies them, Gold, Mirh, Incenſe. Theſe Kings are come: Here they are, they, and their gifts, both.

Numb. 24.17. The Occaſion; whereupon: A ſtar riſen: A ſtar ſhall riſe of Iacob (ſaith Balaam, no very good man, yet a true Prophet in this; and his prophecy true, and for ſuch recorded in the Book of Moſes.) This ſtar is, this morning, up to be ſeene. Prophecies of all foure: and, all foure accompliſhed.

1 Chriſts Vbi. Of the Place of Bethlehem (out of Mica) it hath formerly beene treated: I but touch it and paſſe it, now. It was the place, where David himſelfe was borne. And what place more meet for the Son of David, to be borne in? It was the place, where

Ioh.6.53. was heard the firſt newes of the Temple: And, where could the Lord of the Temple, more fitly be heard of? It is interpreted Domus panis, the Houſe of Bread: what place more proper for Him, who is the living bread, that came downe from heaven, to give

Mica.5.2. life to the world? It was the leaſt, and the loweſt, of all the thouſands of Iuda: What little and low is, in things naturall; that lowlineſſe and humility is, in ſpirituall. This naturall birth-place, of His, ſheweth His ſpirituall. Humility is His place; Humility (as I may call it) the Bethlehem of vertues: where you find it, Loe, there is He borne. So born in us, as borne for us. Paſſe we Chriſts ubi; and now, to His Quando.

2 Chriſts Quando. Of the time: the Dayes of Herod the King. And thoſe were evill dayes; Dayes of great affliction, to that land. Iuda's Scepter cleane broken: not a Law-giver left between his feet. Edom (that is, Herod the Edomite) cryed, downe with them, downe to the ground.

Pſal.137.7. Not ſo much as a ſort of ſilly babes, but barbarouſly ſlaine in their mothers armes: enough, to make Rachel mourne, as ſhe lay in her grave. Diſmall dayes, certainly: why, Ier.31.15. then comes SHILO: When mans helpe furtheſt off, then GODS neareſt: When it is dark; then riſes the Star.

What one prophecy of Him, but came even ſo; even, at ſuch a time, when they

Gen.49.10. Num.24.17. were moſt out of heart, and needed comfort moſt. Iacobs, when they were in Egypt, the houſe of bondage. Balaam's, when in the waſts and barren wilderneſſe, among fiery Serpents. Eſay's, when they were ready to be over-runne with the two Kings of Syria and Iſrael. Daniel's, when in Babylon, the Land of their captivity. Agge's when they built the wall

Dan 9.25. Agg 2.9,10. 2 Pet.1 19. with the trowell in one hand, and the ſword in the other. As His Prophecies came (ſtill) So came He: His Prophecies (ſaith Peter,) as a candle: Himſelfe, as a ſtar: in the darke, both. For all the world, like the time of the yeare His birth fell in; in the ſharpeſt ſeaſon, in the deepe of Winter. As Humility, His place, ſo affliction, His time. The time and place fit well. For, the time of affliction, makes the place; makes humility: Which place CHRIST is borne in. I paſſe this alſo, and come to the third; of the Perſons.

3 Chriſts Quibus For, there ſtands the Ecce; upon it. Which Ecce points us to it, as to the chiefe point of all; As (indeed) it is. And our chiefe endevour, to include our ſelves, to have our parts in this Venerunt, in comming to Chriſt.

Here is a Comming, Venerunt: And they that come, Magi. In which Commers we conſider foure points: they ſuſtaine foure perſons: [1] Of Gentiles; [2] Gentiles, from the Eaſt; [3] Great Perſons, Great Princes, (for, ſo we may be bold to call them, as the Prophecy cals them, Kings:) [4] Of great Learning and wiſedome; So [Magi] their name gives them.

3 Gentiles. Act.14.27. To Bethlehem came the ſhepheards. Nothing to us, they were Iews. But, thither came theſe too, and they were Gentiles: and, in this Gentiles, we; So come we in. Then hath GOD alſo, to the Gentiles ſet open a doore of faith. At which doore we enter; We with them, and they with us: For, they and we Gentiles both. The ſtarre is ſtella gentium, the Gentiles ſtarre: And ſo ours; and we to direct our courſe by it. All, that ever write, call them Primitias Gentium, the firſt fruits; Anteſignanos, the ſtandard-bearers.

bearers, to all the Gentiles, that came in after. Upon this, I beg leave to ſtand a little, becauſe it is our tenure, we hold by.

And, that GOD would thus do, call the Gentiles in, there was ſome little Ecce (ſtill) ſome ſmall Star-light from the beginning.

By way of Promiſe. So much promiſed, by the Patriarchs. Noe; that Iaphet ſhould at the laſt dwell in the Tents of Sem. Abraham; that in his Seed (not any one Nation, but) all the nations of the earth be bleſſed. Iacob; that Shilo's comming ſhould be expectatio (ſay, ſome, and ſome aggregatio) Gentium: All Nations looke for Him; all be gathered to Him. 1 Gen. 9. 27. 28. 49. 10.

By way of Figure. Aſmuch was ſhadowed in the Law, the Tabernacle, and the Temple; all, figures of things to come. The Law; Where was it given? Was it not in Sinai; a Mountaine in Arabia (ſaith the Apoſtle,) and ſo upon heathen ground? I truſt, we may have leave to come upon our owne ground. And by whom? Was it not by Moſes? And we claime to him by alliance: His wife was the daughter of the Prieſt of Madian: So, of a heathen woman; and his children, heathen of halfe-blood. 2 Heb. 10. 1. Gal. 4. 25. Exod. 2. 18.

The Tabernacle; was not the ſilke, and gold, and riches it was made of, the ſpoiles of Egypt, and ſo heathen ſtuffe? Exod. 12. 36. 25. 2. &c.

The Temple: was it not founded upon the threſhing floore of Ornan the Iebuſite, a heathen man? So, on heathen ſoile; and, ædificium cedit ſolo. The Timber and materials of it, came they not from Hirams countrey, A heathen King? And, the chiefe workman, in it (the Son of a man of Tyre) heathen alſo. So, the heathen were never wholly out. Venerunt, they came, they made their proffers. Some Ecce, ſome little ſtar ſtill. 1 Chr. 21. 18. 1 Reg. 5. 10. 7. 13. &c.

Now the Prophets, when they came, had we not hold there, too? At the ſame time, that GOD gave Moſes to the Iewes, who wrote of CHRIST, did he not likewiſe give Balaam to the Gentiles, who, in the mountaines of the Eaſt, propheſied of CHRISTS Starre, here? Great odds (I know) betweene the men; None betweene their Prophecies: Both, alike true: both their places alike, in the Library of the Holy Ghoſt. After that, Ionas: howſoever his booke ſtand in the volumne of the Prophets, yet, (when time was) it was ſhewed, that in time, he was the firſt of the ſixteen Prophets; before, and ancient to them all. And this was a faire ſtarre, that His firſt Prophet of all GOD ſent to Ninive, the great Citie of the Gentiles, then: And ſent him, before He ſent any of the other fifteene to his owne people (then) in ſhew, the People of the Iewes. 3 Num. 24. 17. Ioh. 1. 21.

But, even of them He ſent to the Jewes, ſaith not Eſay directly, the Root of Ieſſe ſhould be as a ſtandard, all the Nations gather unto Him? Saith not GOD there, It was too poore a ſervice for CHRIST to doe to Him, to draw to Him a ſort of ſilly Shepheards; He would give Him, as a light to lighten the Gentiles, to bring them, even the very beſt of them, from the ends of the earth. That light to lighten the Gentiles was this Star (here;) Simeon had it revealed to him, whereto this Star referred, and what it meant; For, it lightned them indeed. And this, ſtanding the firſt Temple. And ſaith not Aggee, (ſtanding in the ſecond Temple) The deſire of all Nations ſhould come, (meaning Chriſt;) the deſire, not of one Nation alone, but even of all. So, the Prophets will not be againſt this venerunt: they are (all) for it, Eſay 11. 10. Eſay 42. 6. 43. 5. Luk. 2. 32. Agg. 2. 8.

And was not alſo this Venerunt daily ſung in their Quier? The Pſalme of the Nativity: I will thinke upon Rahab (that is, Egypt) and Babylon, among ſuch as ſhall know me. Behold ye the Philiſtims alſo, and them of Tyre, with the Morians, Loe, there was He borne. Borne, in all thoſe places; that is, His birth concernes them all: all, their intereſt in it. In the Pſalme of His Paſsion: All the ends of the earth ſhall remember themſelves, and ſhall turne unto the LORD, And all the kindreds of Nations ſhall worſhip before Him. In the Pſalme of the Reſurrection: That, Hee ſhould then become the Head-ſtone of the corner, and joyne both Iewes and Gentiles in one coine, or angle And in the Pſalme of His Aſcenſion: That the Princes of the Nations ſhould be joyned to the People of the GOD of Abraham. And in the Pſalme 4 Pſal. 47. 4. 5. Pſal. 22. 27. Pſal. 118. 22. Pſal. 47. 10.

Psal 72.11. of His Exaltation: That all Kings ſhould kneele before Him, all Nations doe Him ſervice.

That which (than) was thus promiſed, to, and by the Patriarchs; ſhadowed forth, in the figures of the Law, the Temple and the Tabernacle; That which was foreſaid by the Prophets, and foreſuing of in the Pſalmes; that, was this day fulfilled: Venerunt, here they are come: And Venimus, We, in them, and with them. Who, not only in their own names, but in ours, make here their entry; came, and ſought after and found and worſhipped their SAVIOUR, and ours, the SAVIOUR of the whole world.

A little wicket there was left open before, whereat divers Gentiles did come in. Many, a Venit there was: Venit [a] Iob, in the Patriarchs dayes. [b] Venit Iethro, in Moſes: [c] Rahab, in Ioſua's: [d] Ruth, in the Iudges time: [e] Ittai (the King of Gaths ſon,) in Davids: [f] The Queene of Saba, in Solomons: The [g] Widow of Sarepta, in Elias: [h] Naaman (the Syrian) in Eliſa's time. Each of theſe, in their times, had the favour to be let in. This was but a Venit: a little wicket, for one or two. Now, a venerunt; the great Gate ſet wide open, this day, for all: For theſe here, with their Camels and Dromedaries, to enter, and all their carriage.

In the ſetting downe His Genealogie, (the Chapter before) That Salmon eſpouſed Mat 1.5. Rahab the Canaanite; that Booz likewiſe, Ruth the Moabite; it is plaine, that CHRIST deſcended (according to the fleſh) of Heathen. Deſcending of Heathen, He will never diſdaine them, of whom He is deſcended; never ſhut them out, but invite them to His Child-houſe; As (we ſee) this day by His ſtar, He did.

And (if you marke it) of His firſt Sermon the VVidow of Sarepta, and Naaman the Luk. 24.25.27. Syrian were the Theme; which made His Sermon was not liked. Yet, that Theme Mat. 12.42.41. He choſe purpoſely. And the Queene of the South, and the men of Ninive much in his mouth: He mentioned them willingly. And (to end this point;) He that, at His Iob 12.20. birth (now) received theſe of the Eaſt; a little before His death, in like ſort, received Græcians from the weſt, to ſee and to ſalute Him: And ſtraight upon it (upon the receiving them) brake out and ſaid, The houre is come now, that the Son of man is glorified; when 23. Eaſt and VVeſt are come in, both.

I have a little ſtood on this, becauſe it is the Ecce point. I conclude; The Place, Luk 27.2. He was born in, (an Inne, which is for all paſſengers of what country ſoever;) the time, Luk 2.1. He was born in, (of the taxe, when all the world came up to be taxed;) the very ſtar, which as the nature of ſtars is) is common to all Coaſts and Climats, peculiar to none: All ſhew, that from all coaſts they may now come; that, the Gentiles are now to be (as Epheſ 3.6. the Apoſtle in three pregnant termes delivers it) σύσσωμα, συμμέτοχα, συγκληρόνομα, fellow-members, fellow-partners, and fellow-heires of one body; Co-partners and Co-heires of CHRIST, and His birth. This for Stella Gentium, the Gentiles Star; So both theirs and ours.

2 Gentiles from the East.

There came Gentiles: And they came from the Eaſt. This may ſeeme to ſet us backe againe; for, we are of the VVeſt, the contrary Climate. That is no matter. For, in that they came from the Eaſt, there lyeth yet further hope for us; even from that Gal. 2 15. point of the compaſſe. For, that is not only Gentiles, but ſinners of the Gentiles: Sinners, and that chiefe ſinners. For, ſo were they of the Eaſt; greater, far greater ſinners than the reſt. For tell me, what ſin was there that came not from thence? There was Gen. 11.2. the Tower ſet in hand, that ſhould have confronted GOD: and of it came Babel, and from it confuſion. [2] Thence came all tyranny and oppreſſion among men, from Nim- Gen 10.9. rod, that hunted and ranged over men, as over beaſts in a forreſt. [3] Thence, all Idolatry, and worſhip of falſe gods; both in earth, from Belus tombe, firſt: And in Heaven, from the Star of their god Remphan (which S. Stephen ſpeakes of.) [4] Thence (from the Mountaines of the Eaſt) the poſterity of Balaam, falſe Prophets, that loves the wages Act. 7.33. of unrighteouſneſſe; and, from them, all that naught is. And, if in all theſe it did, It Num. 23.7. cannot be denied, but that the whole World received their infection that way, from 2 Pet. 2.15. the Eaſt.

And

And herein appeared the grace of God, which bringeth Salvation to all men, and to all ſinners, as faire and cleare, as the Star it ſelfe; that, thence (out of the mountaines of the Eaſt) GOD calleth theſe to ſeeke, and guided them to find CHRIST: that, whence the poyſon firſt came, thence might come the Triacle: and that as they were the firſt that went out, ſo they ſhould be the firſt that came in. Tit. 2. 11.

So the Eaſt ſets us no further backe, but brings us nearer. For if the Eaſt may come, which are the greater; much more may the VVeſt, which are the leſſe: if the Seducers, the Seduced. From the Eaſt to the Weſt, is à majore ad minus. That, if venerunt ab Oriente, venient ab Occidente: if the greater, much rather the leſſer. This, for the Star of the Gentiles, firſt: And now, the Star of Sinners, and chiefe ſinners of the Gentiles, even Orientall ſinners. Mat 8. 11.

3 Great Perſons.

But, they ſuſtaine yet a third perſon, theſe: (to come neare, and to make it come nearer us, even to this place.) For Great men they were in their Countries, of the higheſt place and account there, as all Stories teſtifie. The Pſalme cals them Kings of Sheba and Seba: and, ſo may we. It may appeare by Herods reſpect to them: His calling a Synod to reſolve them; his privie conference, with them. So may it by their treaſures they opened, and by their preſents they offered (preſents, for a King,) which give them for no leſſe. So, this is (now) thirdly, Stella Magnatum, the Star of Princes and Nobles alſo. Yea, Stella Regia, the Star Royall, Kings themſelves have their hold and claime by it. Pſal. 72. 10. Ver. 3. 4. 11.

CHRIST is not only for ruſſet cloakes, Shepheards and ſuch; ſhewes Himſelf to none but ſuch. But even the Grandez, Great States, ſuch as theſe; venerunt, they came too: and when they came, were welcome to Him. For they were ſent for, and invited by this Star (their Star properly.)

Theſe, at His Birth, at His welcome into the world; and others ſuch as theſe, at his death, at his going out of it. Then Ioſeph of Arimathea; an honourable Counſellor, beſtowed on him a faire new Tombe: and others came, with their hundred pound of ſweet odors. So that comming and going, He was beholden to ſuch. The Tribe, CHRIST came of, was the Royall Tribe, to whom the Scepter belonged; And, in the Prophecy it followes, A ſtar ſhall riſe out of Iacob, and a Scepter out of Iſrael. To Kings, to Scepters CHRIST cannot but be well inclined. Mat. 27. 60. Ioh. 19. 39. Num. 24. 17.

Among his Prophets, I find Amos, an heardman: True: but, I find Eſay, and Daniel, (both) nobly deſcended, and of the blood Royall. Amos 1. 1. Dan. 1. 6.

In His deſcent, there are Booz, and Ieſſe, plaine country men; But there are David, and Salomon too, and a liſt of Kings withall: that ſo, there may be a mixture of both. It is true, S. Paul ſaith: You ſee your calling; not many mighty, not many noble after the fleſh: Not many, he ſaith: Not any, he ſaith not: he ſhould (then) have ſpoken contrary to his owne knowledge. Some partained to this Star, went by it. The [a] Lord Deputie of Cyprus; the great [b] Iudge in Areopago, divers of the [c] nobler ſort at Berœa; And divers of [d] Cæſars houſhould came in, and had all their calling, by and from Him. Mat. 2. 6. 1 Cor. 1. 26. [a] Act. 13. 7. [b] Act. 17. 34. [c] 11. [d] Phil. 5. 22.

As likewiſe the great [e] Lord Treaſurer, by S. Philip; and the [f] Elect Lady by S. Iohn. Thoſe (all) were of this troope here: Under this Star, all of them, Stella Magnatum. To conclude, from our Saviour CHRISTS owne mouth: As there is in Heaven, roome for poore Lazarus; So, that roome was in the boſome of one that was rich (that is) of Abraham, a great Man, yea, a great Prince in his time. [e] Act. 8. 27. [f] 2 Ioh. 1.

4 Wiſe-men.

[1] Stella Gentium; [2] Stella Peccatorum de Gentibus; [3] Stella Magnatum. But yet all this while, we have not touched Stella Magorum: Not yet deale with Magi, the very word of the Text, and the chiefe perſon they repreſent. For, beſide that they were great States, they were alſo great Learned Men; And (being both) they are ſtiled rather by the name of their skill and Learning, than by that of their Greatneſſe; to point us, to the qualitie in them, we are principally to regard.

You ſhall not need ſtartle, when you heare the word Magi, as if they were ſuch as Simon Magus was. Of later times it ſounds not well (this name) Of old, it was a name of great honour, as was the name of Tyrannus, and Sophiſtes; all, in the like caſe. Evill and unworthy men tooke them up after, and ſo, they loſt their firſt reputation. But, originally, Magus was a title of high knowledg.

I adde, of Heathen knowledge, and comprehend in it this very knowledge, that they were well ſeene in the courſe of heaven, in the ſtars and bodies celeſtiall. Their Vidimus Stellam ſhewes as much. The ſtars God hath given, for ſignes (ſaith the book of Geneſis:) Even, the ordinary. And, if them, the extraordinary (ſuch as this) much more. For, Signes they are, open the Signature who can. Gen. 1. 14.

This learning of theirs made them never the further from CHRIST (we ſee;) It did them no hurt, in their comming to CHRIST: No more than it did Moſes, that he was well learned in all the wiſdome of the Egyptians (ſaith S. Stephen, Act. 7. 22.) Nor no more than it did Salomon, that he paſſed all the children of the Eaſt, in their own learning, (1 Reg. IIII. XXX.) No more than it did Daniel, that he was brought up, and well ſeene, in the cunning of the Chaldeans (Dan. I. IV.) No more theſe; than the gold and ſpoiles of Egypt, did the Tabernacle hurt, that was hung all over with them.

They, that are ſeene in theſe learnings of Egypt, of Chaldea, of the Eaſt, are not thereby barred at all. This is their Starre, their guide; a guide apt and proper for them, that knew the Starres; for them that were learned. CHRIST applyeth Himſelfe to all; diſpoſes all things: what every one is given to, even by that, CHRIST calleth them. Saint Peter, Andrew, Iames, and Iohn, Fiſhermen, by a draught of Fiſh. Theſe, that were ſtudious in the Starres, by a Star for the purpoſe.

And note that the apparition to the Shepheards was no ſooner over, but this Starre appeared preſently, if not the very ſame houre: (that is) both at once. In like manner, Chriſt, at firſt (to ſhew the glory of His greatneſſe) tooke and imployed Fiſhermen, ſuch as had no bringing up in Schooles. But it was not long after, but Learned men came in apace: Learned men of all ſorts; [a] Zenas, in Law; [b] Luke, in Phyſicke; [c] Apollo, with his Eloquence; [d] Dionyſe, with his Philoſophy; [e] S. Paul, with his πολλὰ γράμματα much learning, (which he had at Tharſus, as famous an Vniverſity for Aſia as Athens was for Greece.) Which Learning (for all Feſtus phanſie) turned not his braines, nor did them any hurt at all.

[c] Act. 18. 24.

There is no ſtarre, or beame of it; There is no truth at all, in humane learning or Philoſophy, that thwarteth any truth in Divinitie; but ſorteth well with it, and ſerveth it, and all to honour Him, who ſaith of Himſelfe, Ego ſum veritas, I am the truth. None, that will hinder this Venerunt, keepe back any wiſe man, or make him leſſe fit for comming to CHRIST. Ioh. 14. 6.

So, you ſee your calling; all foure. [1] Gentiles may come, [2] Sinners of the Gentiles may come, (yea, though they be peccatorum primi, of the primer ſort:) [3] Men of place; [4] Men of Gifts, learned and Wiſe may come. In Magis inſunt omnes hii, all are in Venerunt Magi: The Star goes before them, guides them (all) to Chriſt.

The Application. It remaineth, that, what we may do, we will do; that is, come. (For, further than Venerunt, we are not like to come, at this time.) And though we go no further, it skils not, ſo we do but that; come; Even that will ſerve. For, it is all in all. We ſhall go in the company of Wiſe-men, that is once. And if the Shepheards were too homely to ſort with, theſe are company for the beſt; they were company for Cyrus, and Darius, and all the great Monarchs of Perſia.

Ecce

Ecce Venerunt it is, in the Text: And (indeed,) not only the Perſons, (Ecce Magi,) but their very comming deſerved an Ecce. It is an Ecce venerunt, theirs (indeed) if we weigh it well, Whence they came, and whither. Whence; from the Eaſt, their owne countrey: Whither, to Hieruſalem, that was to them a ſtrange Land: That was ſomewhat. [2] They came a long journey, no leſſe than Twelve dayes together. [3] They came an uneaſie journey, for their way lay through Arabia Petræa, and the craggy rockes of it. [4] And they came a dangerous journey, through Arabia Deſerta (too,) and the black Tents of Kedar there then famous for their robberies, and even to this day. [5] And they came, now, at the worſt ſeaſon of the yeare. And all, but to doe worſhip at Chriſts birth. So great account they made; So highly did they eſteem their being at it, as they tooke all this great travell, and came all this long journey, and came it, at this time. Stayed not their comming, till the openning of the yeare, till they might have better weather and way, and have longer dayes, and ſo more ſeaſonable and fit to travell in. So deſirous were they to come with the firſt, and to be there, as ſoone as poſſible they might: broke through all theſe difficulties. Et ecce venerunt, And, behold, come they did. Pſal.120.5.

And we, what excuſe ſhall we have, if we come not? If ſo ſhort and ſo eaſie a way we come not, as from our chambers hither, not to be called a way indeed? Shall not our owne venerunt have an Ecce, Behold, it was but ſtepping over the threſhold, and yet they came not?

And theſe were Wiſe men; and never a whit the leſſe Wiſe, for ſo comming: Nay, never ſo truly wiſe, in any thing they did, as in ſo comming. The HOLY GHOST recordeth them for wiſe, in capite libri, even in the beginning of the New Teſtament. Of CHRIST, when He came into the world (that is, when He was borne) the Pſalme ſaith, In the beginning of the Booke it was written of Him, He ſaid, Ecce venio, Lo, I come: Of theſe, in the ſame words, when they came to meet Him (ſo borne) it is ſaid here, in the beginning of the Goſpell, Ecce venerunt, Behold they came. Pſal.40.7.

And wee, if wee believe this, that this was their wiſdome; if they and wee bee Wiſe by one Spirit, by the ſame principles; we will follow the ſame Starre, tread the ſame way, and ſo come (at laſt) whither they are happily gone before us.

Nay, not only that [come;] but this withall; to thinke and ſet downe with our ſelves, that, to come to Chriſt, is one of the wiſeſt parts, that ever theſe VViſe-men did; or we, (or any elſe) can do in all our lives.

And how ſhall we that doe? I know not any more proper way left us, than to come to that, which himſelfe by expreſſe order hath left us, as the moſt ſpeciall Remembrance of Himſelfe, to bee come to. When Hee came into the world (ſaith the Pſalme) that is, at His Birth (now) Hee ſaid, Ecce venio, Lo I come: What then? Sacrifice and burnt offertngs thou wouldeſt not have, but a body haſt thou ordained me: Marke (ſaith the Apoſtle,) Hee takes away the firſt, to eſtabliſh the ſecond, (that is) to eſtabliſh His bodie, and the comming to it. By the offering, -breaking, and partaking, of which body; we are all ſanctified, ſo many as ſhall come to it. For given it is for the taking away of our ſinnes. Nothing more fit, than at the time, His body was ordained Him (and that is, to day,) to come to the body ſo ordained. Ibid. ver. 8. Heb.10.9. Heb.10.10 Mat.26.28.

And in the Old Rituall of the Church we finde, that the cover of the Caniſter (wherein was the Sacrament of His body,) there was a Star ingraven; to ſhew us that (now) the Star leades us thither; to His body, there. Apoc.22.17.

And what ſhall I ſay now, but (according, as Saint Iohn ſaith) and the Star, and the Wiſemen ſay, Come. And He, whoſe ſtar is, and to whom the VViſe-men came, ſaith Come. And let them, that are diſpoſed, Come. And let, whoſoever will take of the Bread of Life, which came downe from Heaven, this day, into Bethlehem the Ioh.6.35.

house of bread. Of which bread, the Church is this (day) the House; and the true Bethlehem, and all the Bethlehem, we have now left to come to, for the bread of life; of that life, which we hope for in heaven. And this, our neareſt comming that (here) we can come, till we ſhall (by another Venite) come, unto Him in His heavenly Kingdome. To which, He grant we may come, that (this day) came to us in earth, that we thereby might come to Him, and remain with Him,

JESUS CHRIST the Righteous.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On VVedneſday, the XXV. of December,
A. D. MDCXXII. being CHRISTMAS Day.

MATT. Chap. II. Ver. I, II.

Behold there came VViſe Men, from the Eaſt to Hieruſalem; Saying, where is the King of the Jewes that is borne? For we have ſeene His Star in the Eaſt, and are come to worſhip Him.

THere be, in theſe two Verſes, two principall points, (as was obſerved, when time was,) [1] The Perſons, that arrived at Hieruſalem: [2] And their Errand. The Perſons in the former Verſe: whereof hath beene treated heretofore. their Errand, in the latter; wherewith we are now to deale.

Their Errand we may beſt learne from themſelves, out of their Dicentes, &c. Which (in a word is, To worſhip Him.) Their Errand, our Errand, and the Errand of this Day.

This Text may ſeeme to come a little too ſoone, before the time; and ſhould have ſtayed till the day, it was ſpoken on, rather than on this day. But, if you marke them well, there are (in the Verſe) foure Words, that be Verba Diei hujus, proper and peculiar to this very day. [1] For firſt, Natus eſt is moſt proper to this Day of all dayes, the Day of His Nativity. [2] Secondly, Vidimus ſtellam: For, this Day, it was firſt ſeene; appeared firſt. [3] Thirdly, Venimus: For; this day, they ſet forth, began their journey. [4] And laſt, Adorare eum: For when He brought His only begotten Son into the World, He gave in charge, Let all the Angels of God worſhip Him: And when the Angels to doe it, no time more proper for Us to doe it, as then. So theſe foure appropriate it to this day, and none but this. Heb. 1. 6

The maine heads of their Errand are [1] Vidimus ſtellam: the Occaſion: [2] And Venimus adorare, the End of their comming. But for the better conceiving it, I will take another courſe, to ſet forth theſe points to be handled. The Diviſion

I Their Faith firſt: Faith in that they never aske, Whether He be; but, Where He is borne: For, that Borne He is, that they ſtedfaſtly believe.

II. Then the work, or ſervice of this Faith, (as S. Paul calleth it;) the Touch, or triall, δοκίμιον (as S. Peter;) the Oſtende mihi, as (S. Iames) of this their faith in theſe five:

2 dicentes, they tell it out: Confeſſe Him, and His birth to be the cauſe of their comming. [2] Secondly, As confeſſe their Faith, So, the Ground of their Faith; Vidimus enim, For, they had ſeene His ſtar: And, His ſtar being riſen, by it they knew, He muſt be riſen too. [3] Thirdly, (as S. Paul cals them, in Abraham's Veſtigia fidei, the ſteps of their

Here, they ſay it: At the XI. Verſe, they do it, in theſe two acts, [1] Procidentes, their Falling downe: [2] And, Obtulerunt, their offering to Him. Worſhip Him with their bodies; Worſhip Him with their Goods: Their Worſhip, and ours; the true Worſhip of Chriſt.

The Text is of a ſtar: And we may make all run on a ſtar; that ſo, the Text and 2 Pet. 1.9. day may be ſuitable, and Heaven and Earth hold a correſpondence. S. Peter cals faith, the Day-ſtar riſing in our hearts: Which ſorts well with the ſtar, in the Text, riſing in the Skie. That, in the skie manifeſting it ſelfe from above, to them: This, in their hearts, manifeſting it ſelfe from below, to Him, to CHRIST. Manifeſting it ſelfe, by Theſe five, as ſo many beames of faith, the day-ſtar riſen in their hearts. To take notice of them. For, every one of them is of the nature of a Condition; So as, if we faile in them, non lucet nobis ſtella hæc, we have no part in the light, or conduct of this Star. Neither, in Stellam, the Star it ſelfe; Nor, in Ejus, in Him whoſe the Star is; that is not in CHRIST neither.

We have now got us a ſtar on earth, for that in Heaven: And theſe (both) lead us to a third. So as, upon the matter, three ſtars we have; and each his proper manife-

3 Procidentes, falling downe: [5] In their Hands, Obtulerunt, by Offering. Theſe five, every one a beame of this ſtar. 3. The third in CHRIST Himſelfe (S. Iohn's Star,) The generation and Root of David, the bright morning ſtarre CHRIST. And He, His double appearing. [1] One, at this time, now, when He appeared in great humility; and we ſee,
Tit. 2.13. and come to Him, by faith. [2] The other which we waite for; even, the bleſſed hope, and appearing of the great God, and our Saviour, in the Majeſtie of His Glory.

Theſe three: [1] The firſt, that manifeſted CHRIST to them: [2] The ſecond, that manifeſted them to CHRIST: [3] The third, CHRIST Himſelfe, in whom, both theſe were (as it were) in conjunction. CHRIST the bright Morning ſtar of that Day, which ſhall have no night; the Beatifica viſio, the bleſſed ſight of which Day, is the conſummatum eſt of our Hope, and happineſſe for ever.

Of theſe three ſtars, the firſt is gone; the third yet to come; the ſecond only is preſent. We, to looke to that; and to the five beames of it. That is it, muſt do us all the good, and bring us to the third.

Saint

SAint Luke calleth Faith, the * Doore of Faith: At this Doore let us enter. Here is a comming: And, He that commeth to God (and ſo, He that, to CHRIST) muſt believe that Chriſt is: ſo do theſe. They never ask, An ſit, but ubi ſit: Not, Whether, but, Where He is borne. They that ask Vbi, qui natus? take natus for granted: preſuppoſe, that borne He is. Herein is faith: Faith, of CHRIST's being borne, the third Article of the Chriſtian Creed. I

Their Faith.
* Act. 14. 27.

And what believe they of Him? Out of their owne words here: [1] Firſt, that Natus, that borne He is; and ſo, Man He is: His Humane Nature. [2] And as His Nature, ſo His Office, in Natus eſt Rex, borne a King: They believe that too. [3] But, Iudæorum may ſeeme to be a barre: For then what have they to doe with the King of the Iewes? They be Gentiles, none of His Lieges; No relation to Him, at all; What doe they ſeeking, or worſhipping Him? But, weigh it well, and it is no bar. For, this they ſeeme to believe: He is ſo Rex Iudæorum, King of the Iewes, as He is adorandus a Gentibus, the Gentiles to adore Him. And, though borne in Iewry, yet, whoſe Birth concerned them, though Gentiles, though borne far off in the Mountaines of the Eaſt: They, to have ſome benefit by Him and His birth; and for that to do Him worſhip, ſeeing Officium fundatur in beneficio. [4] As thus borne in earth, ſo a ſtarre He hath in heaven of His owne: ſtellam Ejus, His ſtar; He the owner of it. Now we know, the ſtars are the ſtars of Heaven; and He, that Lord of them, Lord of Heaven too; and ſo, to be adored of them, of us, and of all. S. Iohn puts them together: The Root and Generation of David, His Earthly; and, The bright Morning-ſtarre, His Heavenly or Divine generation. Hæc eſt fides Magorum, this is the Myſtery of their faith. In Natus eſt, Man; In ſtellam Ejus, GOD: In Rex, a King, (though of the Iewes, yet) the good of whoſe Kingdome ſhould extend and ſtretch it ſelfe far and wide, to Gentiles and all; and He of all to be adored. This, for corde creditur, the day-ſtar it ſelfe in their hearts. Now, to the Beames of this ſtar.

Rev. 22. 16.

II.

The Worke of their Faith.
1 Their Confeſſion, dicentes.

Next to Corde creditur is Ore fit confeſsio, the Confeſsion of this Faith. It is in venerunt dicentes, they came with it in their mouths. Venerunt, they were no ſooner come, but they ſpake of it ſo freely, to ſo many, as it came to Herod's eare, and troubled him not a little, that any King of the Iewes ſhould be worſhipped, beſide himſelfe. So then, their faith is no boſome-faith, kept to themſelves, without ever a dicentes, without ſaying any thing of it to any body. No, Credidi, propter quod locutus ſum; They believe, and therefore they ſpake. The ſtar in their hearts caſt one beame out at their mouths. And though Herod, who was but Rex factus, could evill brooke to heare of Rex natus, muſt needs be offended at it; yet they were not affraid to ſay it. And, though they came from the Eaſt (thoſe parts, to whom and their King the Iewes had long time beene captives and underlings,) they were not aſhamed neither to tell, that, One of the Iewes Race they came to ſeeke: and to ſeeke Him to the end to worſhip Him. So, neither afraid of Herod, nor aſhamed of CHRIST: but profeſſed their Errand, and cared not who knew it. This for their confeſsing Him boldly.

Their Ground: Vidimus enim:
Pro. 14. 15.

But, Faith is ſaid (by the * Apoſtle) to be ὑπόστασις, and ſo there is a good Ground, and ἔλεγχος, and ſo, hath a good Reaſon for it. This, puts the difference betweene Fidelis, and Credulus, or, (as Salomon termes him) fatuus, qui credit omni verbo: betweene Faith, and lightneſſe of beliefe: Faith hath (ever) a Ground: Vidimus enim, an Enim a Reaſon for it; and is ready to render it. How came you to believe? Audivimus enim; For, we have heard an Angell (ſay the Shepheards:) Vidimus enim, for we have ſeene a ſtar, (ſay the Magi:) And this is a well-grounded faith. We came not of our own heads; We came not, before we ſaw ſome reaſon for it; ſaw that which ſet us on comming; Vidimus enim ſtellam Ejus.

Luk. 2. 20.

Vidimus

Stellam Ejus. Vidimus ſtellam: We can well conceive that: Any, that will but looke up, may ſee a ſtar. But, how could they ſee the [Ejus] of it, that it was His? Either, that it belonged to any; Or that, He it was, it belonged to. This paſſeth all Perſpectivè: No Aſtronomie could ſhew them this. What by courſe of Nature the ſtars can produce, that they, by courſe of Art or Obſervation, may diſcover. But, this Birth was above Nature. No Trigon, Triplicity, Exaltation could bring it forth. They are but idle, that ſet figures for it. The ſtar ſhould not have beene His, but He, the ſtars, if it had gone that way. Some other light then, they ſaw this [Ejus] by.

Now (with us in Divinitie) there be but two in all: Veſpertina, and Matutina lux. Veſpertina, the Owle-light of our Reaſon, or skill, is too dimme to ſee it by. Mo remedie then, but it muſt be (as Eſay cals it) Matutina lux: The Morning light, the Light of Gods Law muſt certifie them of the Ejus of it. There, or not at all, to be had, whom this ſtar did portend.

Num. 24. 17. And in the Law, there we find it (in the XXIV. of Numbers.) One of their owne Prophets, that came (from whence they came) from the Mountains of the Eaſt) was raviſhed in ſpirit, fell in a trance; had his eyes opened, and ſaw the Ejus of it many an hundred yeares, before it roſe. Saw Orietur in Iacob, that there it ſhould riſe; Which Ibid. is as much as Natus eſt, here. Saw ſtella that he ſhould be the bright Morning-ſtarre; Ibid. and ſo, might well have a ſtar to repreſent Him. Saw Sceptrum in Iſrael (which is juſt as much as Rex Iudæorum,) that it ſhould portend a King there: Such a King, as ſhould not only ſmite the corners of Moab (that is) Balac their enemie, for the preſent; but ſhould reduce and bring under Him all the ſons of Seth (that is) all the World: For, all are now Seth's ſons, Cain's were all drowned in the Flood. Here now is the Ejus of it cleare. A Prophets eye might diſcerne this: Never a Chaldean of them all could take it with his Aſtrolabe. Balaams eyes were opened to ſee it; and he helped to open their eyes, by leaving behinde him this Prophecy, to direct them how to apply it (when it ſhould ariſe) to the right Ejus of it.

But, theſe had not the Law: It is hard to ſay that the Chaldee Paraphraſe was extant long before this. They might have had it. Say, they had it not: If Moſes were ſo carefull to record this Prophecy in his booke, it may well be thought, that ſome memory of this ſo memorable a Prediction was left remaining among them of the Eaſt, his own Countrey where he was born and brought up. And ſome help they might have from Daniel too, who lived all his time in Chaldæa and Perſia, and propheſied among them of ſuch a King, and ſet a juſt time of it.

And this, (as it is conceived) put the difference betweene the Eaſt and Weſt. For I ask, What is vidimus in Oriente with them; Was it not vidimus in Occidente? In the Weſt, ſuch a ſtar, it or the fellow of it was ſeene, nigh about that time, or the Romane Stories deceive us. Toward the end of Auguſtus Reigne, ſuch a ſtarre was ſeene, and much ſcanning there was about it. Plinie ſaith, it was generally holden, that ſtar to be Fauſtum ſydus, a Lucky Comet; and portended good to the world, which, few or no Comets doe. And Virgil (who lived then) would needs take upon him to ſet downe the Ejus of it,------Ecce Dionæi, &c. Entitled Cæſar to it. And verily, there is no man, that can (without admiration) reade his ſixth Eglogue, of a Birth, that time expected, that ſhould be the Ofspring of the Gods, and that ſhould take away their ſinnes. Where-upon it hath gone for current, the Eaſt and Weſt, Vidimus, both.

But, by the light of their Prophecy, the Eaſt, they went ſtraight to the right Ejus. And, for want of this Light, the Weſt wandred and gave it a wrong Ejus: As Virgil, applying it to little Saloninè; and (as evill hap was) while he was making his Verſes, the poore Child died; and ſo, his ſtar ſhot, vaniſhed, and came to nothing. Their vidimus never came to a venimus: they neither went, nor worſhipped him, as theſe (here) did.

But, by this we ſee, when all is done, hither we muſt come, for our Morning-light; to this booke, to the Word of Prophecy. All our vidimus ſtellam is as good as nothing, without it. That Star is paſt and gone, long ſince: Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe, but this this word ſhall not paſſe. Here, on this, we to fix our eye, and to ground our faith. Having this, though we never heare Angell, nor ſee ſtar, we may (by the Grace of GOD) doe full well. For, even they, that have had both thoſe, have beene faine to reſolve into this, as their laſt, beſt, and chiefeſt point of all. Witneſſe S. Peter: He ſaith he, (and they with him) ſaw Chriſts Glory, and heard the voyce from Heaven, in the holy Mount: What then? After both theſe, Audivimus and vidimus (both ſenſes) he comes to this, Habemus autem firmiorem, &c. We have a more ſure word of Prophecy than both theſe. Firmiorem, a more ſure, a more cleare, than them both. And Si hic legimus (for, legimus is vidimus,) If here we read it written, it is enough to ground our faith, and let the ſtar goe. 2 Pet. 1.17. Verſ. 19.

And yet (to end this point;) Both theſe, the ſtar, and the Prophecy, they are but circumfuſa Lux: Without, both. Beſides theſe, there muſt be a light within, in the eye: Elſe, (we know) for all them, nothing will be ſeene. And, that muſt come from Him, and the enlightning of His Spirit. Take this for a Rule: No knowing of Ejus, abſque Eo; of His, without Him, whoſe it is. Neither, of the ſtarre, without Him, that created it; Nor, of the Prophecy, without Him, that inſpired it. But, this third comming too; He ſending the light of His Spirit within, into their minds; they then ſaw cleerely, This, the ſtar; now the Time; He the Child, that this day was borne.

He, that ſent theſe two without, ſent alſo this third within: and then, it was Vidimus indeed. The light of the ſtar, in their eyes, the word of prophecy in their eares, the Beame of His Spirit in their hearts; theſe three made up a full vidimus. And, ſo much for vidimus ſtellam Ejus, the Occaſion of their comming.

Now, for venimus, their comming it ſelfe. And it followes well. For, it is not a ſtar only, but a Load-ſtar: And, whither ſhould ſtella Ejus ducere, but ad Eum? whither lead us, but to Him, whoſe the ſtar is? to the Stars Maſter. 3 Their comming Venimus.

All this while we have beene at dicentes, ſaying and ſeeing: Now we ſhall come to Facientes, ſee them doe ſomewhat upon it. It is not ſaying nor ſeeing will ſerve S. Iames: He will call, and be ſtill calling for Oſtende mihi, ſhew me thy Faith by ſome Worke. And, well may he be allowed to call for it, this Day: It is the day of Vidimus, Appearing, Being ſeene. You have ſeene His ſtar: Let Him now ſee your ſtar, another while. And, ſo they do. Make your faith to bee ſeene: So it is: Their Faith, in the ſteps of their Faith. And, ſo was Abrahams', firſt, by comming forth of his countrey; As, theſe here doe, and ſo walk in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham; doe his firſt worke. Iam. 2.18. Rom. 4.12.

It is not commanded, to ſtand gazing up into heaven too long, Not on CHRIST Himſelfe aſcending: much leſſe on His ſtar. For, they ſate not ſtill gazing on the ſtar. Their Vidimus begat Venimus; their ſeeing made them come; come a great journey. Venimus is ſoone ſaid; but a ſhort word: But, many a wide and weary ſtep they made before they could come to ſay Venimus, Lo, here we are come; Come, and at our journeyes end. To look a little on it. In this their Comming, we conſider, 1. Firſt, the diſtance of the Place they came from. It was not hard by, as the ſhepheards (but a ſtep to Bethlehem over the fields:) This was riding many hundred miles, and coſt them many a dayes journey. 2. Secondly, we conſider the way, that they came: if it be pleaſant, or plaine and eaſie: For, if it be, it is ſo much the better. [1] This was nothing pleaſant; for, through deſarts: all the way waſte and deſolate. [2] Nor (ſecondly) eaſie neither, For, over the rocks and crags of both Arabies (ſpecially Petraa) their journy lay. 3. Yet if ſafe: But it was not; but exceeding dangerous, a lying through the middeſt of the Black Tents of Kedar, a Nation of Theeves and cut-throates; to paſſe over the hils of Robbers; Infamous then, and infamous to this day. No paſſing without great troop, or convoy. 4. Laſt we conſider the time of their comming, the ſeaſon of the yeare. It was no ſummer progreſſe. A cold comming they had of it, at this time of the yeare; juſt the worſt time of the yeare, to take a journey, and ſpecially a long journey, in. The wayes deep, the weather ſharp, the dayes ſhort, the ſun fartheſt off in ſolſtitio brumali, the very Cant. 1.4.

dead of Winter. Venimus, We are come, if that be one; Venimus, We are (now) come, come at this time, that (ſure) is another.

And theſe difficulties they overcame, of a weari-ſome, irkeſome, troubleſome, dangerous, unſeaſonable journey: And for all this, they came. And, came it cherefully, and quickly; As appeareth, by the ſpeed they made. It was but vidimus, venimus with them; They ſaw, and they came: No ſooner ſaw, but they ſet out preſently. So, as upon the firſt appearing of the ſtar (as it might be, laſt night) they knew it was Balaam's ſtar; it called them away, they made ready ſtraight to begin their journey this morning. A ſure ſigne they were highly conceited of His birth, believed ſome great matter of it, that they tooke all theſe paines, made all this haſte, that they might be there to worſhip Him, with all the poſſible ſpeed they could. Sorry for nothing ſo much, but that they could not be there ſoone enough, with the very firſt to doe it even this day, the day of His birth. All conſidered, there is more in venimus than ſhews at the firſt ſight. It was not for nothing, it was ſaid (in the firſt verſe) Ecce venerunt; their comming hath an Ecce on it: it well deſerves it.

And we, what ſhould we have done? Sure, theſe men of the Eaſt, ſhall riſe in judgment againſt the men of the Weſt, that is, us: and their faith, againſt ours, in this point. With them it was but vidimus, venimus: With us, it would have been but veniemus at moſt. Our faſhion is, to ſee and ſee againe, before we ſtirre a foot: Specially, if it be to the worſhip of CHRIST. Come ſuch a Journey, at ſuch a time? No: but fairely have put it off till the ſpring of the yeare, till the dayes longer, and the wayes fairer, and the weather warmer: till better travelling to CHRIST. Our Epiphany would ſure have fallen in Eaſter-weeke at the ſooneſt.

Mat. 8. 11.

But then, for the diſtance, deſolateneſſe, teadiouſneſſe, and the reſt, any of them were enough to mar our venimus quite. It muſt be no great way (firſt) we muſt come: we love not that. Well fare the Shepheards yet, they came but hard by: Rather like them than the Magi. Nay, not like them neither. For, with us, the nearer (lightly) the furtheſt off: Our Proverbe is (you know) The nearer the Church the further from God.

Nor, it muſt not be through a Deſart, over no Petræa. If rugged, or uneven the way; if the weather ill diſpoſed; If any never ſo little danger, it is enough to ſtay us. To Chriſt we cannot travell, but weather and way and all muſt be faire. If not, no journey but ſit ſtill and ſee further. As indeed, all our Religion is rather vidimus, a Contemplation, than Venimus, a Motion, or ſtirring to be ought.

But when we doe it, we muſt be allowed leaſure. Ever, veniemus; never venimus: Ever comming; never, come. We love to make no very great haſte. To other things perhaps: Not to Adorare, the Place of the worſhip of GOD. Why ſhould we, Chriſt, is no wild-Cat. What talke you of twelve dayes? And if it be forty dayes hence, ye ſhall be ſure to finde His Mother and Him; She cannot be Churched till then: What needs ſuch haſte? The truth is, we conceit Him and His Birth but ſlenderly, and our haſte is even thereafter. But, if we be at that point, we muſt be out of this Venimus: they like enough to leave us behind. Beſt, get us a new Chriſt-maſſe in September: we are not like to come to Chriſt at this Feaſt. Enough, for venimus.

4 Their Enquiry Vbi eſt.

But, what is Venimus without Invenimus? And, when they come, they hit not on Him, at firſt. No more muſt we thinke, as ſoone as ever we be come, to find Him ſtraight. They are faigne to come to their Vbi eſt? We muſt now looke backe to that. For, though it ſtand before in the Verſe, here is the right place of it. They ſaw before they came; and came, before they asked: Asked, before they found; and found, before they worſhipped. Betweene venimus (their comming) and Adorare (their worſhipping) there, is the true place of [Dicentes, ubi eſt?]

Where (firſt) we note a double uſe of their Dicentes, theſe Wiſe men had: [1] As to manifeſt what they knew, Natus eſt, that He is borne; ſo, to confeſſe and aske what they knew not, the Place, Where. We, to have the like.

[2] Secondly, ſet down this: That, to finde where He is, we muſt learne of theſe,

to

to aske Where He is: Which we full little ſet our ſelves to do. If we ſtumble on Him, ſo it is, But for any asking we trouble not our ſelves: but ſit ſtill (as we ſay) and let Nature worke; And ſo let Grace too; and ſo, for us, it ſhall. I wot well, it is ſaid (in a place of Eſay) He was found à non quærentibus, of ſome that ſought Him not, never asked Vbi eſt? But it is no good holding by that place. It was their good hap that ſo did. But, truſt not to it: it is not every bodies caſe, that. It is better advice, you ſhall read in the Pſalm, Hæc eſt generatio quærentium: There is a Generation of them that ſeek Him. Of which, theſe were: And, of that Generation let us be. Regularly, there is no promiſe of Invenietis, but to quærite; of Finding, but to ſuch as ſeeke. It is not ſafe, to preſume, to find Him otherwiſe.

Pſal. 20. 6.

I thought there had been ſmall uſe (now) of [Vbi eſt?] Yet there is: Except we hold the ubiquitie, That CHRIST is ubi non? any where. But, He is not ſo. CHRIST hath His ubi, His proper Place, where He is to be found: And if you miſſe of that, you miſſe of Him. And well may we miſſe (ſaith CHRIST Himſelf) there are ſo many will take upon them, to tell us Where: and tell us of ſo many ubi's: Ecce hîc, Look you here He is, Ecce illîc, Nay then, there. In deſerto, in the deſart: Nay, In penetralibus, in ſuch a privie Conventicle, you ſhall be ſure of Him. And yet, He (ſaith He Himſelfe) in none of them all. There is then (yet) place for [Vbi eſt?] I ſpeak not of His Naturall body, but of His Myſticall: That, is CHRIST too.

Mat. 24. 23.

How ſhall we then do? Where ſhall we get this [Where] reſolved? Where theſe did. They ſaid it to many and oft, but gat no anſwer, till they had got together a Convocation of Scribes; and they reſolved them of CHRIST's ubi. For, they (in the Eaſt) were nothing ſo wiſe or well ſeen, as we (in the Weſt) are now grown. We need call no Scribes together, and get them tell us, where: Every Artiſan hath a whole Synode of Scribes in his braine, and can tell where CHRIST is, better than any learned man of them all. Yet, theſe were Wiſe men: Beſt, learn, where they did.

And how did the Scribes reſolve it them? Out of Mica. As before, to the ſtar they joyne Balaam's Prophecy: So now againe, to His Orietur (that ſuch an one ſhould be born) they had put Mica's [& tu Bethlehem] the Place of His Birth. Still helping, and giving light (as it were) to the light of Heaven, by a more cleare light, the light of the Sanctuary.

Thus then, to do. And, to do it our ſelves: and not ſeeke CHRIST, per alium; Set others about it (as Herod did theſe) and ſit ſtill our ſelves. For ſo, we may hap never find Him, no more than he did.

Their End, Adorare Eum.

And now we have found where, what then? It is neither in ſeeking or finding, Venimus nor Invenimus: the End of all, the Cauſe of all is, in the laſt words Adorare Eum, to Worſhip Him. That, is all in all: And without it, all our ſeeing, comming, ſeeking, and finding is to no purpoſe. The Scribes they could tell, and did tell, where He was; but, were never the nearer for it: For, they worſhipped Him not. For this End to ſeeke Him.

This is acknowledged: Herod (in effect) ſaid as much. He would know, where He were (fain) and, if they will bring him word where, he will come too and worſhip Him, that he will. None of that worſhip. If we find Him, his Worſhipping will prove Worrying: As it did appeare by a ſort of ſilly poore Lambs, that he worried when he could not have his will on CHRIST. Thus he, at his Birth.

Ver. 16.

And at His death, the other Herod he fought him too: but it was, that he and his Souldiers might make themſelves ſport with Him. Such ſeeking there is other while. And ſuch worſhipping; as they, in the Iudgement Hall, worſhipped Him, with Ave Rex, and then gave Him a bob blind-fold. The Worlds worſhip of Him, for the moſt part.

Luk. 23. 11.

Ioh. 19. 3.

But we may be bold to ſay, Herod was a fox. Theſe meane as they ſay: to worſhip Him they come, and worſhip Him they will. Will they ſo? be they well adviſed, what they promiſe, before they know, whether they ſhall find Him in a worſhipfull taking, or no? For, full little know they, Where, and in what caſe, they ſhall find Him. What if in a ſtable, laid there in a manger, and the reſt ſuitable to it; in as poore and pitifull a plight as ever was any: More like to be abhorred than adored of ſuch Perſons? Will they be as good as their word (trow?) Will they not ſtep back at the ſight, repent themſelves of their journey, and wiſh themſelves at home againe? But, ſo find Him, and ſo finding Him, worſhip Him for all that? If they will, verily then, great is their faith. This, is the cleareſt beame of all.

Luk. 13. 32.

Mat.12.42. The Queene of the South, (who was a figure of theſe Kings of the Eaſt) ſhe came as great a journey, as theſe. But when ſhe came, ſhe found a King indeed, King Salomon in all his Royaltie. Saw a glorious King, and a glorious Court about him. Saw him, and heard him: Tryed him, with many hard queſtions, received ſatisfaction of them all. This, was worth her comming. Weigh, what ſhe found, and what theſe here: As poore and unlikely a birth, as could be, ever to prove a King, or any great matter. No ſight, to comfort them; Nor a word, for which they any whit the wiſer: Nothing worth their travell. Weigh theſe together, and great odds will be found between her faith, and theirs. Theirs, the greater far.

Well, they will take Him, as they find Him: And, all this notwithſtanding, worſhip Him for all that. The ſtar will make amends for the Manger: And, for ſtella Ejus, they will diſpenſe with Eum.

And, what is it to worſhip? Some greater matter (ſure,) it is, that heaven and earth, the ſtars and the Prophets (thus) doe but ſerve to lead them, and conduct us to. For, all we (ſee) ends in Adorare: Scripturæ & Mundus ad hoc ſunt, ut colatur qui creavit, & adoretur qui inſpiravit; The Scripture and World are but to this end, that He, that created the one, and inſpired the other, might be but worſhipped. Such reckoning did theſe Act 8,27. ſeeme to make of it, here. And ſuch, the Great Treaſurer of the Queene Candace. Theſe came from the Mountaines of the Eaſt; He, from the uttermoſt part of Æthiopia came, and came for no other but only this, To worſhip: and, when they had done, than home againe. Tanti eſt Adorare. Worth the while, worth our comming, if (comming) we doe but that; but worſhip, and nothing elſe. And ſo I would have men accompt of it.

To tell you, what it is in particular. I muſt put you over to the 11. Verſe, where it is ſet down, what they did, when they worſhipped. It is ſet downe in two acts προσκυνῆν, and προσφέρειν; Falling downe and offering. Thus did they; thus we to doe: We to doe the like, when we will worſhip. Theſe two are all: and more than theſe, we find not.

We can worſhip GOD but three wayes: we have but three things, to worſhip him withall: [1] The ſoule He hath inſpired; [2] The Body, He hath ordained us; [3] And, the Worldly goods, He hath vouchſafed to bleſſe us withall. We, to worſhip Him, with all, ſeeing there is but one reaſon for all.

If He breathed into us our Soule, but framed not our body (but ſome other did that) Neither bow your knee, nor uncover your head, but keepe on your hats, and ſit even as you do hardly. But, if he have framed that body of yours, and every member of it, let him have the honour both of head, and knee, and every member elſe.

Againe, if it be not He, that gave us our worldly goods, but ſome body elſe; what He gave not, that with-hold from Him, and ſpare not. But, if all come from Him, all to return to Him: If He ſend all, to be worſhipped with all. And this (in good ſooth) is Rom.12.1. but Rationabile obſequium (as the Apoſtle calleth it.) No more, than Reaſon would, we ſhould worſhip Him withall.

Elſe, if all our worſhip be inward onely; with our hearts, and not our batts, (as ſome fondly imagine) we give Him but one of three. We put Him to His Thirds; Bid Him, be content with that, He gets no more but inward worſhip. That is out of the Text, quite. For, though (I doubt not, but) theſe here performed that alſo; yet, here it is not: Saint Matthew mentions it not: It is not to be ſeene: No Vidimus on it. And the Text is a Vidimus; and, of a Starre; that is, of an Outward viſible worſhip, to be ſeene of all. There is a Vidimus upon the worſhip of the Body, it may be ſeene: Procidentes. Let us ſee you fall downe. So is there, upon the worſhip with our worldly goods, that may be ſeene and felt: Offerentes. Let us ſee, whether, and what you offer,

with

With both which (no leſſe, then with the ſoule) GOD is to be worſhipped. Glorifie GOD with your bodies, for they are GODS (ſaith the Apoſtle.) Honour GOD with your ſubſtance, for He hath bleſſed your ſtore (ſaith SALOMON.) It is the precept of a wiſe King; of one, there: It is the Practiſe of more than one, of theſe three, here. Specially, now: For, CHRIST hath now a body; for which, to do Him worſhip with our bodies. And, now, He was made poore, to make us rich: and ſo, offerentes will do well, comes very fit. 1 Cor. 6. 20. Prov. 3. 9.

To enter further into theſe two, would be too long; (and indeed, they be not in our Verſe here;) And ſo, for ſome other treatiſe, at ſome other time.

There now remaines nothing, but to include our ſelves, and beare our part with them, and with the Angels, and all who this day adored Him.

The Application. Luk. 10. 37.

This was the Load-ſtar of the Magi: And, what were they? Gentiles: So are we. But, it muſt be ours, then we are to goe with them: Vade, & fac ſimiliter, Goe, and doe likewiſe. It is Stella Gentium; but idem agentium: The Gentiles ſtarre, but ſuch Gentiles, as overtake theſe and keepe company with them. In their [Dicentes,] Confeſſing their faith freely: In their [Vidimus] Grounding it throughly: in their [Venimus,] Haſting to come to Him ſpeedily. In their [Vbi eſt] Enquiring Him out diligently: And in their [Adorare Eum] worſhipping Him devoutly. Per omnia doing as theſe did: Worſhipping, and thus worſhipping; Celebrating, and thus celebrating the Feaſt of His BIRTH.

We cannot ſay, Vidimus ſtellam: The ſtarre is gone long ſince; Not (now) to be ſeene. Yet (I hope) for all that, that Venimus Adorare, we be come thither to worſhip. It will be the more acceptable, if not ſeeing it, we worſhip (though.) It is enough, we read of it in the Text; we ſee it, there. And indeed (as I ſaid;) It skils not for the ſtar in the firmament, if the ſame day-ſtar be riſen in our hearts, that was in theirs; and the ſame beames of it to be ſeene, all five. For then, we have our part in it, no leſſe; nay, full as much as they: And, it will bring us whither it brought them, to CHRIST. Who, at His ſecond appearing in glory, ſhall call forth theſe Wiſe men, and all that have enſued the ſteppes of their Faith; and that upon the reaſon ſpecified in the Text: For, I have ſeene their Starre ſhining and ſhewing forth it ſelfe by the like beames: And, as they came to worſhip me, ſo am I come to doe them worſhip. A Venite then; for a Venimus, now; Their ſtar I have ſeene, and give them a place above among the ſtarres. They fell downe: I will lift them up, and exalt them. And, as they offered to me; ſo am I come to beſtow on them, and to reward them, with endleſſe joy, and bliſſe, and of my Heavenly Kingdome.

To which, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Thurſday, the XXV. of December,
A.D. MDCXXIII. being CHRISTMAS Day.

EPHES. Chap. I. Ver. X.

In diſpenſatione plenitudinis temporum, inſtaurare omnia, in CHRISTO, quæ in cœlis, & quæ in terra ſunt, in Ipſo.

That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſſe of the times, He might gather together into one all things, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth, even in CHRIST.

SEeing the Text is of Seaſons, it would not be out of ſeaſon it ſelfe. And though it be never out of ſeaſon to ſpeake of CHRIST, yet even CHRIST hath His ſeaſons. Your time is alwaies (ſaith He, Ioh. VII.) So is not mine; I have my ſeaſons. One of which ſeaſons is this; the ſeaſon of His Birth, whereby all were recapitulate in Heaven and earth: Which is the ſeaſon of the Text. And ſo, this, a Text of the ſeaſon.

Ioh. 7. 6.

There is (for the moſt part) in each Text ſome one Predominant word. That word (in this) is the word ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, here turned gathering together into one againe. To know the nature and full force of it, we may conſider it three wayes: [1] As it is properly taken: [2] As it is extended: [3] As it is derived.

1. As it is taken properly. So, it ſignifies to make the foot of an account. We call it the foot, becauſe we write it below at the foot: They of old writ theirs above over the head, and ſo called it κεφάλαιον: In Capite libri Scriptum eſt de me: the Summe in the top.

Pſal. 40. 8.

2. As it is extended. So, it is the ſhort recapitulation of a long Chapter; the compendium of a booke, or of ſome diſcourſe. Theſe are all like the foot of an Account, and are uſually called, the Summe of all that hath beene ſaid.

3. As

3. As it is derived: So ſhall we have the native ſenſe of it. It comes of κεφαλαίωσις, and that of κεφαλή (Greek for a head.) Beſt expreſſed in the word recapitulate; that is, to reduce all to a head. Each of theſe is a gathering together into one (as, we read.) Which of the three, you take; nay, take them all three, you cannot doe amiſſe. They be all true: all tend to edifie. CHRIST is the [1] Summe of our account; [2] The Shutting up of our diſcourſe; [3] The Head of the body myſticall, whereto this gathering (here) is. We ſhall make no good audit without Him: no nor good Apologie. Whatſoever be the premiſſes, with CHRIST we muſt conclude: As we do the yeare with Chriſtmaſſe, ſo conclude with in CHRISTO. Col. 1. 18. Eph. 4. 15. 16.

The old Diviſion is---Vt res, ita tempora rerum. Here it holds: Here are both Seaſons, and Things: Things for ſeaſons; and ſeaſons for things. The Diviſion

Two parts here be: [1] Seaſons, firſt; Seaſons, more than one. [2] Here is a fulneſſe of them; [3] Here is a' diſpenſation of that fulneſſe: [4] And that by GOD, That He (that is, GOD) That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſſe of times, He might. This is the firſt part. I

The Things. For firſt, here are all things: Things in heaven, Things on earth; All, in both. 2. Of theſe, a Collection or gathering them all together: or rather a Recollection or gathering them together again. 3. A gathering them all into one: All into one κεφαλαίωσις, one Summe; Or all to one κεφαλή one head: And theſe two are one; and that one is CHRIST. II.

You obſerve, that as the things anſwer the ſeaſons, and the ſeaſons them; So doth the fulneſſe anſwer the gathering, and the gathering, it. To fill the ſeaſons, to make a fulneſſe of them, here is a gathering. 2. A gathering, whereof? Of all in heaven, and all on earth (a great gathering ſure, and able to fill the ſeaſons up to the brim.) 3. But, this is not a gathering at the firſt hand, but a gathering againe; that is, a new, at ſecond hand, 4. A gathering, whereto? to one: One, either one ſumme, or one head (both are in the body of the word:) and theſe two are one, and that one is CHRIST. 5. A gathering, how? (that is in the word too:) By way of contracting or recapitulation. 6. And when? When GOD diſpenſed it; and that is at CHRISTS Birth. 7. Now laſt, what are we the better by this gathering, what fruit we gather by or from it, what our ſhare is in this Summe, which is Summa dividenda. 8. And then how we may be the better for it: if we divide, as GOD; and when GOD did it. 9. As GOD, gather things in heaven, firſt: 10. When GOD; and that is, this ſeaſon of the yeare, the gathering time, with GOD, and with us. So ſhall we diſpenſe the ſeaſon well.

Find the things, they will bring you to the ſeaſon: find the fulneſſe of things, you ſhall find the fulneſſe of ſeaſons. Find the gathering, you ſhall find the fulneſſe: find CHRIST, and you ſhall find the gathering (for the gathering is full and whole, in CHRIST.) So, upon the point find CHRIST, and find all. And this is the firſt day, we can find Him; for this day, was He borne, and ſo firſt to be found by us.

WE have heretofore dealt with the * fulneſſe of time: and now are we to deale with the fulneſſe of ſeaſon. Time and Seaſon are two, and have in all tongues two different words to ſhew, they differ. In Hebrew זְמַן and עֵת, In Greeke, χρόνος and καιρός: in Latine, Tempus and tempeſtivum. I

And, differ they do as much, as a time, and a good time. It is time alway, all the yeare long: So is it not ſeaſon, but when the good time is. Time is taken at large, any time: Seaſon, not ſo; but is applyed to that with which it ſuits, or for which it ſerves beſt. Here, it is applyed to gathering: the Seaſon of gathering.

Theſe ſeaſons be καιρῶν in the plurall: for,---Vt res, ita tempora rerum; as the things to be gathered are many, ſo are the Seaſons, wherein they are to be gathered, many likewiſe. Each, his ſeverall ſeaſon, to be gathered in.

1 Tempora, the Seaſons.
* At Chriſtmaſſe. A. D. 1609.

2 Their fulneſſe.

Now, as the things (Res) have their Autumne of maturity: So (tempora) the Seaſons have their fulneſſe: And, when the things are ripe, and ready to be gathered, then is the Seaſon full.

3 The diſpenſation.

Now, of theſe ſeaſons and their fulneſſe, there is a diſpenſation, an Oeconomia (the word in the text) which is a word of Husbandrie; a great part whereof conſiſteth in the skill of Seaſons; of taking them, when they come, allotting the thing to the ſeaſon, and the ſeaſon to it.

4 The Diſpenſer GOD.
Pſa. 104. 27. 28
Pſal. 145. 15. 16

Which diſpenſation is here aſcribed to GOD: That He, (that is) that GOD in whoſe hands our times are (ſaith the Pſalme) and our ſeaſons, both. He that can make them, full, by giving us kindly ſeaſons; or empty, by making them unſeaſonable: and having made them full, is to diſpoſe of them of very right. There is none of theſe but is ſenſible in the courſe of the yeare, in things upon earth.

But are there ſeaſons for the things on earth and their fulneſſe, and are there not alſo ſeaſons for the things in heaven, and for the filling of them? All, for reliefe of the bodily wants here below; none for the ſupply of Spirituall neceſſities above? All, for the body, and never a ſeaſon for the ſoule? If we allow them to the World, ſhall we not to the Church, the ἀνακεφαλαίωσις or abridgment of the world? If it be ſenſible in the naturall things; (though not ſo eaſily diſcerned, yet) it is as certaine in the main revolution of Annus Magnus, the great periodicall yeare of the worlds endurance.

It can never enter into any man, to thinke, that the great Oeconomus or Steward of this great houſhould (the world) ſhould ſo farre forget Himſelf, but, if for all matters He had appointed a ſeaſon, then for the greateſt matter: if for every purpoſe under heaven; then, for the higheſt purpoſe of all, that (as we ſee) concerneth all the things in heaven, and earth, both. Above Salus populi (this) Salus mundi, the ſaving the whole world. Shall not theſe have their ſeaſons, and the ſeaſons their fulneſſe there, and that fulneſſe the due diſpenſation (of all other) moſt worthy of GOD, the greateſt worke, of the greateſt perſon? Set this downe then (to begin with:) There are ſeaſons; as in our common yeare (of twelve moneths:) So, in the great yeare, whereof, every day is a yeare (by Daniels) nay, a thouſand yeare, (by S. Peters calculation.)

2 Pet. 3. 8.

Mat 4. 28.

And which be the ſeaſons, and when, in the common yeare? Our SAVIOUR, ſets them down (Mar. 4.) 1. The ſeaſon, when the earth bringeth forth the blade; 2. When, the ſtalke. 3. When, the eare. 4. When, the full corne in the eare. And when the eare is full, and full ripe, the ſeaſon is full: then, is the ſeaſon of fulneſſe, the fulneſſe of ſeaſon. Then, the reaper fils his hand, and he that bindeth up the ſheaves, his boſome: Then, are the Barns filled with plenty; and the Preſſes run over with new wine. And when all is full, then, to gathering we goe.

Prov. 3. 10.

Such like ſeaſons doe we finde in Anno Magno: [1] The time of Nature, all in the blade: [2] Of Moſes, in the Stalk: [3] Of the Prophets, in the eare: [4] And, when the full corne? When, but at this great gathering here mentioned. When all in heaven, and all in earth gathered, (I thinke) was the fulneſſe of things (Plenitudo rerum;) and the fulneſſe of Seaſons (Plenitudo temporum) may be allowed for it.

II.

2. Res: the things.

This ſets us over to the ſecond part, from the Seaſons to the things; from the fulneſſe of ſeaſons, to the gathering of things. And firſt, whereof, of what things? of τὰ πάντα even all. All: And (to ſhew the extent of it) ſubdivided, into all in heaven, all in earth: and that (I trow) is All. It was not amiſſe, he ſhould thus ſever them, and expreſſe things in heaven by name: Elſe, we ſhould little have thought of gathering things there ſo high. No farther than earth, we: There, is all our gathering; and there only. The Apoſtle points up to Heaven (Surſum corda) to lift up our hearts, to ſet our affections on things there, above; to gather them. There is a gathering of them, alſo.

Coloſ. 3. 1. 2.

Of which gathering into one, I know not, what the things in heaven have; the things in earth (I am ſure) have good cauſe to be glad. In heaven is all good, and nothing but good. In earth, to ſay the leaſt, there is much evill. Yet upon the reckoning,

Heaven

Heaven is like to come by the losse: we (on earth) are sensible gainers by it. It is a good hearing for us, that both these shall be thus gathered together. For, if heaven and earth be so gathered, it is, that heaven may advance earth higher; and no meaning, that earth should draw it downe hither. Magis dignum semper ad se trahit minus dignum, is the old rule.

2. The gathering.

But well: betweene them both here is a great gathering toward; well expressed by the Apostle, in the termes of a Summe. For, it is Summa Summarum, a sumime indeed; Heaven and earth, and the fulnesse of them both.

All these to be gathered: and well. Gathering, GOD favours: for it ends in Vnitie, To gather into one: And Vnitie GOD loves, Himselfe being principalis Vnitas. GOD favours it sure; Himselfe is the Gatherer, Scattering GOD favours not; that tends to division, and division upon division. Gathering is good for us: Vnitie preserves; division destroyes. Divisum est (be it house, or be it kingdome) ever ends in desolabitur. GOD delights not in destruction, would have none to perish. The kite, he scatters: The hen, how faine would she gather.

Mat. 12. 25. Ezek. 33. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

3 Gathering againe.

But stay a while, and take with us what kinde of gathering? it is not συναγωγὴ, a gathering; but ἀνακεφαλαίωσις a gathering together againe: (We must not loose Ἀνά, there is force in it.) It is not a Collection, but a Recollection. Re imports, it is a new Collection againe; the second time. You see it, in re-call, re-turn, reduce; that is, to call, turn, bring back againe.

Now our Rule is, Ἀνὰ ever presupposeth ἀπό; ἀνακεφαλαίωσις presupposeth ἀποκεφαλαίωσις: that is, a returning to, implies a departing from: a gathering together againe, a scattering in sunder before: a dispensation, a dissipation. So, a dissipation, a departure, a scattering there had beene.

Yet one degree more, ἀπὸ (that is, from) ever implies σύν, that is, a former being with. One cannot be said to be gone from, that was never with, or to fall out, that was never in: One cannot be said to be so again, that was never so before. So then, together we were first, and in sunder we fell after. Which falling in sunder required an ἀνὰ, to bring us together againe; to restore us to that the second time, that we had before lost, to our former estate. It is S. Peter's word [restoring] the same with S. Paul's [gathering together againe] here.

Act. 3. 21.

Now these three set forth unto us our threefold estate: [1] Together (σύν) our first Originall, which we had in Adam, while he stood with GOD together. [2] In sunder (ἀπὸ) there came our misery, by Adam's not keeping his first estate, but Scattering from GOD. [3] But then comes ἀνὰ about, and makes all well againe, by bringing us where we were at the first. There was a former Capitulation; The articles were broken: then came this Recapitulation (here) anew: An account was cast, but it was mis-cast; and so it is here cast new over againe.

But, when all is done, Ἀνὰ is it, we must hold by. The first is gone: All perished, by being scattered from. All must be recovered, by being gathered to againe: Our separation, Our ruine; Our Reparation, our Ἀνὰ, our gathering againe: And not ours alone, but Salus mundi, of all in heaven, all in earth.

But this we may see (by the way, [1] what case, all were in: [2] what case, all are in still, that lie loose and ungathered, and whom Ἀνὰ hath not recollected againe.

4. Into one.

We see, what, and how gathered: Now (quo?) the next point is, whereto? Into one. Every thing, that is gathered, is so. But, there is more ones, than one, One heape, as of stones: One flock, as of sheepe: One pile, as of the materials of a building. All are good: but to take the word in the native sense, the gathering, here, is either to one κεφάλαιον, one Summe (as, many numbers:) Or (to go neerer) to one κεφαλὴ, one Head (as many members;) and, that is it, the Apostle pursueth to the Chapters end. Both these (Summe, and Head) are in the body of the word κεφάλαιον; and they both serve, and suit well. The body: the Head is (as it were) the Summe of all; all [1] sense, [2] mo- tion,[3] ſpeech,[4] underſtanding, all recapitulate into the Head. This (of Head, or Sum.) fitteth it beſt. For, (to ſpeak properly) many heapes, flocks, piles, there may be: Head there can be but one. De ratione capitis eſt, unum eſſe. And ſo, of a Summe: but one true ſumme, were there never ſo many, ſo divers wayes caſt.

So then, into one, that is not enough: it is not co-adunation will ſerve. It is recapitulation, and, in that word, there is caput: it is ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, and in that word there is κεφαλὴ, ſuch a reducing all to one, as that one be the Head. A headleſſe gathering, the Apoſtle cannot skill of. And indeed, ſay there were an intire body, and every member in his right place, and all ſtrictly knit together; yet if the head ſhould hap to be away, as good the members all in ſunder, for, all were to no purpoſe. So; a Head or nothing.

This gathering then (you ſee) is to the chiefe Member; to the Member, that wears Iud. 15.4. the Crowne. Thither, upward, the true gathering goes. There is an Vnion downwards; (as of Sampſon's Foxes, that were together by the tailes;) That, is not the right: but, by the head The oxen, that plough, are joyned together by the head. The foxes, that are tied by the tailes, they ſet all on fire. The Unity of the head GOD ſend us: That, is the true Vnitie.

And yet are we not where we ſhould. We may gather upward too, and make a head, and not the right head. That, to a head, is not enough, if it fall out to be a wrong

And which is the right head? He adds: Recapitulati in CHRISTO: it is CHRIST. There (lo) is the right head, now. To that, let all gather,

And now we are arrived at CHRIST, we are, where we ſhould; our gathering is at the beſt. All in heaven; All in earth: gathered together: together againe: Againe into one. Gen 11.8. Babel, Babel, where no man understood another: Or to the people that were scattered all over the land of Egypt, to gather stubble, to pick up straws. All (then) wandring hither and thither, and seeking death, in the error of their life. By all which, you see, what need there was of this gathering, this ἀνακεφαλαίωσις. Exod. 5. 12. Wisdom. 1. 12.

Now then, if, for the divisions of Reuben, there were great thoughts of heart (as it is in Deboras song) for but one Tribe scattered from the rest; shall there be no thought or course taken for these; such, so generall, so many (not divisions, but plaine dispersions) scatterings all abroad? Great pity, that all these should lie thus loose and ungathered, as if they were not worth the taking up. He that (in Ioan. VI.) tooke order for the broken meate, for the fragments; willed them to be gathered, ἵνα μὴ τι ἀπόληται, that nothing might be lost, no not of them; He (certainly) were no good Oeconomus, if He would let all these be lost for lacke of gathering. Iud. 5. 15. Ioh. 6. 12.

But could not this gathering be absque CHRISTO, in some other? It appeares, no. Seasons there were more than one, but all empty: profers were made in them, but nothing full, nor any thing neere full. A season of the Law unwritten: Then came the Patriarchs. But, they had much adoe to keep themselves from scattering: they gathered none.

A season of the Law written: Then, the Priests and Levites: but the gathering little the fuller, for them.

Then came all the Prophets: To no great purpose they neither: Some few Proselytes they made, that was all. But in the end, all these (as they in the Parable of the wounded man,) passed by, looked on him, but let him lie: Little was done, till the good Samaritane came. The things in heaven and earth (the generallity of them, so) in not much better case for all these, could not be recapitulate, in the Patriarchs, MOSES, the Prophets. So that, to this plunge it was come, that the Psalmist even asked GOD, Wherefore hast thou made all men for nought? It was time for Him to come, qui venturus erat. Luk. 10. 31. 32. Psal 89. 47. Heb. 10. 37.

It was time; More than time, when that which was the only knowne way (when one was scattered from GOD; how to gather him to GOD againe, which was, Let him smell a sacrifice;) when that grew out of season, when that failed. And that it did. Sacrifice; burnt offering; burnt offerings for sin (sin, that made all the scattering) nolluisti (that is plaine) thou wouldest not; (It is CHRIST now speaketh) then said I, lo I come. I of whom it is written, ἐν κεφαλίδι, in the top or front of the booke, that I should fulfill thy will, and gather these together againe. Lo, I come to do it. 1 Sam. 26. 19. Psal. 40. 6.

By this Ecce venio of His, a way was found, those that were thus distracted and scattered before, how to bring them together againe. What way was that? It follows in the same place, what he meant by Ecce venio. He goes it over againe; No sacrifice thou wouldest; No: Corpus autem aptasti, But a body hast thou ordained me. The Incorporating CHRIST, the ordaining Him a body; that is, the new and living way, through the veile, that is His flesh. With that He comes this day, and gathers all againe. Psal. 40. 6. Heb 10 20.

How, or in what manner, that? The manner is set downe in the Word: by way of Recapitulation. We are not to conceive, there was such a great Sheet, as S. Peter saw let downe from Heaven (Act. 10.) and that all these were put into it, and so gathered. No: it was recapitulando, by reducing to lesse roome (as we do many diffused matters to a few heads) as we contract great mapps, to a small compasse; as great plots, to a small module: for, that is (poperly) to recapitulate. There are two words in the verse, set it out well: [1] πλήρωμα, [2] and κεφαλαίωσις. Πλήρωμα, this fulnesse will come into a little κεφαλαῖον, as the particulars of many leaves come into a Totall of not halfe a line. 5 The manner Recapitulando. Act. 10. 12.

If then we be to proceed by way of recapitulation, then are we to reduce all to heads. So let us reduce these things to these two heads: [1] First, Heaven, and all in it, to GOD; Earth, and all in it, to Man. Gather these two into one, and there is the ἀνακεφαλαίωσις in short. To conceive it the better, you shall understand, this was on a good way onward, before. You have heard man called the little world, the ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, of the great one, a compendium of all the creatures. And ſo he is, of both. He participates with the Angels, and ſo with things in heaven, by His ſoule. He participates with the elements, and ſo with things on earth, by His body. The Poet had it by the end: Fertur Prometheus, &c. That to the making of mans body, there went a peece of every of the creatures. So, there was in man, a kind of recapitulation before.

But, that was not full: yet lacked there one thing. All in heaven were not gathered into man. Of GOD we ſay, Qui es in cœlis: He was one of the things in heaven, and He was out all the while. But, if He could be gathered in too, then were it a full gathering indeed. All, in heaven, recapitulate into one; that is, GOD: All, in earth, recapitulate into one; that is, man. Gather theſe two now, and all are gathered: all the things, in either. And now, at this laſt and great Recollection of GOD and Man; and in them, of Heaven and Earth; and in them, of all in heaven, and earth; are all recapitulate into the unity of one entire Perſon. And how? Not ſo, as they were gathered at firſt; Not, as the κεφαλαίωσις (the firſt gathering) ſo the ἀνακεφαλαίωσις (the ſecond gathering.) When things are at the beſt, GOD and Man were two in number: Now, GOD and Man is but one CHRIST. So the gathering, nearer than before: So, ſurer than before: So every way better than before.

In Man, there was onward an abridgement of all the reſt. Gather GOD and him into one, and ſo you have all. There is nothing, not any thing, in Heaven or Earth, left out. Heaven is in, and earth: the creatures in heaven and earth; the Creator of heaven and earth. All are in now: All (reconciled as it were) in one maſſe, all caſt into one ſumme: Recapitulate (indeed) truly and properly.

Herein is the fulneſſe, that GOD Himſelfe comes into this κεφαλαῖον. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15.) where the Pſalme ſaith [He hath put all things in ſubjection under His feet;] 1 Cor. 15. 27. It is manifeſt (ſaith the Apoſtle) that He was accepted, that ſo put them under: But here, it is manifeſt (ſay we) that He is not accepted, that did gather; but, He (the very collector) is, in this collection, Himſelfe and all.

2 Cor. 5. 19. Col. 2. 9. 1. 21. 22. For, GOD was in CHRIST reconciling the world: The world, that is, all things; All in heaven, all in earth. And, in CHRIST did dwell the fulneſſe of the Godhead bodily, when He did ſo reconcile them, in the body of His fleſh. In a word: certaine it is, that, by vertue of this recapitulation, we are one with CHRIST; CHRIST, as Man: GOD is one with CHRIST; CHRIST, as GOD. So, in CHRIST, GOD and Man are one. And, there is good hope, they that are one, will ſoone be at one: where unity is, union will be had with no great adoe.

And even beſides this, there is yet another Recapitulation; that, well might it have that name. For (if you marke it,) it is not Recapitation, but Recapitulation; and that comes of Capitulum; which is a Diminutive. So was it: verbum in principio, the eternall, mighty, great Word became verbum abbreviatum, as the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 10.) to Rom. 10. 18. Eſay 40. 11. bring this to paſſe. He, that the heavens are but his ſpanne, abbreviate into a Child of a ſpanne long: He, that Caput the Head of men and Angels, principalities and powers, became capitulum: He that κεφαλὴ, κεφαλαῖον, a little diminutive head. Head? Nay, became the foot, Pes computi (the Text is) the Foot, the loweſt part of the accompt; and of the loweſt accompt.

6 The Seaſon when. And now (becauſe we are in ſeaſons, we ſpeak of ſeaſons.) When was this, at what ſeaſon of the yeare? when was it, that he was ſo capite minutus? Sure, never leſſe, never ſo little, never ſo minorated, ſo minimated (I am ſure) as now. When was Ecce venio fulfilled? we may know that, by all the foure Sundayes in Advent now paſt, that, to day, it is Ecce venio. His comming, the Pſalme expounds, by ordaining him a body: A Pſal. 40. 7. body there was ordained Him in the womb: But, to us things are, when they appeare. That, though the Word were made fleſh before, yet God was not manifeſted in the fleſh; Ioh. 1. 14. came not and dwelt among us viſibly to be ſeen, till this day. So that, if you ask [of In CHRISTO] what, or when? In CHRISTO nato, then, was this gathering of things in heaven, and earth.

And

And, in ſign it was then, look there comes a Quier of Angels downe, there comes a new Starre forth to repreſent the things in heaven: there comes together a ſort of Shepheards, and there is gathering to them a troope of great Princes from the Eaſt, to repreſent the things on earth, which conſiſt (as theſe doe) of high and low, noble and baſe, wiſe and ſimple: All, to celebrate, and make ſhew of this gathering, of this great πλήρωμα into this ſmall κεφαλαῖον. And, in their heavenly Hymne, there is mention of this gathering: In excelſis, and in terris ſet together; as if, all (in both) were now in full and perfect harmonie. Luk. 2. 13. Mat. 2. 1. Luk. 14.

Now, when the ſeaſons travelled with, at laſt brought forth Him, that was the beſt thing, they had or ſhould ever bring forth when they were at the beſt. When Him, in whom it pleaſed the FATHER, all fulneſſe ſhould dwell, then were they at the full. The gathering of the things, ſo full, as it made plenitudo rerum: The gathering of the ſeaſons, ſo full, as it made plenitudo temporum. And ſo have we brought both parts, (ſeaſons, and things) together.

The Summe is at the foot: the Oration, at the period; the Building, at the head-ſtone, the Tide, at the full: the fulneſſe of the Gentiles are come into His Church, which is His body, the fulneſſe of Him, that filleth all in all. Rom. 11. 25. Ver. 23.

But, why GOD, in the diſpenſation of the ſeaſons, did ſo order, that at ſuch a yeare of the world, ſuch a moneth of the yeare, ſuch a day of the moneth, this ſhould fall out juſt, this is more, than I dare take upon me to define. But this I may: that the Chriſtian world hath ever obſerved divers good congruities of this Feaſt, with this Text. The Application of the text to the time, and to us.

The Text is of a Recapitulation: The Feaſt is ſo. Twelve moneths recapitulate to twelve daies. Six for the old; in ſix dayes was the creation of the old. And, when the old things are paſt, as many for the new; For, behold all things are new; And, if any be in CHRIST, he is a new creature. But theſe recapitulate in one ſeaſon equally divided. Equally divided between both: yet ſo, as the daies of the laſt are ſet before the firſt, that ſo erunt noviſſimi primi is verified even of the ſeaſon, and the laſt, firſt, there alſo. In earthly things 1. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Mat. 19. 30.

The Text is of a gathering: and that fals fit with the ſeaſon; and giveth us great cauſe to admire the high wiſdome of GOD, in the diſpenſation of ſeaſons; That now at this ſeaſon, when we gather nothing, when nothing groweth to be gathered, there ſhould be a gathering (yet) and a great one: nay, the greateſt gathering that ever was, or will be: And ſo by that meanes, the pooreſt and emptieſt ſeaſon in natures, become the fulleſt and richeſt in grace. 2.

Now we doe, our ſelves (in effect) expreſſe as much as this comes to. For we alſo make it a ſeaſon of gathering together, of neighbourly meetings, and invitations. VVherein we come together, and both (our ſelves) have, and we make each other partakers of what we have gathered, all the yeare before.

In which ſenſe alſo, we may call it the ſeaſon of diſpenſation; in that we then diſpenſe the bleſsings, GOD hath ſent us; and that is in good houſe-keeping, and hoſpitalitie.

And (if you will) of fulneſſe too. For, the moſt part doe then uſe to be better filled, and with better fare, that are not ſo full againe all the yeare beſide. That one may truly ſay, there is more fulneſſe in this ſeaſon, than any other. And ſo it is the ſeaſon of fulneſſe then; For the hungry are then filled with good things; then of all the ſeaſons of the yeare. 4. Pſal. 107. 9.

And laſt, there is in the Text (and it is the maine word in the Text) ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, which (in the Primitive ſenſe) is the making the foot of an accompt: which agreeth well with the foot of the yeare, for, at the foot of the leafe Summes uſe to be ſet. Set it at the head, or ſet it at the foot; it is the foot of the Old, and the head of the New: and ſo the fitteſt ſeaſon, to celebrate it in. For, be it head, or be it foot, CHRIST it is. So, recapitulation, or gathering, fulneſſe, or diſpenſation, or Summing all up, the Text is ſeaſonable. 5.

But, theſe (I have ſpoke of) are of things on earth. VVere it not to be wiſhed, we would In heavenly things.

would endeavour to have ſome fruition, and to gather ſome fruit, for the heavenly part from this gathering, this ſumming up of CHRIST's?

CHRIST is but κεφάλαιον, a ſhort ſumme; but there is in Him πλήρωμα, a fulneſſe of all: CHRIST is but the Contents of a Chapter, ſome three or foure lines; but a great long Chapter followes, long and large. For, what ſhall you ſee in this Shulamite, but Choros Caſtrorum, legions, whole armies of good things, to gather. Such, ſo great a ſumme, as twelve dayes will not ſerve to caſt them up. But yet, ſomewhat let us gather, that the ſeaſons being full, we our ſelves be not to be ſent empty away.

Cant. 6 13.

The time failes: I will therefore name but one; and that (the maine word of the Text) ἀναλογίσεως, which referreth properly to the making up an accompt. The Fathers, taking the Verſe into their conſiderations, pitch upon it: (As S. Ierome; who thinks it choſen of purpoſe to that end.) But, the word and thing both, we may have good uſe of, ſeeing we all are to be Accomptants (Redde rationem, ſaid to us all:) ſeeing, to an accompt we muſt all come.

Our Accompting

Luk. 16 2.

And thus he followeth it, goes no further than the Text, for the particulars of our accompt; makes them conſiſt of quæ in cælis, and quæ in terris. Which two, as they are principally taken for the creatures in both; So may they alſo (and not amiſſe) be taken, for the things done in them both. Specially, our gatherings in them referring to either.

1 For, quæ in cælis. Act. 10.4.

Things in heaven to ſtand for our good deeds, our Almes, Faſts, and Prayers, that aſcend up thither, (the Angell tels Cornelius ſo,) and will receive us up thither into everlaſting Tabernacles. Of which, gather we as many as we can all our life long.

2 For quæ in terris.

As for theſe on earth, we gather but too faſt; meaning our evill deeds, which ſmell of the Earth, whence they are, and where they were done.

Now, when we come too give up our accompt, it ſhould ſeem by the word And we had caſt them once before, and caſt them falſe; that we muſt to it againe, and ſee, if we can find our ſummes right. There is no danger, but in caſting our quæ in cælis (our good) leſt we caſt them over; and our quæ in terris (our bad) leſt them we caſt under. The other way, the errour is nothing ſo perillous.

Our quæ in cælis (our good) howſoever our new Auditors caſt them ſo, as they find GOD in their debt, for that we have laid out more than ever GOD required; I doubt, will not prove ſo at the Audit. But, of our quæ in terris, our evill, there is no great feare of overcaſting them; their ſumme will riſe but too high, if we deceive not our ſelves.

Both to be in Chriſto.

But whether it be of both; we ſhall find our ſelves wrong in both, if they be not recapitulate in Chriſto. For our quæ in cælis; Having done all we can, CHRIST bids us ſay, ſervi inutiles ſumus: and ſo we muſt ſay then: (And what accompt can be made of inutile?) Having ſuffered all we can, Non ſunt condignæ (ſaith Saint Paul:) So, both come not home. The good Centurion, he that built the Synagogue; Nay then, Saint Iohn Baptiſt himſelfe, both caſt themſelves to a Non ſum dignus; Even the beſt of our nature. That, when we have done, we muſt begin againe, and caſt and caſt till we be weary, unleſſe we caſt in CHRIST; faile ſtill, unleſſe our Totall of quæ in cælis, be recapitulate in CHRISTO.

Luk. 17.10.

Luk. 3.16. 7.4.

But then come to the other accompt of quæ in terris: to that, there is a fulneſſe, and the fulneſſe of our ſeaſons. Many a Broken reckoning ſhall we finde there, ſuch ſurd numbers, ſuch fractions wee ſhall meet with, we ſhall not tell how, or when to get through, we ſhall want compters. They are ſo infinite, and intricate with-all, that (I feare) we ſhall be found in a mighty arrear, a huge debt of thouſands and ten thouſands of talents: we ſhall not tell which way to turne us, nor which way to ſatisfie it, though all we have were ſold, and we our ſelves too. To ballance this accompt, CHRIST is moſt needfull; For Summis conjunctis, caſt both theſe together, and Iob being our auditor, he finds, we ſhall not be able to anſwer GOD one for a thouſand, that He can charge us with. Sine Me nihil poteſtis facere (if ever) we ſhall find, in this, moſt true. For gather heaven and earth, and all that is in them, all together, and leave him out, they will never be able to make our diſcharge: Not the beſt Auditor of them all.

Iob 9.3.

Ioh. 15.5.

But

But He, out of the fulneſſe of His ſatisfactions, can relieve us that way, to take off (or ſtrike off) a great part of our Onus. And He can caſt in, of the fulneſſe of His merits, to make up that, is found minus habens, or defective, in ours that way. For, the ſhort is, He is both Pes, and Caput anguli, the πούς, and the κεφαλή; he is called both, in the Text. His ἀνεκλειψίαις muſt help us, if ever we come to our Audit.

But foreſeene, that this be no hinderance to our gathering. No: gathering wee muſt be ſtill, thoſe of heaven (ſpirituall;) and turne as much of our earthly as we can into them. And ſtill order the matter ſo, as while we have time, we be doing good. We ſhall but evill ſumme up all, in CHRIST: if we have no particulars to raiſe our ſumme of; if we have nothing, but what is out of CHRIST, to recapitulate, in CHRIST. To gather, I ſay; Elſe are we like to have but an empty ſeaſon of it. Yet not to hinder our gathering: Gal. 6. 10.

And even to begin, now: to imitate GOD, in His time, when; and in His order, how. His time: this is the time, GOD made his in; Now, we to take the ſame time, to fall on gathering. His order: this is the order, GOD made his by; He began with heavenly things; we to keep the ſame order, follow His method, begin, where He begins: begin with the things, that hath the prioritie of place in the Text, begin with them: Make Regnum ejus, our primum quærite, and the things that pertaine to it. And not pervert GODS order, and be ſo wholly given to the fulneſſe of the things on earth, that we fall to them, firſt. Nay, I pray GOD, it be not firſt, and laſt, and all. We ſhall the better diſpenſe the ſeaſon, if we gather to prayers, to GODS word: If we begin with them: If with the diſpenſation of His holy myſteries: gather to that, eſpecially. Mat. 9 33.

For, there, we do not gather to CHRIST, or of CHRIST; but, we gather CHRIST Himſelfe; and, gathering Him, we ſhall gather the tree, and fruit, and all upon it. For, as there is a recapitulation of all in heaven and earth, in CHRIST: So, there is a recapitulation of all in CHRIST, in the holy Sacrament. You may ſee it clearely: There is in CHRIST, the Word eternall, for things in heaven; There is alſo Fleſh, for things on earth. Semblably, the Sacrament conſiſteth, of a Heavenly, and of a Terrene part; (It is Irenæus own words:) the heavenly, there the word too (the abſtract of the other,) the Earthly, the Element. The application to the Euchariſt.

And in the Elements, you may obſerve, there is a fulneſſe of the ſeaſons of the naturall yeare; of the corne-floore (or harveſt) in the one, Bread: of the wine-preſſe (or vintage) in the other, Wine. And, in the heavenly, of the wheat-corne whereto He compareth Himſelf (Ioh. 12.) Bread, even the living bread (or bread of life) that came downe from heaven; the true Manna, whereof we may gather each his Gomer. And againe, of Him, the true Vine (as He cals Himſelfe;) the blood of the grapes of that Vine. Both theſe iſſuing out of this dayes recapitulation; both, in corpus autem aptaſti mihi, of this day. Ioh. 12. 24. 6. 53 49. Ioh. 15. 1. Pſa. 40. 6.

And the gathering or Vintage of theſe two, in the bleſſed Euchariſt, is (as I may ſay) a kind of hypoſtaticall union of the Signe. and the thing ſignified, ſo united together, as are the two natures of Chriſt. And even from this ſacramentall union do the Fathers borrow their reſemblance, to illuſtrate, by it, the perſonall union in Chriſt: I name Theodoret for the Greeke, and Gelaſius for the Latine Church, that inſiſt upon it (both) and preſſe it againſt Eutyches. That even as, in the Euchariſt, neither part is evacuate or turned into the other, but abide each ſtill in his former nature and ſubſtance; No more is either of CHRISTS natures annulled, or one of them converted into the other (as Eutyches held;) but, each nature remaineth (ſtill) full and whole, in his own kind. And backwards: As the two Natures in CHRIST, ſo the Signum and Signatum in the Sacrament, è converſo. And this later device, of the ſubſtance of the bread and wine, to be flowen away and gone, and in the roome of it, a remainder of nothing elſe but Accidents to ſtay behind, was to them not knowen; And (had it beene true) had made for Eutyches, and againſt them. And this for the likeneſſe of Vnion in both

Now, for the word gathered together in one. It is well knowne, the holy Euchariſt it ſelfe is called Synaxis (by no name more uſuall in all Antiquitie) that is, a Collection or gathering. For ſo it is, in it ſelfe: For, at the celebration of it (though we gather to Prayer, and to Preaching, yet) that is the principall gathering, the Church hath, which is (it ſelfe) called a Collection too (Heb. 10.) by the ſame name, from the Chiefe: For, where the body is, there the Eagles will be gathered: And ſo, one Synaxis begets another.

Luke 17.37.

5 And laſt, there is a Diſpenſation: that word, in it, too: that moſt cleerly. For, it is our Office; we are ſtiled (by the Apoſtle) Diſpenſers of the myſteries of GOD; and, in and by them, of all the benefits that came to mankinde, by this diſpenſation in the fulneſſe of ſeaſon, of all that are recapitulate in CHRIST.

1 Cor. 4.1.

1 Which benefits are too many to deale with. One ſhall ſerve, as the Summe of all: That the very end of the Sacrament is, to gather againe to GOD and His favour, if it happen (as oft it doth) we ſcatter, and ſtray from Him. And to gather us, as cloſe and neere, as alimentum alito, (that is) as neere, as neere may be.

2 And as, to gather us to GOD; ſo likewiſe, each to other mutually: Expreſſed lively, in the Symbols, of many graines into the one, and many grapes into the other. The Apoſtle is plaine, that we are all one bread, and one body, ſo many as are partakers of one bread. So, molding us (as it were) into one loafe altogether. The gathering to GOD refers ſtill to things in heaven: This other, to men, to the things in earth. All under one Head, by the common faith: All into one Body myſticall, by mutuall charity. So ſhall we well enter into the diſpenſing of this ſeaſon, to begin with.

1 Cor. 10.17.

And even thus to be recollected at this Feaſt, by the holy Communion, into that bleſſed Vnion, is the higheſt perfection, we can in this life aſpire unto. We (then) are at the higheſt pitch; at the very beſt we ſhall ever attaine to on earth; what time we newly come from it: Gathered to Chriſt; and, by Chriſt, to God; ſtated in all whatſoever He hath gathered, and layd up againſt His next comming. With which gathering here in this world we muſt content and ſtay our ſelves, and wait for the conſummation of all, at His comming againe. For, there is an Ecce venio, yet to come.

Apoc. 22.12.

This gathering thus here begun, it is to take end and to have the full accompliſhment, at the laſt and great gathering of all, which ſhall be of the quick and of the dead. When He ſhall ſend His Angels, and they ſhall gather His Elect from all the corners of the earth: ſhall gather the wheat into the barne, and the tares to the fire. And then (and never till then) ſhall be the fulneſſe indeed, when GOD ſhall be, not (as now He is) ſomewhat in every one, but all in all. Et tempus non erit amplius, and there ſhall be neither time, nor ſeaſon any more. No fulneſſe then, but the fulneſſe of eternity, and in it the fulneſſe of all joy. To which, in the ſeverall ſeaſons of our being gathered to our fathers, He vouchſafe to bring us; that (as the yeare, ſo) the fulneſſe of our lives may end in a Chriſtmas, a merry joyfull Feaſt, as that is. And ſo GOD make this to us, in Him, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE AT VVHITE-HALL,

On Saturday, the XXV. of December,

A. D. MDCXXIV. being CHRISTMAS Day.

PSAL. II. Ver. VII.

Prædicabo Legem, de qua dixit ad me Dominus: Filius meus tu, hodie genui te.

I will preach the Law, whereof the LORD said to me: Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

His Text, the firſt word of it is Prædicabo, I will preach. So, here is a Sermon toward. And it is of Filius; Filius meus genui te; of the begetting, or bringing forth a child. And that, Hodie, this very day.

And let not this trouble you, that it is (begotten) in the Text, and (borne) on the day. In all the three tongues, one word ſerves for both. In Latine, Alma Venus genuit: Venus did but beare Æneas; yet it is ſaid, Genuit. In Greeke γεννᾶται ἐκ μητρὸς: He was but borne of the Virgin; yet He was ſaid γεννηθὶς, Genitus. And I report me to the Maſters of the Hebrew tongue, whether the originall word in the Text, beare not, be not as full, nay do not more properly import His Birth, than His begetting. It is ſure, it doth. So, it may be uſed; and ſo, we will uſe it indifferently. And let this ſerve once for all. We returne to our Sermon. ילדתיך

Prædicabo. Here is one ſaith, he will preach. Hath he a licence? Yes: Dixit ad me, he was ſpoken to, or (indeed) he was commanded. (Amar is to command.) Commanded: by whom? By him that hath lawfull authority ſo to do, Dixit Dominus. He ſtept not up of his owne head; He came to it orderly: made no ſuit for the place; was appointed for it. 1 אמר

What will he preach of? Whence will he take his Text? Out of dixit Dominus, out of the Word of God. And that is right. So do we take, ours; for, ſo did he take 2

his. To Dixit Dominus He held Him; preached not voluntary: but, as he preached the law, ſo, he had a law to preach by (the Word of God.) Dixit Dominus.

3 And what was His Text? Filius meus tu, hodiè genui te. This Text He preached on: As it might be, at the bringing forth of a Son. And that (as it ſhould ſeem by the word, Hodiè) this very day. This day, the Birth; this day, the Sermon. And, if ſo: by the ſame equity, the ſame Text may well be preached on againe, whenſoever that day comes about, by the circling of the yeare.

4 It uſeth to be the firſt queſtion (I kept it laſt) who preacheth? (For, if we like him we will heare him, elſe not.) Sure, He, to whom this is ſpoken, Filius meus tu, He it is, that ſaith, Prædicabo. And He to whom it is ſaid, Filius meus tu, is CHRIST. CHRIST then preacheth. And CHRIST is worth the hearing. There will lie no exception to the Preacher, that, I am ſure of.

And indeed, ſo it was moſt meet, that He ſhould. He, that was the Law-giver, moſt meet to read upon His own law; He, that the Son, moſt meet to preach upon Filius meus tu; He, that was borne, upon His own Birth.

Upon His owne Birth. And if upon it, any day, that day eſpecially, whereon He was born. So is the Text. The day He preach'd on, He was borne: The day He was borne, He preach'd on. No time ſo kindly to preach de Filio hodiè genito, as Hodiè. So ſhall you have CHRIST preach; of CHRISTS Nativity; and that, upon the very day of his Nativity; (which, according to the Chriſtian account, is this day of all the dayes of the yeare.

The applying to this Birth.

And, firſt I muſt tell you, this ſame Hodiè (here) is ſaid Signanter, that CHRIST was begotten to day. For, He was begotten beſides this: had more Begettings, than one. Two natures He had, and ſo, two Nativities. One eternall, as the Son of God: the other temporall, as the Son of man. And, as it fals out, this very place (here) I finde vouched for both. Vouched for His begetting, as the Son of GOD, by the Apoſtle (Heb. 1. 5.) For to which of the Angels ſaid He at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? Alleaging this place to prove His Deity: as one, whoſe nature was farre above, farre more excellent, than the Angels.

But, of the twaine, more properly we apply it to this dayes birth: (His Birth, as the Son of Man.) And for our ſo applying it, we have the warrant, not of one, but of all the Apoſtles at once; and, even of the whole Church aſſembled in prayer (Acts 4. 27.) Where, to God Himſelfe they ſay, that the Prophecie of this Pſalme was fulfilled, when Herod, the High-Prieſts, and the reſt took counſell againſt His holy Childe Ieſus: And, that (we know) was at this Birth. So, applying it to this Birth, ſure we are, we apply it aright.

And indeed, it cannot be otherwiſe. For, in the very next words, GOD bids Him, Aske, and He will give Him the Heathen, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth. This muſt needs be ſaid to Him, as the Son of man; and can no waies be ſaid to Him, as the Son of GOD. As the Son of GOD, He asked not; He needed not ask; He had all: All æquo jure with His father, as being in forme of GOD. Nothing was; nothing could be given to Him: He was not a perſon capable of any gift: All was His owne. So, it was ſpoken, as to the Son of Man, this day borne. And ſo, to the Son of Man, this day borne, we apply it.

The Diviſion

I. Of this Sermon, theſe be the parts. The matter of it at large, or in generall: That it is a Law firſt. Then, what manner of Law, or how qualified: 1. A Law to be preached, as other lawes uſe not to be. 2. A Law de quâ dixit Deus, where other lawes are, de quâ dixit homo: Which is the reaſon, why it is to be preached. 3. And then (out of the very body of the word in the Text) that it is not a Law at large, but a Statute Law (for ſo is Elchok) which, but by publiſhing, none can take notice of. A ſecond reaſon, why it is to be preached. And this is the firſt part.

II. The ſecond, is the very Text it ſelfe, or the body of the Law in theſe words, Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee. The points in it are five: 1 Of a Sonne.

Sonne. [2] Of my Sonne (that is) the Sonne of GOD. [3] Genui, the Sonne of GOD begotten. [4] Hodiè the Sonne of GOD, this day begotten. [5] And Dixit genui (that is) dicendo genuit, begotten only by saying; onely said the word, and it was done, and the Word became flesh. This is the second part.

The third is the hardest. For it would make one study (Filius meus tu) how this should be a Law, as here it is called. It looks not like one. But, said it must be, which CHRIST hath said: A Law He cals it, and a Law we must find it. Now, there be but two lawes (as the Apostle tels us, Rom. 3. 27.) Lex fidei, and Lex factorum: if, both these waies, a Law it be, a Law we shall find it. And both these waies a Law it is. Ioh. 1. 14. III.

1 Lex fidei. A Law limiting what to believe of Him. Of Him (that is) of His Person: His Natures: and His Offices. His Person, out of the words, Ego, and Tu. His Natures, out of Hodie, and Genui. His Offices, out of Prædicabo, and Legem.

2 Then Lex factorum. Setting out first, what he doth for us; and then, what we are to do for Him. What He doth for us (Filius meus tu) to us He conveyeth all Filiall rights. What we to do for Him (Filius meus tu) we to returne to Him all Filiall duties. Which duties are compriſed in Prædicabo legem. And legem, that law is no more, than Filius meus tu: for, Filius meus tu goes through all, and is all in all. These are the parts. Of these, &c.

Prædicabo Legem (saith CHRIST.) And we like it well, that He will preach. But He hath not chosen so good a Text: Legem were a fitter Text for Moses to preach on. We had well hoped, CHRIST would have preached no law; all Gospell, He. That He would have preach'd down the old law, but not have preach'd up any new. We see, it is otherwise. A law He hath to preach, and preach it He will: He saith it Himselfe, Prædicabo Legem. I. Legem. 1

So, if we will be His Auditors, He tels us plainely, we must receive a Law from His mouth. If we love not to heare of a law, we must go to some other Church: For in CHRISTS Church (there) a law is preached. CHRIST began, we must follow, and say, every one of us (as He saith) Prædicabo Legem.

Nay, there is another point yet more strange. These very words here [Filius meus tu, &c.] are as good Gospell as any in the New Testament; yet are here (as we see) delivered by Him under the terme of a Law. And we may not change His word: we may not learne CHRIST how to use His termes. The words are plaine, there is no avoiding them: a law he cals it, and a law it is. 2

First then, to take notice of both these. 1. That CHRIST will preach a law; and that they that are not for the law, are not for CHRIST. It was their quarrell above (at the third verse) they would none of CHRIST, for this very cause, that Christ comes preaching the law, and they would live lawlesse: they would indure no yoke: that were the Sons of Belial; Belial (that is) no yoke: But what agreement hath Christ with Belial? 1 2 Cor. 6. 15.

And then: that these words Filius meus tu, are a law; and so as a law by Christ preached. So as in the very Gospell it selfe, all is not Gospell: some law among it. The very Gospell hath her law. A law Evangelicall there is, which Christ preached: and, as he did, we to do the like. (Whereof, more is to be said by and by.) 2

In the meane time, it is not without danger to let any such conceit take head, as though Christian Religion had no law-points in it, consisted onely of pure narratives: believe them; and all is well: Had but certaine Theses to be held, dogmaticall points, matters of opinion. And true it is, such points there be; but they be not all. There is a law besides, and it hath precepts, and they to be preached, learned, and (as a law) to be obeyed of all.

Look but into the Grand Commission (by which we all preach) which Christ gave at this going out of the world: Go, (saith He) preach the Gospell to all nations, teaching them, Matth. 28. 19.

them, What? to obſerve the things that I have commanded you. Lo, here is commanding, and here is obſerving. So, the Goſpell conſiſts, not only of certaine Articles to be beleeved: But of certaine Commandements alſo, and they to be obſerved. And what is that, but Prædicabo Legem?

Now (I know not how, but) we are fallen cleane from the terme, Law; nay, we are even fallen out with it. Nothing but Goſpell now. The name of Law, we looke ſtrangely at: we ſhun it in our common talk. To this it is come, while men ſeek to live, as they liſt. Preach them Goſpell as much as you will: but (heare ye) no Prædicabo legem, no law, to be preached, to hold or keep them in. And, we have goſpelled it ſo long, that the Chriſtian Law is cleane gone with us; we have loſt it, if Prædicabo legem (here) get it us not againe. But, got it muſt be, for as Chriſt preacheth, ſo muſt we; and Law it is, that Chriſt preacheth.

I ſhall tell you, what is come by the drowning of the terme, Law. Religion is even come to be counted res precaria; No law, no, no: but a matter of faire entreaty, gentle perſwaſion, neither jura, nor leges, but only Conſulta patrum, good fatherly counſell, and nothing, elſe. Concilia Evangelica were a while laid aſide: now there be none elſe. All are Evangelicall counſels, now. The reverend regard, the legall vigour, and power, the penalties of it are not ſet by. The rules, no reckoning made of them, as of Law Writs, none; but onely, as of Phyſick bils, if you like them, you may uſe them: if not, lay them by. And this comes of drowning the terme, Law. And all, for lack of Prædicabo legem.

I ſpeak it to this end: to have the one terme retained, as well as the other, to have neither terme aboliſhed; but with equall regard, both kept on foot. They are not ſo well adviſed, that ſeeke to ſuppreſſe either name. If the name once be loſt, the thing it ſelfe will not long ſtay: but go after it, and be loſt too.

They that take them to the one terme only, are confuted once a moneth. For, every moneth, every firſt day of every moneth, this verſe failes not, but is read in our eares. And here, a law it is. And ſo was the Chriſtian Religion called in the very beſt times of it, Chriſtiana lex, the Chriſtian law; and the Biſhops, Chriſtianæ legis Epiſcopi, the Biſhops of the Chriſtian law. And all the ancient Fathers liked the terme well: and tooke it upon them.

To conclude. Goſpell it how we will: if the Goſpell hath not the legalia of it acknowledged, allowed, and preſerved to it: if once it looſe the force, and vigor of a law, it is a ſigne it declines, it growes weake and unprofitable: and, that is a ſigne, it will not long laſt. We muſt go look our ſalvation by ſome other way, than by Filius meus tu: if Filius meus tu. (I ſay not, be not preached, but) be not ſo preached, as Chriſt preached it; and Chriſt preach'd it, as a Law. and ſo much for Legem,

Heb. 8. 13. 7. 18.

1 Prædicabo Legem.

Now, of this law, three things are here ſaid: Firſt, legem turns back upon Prædicabo. And this priviledge it hath, that it is materia prædicabilis, a law which may; nay, a law which is to be preached. And that lawes uſe not to be: Not to be preached. To be read upon at times privately: but, to be preached, not any law, but this. But, this is: and it ſerves for a ſpeciall difference, to ſever it from other lawes, and make it a kinde by it ſelfe. Even this, that it is to be preached.

To be preached: and that even to Kings themſelves, that make lawes: to Iudges themſelves, that are preſumed to be beſt ſeen in the Law: yet they to learne, they to be learned, in this law. Erudimini (is the word) qui judicatis terram, in the tenth Verſe after.

2 De qua dixit Dominus.

And the reaſon is: for this is a law, de qua dixit Deus. And ſo is none elſe. And that is a ſecond difference. There is a law, de qua dixit homo, quam ſanxerunt homines, which men among themſelves make for themſelves (as by-lawes are made.) This is of a higher nature. This, God Himſelfe made; is a Law of His owne making. De qua dixit, or rather edixit, for ſo is Amar; which God enacted firſt, and then gave commandement, it ſhould be preached.

אמר

And to whom? Dixit ad me, Who is that CHRIST. Firſt, and before all others to be preached by his Sonne. His preaching, He thought it worth, and gave it Him in charge, charge, and accordingly (we ſee) He performed it, and profeſſed Prædicabo, that He will preach it.

But, the third is a reaſon, why it could not be otherwiſe; why it could not but be preached. Becauſe (as I told you, out of the very body of the word) it is not a law at large: but a Statute law. And the nature of that law is, without publiſhing, it cannot be knowne. 3 Dixit or edixit.

GOD hath His Law in the ſame diviſion that man hath his: His Statute, and his Common Law. The Law of Nature which is written in the hearts of all men, that, is the Common Law of the world. Of that every man is to take notice at his perill. But this law, here, is no part of that law: Filius meus tu, is not written in the heart; it muſt be preached to the eare. No light of Nature could reveale it, from within; Preached from without, it muſt be. And ſo, and no otherwiſe, come we to the knowledge of it. The very words gives it for ſuch, which is properly a Statute (as this is) enacted, and decreed in the high Court of GODS Councell above, and reſerved to be revealed in the latter times; And of that we cannot heare without a Preacher: and the preaching thereof was committed to CHRIST. He began, and we follow. And ſo much for Prædicabo Legem, de quâ dixit Dominus ad me. (The matter at large.) And now to His Text, wherein is the letter of the Law it ſelfe. Rom. 2. 14. חק Eph. 3. 5. Rom. 10. 14.

I reckoned up to you five particulars in this Law. 1. Filius, a Son. 2. Filius meus, my Son (that is) the Son of God. 3. Filius meus genui; the Son of God begotten. 4. Hodie genui, the Son of God begotten this day. 5. And fifthly, Dixit genui, (that is) dicendo, genuit, begotten by ſaying, as the word ſhould be. II

Of a Son, firſt. Which plainly ſheweth, it is not the old; it is a new law (this.) The old runs, Ego ſum Dominus, which muſt needs imply, Servus meus tu. This is, Filius meus tu (in another ſtile) which neceſſarily doth imply, Ego ſum pater tuus. A Father to be the giver of it. According to the former, He ſaith, Ego ſum Dominus, and we ſay, Dominus meus tu. According to this latter, He ſaith, Filius meus tu, and we ſay, Pater meus tu. This, the better by far: as far as the condition of a Son is better, than that of a Servant. And indeed, the maine difference betweene the two laws, is but this: Do it (ſaith the one) Servus meus tu, the imperfect law of feare and ſervitude. Do it (ſaith the other) Filius meus tu, the perfect law of love and liberty. 1 Filius. 1 Ioh. 4. 18. Heb. 7. 9. Iam. 1. 25.

Of a Son. Whoſe Son? Filius meus. And He that ſpeaks it, that ſaith meus, is GOD; and ſo to whom it is ſpoken, the Son of God. And the Son of God is a high title, and of a ſpeciall accompt. Salomon, before his Crowne or Scepter prized that ſpeech of God; I will be his Father, and he ſhall be my Son. 2 Filius meus. 2 Sam. 7. 14.

But nothing makes it more cleare, than this place. The laſt verſe, He ſaith, Poſui te Regem, I have ſet thee a King: that He ſpeakes not of, thinks it not fit. But here, now, Filius meus tu, this (lo) preach He will, this He thinkes worth the preaching. Filius meus tu, rather than, Poſui te Regem, to be the Sonne of God, than to be a Prince in Sion.

The Son of God: and the Son of God begotten. For Sons of God there be, that are not begotten; that come in another way, that come by adoption. To beget, is an act of nature, and is ever determined in the identitie of the ſame nature, with him, that did beget. And this putteth the difference. 3 Genui.

Otherwiſe, God ſpeakes of Angels as of His Sons: When all the Sons of God praiſed Him. Speaks it of Iſrael, his people: Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Speaks it of Rulers and Governours: Ye are all the Sons of the moſt high. To every of theſe, as much in effect is ſaid, as Filius meus tu. But to which of them all, to which of the Angels ſaid He at any time, Genui te, I have begotten thee? Not to any. Filii they were, but not geniti, none of them all. So, Filius meus tu is communicated to others; but Genui te, to no creature, either in heaven or earth. Of none, is Genui to be verified in proper terms, but of CHRIST, and of CHRIST only. Iob 38. 7. Hoſ. 11. 1. Pſal. 82. 6

Hodiè Genui. Begotten; and this day begotten: Genui, and Hodiè genui: for, begotten He had beene before. Another begetting beſides this, Two Genui's, A Genui before Hodiè: Ex utero ante Luciferum genui te, ſaid the LORD to my LORD, in the CX, Pſalme. Twiſe begotten He was. This day begotten, and begotten ante Luciferum, before there was any morning ſtar, and ſo, before there was any day at all; and ſo, before any, quod cognominatur Hodiè, any time, that is called, To day.

Pſal. 9. 11. 3.

We are to take notice of both theſe generations, [1] Of Chriſtus ante Luciferum, and of [2] Lucifer ante Chriſtum. To take notice of both: but, to take hold of this latter. For, that, ante Luciferum was not for us, His ſecond begetting, His Hodiè genui, His this dayes begetting is for us, is it we hold by. Not, by his going out from everlaſting: not by His olim, ante Luciferum, ante ſecula genitus: None of theſe. Hodiè genitus is the Law, that we are to preach: (that is) not His eternall, but His Hodiernall generation, Not as GOD, of the ſubſtance of His Father, begotten before all worlds: but as Man, of the ſubſtance of His Mother, borne in the World: when in the fullneſſe of time GOD ſent His Sonne made of a Woman. And that, was the Hodiè genui of this day.

Mic. 5. 2.

5 Dixit genuit. Now the ſpeculative Divine pierceth yet deeper, he finds a further myſterie in theſe two words, Dixit genui (that is, ſaith he) dicendo genuit. He ſaid, He begat (that is) by His very ſaying, He begat. Wherein the very manner of His begetting, is ſet forth unto us.

There is a very neer reſemblance betwixt Dixit, and Genui; betwixt begetting, and ſpeaking. To beget is to bring forth: ſo, is to ſpeak, to bring forth alſo. To bring forth a word, and CHRIST (you know) is called the Word. Now, when we ſpeake, either we do it within, to our ſelves, or without, to others. Either of which two, may well be compared to a like ſeverall begetting.

1 When we think a word in our thought, and ſpeak it there, within, to our ſelves (as it were in ſilence) and never utter it: this (if you mark it well) is a kind of conceiving of generation: the mind, within of it ſelfe ingendring a word, while (yet) it is but in notion, kept in, and known to none, but to our ſelves. And ſuch was the generation of the Eternall Word, the Son of God, in the mind of His Father before all worlds; and even to that doth the Apoſtle apply the Genui of this verſe. And this is the firſt begetting or ſpeaking.

Heb. 5. 1.

2 Now, as the word, yet within us in our thought, when time comes that we will utter it, doth take to it ſelfe an airy body (our breath by the vocall inſtruments being framed into a voice) and becommeth audible to the outward ſenſe: (And this we call the ſecond begetting, or ſpeaking.) Right ſo, the eternall word of God, by Dominus dixit, by the very breath of GOD, the Holy Spirit (which hath his name of Spiro, to breath) corpus autem aptâſti mihi, had a body framed Him, and with that body was brought forth, and came into the world. And ſo, theſe words Genui te, this very day, the ſecond time, verified of Him. Genui, and Dixit Genui; ſaid, and by ſaying begot Him: For, how ſoone the Angels voice ſounded in the bleſſed Virgins eare, inſtantly was He incarnate in the womb of His Mother.

Heb. 10. 5.

Of both which words, Dixit and Genui, we can ſpare neither. There is good uſe of both. Of Genui: to ſhew the truth of the identitie of His nature and ſubſtance, with His Father that begat Him, and with His Mother that bare Him. For, to beget is when one living thing bringeth forth another living thing, of the ſame nature, and kind it ſelfe is.

3 But (I know not how) the terme of begetting, the very mention of that word, carrieth our conceit to a matter of carnalitie: therefore, is the word [Dixit] well ſet before it, to ſhew this Genui, was not by any fleſhly way; to abſtract it from any mixture of carnall uncleanneſſe. That the manner of it was, onely as the word is purely and ſpiritually conceived in the mind. The one word [Genui] noting the truth: The other word [Dixit] the, no way carnall, but pure, and inconcrete manner of His generation. And ſo I have gone over, the five termes of this Law, or (if you pleaſe) five points of this Text.

The

The hardeſt is yet behind: For it will not ſinke into our heads, how this ſhould be called a Law. It ſeemes nothing leſſe: rather a Dialouge betweene a Father and his Sonne. But a law (ſure) it cannot be. A law runs in the Imperative; this is meerly Narrative: declares ſome-what, injoynes nothing; gives not any thing in charge, as lawes uſe to do. III.

Sed non poteſt ſolvi Scriptura, GOD muſt be true in all his ſayings, CHRIST may not preach falſe doctrine. A Law He hath called it; and we may not give it any other name. Ioh. 10 35. Rom. 3. 4.

There be that thinke, this verſe is but the preamble, and that the body of the law doth follow, and reacheth to the end of the Pſalm.

But, the better ſort are of mind, that even this verſe, taken by it ſelfe, contains in it a law full and whole. Let us ſee then, whether we can find it ſo.

We pitch upon the Apoſtles diviſion of the law, into Lex fidei, and Lex factorum. If both theſe be found in it, we may well allow it for a Law.

We will begin with Lex fidei: what we are to believe of Him. Of Him (that is) of theſe three: 1. Of His Perſon. 2. His Natures. 3. and His Offices.

And then come to Lex factorum. 1. Firſt, what He doth for us, the benefit of this Law. 2. And then, what we are to doe for Him againe, our dutie out of this Law. The former of which (the benefit) is the Goſpell of this law. The latter (the dutie) is the law of this Goſpell.

Of His perſon firſt. That He is, of Himſelfe, a perſon ſubſiſting. Plaine, by the two perſons that are in the Text, Ego and Tu; the firſt and ſecond perſon in Grammer: and the ſame, the firſt and ſecond perſon in Trinity. Here is Ego genui, the perſon of the Father; and Filius meus tu, the perſon of the Son. Here is one begets: And (ſure it is) nemo generat ſeipſum, none begets himſelfe; but he, whom he begets, is a perſon actually diſtinguiſhed from him, that begets Him. 1 Lex fidei. 1 Of His Perſon

But, of theſe two perſons, this you will marke. That, the firſt that is named, is Filius meus tu. He ſtands firſt in the verſe before Genui te. We heare of Filius, before ever we heare of Genui: For, that is the Perſon we hold by. By Nature; Genui te ſhould go before Filius meus; but quoad nos, Filius meus is before Genui: To ſhew, there is no comming to the Father, but by Him; no intereſt in the Father, but from, and through Him, This for His Perſon. Ioh. 14. 6.

And, in His perſon, we believe two natures, ſet downe here in the two words, Hodie and Genui. If you do obſerve, there is ſome-what a ſtrange conjunction of theſe two words. One is preſent, Hodie: the other is perfectly paſt, Genui. In propriety of ſpeech it would be a preſent act, for a preſent time: or it would be an act paſt with an adverb of the time paſt: and not joyne a thing in being (Hodie) with an action ended and done (Genui.) 2 Of His Natures

The joyning of theſe two together, the verifying them both, of one and the ſame perſon, muſt needs ſeeme ſtrange. And indeed, could not be made good, but that in that one partie, there are two diſtinct Natures. To either of which, in a different reſpect, both may agree, and be true, both. Some little difference there will be about the ſorting of the two words: which to referre to which. But, that will eaſily be accorded, for they will both meet in the end.

There be, that, becauſe Hodie (the preſent) is yet in Fieri, and ſo not come to be perfect; underſtand by it, His temporall generation (as man) which is the leſſe perfect, as ſubject to the manifold imperfections of our humane nature, and condition. And then, by Genui, which is in factum eſſe (and ſo, done and perfect) underſtand His eternall generation (as the SON of GOD) in whom are abſolutely all the perfections of the Deitie.

There be other, and they fly a higher pitch, and are of a contrary minde: For, whatſoever is paſt, is in time (ſay they) and ſo Genui is temporall: and, that Hodie (that) doth beſt expreſſe His eternall generation: For that, nothing is ſo properly affirmed of eternitie it ſelfe, as is Hodiè. Why? For, there, all is Hodiè: there, is neither Heri, nor Cras; no yeſterday, nor to morrow. All is, To day, there. Nothing paſt; nothing to come: all preſent. Preſent (as it were) in one inſtant, or center, ſo in the Hodie of Eternitie. Paſt, and to come, argue time; But, if it be eternall, it is neither: All there is Preſent. To day then, ſets forth eternity beſt (ſay they) which is ſtill preſent, and in being. But, Genui (that, being paſt) cannot be His eternall at any hand, but muſt needs ſtand for His temporall.

But whether of theſe it be, Genui, His eternall (as perfect) and Hodie (as not yet perfect) His temporall; Or, vice verſa, Hodie repreſent eternitie beſt, and Genui, time, as being ſpent and gone: Betweene them both, one way or other, they will ſhew His begettings. You may weave Hodie with Genui, or Genui with Hodie, and betweene them both, they will make up the two Natures of Him, that was the Hodie genitus of this day. Concerning whom, we believe; as firſt, that He is one intire perſon, and ſubſiſts by Himſelf; So, ſecond, that He conſiſts of two diſtinct Natures, eternall and temporall. The one, as perfect God: the other, as perfect man.

3 Of His offices

Now for His Offices. Them, we have likewiſe in the two words, Prædicabo, and Legem. Prædicabo: By that, it is plaine, He doth preach. And that ſeemes ſtrange: for the laſt newes we heard of Him (in the verſe before) was, that He was ſet a King in Sion. And the word legem imports as much: For, lawes (with us) are the Kings lawes.

A King to Preach? Let that alone for the Prieſts. That, is their Office; they ſhall teach Iacob His Iudgments, and preach to Iſrael His Law. But preach He will (as He ſaith.) So, meus Filius will prove a Prieſt (as it ſeemes:) A Prieſt, indeed. And, which is yet more ſtrange, by vertue of theſe very words: Filius meus tu. No words (one would think) to prove Him a Prieſt by; and we ſhould hardly believe it, but that (in Heb. 5. 4) the Apoſtle deduceth His Prieſthood from theſe very words: No man (ſaith he) taketh unto him this honour, (that is, the honour of the Prieſt-hood) but he, that was called of God, as was Aaron. And then he adds, No more did CHRIST, He took not this honour upon Him, to be our high Prieſt: but He, that ſaid to Him [Filius meus tu, hodie genui te] He gave it Him. So, that by vertue of theſe words, CHRIST was conſecrate a Prieſt; as by vertue of the other [Poſui te Regem] He was ſet a King in Sion.

And the place (Sion) ſuits well with both. For Mount Sion had two tops. On the one was the Temple built: on the other was the Kings Palace ſituate. The one for Prædicabo: the other for Legem. In the one (as King) he makes a law: in the other (as Prieſt) preacheth it. Firſt, Poſui Regem; and then, Prædicabo Legem.

And indeed the Kings that were his types, were mixt of both. Melchiſedek; him the Apoſtle ſtands on at large, in Heb. 7. And if this Pſalme be David's (as queſtion leſſe it is, for, his it is avowed to be Act. 4. 25.) why then, he preach'd too. And for Salomon, it is too evident; we have his booke of the Preacher. The like, may be ſaid of Ezechias, and the reſt by whom, this King (here) was in any ſort repreſented. And, by vertue thereof, they all had a greater care of publiſhing this law, here, than of any of their own lawes: as on the contrary, Ahab, and his race had more care of the keeping the ſtatutes of Omri, then they had of the Lawes of GOD.

Mic. 6. 16.

We believe then, for His Offices; that, He is both King and Prieſt. Hath a Kingdome to rule: Hath a Dioceſe to preach in. His Kingdome, the Heathen, to the uttermoſt parts of the earth: His Dioceſe, as large. His Auditorie, all States, even the higheſt, Kings and Iudges: for Prædicabo Legem concerns them all, And this, for lex fidei: what it binds us to believe of Him.

2. Lex factorum, 1 What he doth for us. The Benefit. Ioh. 1. 12.

Now for Lex factorum. Firſt, what ſhall be done to them, that live by and under this law. They ſpeake of Lawes of grace: This is indeed, a law of grace; nay, it is, The law of grace: not only as it is oppoſite to the law of nature; but even, becauſe it offereth grace, the greateſt grace, that ever was. For, what greater grace or favour can be done to any, than to have theſe words [Filius meus tu] ſaid unto him? This law doth it: for to them, that receive it, it giveth power to be made the Sons of GOD.

The

The words ſeem to be ſpoken to one perſon only: but (as lawes of grace uſe to be) are to receive ampliation, and to be extended, to the moſt benefit.

Dixit ad me. Said He it to Him, and ſaid He it, to Him alone, and ſaid he it to no other, but to Him? No: for, He gave it Him in charge to preach it; and to preach it, is to ſay it to others. Therefore it is, Dixit ad me, ut ad alios; per me: it was ſo ſaid to Him, as that by Him, it might be ſaid to others. Prædicabo makes it plaine. 1

Prædicabo. When CHRIST doth preach, He is not to be underſtood to preach to Himſelfe: no man doth ſo at any time; but to others more or leſſe, that may be, or ſhould be the better for His preaching. For, what needed it be preached, if it concerne none, but Him? if none to have benefit, but He? if they, that heare it preached ſhall receive no benefit by it? 2

So ſay we, of Legem. This law was not made for CHRIST: it needed not for Him (any law.) He was Filius meus tu φύσει, καὶ οὐ νόμῳ, needed no law to make Him that, which by nature he was. The law was for others, which, by this law, were to be made that, which, by nature, they were not (that is) the Sons of God. 3

Take the very words. You ſee, His Text is not in the firſt perſon, Filius tuus ego: His Text is, Filius meus tu. And, who is that, Tu? It cannot be CHRIST Himſelf by common intendment. The Father ſaith to Him, thou art my Son: But, to whom is it, that CHRIST ſaith, Thou art my Son? For, Filius meus tu, is His Text; that, He muſt preach on: He may not goe from the words, or change the tenour of his Text. Who is then, that Sonne? To whom applieth He His Text? To ſome other certainly. 4

The Apoſtle ſaith, He was ſet and ſent, that He might bring many Sons unto God, to whom God alſo might ſay, Filius meus tu. And himſelfe likewiſe ſaith of himſelfe in the Prophet: Behold, here am I, and the children which God hath given me. Heb. 2. 10. Eſa. 8. 18.

And who be thoſe Children? Thoſe, whom He ſhall regenerate, and beget anew by his prædicabo Legem, the immortall ſeed: For, of His own good will begat He us, by the Word of truth, that We might be the firſt fruits of His creatures. Theſe are the children, that are here meant. Of whom it ſhall be ſaid, quòd, per filium, filii, that in and by this Son, they ſhall be His Sons, all. And, what was ſaid to Chriſt, ſhall be ſaid to them, and every of them, Filius meus tu. The Birth. 1 Pet. 1. 23. Iam. 1. 18.

Of Sion ſaith the LXXXVII. Pſalme, It ſhall be ſaid, He was borne in her. And that is true, for ſo He was. But he goes on further, and ſaith, He did remember himſelf of Rahab, and Babylon, the Philiſtims, and the Morians land, for, loe, there He was borne. Borne there? How can that be? Yes, borne there, and here, and every where; where, by this Prædicabo Legem, He begets children to God. The power, and vertue of his Birth reacheth even thither. Every place that receiveth His law (where ever it be) even there he is Borne. This for his birth. Pſal. 87. 4.

To this Birth there belongs a Birth-right. They talk much of the law, as of a birth-right: but (lo) this here, is a Birth-right, indeed; and that, veri nominis; and amounts to more than a Childs part. And it growes out of the double title, or intereſt, which he hath to all that is given him. For, as he is twiſe a Son, twiſe begotten, [1] Ante luciferum, and [2] Hodie: ſo hath he a double right growes to him, expreſſed in two diſtinct words (in the next verſe) [1] one of inheritance, [2] the other of Poſſeſsion, or purchaſe; for, Ahazza is true Hebrew for a purchaſe. Of which two, One contents him: his title, as heire. The other he tranſcribes and ſets over to us, which is that of his purchaſe, as Hodie genitus. The Birth-right. אחזה

But we need not ſo much as to go to the next verſe for it. Filius meus tu, will ſerve; Which was ſaid twiſe to him. [1] Once, at his Baptiſme, hic eſt filius meus.. And ſo it is likewiſe at ours, to us; for, therein we are made members of Chriſt, and the children of God. [2] And againe, hic eſt Filius meus, at his transfiguration in the Mount. And we keeping the law of our Baptiſme, the ſame ſhall be ſaid to us likewiſe, the ſecond time; and when time comes, we ſhall be transfigured into the glorious image of the Son of God. And this is, Lex factorum on his part: this ſhall be done for us by Him. This we called the Goſpell of this Law. Mat. 3. 17. Mat. 17. 5. Phil. 3. 21.

What we to do for Him: The duties.

And what ſhall be done for us by Him? Which is the law of duty on our part required; and which we called the law of this Goſpell: implyed in the two firſt words, Prædicabo and legem. Either word hath his condition. Firſt, if he preach, that we beſtow the hearing of him. And then legem, that we know it is a law he preacheth: and therefore ſo, and no otherwiſe than ſo, to heare it.

1 Prædicabo.

Heare him preach? that we will be intreated to, eaſily. If that be all, we will never ſtick with him for that. Nay, GOD's bleſſing on his heart, for (as the world goes) we are now, all, for preaching.

2 Legem.

But take Legem with you too. It is ſo Prædicabo, as it is legem. Preached, and ſo preached, as it is a law, his Sermons are ſo many Law-lectures: His preaching is our law to live by; And law binds, and leavs us not to live, as we liſt. And, if that which is preached be law, it is to be heard, as a law; kept, as a law; to be made our lex factorum, as well as lex fidei. If we heare it otherwiſe, if we heare it not ſo, if we looſe legem; we may let go Prædicabo too, and all.

And here now, we break. As a law? Nay, none of that. The hearing we will give him: but ſoft, no law (by your leave.) Our caſe is this: So long as it is but Prædicabo, but Preaching, we care not greatly, though we heare it: but, if it once come to legem, to be preſſed upon us, as a law; farewell our parts: we give him over: for law binds, and we will not be bound. Upon the point, we are faſt at Prædicabo, and looſe at legem. Leave Chriſt his booke to preach by; but keep the law in our own hands. But (to be ſhort) if we heare it, not as a law; heare it not, but as newes; if we bring our Sermons to an end, as a tale, that is told; if that be all: we forfeit all that followes, all our part and portion, in Filius meus, and Hodie genui and all.

By legem, what law is meant.

Now, if you ask, what law it is, is here meant? No other, but the law, of theſe words, Filius meus tu: For, Filius meus tu, in the body of it, carrieth the law; That containes all Filiall duties, which is the perfecteſt law, when all is done.

For, the law of a Son is more, than all lawes beſides. For beſides that it is lex factorum, that a Son will doe any thing that is to be done; he will further do it, out of filiall love and affection, which is worth all. And this law (indeed) is worth the preaching. It is Exhibita de Sion lex, the law that came from Sion.

Eſay 2. 3. Gal. 4. 24.

The law of Sinai, that begins with Ego ſum Dominus; it is a law of ſervitude; a law for the bond-woman and her brood. Never preach it: at leaſt, not to children. That law is to give place, and in place thereof, is to come the law of Sion, which we preach; the law of the free-woman, and the children of promiſe: the law of love, of filiall love, proceeding, not from the Spirit of bondage, but from the Spirit of adoption.

Gal. 4. 28. Rom. 8. 15.

There is lex factorum in both: But, as Gregory well expreſſes it, Si ſervus es, metue plagas, if thou be bond (as Iſmael) do it, out of ſervile feare, for feare of the whip. Si mercenarius, expect a mercedem: if thou be an hireling (as Balaam) doe it, out of mercenary reſpect. Sed ſi filius meus tu; then doe it, out of true, naturall affection; performe all duties of a kind Sonne to him, that ſaid, genui te, as did Iſaac the ſon of the free-woman; to Abraham, that begot him, even to the laying downe of his life. None to Timothie, (ſaith Saint Paul) none like minded to him; for, as a ſon with his Father, ſo hath he laboured with me in the Goſpell. So, (that is) ſo freely, ſo fincerely, ſo reſpectfully, as a loving, kind, naturall ſonne could doe no more. And that is lex factorum, indeed. And ſo much for lex factorum on our part: what we doe for him: the filiall duties: the Law of this Goſpell.

Gen. 22. 9. Phil. 2. 20. 22.

1 The Time hodie.

We lack nothing now, but the time. And as legem, is the condition; ſo hodie, is the time. We are willed by the Apoſtle to inſiſt upon this word, hodie, to call upon men for this duty, while it is called, To day. Not to defer, or to put off, or make a morrow matter of it. We are all inclined to be Craſtini, or Perendini, for to morrow, or next day, or, I know not when; but, not to be Hodierni. Hodie is no adverb with us: for, where ſhall we find one, but will take daies for any matter of dutie? To look to this Hodie, and not deceive our ſelves: for no time, but hodie, hath any promiſe: Witneſſe, Hodie, ſi vocem; To day if you will heare his voyce; which every day ſounds in our eares.

Heb. 3. 13. 15.

Pſal. 95. 7, 8.

But,

But, Hodiè genui, is more than Hodiè: for every day in the yeare, while it lasts, is Hodiè, To day: but every day is not Hodiè genui. There is but one of them in the whole yeare; and that, is this day. This day then to take: of all other Hodie's, not to let slip the Hodie of this day. A day, whereon this Scripture was fulfilled: whereon, Dixit, & factum est, He said it, and did it; whereon, this Sonne was born, and given us: A day, whereon as it is most kindly preached; so, it will be most kindly practised of all others. And so, I hold you no longer; but end. 2 Hodie genui.

Praying to Him, that was the Hodie genitus of this day, Him, that was begotten, and Him, by whom He was begotten; that we may have our parts, as in Prædicabo, preaching; so likewise in legem, the Law: in both legem fidei, to believe aright, and legem factorum, to live according: That we performing the filiall duties required, may attaine the filiall rights promised, and may be in the number of those, to whom first, and last, Filius meus tu shall be said, to our everlasting comfort, and to the praise of the glory of His grace, through CHRIST our LORD. PSAL. LXXVIII. Ver. XXXIV.

Cum occideret eos, quærebant Eum: & revertebantur; & diluculo veniebant ad Eum.

When He ſlew them, then they ſought Him: and they returned, and inquired early after GOD.

THIS Pſalme is a Calender, or Roll of reports, how from Moſes to David, the Iewes carried themſelves to God, in matter of Religion. And this verſe, a report how in the matter of repentance (expreſſed here, under the terms of ſeeking and turning to GOD.) Wherein, this they did, this was their faſhion: while He ſpared them, they ſought Him not; When He ſlew them, then they ſought Him. Cum, &c. Theſe words then are a report.

A report: but ſuch an one, as when S. Paul heard of the Corinthians, he could not commend it: What ſhall I ſay? Shall I praiſe you in this? No: I praiſe you not. Neither He them, for that: Not I theſe, for this. Rather as old Father Ely ſaid to his ſonnes: Non eſt bonus Sermo hic, quem audio de vobis; This is no good report I heare, Cum occideret, &c. 1 Cor. 11. 17. 1 Sam. 2. 24.

Whether good or whether evill, it pertaineth to us. For, to us of the Gentiles hath 1 Cor. 10. 11. S. Paul entailed whatsoever well or ill befell the dissolved Church of the Iews: These, all these came unto them for example, and are enrolled, to warn us that grow nearer and nearer to the ends of the world.

Both pertaineth unto us; the Scripture hath both: And, in it, draweth out our dutie to us, in both, in good and evill reports; as it were in white work, and black work. And we to have use of both: Yet, not of both reports alike, but diversly, as our instructions upon them are diverse. For we are not so much to regard the bare report, as the instruction of it. For which cause Asaph hath entitled this Psalm, not Asaph's report, but Asaph's instruction.

Now, we have here our report: May we find, what our instruction is touching it? We may. Asaph expresly hath set it downe at the VIII. verse before. That this, and other errours of theirs are here upon the File, Ne fiant sicut patres eorum, that we should not be like our forefathers, a crosse and crooked generation. Not like them, in other indignities: and among other, in this Cum occideret, &c. Never to seeke GOD but when he kills us.

In which foule indignitie, our Age is (certainly) as deep, as ever was that; And we need Asaphs instruction, no lesse than they.

For, as if there were no use of Religion, but only Cum occideret, so spend we all our whole time, in the search of other things. Not caring to aske, or seek, or confer about the state of our soules, even till occideret come. And then (peradventure) sending for Asaph, and hearing him speake a few words about it, which we would faine have called seeking of GOD. I can say little to it: I pray GOD, it prove so: but sure Dan. 5 27: (I feare) it will be found Minus habens, far short of it.

Which is so usually received, that take a survey, not one of an hundred ever think of it, before. So securely practised, as if we had some Supersedeas lying by us, not to do it till then: As if there were no such Scripture as this upon record; which turned to their destruction, and must needs lye heavie upon us, when we shall remember it. Cum occideret, &c.

Now sure, this course must needs be prejudiciall to our soules: and a number perish in it daily before our eyes. Yet we sit still, and suffer this custome to grow and gather head. Neither delivering their soules, or (at least) our own, by telling them seriously, this is not the time: and, then, to seeke, is not the seeking, God will allow. That this is a Ne fiant, such a thing, as should not be done in Israel. That it is upon record, ὡς ὑπόδειγμα, to their disgrace and destruction: And it cannot be to our comfort or commendation, to doe the like. Out of which their destruction, Asaph frameth an instruction for us: and (as it is well said, and firly to this day) ex cinere Iudæorum lixivium Christianorum, of the Iewes ashes maketh a lee for Christians, to cleanse us from this foule indignitie. Vt, videntes cadentes, videant ne cadant, that, heeding their fall, we take heed we fall not: that is, seeke, not as they sought, lest we perish, by like example of seeking too late.

Therefore, that we set our selves to seek, before this Cum come: that is (in a word) seek GOD, as by repentance and the fruits; so by undelayed repentance, and the timeIude 12. ly fruits of it; and be not like the Apostle Iude's δένδρα φθινοπωρινὰ, our seeking all Summer, withered and drie, and beginning to shoot out a little, about Michaelmasse spring: Of which kind of shooting, fruit can never come. This is the summe.

The Division The words consist of two parts. Two parts: but, these two evill matched, or 2 Cor. 6. 4. (as S. Paul) unequally yoaked together. For, where our chiefe actions (of which I take it, our seeking of GOD is one) should have the chiefest time; Here, is the first and best of our actions sorted, with the last and worst part of our time: Quærebant Eum, with Cum occideret.

And, not only misse-sorted, but misse-placed. For, cum occideret, His killing standeth before our seeking: whereas our seeking should be first, and His killing come after. This was never GOD's Fiant: they must have a Ne fiant.

Of

Of theſe two, then. Firſt by way of report, joyntly: that, de facto thus it is: thus, they; and thus, we ſeek. I

Then if we take them in ſunder, and (as Ieremie ſaith) * Separate the precious from the vile: Quærebant Eum, the flower of our actions, from cum occideret, the droſſe, dreggs, and very refuſe of our time. Conſider them apart, and ſhew. 1. That this time is not the time: 2. And that this ſeeking, thus ſorted, and thus placed, is no ſeeking, nor ever ſhall finde. Therefore, with Aſaph's inſtruction, to ſettle our ſeeking upon ſome other time; and to reſolve, to begin it before. II

* Ier. 15 19.

TWo powers there are in Cum: 1. A Privative, of all times before: 2. A Poſitive, of that inſtant time, then. No time, before, we ſeek: At that inſtant time, then, we doe. On which two conſiſteth Theatrum vitæ, the very Theater of our life. Our caſe, before that time, is lively expreſſed in the words immediately predecent. They ſpent their dayes in vanitie, and their yeares in turmoile in the world. Our caſe, then, at that time, in theſe words, cum occideret eos. Yea, by implication they are both in this verſe: By what they doe now, is implyed what they did before. [1] Now they ſought him: So that, before, they loſt Him. [2] Againe, Then they turned to: So that, before, they turned away, and not once looked toward Him. [3] Now they roſe up early: ſo that, before, they put it off till twilight. [4] Now they remembred: ſo that, before, they forgat Him cleane; No ſpeech, no queſtion; nay, no thought about Him. I

Of both de facto joyntly.

1 Cum occideret.

Verſ. 33.

Thus it was (ſaith Aſaph) under Moſes. While His hand was not upon them, they regarded Him not, as not worth the ſeeking: Perdebant Eum, it was their looſing time. But, when He ſlew them, they fell to ſeek; and well was he that might finde: Quærebant Eum, it was their ſeeking time. 1

Before, Quærebant alia, they found themſelves other matters more meet to ſeek: Then Quærebant eum, they gave over all, to ſeeke Him, only. 2

Before, He ſought them; and they gave Him good leave, ſo to doe. Then all is turned out and in: As, He, them, before; So they, Him, now. 3

And is it not thus with us, that are now in theatro upon the ſtage? Yes indeed: and more, if more may be. This, is but vetus fabula, per novos hiſtriones, the ſame Play againe by other Actors. For, in Publike: when in the dayes of ſafety, plenty, and peace, we are in the 6. of Amos, and are beſt at eaſe when Quærebant is fartheſt from us; but, if Warre, Famine, or Contagion come, then we runne to the II. of Ioel, Sanctifie a Faſt, and call for the Ark, and grow all godly on a ſudden: What is this, but Cum occideret? And in Private: When while youth, and ſtrength, and health doth laſt, while the evill day is farre off, we are even at ceſſare fac Sanctum Iſrael à nobis, Cauſe the Holy one of Iſrael to ceaſe from us; But, when diſtreſſe, danger, or death come, when Rabſaketh is before the walls, then we cry, Now is the day of tribulation and anguiſh; now the children are come to the birth, and there is no ſtrength to bee delivered; Now, Send to Eſay; Now, lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left: What is this, but Cum occideret? Surely, this is our caſe: Our ſeeking goeth wholly by our killing: waxeth and waineth: is out and in, as that is neere at hand or farther off. I need not tell it, your eares and eyes are daily witneſſes, that this is a true ſaying, Cum occideret eos, &c. No killing, no ſeeking. 2

Eſay 37. 3. 14

This is a true ſaying: but, all true ſayings are not by all meanes (Nay ſome, not by any meanes) to be received. The report (indeed) is, Thus it was. But the inſtruction is Ne fiant, that it ſhould not be. To the end then, we may know, what to receive and what to refuſe, we will take it in peeces, and melt the droſſe from the ſilver metall. Quærebant eum, by it ſelfe is good: Put occideret to it, it is baſe. Of theſe then in order. II

Of each ſeverally.

Of quærebant eum, we ſhall ſoone agree (if it be quærebant eum) that it is a Fiat; a thing 1 Quærebant Eum, our fiat.

thing to be done. Which, many other wayes might be made to appeare, but by none better than this, here: That, at laſt, all come to it: Sooner or later, all ſeeke it: all men, if not before, yet cum occideret, then, certainly.

Quærebant, they ſought: they and all Pſal. 24 6.

All ſeek: And among all, They ſought: which word is not without his weight here. For, what are theſe, that Aſaph here meaneth, by they? Not Saints: Not, generatio quærentium, the generation of them that ſeek GOD. But, they, that (in the verſe before) waſted all their dayes in vanitie, and their yeares in turmoiling in the world. They idle riotous perſons: They ſought.

1 Ver. 33.

They, that (in a verſe after) flattered Him with their lips, and gave Him all the good words that might be, and meant no ſuch thing. The Hypocrites, They ſought.

2 Ver. 34.

They, (that a little before) grieviouſly provoked the moſt High GOD, with ſpeeches little better than blaſphemy, Can GOD doe this? Is there a GOD amongſt us, or is there none? And ſo, in ſtead of quærebant Deum, quærebant; An Deus, made a queſtion whether there were any to ſeek: That is, even the very wicked, and (of all wicked, the worſt) the prophane Atheiſt, They ſought: Even, at laſt, They ſought. This, is the triumph of Religion: The Riotous perſon, The Hypocrite, The Atheiſt, all ſhall ſeeke.

Ver 19.

And herein is folly condemned even of her owne children, and wiſdome juſtified of her very enemies: That they, that greedily ſeek ſin, at laſt would be glad to be rid of it: and they, that merily ſcorne Religion, at laſt are glad to ſeek to it.

They ſhall ſeek: And, the time is ſet down when they ſhall ſeek; and when you ſhall not faile, but ſee them ſeek, that never ſought before. In diebus juventutis, not then: Sanus factus eſt, nor then, neither: But, cum occideret, then, certainly. Cum occideret, Mark this Cum, when it commeth, and you ſhall ſee them, that ſtood out all their life long, then come in.

1 The Heathen man ſaw it with his eyes. O (ſaith the Perſian Meſſenger in Æſchylus) when the Græcian forces hotly purſued our Hoaſt, and we muſt needs venter over the great water Strymon, frozen then, but beginning to thaw, when an hundred to one we had all dyed for it (that is cum occideret;) with mine eyes, I ſay (ſaith he) when Θεὸς ἢ τὶς &c. of thoſe Gallants whom I had heard (before) ſo boldly maintaine, There was no GOD to ſeek, τοτ ἤυχελο λὶτωπ, then every one of them on their knees, and full devoutly praying, the Ice might hold till they got over.

2 Moſes ſaw it, with his eyes. Pharaoh (who was at hightermes,) Who is the LORD you talk of? (and anſwered himſelfe, he knew none ſuch, nor nothing would do for Him: When Cum occideret came, he tooke notice, there was a LORD higher than he: that that LORD was righteous, and he a wretched ſinner, that ſought for grace at His hands. Marke but the ſhutting up of dixit inſipiens (their owne Pſalme.) When (ſaith David) they have in heart ſought to perſwade themſelves, Non eſt: ſeeke none, None there is: and thereupon corrupted themſelves, and became moſt loathſome in their lives, eat up their tenants, as they would do ſo many morſels of bread; made a mocke of ſuch holy men, as ſet themſelves ſeriouſly to ſeeke GOD: When all is done, and occideret come, trepidabunt timore, ubi non erat timor, they ſhall begin to be afraid, where (they held before) no feare needed: And here ſhall be the laſt verſe of their Pſalme; Quis dabit è Sion ſalutem, to wiſh for the ſalvation of Sion, which they have ſo oft derided. They ſhall ſeeke, and then they ſhall ſeeke Till then (poſſibly) you ſhall looſe your labour, if you tell them of ſeeking of GOD but and how good it is. They are (ſaith Ieremy) like the Dromedary of the wilderneſſe, a beaſt of exceeding ſwiftneſſe, the female ſpecially:) Over hill and dale ſhe goeth (ſaith the Prophet,) and ſnuffeth up the aire at her pleaſure, and who can overtake-her? They, that ſeek her, will not weary themſelves, till her moneth: And in her moneth, when ſhee is bagged, then they will finde her, and deale with her well enough. The caſe is like. Age, ſickneſſe, death are farre off: Youth, health, and ſtrength poſſeſſe them: there is no comming to them, then. The moneth, cum occideret, is not yet come: But, come that once (as, once it will to all) you ſhall finde, quærebant will have his place, Fiat. It is therefore GOD'S own reſolution; Thus He reſolveth:

3 Pſal. 53 1.

Ier. 2. 24.

veth: I will go (ſaith He) and returne to my place, till they acknowledge their faults, and ſeeke me: And when will that be? He addeth: In noviſsimo quærent me diligenter, An end will come: and when that commeth, they will ſeeke me diligently, even the beſt of them. And, even ſo we are faine to reſolve: For, our lot, is GODS lot, and when He ſought to them, we go to our place, and there ſtand, till their moneth, Expectantes aquæ motum, waiting till the deſtroying Angell come and ſtirre the water, and then quærent eum will be worth the ſeeking after. Hoſ. 5. 15. Ioh. 5. 4.

Then, according to S. Paul's disjunctive, we, that all other times mente excedimus Deo, at that time ſobrii ſumus vobis. Divinitie, which (in our ruffe) is ſophiſme and ſchoole-points, and (at the beſt) a kind of extaſie about God, is and ſhall be, then, the words of truth and ſoberneſſe. For, GOD, and His ſeeking will have their time; Before, if it may be: but if not before, then, at the fartheſt. Firſt or laſt; all ſhall confeſſe, by ſeeking, God is to be ſought. Some, before He kill; and happy are they: But, when He killeth, all: Hypocrites, Heathens, Atheiſts and all. 2 Cor. 5. 13.

And I would pray you (in a word) but to note, in ſeeking then, how many things they confeſſe. For, there be (I take it) foure potentiall Confeſſions in it:

That ſuch an one there is to be ſought. A Power above us, whoſe being and ſoverainty all, firſt or laſt ſhall ſeeke. 1

That ſomewhat there is to be found: ſome good to be done, in ſeeking (as Eſay ſaith) Non fruſtra dixit, He hath not in vaine ſaid to the ſeed of Iacob, ſeek ye me. For were it to no purpoſe, they would not then do it; but, as at other times they did, ſo let it alone then, too. 2 Eſay. 45. 19.

That, whatſoever that good is, hit upon it, or ſtumble on it, we ſhall not: It will not be had in parergo, but ſeek it we muſt. For, without ſeeking, it will not be had. If it would, they might ſit ſtill, and let it drop into their laps. 3.

That, ſeeking at this time when He ſlayeth them, they that ſhew what that good is, they ſeek: Even that, the Pſalmiſt ſaith, ſeek the LORD, and your ſoule ſhall live: that whatſoever become of their body, at leaſt, their ſoule may live: that we looſe not both; that He kill not both, and caſt both into hell fire. And this even when we come within the hemiſphere of the other life, the ſenſe we then have of ſomewhat that ſhould have beene ſought before; the miſgiving of our hearts; they ſhall come to a reckoning, for not ſeeking ſooner: And this, that not one of us would dye ſuddenly by our good-wills, but have a time to ſeek GOD; before we looſe our ſelves: This, that we deſire to die ſeeking, howſoever we live; all ſhew certainly, it is a Fiat, a thing to be done; a good thing to ſeeke GOD, even the enemies of it, being Judges of it. 4 Pſal. 69. 32.

So then: quærebant Eum is as it ſhould be. But, I adde: [1] If it be quærebant, ſeeking indeed. [2] And, if it be quærebant Eum, and not aliud in Eo: ſeeking, not Him, but ſomewhat elſe by Him.

If it be ſeeking indeed. For they, to whom the Prophet Eſay ſaid, * Si quæritis, quærite; If ye ſeek, why then do it; ſought ſo, as (it ſeemeth) their ſeeking deſerved not the name of ſeeking. So looſly, ſo ſlightly, ſo ſlenderly, they did it; as if, that they ſought were as good loſt as found. So ſought the party that ſaid, In lectulo quæſivi quem diligit anima, that lay in bed and ſought. So he that asked our Saviour, Quid eſt veritas? (a very good queſtion:) and when he had asked it, another thing tooke him in the head, and up he roſe, and went his way, before CHRIST could tell him, what it was. Such is our ſeeking, for the moſt part. Some idle queſtion caſt: Some table-talke moved: Some quid eſt veritas, and go our way: all by the way, In tranſcurſu: and never, as if it were about ſome matter of ſpeciall moment, ſit about it and ſeeke it out indeed.

1 It muſt be quærebant, ſeeking indeed.
* Eſay 21. 12. Cant. 3. 1 Ioh. 20. 30.

1. They turned them (ſaith the Text:) as if, before, they ſought, without ſo much as turning the m about.

2. They roſe up: as though, before, they ſate ſtill and ſought.

3. They did it early, and did not tarry till Cum occideret, the Sun were ſet, and no light to ſeek by, but their feet ſtumpled in the dark mountaines.

4. They

4. They enquired: So that before, if you had ought to ſay to them, you might; they had nothing to ſay to you. To ſeek then, is to turne, to riſe, to riſe earely, to enquire after it. O ſi quæritis, quærite (ſaith Eſay,) the morning commeth, and ſo doth the night: that is, our dayes ſpend apace; and we ſay, we will ſeek: If we will ſeek, let us once do it indeed.

Eſay 21.12.

1 2 It muſt be Eum, Him.

Secondly, if it be quærebant, and if it be Eum: Another point to be rectified. * Non veſtra, ſed vos (ſaith the Apoſtle) is the right ſeeking. Not, ſeeke Him, for ſomewhat we would have of Him: but to ſeek Himſelfe, for Himſelfe. It is one thing (ſay the Schooles) to ſeeke GOD, for fruition: another, to ſeeke Him, to make uſe of Him. One thing (ſaith CHRIST) to ſeeke for the miracle; another, for the loaves. One thing, to ſeeke his face; another, to ſeeke His fingers ends. One thing, to conſult with Him onely for conſcience, to know and doe; another, to conſult with Him, if it hit our humour to make our advantage of it; if it goe againſt us, to ſet light by it. Such is our ſeeking for the moſt part: Cum occîderet, to have our turne ſerved; to have our health reſtored, that wee may ſeeke Him no longer, but to our former ryot againe, and to morrow may be as yeſterday, and much more.

* 2 Cor. 12.14.

Ioh. 6.26.

Pſal. 105.4.

Eſay 56.12.

Seeke Him, indeed: Seeke Him, for Himſelfe. Theſe two points being agreed of, we ſhall throughly agree of quærebant Eum. And, ſo much for it, and for our fiat. Now, to our Ne fiat.

2 Our Ne fiat: cum occîderet, the time.

For, when we have agreed of our ſeeking, we have not done. With * diligence, it would be, and due reſpect. Our ſeeking (as all things, the beſt things under the Sunne) muſt have τὸν ὦρον καὶ τὸν χῶρον, their due time and place. Wherein appeareth the abating power of Circumſtances: that they are able to bring down the ſubſtances. Namely, of the time: And that, miſſe-timing marreth not only muſicke, but all things elſe. The thing is right, The Cum is wrong; and ſo, all is wrong.

* Hoſ. 5.6.

Ioh. 8.21.

1 Gods ſeeking to have a time.

To find out the time, wee agree firſt, that as every weighty thing hath, ſo the ſeeking of God is to be allowed a time, too.

Pſal. 105.4.

What time is that? Verily, wee ſhould doe it abſolutely, all our life long: Quærite faciem Ejus ſemper. Not, When? But, when not? without limitation, continually.

And, in this ſenſe we grant Cum occîderet: then, and at other times too. But, not (as Aſaph) then, and never till then: So, we deny it.

2 A ſet time, Cum

GOD (indeed) is ſo to be ſought: but we cannot ſo ſeek Him: Other our affaires crave allowance out of our time, and we are well content to yeeld it largely. Only that GOD hath a ſet time left, when to ſeeke Him. That is but reaſon: all will yeeld to it. All grant a Cum.

But, come to know, when that when ſhall be; here, we vary, firſt. We cannot be brought to ſet downe any certainty, but love to be left at large. Doe it we will: but (indeed) we cannot ſhew when; but even Felix his when, ὁ τὸν δὲ μεταλάβω, when we have leaſure. I cannot now ſtand to ſeek (ſaith he;) I hope one day to be at leaſure to do it: but, that day never came.

Act. 14.26.

Urge them, preſſe them, When? No other reſolution, but, omnis peccator dicit, Aliquando Deum ſequar, ſed non modò: Sometime ſtill; but, not this time. Never, in the preſent; but, ſometime hereafter.

Follow them all along their life, they finde not this Cum, but put it from one Cum to another, till there be none left, but only Cum occîderet, Even that very time againſt which GOD layeth His exceptions. Every time before, we ſay, Nondum tempus, it is not time yet: Every houre before, Nondum venit hora, the houre is not yet come.

Not to leave GOD's ſeeking thus at randome: But to grow to ſome certaintie. I demand, Will any time ſerve? Is GOD at all times to be found? It is certaine, Not. The very limitation (of dum invenire poteſt) ſheweth plainly, that other times there bee, wherein, Seeke Him you may, but finde Him you ſhall not.

Eſay 55.6.

Then

Then, if, at all times. He is not to be found, we are to make choice of a certaine Cum, Cum inveniri poteſt, when He may be found, and then ſeeke Him.

Many returnes there be, in the terme of our life; Many Cum's: All are reduced to two: [1] Cum Servaret; and [2] Cum Occîderet. Or (if we will needs be wedded, to a Cum occîderet) [1] Cum occîderet hoſtes eorum; [2] not, eos: When He ſcattereth and ſlayeth our enemies, and ſaveth us. One of theſe two it muſt needs be.

Cum occîderet, it is not. CHRIST Himſelfe expreſly limiteth it, before: * Dedi ei tempus ad pœnitendum, (ſaith he) I gave her a time to repent. What time is that? Leſt we might miſtake it, to be Cum occideret, He adds; if we doe it not in that time, ſo by Him given, He will caſt us down on our beds, the beds of affliction and ſickneſſe, and there kill us with death. So that, the time, He alloweth us to repent, is before we come thither. For, thither we come, becauſe we did it not in the time, he gave us to doe it in. Indeed, our bed is not the place. In lectulo quæſivi: I ſought Him in my bed: quæſivi, ſed non inveni: I ſought Him, but I found Him not. The place of ſlaughter is not the place: Nor, the time of killing is not the time. We may take that time: but it is not dedi illis, none of His giving. The time, He giveth us, is before we come there.

It would be 1 Cum ſervaret.
* Apoc. 2. 21.
Ver. 22. 23.
Cant. 3. 1.

Then, if when he kils us, is not it when he ſaveth us? it is. It is indeed: and a cluſter of it, an houre of cum ſervaret, then, is better than a vintage, a whole day of Cum occideret.

Upon theſe two the whole Pſalme ſtandeth: and the part (before) ſheweth, when it ſhould have beene. When He overwhelmed the Egyptians in the Sea: When the pillar of the cloud was over: When, He not only ſaved them, but ſerved them, raining downe Manna, for their need, and giving them Quailes for their luſt: then, was the time with them: and then, is the time with us.

Ver. 13. 14. 34. 27.

For (ſure) as we ſeek GOD, to ſave us: ſo, He ſaveth us, to ſeeke Him. If when we ſeeke Him, we are ſaved; when we are ſaved, we ſhould ſeek Him. The time of His ſaving, is the time of our ſeeking: And, one houre, then, is better than foure and twentie.

All that while, what ſeeke we? Why (as Ieremie ſaith) we doe then quærere grandia. Other greater matters we have in hand: Matters of more weight than the ſeeking of GOD. As if His ſeeking were ſome petie buſineſſe: Slightly to be ſought, and lightly to be found. And any time good enough for it.

Ier. 45. 5.

Nay, not that: but, ſo evill are we affected to ſeeke Him, then, that quærebant is occideret: we indite Him of our death; it is death to doe it: as leeſe die, as ſeeke: It maketh us old; it killeth us before our time. We digeſt not them, that call on us for it, but ſeeke our ſelves (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) Magiſtros ſecundùm deſideria, that may entertaine us with Speculations, of what may be done by miracle, at the houre of death: that may give us dayes and elbow-roome enough, to ſeeke other things, and to ſhrink up His ſeeking into a narrow time, at our end; and tell us, time enough then. For, thus (then) we reckon: all the time we ſpend in it, we looſe the fruit of our life, and the joy of our hearts ſhall be taken from us. As if the fruit of life were not to finde GOD; Or, as if any true hearts joy, GOD being not found. Call we this our fruit and joy, not to ſeeke GOD? Call it not ſo: Lætetur cor quærentium Deum (ſaith the Holy Ghoſt) Let the heart of them rejoyce, that ſeeke the LORD. Yea, in lachrymis peccatorum, in the very teares of a penitent, there is (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) more ſound joy, than in riſu theatrorum, in all the games, the Theater can afford. Da Chriſtianum, & ſcit quid dico. But our taſte is turned, and we reliſh not this ſeeking. By our fleſh-pots we have lived, and by them we will dye, and ſo we do. Luſt hath been our life, and we will be buried in the graves of Luſt: And ſo we ſhall, and never know, what that joy meaneth, Lætetur cor quærentium Deum.

2 Tim. 4. 3.
Pſal. 105. 3.

Cum ſervaret then, will not ſerve. Nay, Cum occîderet will ſcarce ſerve, it hath much adoe: Let Him draw His ſword, and come amongſt us. For if (as, of His goodneſſe, He doth not) Hee ruſh not on us at firſt, but begin with others: If it be cum occîderet alios: we ſeeke not. See yee the XXXI. Verſe: He tooke away others, before their faces; and thoſe, not weake or ſickly perſons, but the goodlieſt and ſtrongeſt ſtrongeſt of all Iſrael, and leaſt likely to die. Here is occideret. Now, did this move? No. (See the XXXII. Verſe:) for, at this they ſinned yet more, and went about their ſeeking never the ſooner. It muſt be cum occideret eos, themſelves, their owne ſelves, or it will not doe it.

1 Cum occîderet alios.

Come then to themſelves, and ſmite them with the edge, not with the point: with the edge, to wound; not with the point, to diſpatch out-right; will that ſerve? Cum cæderet eos, when He wounded them, with ſome mortall ſickneſſe the meſſenger of death, would they ſeeke Him then? No: not then, not for all that, would they frame to it. For, quærebant medicum, then. I ſay, as Aſa ſought medicos, & non

2 Chro 16.12 Deum: Not, GOD and them, but them firſt, and let GOD ſtay till they be gone. And till they give us over, and tell us plainly, occideret is now come indeed: no ſmiting or wounding will ſend us to ſeeke. So that, it is not either [1] Cum Servaret eos, or [2] Cum Serviret eis, His ſaving, or ſerving us: Nay it is not, [3] Cum occideret alios, or [4] Cum cæderet, His killing others, or wounding us with any but our deaths-wound, will doe it.

It is Cum occîderet, which is a Ne fiat.

Tandem then, when we are come to the very laſt caſt, our ſtrength is gone, our ſpirit clean ſpent, our ſenſes appalled, and the powers of our ſoule as numb as our ſenſes: when a generall proſtration of all our powers, and the ſhadow of death upon our eyes: Then, ſomething we would ſay or do, which ſhould ſtand for our ſeeking: but (I doubt) it will not ſerve. This is the time, we allow GOD, to ſeek Him in.

Is this it? would we then ſeeke Him, when we are not in caſe, to ſeeke any thing elſe? Would we turne to Him then, when we are not able to turne our ſelves in our bed? Or, riſe earely to ſeek him, when we are not able to riſe at all? Or enquire after Him, when our breath faileth us, and we are not able to ſpeake three words together? Neither before, nor with, but even at the end of occideret? No houre, but the houre of death? No time, but when He taketh time from us, and us from it, Apoc 10.7. & tempus non erit amplius? What ſhall I ſay? Shall I commend this ſeeking, turning, riſing, enquiring? No: I cannot commend it, either in it ſelfe, or to any. I commend it not.

That that may be ſaid is this, and it is nothing. True: ſome one or two of a thouſand and ten thouſand, that have. How then? Shall we not therefore follow our in-

Eſay 65.1. ſtruction and ſeeke Him before? Nay then, Some have found and never ſought: Let us not ſeeke him at all, if that will hold. Thus it is: Some, going a journey, have found a purſe by the way: It were mad counſell, to adviſe us to leave our money behind, upon hope of like hap in ours. NO: this is ſafe and good: Though ſome one or two have found and not ſought; yet let us ſeek for all that. Though ſome one or two have, then, ſought, and found, yet let us ſeeke before. Though ſome have found a purſe in Eſay 30.21. their way, let us not truſt to like hap, but carry money with us. This is a privie doore, on ſpeciall favour open to ſome few. There lyeth no way by them. This is the way, (you have heard) walk in it, and you ſhall find reſt to your ſoules.

1 As not CHRIST'S time of ſeeking

To ſpeak then of ſafe ſeeking, and ſure finding, I ſay (as Aſaph ſaith) it is a Ne fiant. This time is not the time CHRIST giveth us: He aſſigneth us another. Yea, we condemne our ſelves, in that we would ſeek to allow it our ſelves. If we were put to it, to ſay plainly; Not, till he kill me: it would choake us. We neither have heart nor Matth. 6.33. face, we would not dare to anſwer ſo; we dare not avow it. And if it be a Ne dicant, it is a Ne fiant. The time of GOD'S quærite is Primum quærite. This Cum is the laſt of all our Cum's; all other before it. Firſt, and laſt are flat ad oppoſitum. This is not it.

* Not the acceptable time.

The time of ſeeking GOD muſt be καιρὸς, ſuch as is meet to be received. This, is not: Therefore (I hope) we will not offer it GOD. If we doe, take heed He ſcorne not this time, as He doth their price, in Zachary: A goodly time, that I have aſſigned me. Take

Zach. 11.13. heed he ſtand not upon His reputation (as in Malachi) and bid us Offer our ſervice, at Mal 2.8. this houre, to any great man and ſee, whether he will be content with it, and not reject both us and our ſeeking, then. This, is not; cannot be but a great Ne fiant; To offer GOD that, no man is ſo meane, but would take in evill part.

This

This time, is the time, when all Hypochrites, Atheists, tag and rag come in, and ſeek Him in a ſort: And ſhall not we be confounded to ſee our ſelves in their number? Nay, to ſay that muſt be ſaid (for, true it is) It is paſt the Divels time. They be his words [Cur, ante tempus?] and he ſeeketh to make them ours, that it is ever too ſoone to ſeeke GOD. At the hardeſt (I truſt) we will not keep time with Him. Mat. 8. 29.

And, to ſeek Him then, is not to ſeeke Him: Not quærebant Eum. No: they ſeeke Him not, they diſſemble with him (ſaith Aſaph, in the next verſe.) For, when GOD, to try them, reprieved them never ſo little time, they fell to their old byas, and when as He ceaſed killing, their ſeeking was at an end. So are all forced ſeekings: like to a bow-ſtring brought to his full bent, but remit you never ſo little, it ſtarteth back againe. 3 No time of ſeeking, but of diſſembling. Verſe. 25.

Nay, it is not quærebant, not kindly ſeeking, but a baſe ignoble creeping to, without all ingenuitie, when we muſt either die or do it. Neither χάεις nor κλαὸς to doe it then.

But in very deed it is not ſeeking at all, as before we defined quærebant, to ſeek indeed. There is a diameter betweene occideret and quærebant, and therefore, betweene it and quærebant Eum. Men cannot then ſeeke: If they muſt riſe up, and turne them that muſt doe it; they are not able for their lives, to turne or ſtirre themſelves to do it. Nay, nor to enquire. For, what is our ſeeking, then? Is it not to lie ſtill on our bed, and ſuffer a few words to be ſpoken in our eares? Have a little opiate divinitie miniſtred to our ſoules, and ſo ſent away? Sure, this is rather to be ſought, than to ſeeke. There goeth more to Quærebant, then thus. We muſt then ſeeke, when we are in caſe, to give ſentence, and to doe judgement on our ſelves: When we are able to take up our croſſe, before it be laid on us. Quærebant eum muſt ſtand before cum occideret. 4 No ſeeking at all.

Laſtly, it would be known, What became of this Quærebant? What they found that ſought thus; and then, and not before? They found not Him, the Prophet ſaith plainly: They goe then, with ſheepe and bullocks, and all manner of ſacrifice, to ſeeke the Lord, but finde Him not; for He hath withdrawne himſelfe before. The ill ſucceſſe of it. Hoſ. 5. 6.

And juſtly they find Him not, ex lege talionis. GOD himſelfe anſwers them; nay their own hearts anſwer themſelves: Go, whom you have ſpent your life in ſeeking, ſeek to them now. Let them ſave you, at this, whom you ſought at all other times. As for me, it ſhall come to paſſe, as I cryed and you would not heare; So, you ſhall crie and ſeeke, and ſhall not find, or be heard, (ſaith the LORD.)

Yes, they found Him; but, with a doore ſhut between Him and them. But, what found they? The Parable of the ten virgins tels us (which is the Goſpell for this Pſalm) they found (that which we, I hope, ſhall never finde) a Neſcio vos. Where (that we may ſee, that this courſe is folly, and therfore indeed a ne fiant ſicut) that which putteth the difference of thoſe that be wiſe and go in, is that they had ſought and looked to their oyle yer the Bridegroome came: And thoſe that were fooliſh and ſhut out, when the Bridegroome was even comming (that is cum occideret) were to ſeeke their oyle then; had not looked to it, till then. Neſcio vos is their anſwer, He knoweth them not: they tooke too ſhort a time, to breed acquaintance in. Neſcio vos they find, that ſo ſeeke. Profectò ad hoc tonitrus, &c. At this clap, he that waketh not, is not aſleepe but dead. Mat. 25. 12. Mat. 25. 4.

To conclude then, with our Inſtruction. If this time, and this ſeeking have ſo many evill marks: the time ſo unſeaſonable; the ſeeking ſo many wayes to ſeeke: If the ſucceſſe to this ſeeking be no better, but Neſcio vos: Why then Ne fiat. If theſe here were not well adviſed: If thoſe Virgins were fooliſh: why then, Ne fiant ſicut, not to be like. Our Inſtruction

Secondly, To ſever the ſilver from the droſſe; The ſeeking is good, keep it: the time is wrong, change it; Either into Antequam occideret, or into Cum ſervaret. Fiat, to the action: Ne fiat, to the time. 1

Thirdly, As we confeſſe, that there is one to be ſought: And that, with the turning of a ginne we cannot have Him, when we liſt, but ſeeke Him we muſt: That His ſeeking is worth the while: And that it is not diſpatched in a minute, but muſt have time: So, 2 to think His ſeeking worthy a better, and to allow it a better time than this to do it in.

4 Fourthly, ſeeing yet is the acceptable time; Yet, He may be found; Yet, it is cum ſervaret; occideret is not yet come; (How neere it is, it is hard to ſay: Our SAVIOUR Luk. 12. 49. CHRIST ſaith, it is quâ horâ neſcis, it may be neerer than we are aware:) Leſt it come upon us before we ſeeke, let us ſeeke, before it come upon us. So ſeeking, we ſhall ſafely ſeeke: Safely ſeeke, and ſurely find GOD; and with GOD, whatſoever is worth the finding. But (that which we ſeek) we ſhall, after occideret is paſt, find our ſelves in His Pſal. 16. 11. preſence, and at His right hand, In whoſe preſence, is the fulneſſe of joy; (Not as ours here, joyes halfe empty:) and, at whoſe right hand, there are pleaſures for ever more; (Not as ours here, for a time, and a ſhort time, GOD knoweth.) That, which here we ſeeke and cannot find, with Him, we ſhall; if we ſhall here, indeed, and in due time ſeeke Him, by the timely fruits of an undelayed repentance. Almighty GOD lighten our minds, kindle our affections, ſettle our hearts ſo to ſeek, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE QUEENE ELIZABETH, AT RICHMOND,

On the XXI. of February, A. D. MDXCIX. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

At what time the Earle of ESSEX was going forth, upon the Expedition for IRELAND.

DEUT. XXIII. Ver. IX.

Quando egreſſus fueris adverſus hoſtes tuos in pugnam, cuſtodies te ab omni re mala.

When thou goeſt out with the Hoſt againſt thine enemies, keepe thee then from all wickedneſſe.

TO entitle this time to this Text, or to ſhew it pertinent to the preſent occaſion, will aske no long preface. When thou goeſt forth, &c. This When is Now. There be enemies: and we have an Hoſt: It is going forth. CHRISTS owne application; (which is the beſt) may well be applied here. This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. This our Hoſt ſo going forth, our hearts deſire and prayer unto GOD is, that they may happily goe, and thriſe happily come againe; with joy and triumph to Her Sacred Majeſtie; honour to themſelves, and generall contentment to the whole Land. So ſhall they go, and ſo come, if we can procure the Lord of Hoſts to goe forth with, and to take charge of our Hoſts. It is He that giveth victory to Kings (ſaith DAVID:) It is He, that is Triumphator Iſrael (ſaith Samuel.) Victorie and triumph never faile, if He faile not.

Luk. 4. 15.

Pſal. 144. 10. 1 Sam. 15. 29.

Now then, that God may not faile them, but goe in and our before them, and bring them back with victory and triumph, and that, we all deſire and pray for, may ſo come to paſſe; Moſes doth here, out of his owne experience, beſtow an adviſe upon us: (And Moſes could skill what belonged to war, as one that forty years together was never out of camp.) Which adviſe is: that among our military points we would reckon the abatement of ſin for one: That now, this time of our going forth, wee would goe forth againſt ſinne too; and keepe us, from it, as we would keepe us from our enemie. If we could be but perſwaded to reforme our former cuſtome of ſin, it would (certainly) doe the journey good. That therefore, with other courſes, ſome remembrance, ſome regard be had of this; that, at this time, ſin do not ſo overflow among us, be not ſo very fruictfull as before time it hath.

And this is an uſe of Divinitie in war. And, as this an uſe of Divinitie, in war: So have we withall an uſe of war, in Divinitie. For, MOSES telling us, that when our forces go forth againſt the enemie, that we, Then, at that time, are in any wiſe to keep us from wickedneſſe: by ſorting theſe thus together, doth plainly intimate: that, when the time of war is, then is a fit time, a very good opportunitie, to draw from ſin and to returne to GOD. Theſe former yeares, this time of the faſt, and this day, the firſt day of it (both) miniſtred an occaſion to call for an abſtinence from ſin: This day, and this time being ſet out by the Churches appointment to that end. Now, beſides that ordinarie, of other yeares, GOD, this yeare, hath ſent us another, the time of war: and that a very ſeaſonable time too, wherein to repent and retire from ſin. As if he ſhould ſay: If you would forſake ſin, now you may doe it: For behold, now is an acceptable time, and a fit ſeaſon. This time to concurre with that time; and both to cooperate to the amendment of our lives.

And what ſhall I ſay? O that one of them, the former or the latter, or both might prevaile ſo much with us, that as the forepart, this day is fulfilled in our eares, ſo, the later part might be fulfilled in our lives: that it might not be ſingly regarded, that is thus doubly commended: That the faſt at hand might keepe us; or the war at hand might keep us; or both might keepe us; that we might be kept from ſinne. That either Ioel's trump proclaiming a faſt, or Amo's trump proclaiming war, might ſerve to ſound this retrait, might ſerve to awake us from that (now more then ſleep, even almoſt that Lithargie of ſin, which the ſecuritie of our ſo long peace hath caſt us in.

This is the Summe. Theſe, the double uſe [1] Of war, in Divinitie: that our going forth might procure the giving over ſinne. [2] Of Divinitie, in war: that our giving over ſin might procure good ſpeed to our going forth; even an honourable and happy returne.

The Diviſion
I
II

The parts are two: (For, the verſe parteth it ſelfe by when, and then.) Theſe two: [1] the going forth of the Hoſt. [2] The keeping from ſin. To expreſſe them in the termes of the preſent buſineſſe: [1] The former, the Commiſſion authorizing to go. [2] The latter, the inſtruction directing ſo to goe, that we may proſper and prevaile. In which latter will come to be conſidered theſe three points. 1. The Conjunction and Coherence of theſe two. 2. The Conſequence. 3. The Contents of the later; How to keep us from ſinne.

I
The Commiſſion

WHen thou goeſt forth &c. In the firſt is the Commiſſion, which is ever the corner-ſtone of all proceedings. If we take the verſe entire, both parts together, it riſeth thus: If they which goe to warre muſt keepe themſelves from ſinne, then is war no ſinne, but lawfull; and, without ſinne, to be undertaken. Or, if we take the firſt part by it ſelfe; in ſaying, when thou goeſt, he implieth, a time will come, when they may go forth. For, vaine were the ſuppoſall and farre unworthy the wiſdome of GODS Spirit to ſay, when; if never any ſuch time would come: if there were no time for warre, of Gods allowance. We cannot better patterne it, then by the Goſpell of this day [When ye faſt, be not like hypocrites] by all Divines reſolved ved this. Faſt ye may ſometimes; and then faſting, look you fall not into hypocriſie. And as in that, ſo in this: Goe ye may, ſometimes: Only, When ye go, ſee ye refraine from ſin, and then go and ſpare not. Out of which match of theſe two, Faſt, and war, we may riſe higher.

Mat. 6. 16.

It is no leſſe uſuall with the Prophets, to ſay Sanctificate prælium (as Ioel. 3.) then to ſay Sanctificate jejunium (Ioel 2.) Sanctifie a war, as well as a faſt. And in another, Conſecrate manus veſtras hodie Domino, conſecrate your hands, this day unto the LORD. Which ſheweth war is not ſo ſecular matter, but that it hath both his lawfulnes and his holines: and that the very hands may be ſacred or hallowed, by fighting ſome battails. And therefore, in the Calender of Saints, we have nominated, not Able, Enoch, and Noe alone, men of peace and devotion, who ſpent their time in prayer and ſervice of God: But Gedeon, Iepthe, Sampſon, worthies and men of war, who (ſaith the Apoſtle) through faith were valiant in battell, and through faith put to flight the armies of Aliens. Warre therefore hath his time and commiſsion from God.

Ioel. 3. 9. Ioel 2. 15. Exod. 32. 29. Heb. 11. Verſ. 4. 5. 7. Verſ. 32. 34.

Secondly, I add that this kind of war; Not only defenſive war, but offenſive too hath his when. And that out of this very text: which is (if we marke well) not when they come forth againſt thee, but when thou goeſt forth againſt them, παρεμβάλλειν (ſay the Seventie) to invade and annoy them. Both theſe have their time: The former to maintain our right: the latter, to avenge our wrong. By both theſe wayes, doth GOD ſend His people forth: Both have warrant. Before Moſes: Abraham's warre to reſcue Lot his allie, was Defenſive and lawfull: Iacobs warre, to win from the Amorite by his ſword and bow, Offenſive and Lawfull too. Under Moſes: The warre againſt Amalek, who came out againſt them: and the warr againſt Madian, againſt whom they went forth, to wreake themſelves for the ſinne of Peor; both lawfull. After Moſes: King David, in the battaile of Paſ-dammim keeping the enemie from their gates; In the battaile of Gath, ſeeking the enemie at his owne gates, and giving him battaile in his own territorie. And this, as good Law; ſo Egredere, & compelle eos intrare, Go forth and compell them to come in is good Goſpell too. So that, war, and this kind of war hath his commiſſion.

Gen. 14. 14. Gen. 48. 22. Exod 17. 8. Numb. 31. 2. 1 Chro. 11. 15 2 Chro. 20. 6 Luk. 14. 23.

Thirdly: And to ſtrengthen the hands of our men of war yet further. As war, and To go forth to war; Againſt our enemies, any enemies, whether forreigne foes, or rebellious ſubjects: So, of all enemies, againſt the latter, againſt them to goe forth, hath ever been counted moſt juſt and lawfull. Many commiſsions are upon record in the law, of journeies in this kind. Againſt the tribe of Reuben; for erecting them an altar, beſide that of Moſes: And, that have theſe of ours done too. Againſt the tribe of Benjamin, for a barbarous, and brutiſh outrage committed at Gibea: And, that have theſe too; And not one, but many. Againſt Seba, for blowing a trumpet and crying, No part have we in David, no inheritance in the ſon of Iſai: And, ſo far hath their madneſſe proceeded. And the Goſpell is not behind neither. Againſt them that ſent word, Nolimus hunc regnare ſuper nos, producite & occidite (ſaith our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himſelfe.) In effect, they ſay as much as nolumus: and as much may be ſaid and done to them. Nay, if once he ſay no part in David; if he were Abſalom, or Adoniah (of the blood royall) he hath ſpoken that word againſt his owne life; Much more, if but ſuch a one as Seba the ſon of Bichri. And yet, even he was nothing ſo deep as this. For, neither had King David vouchſafed him any favour, any time before; neither offered him peace, or to receive him to grace, after he had lift up his heel againſt him. But here, here have been diverſe Princely favours vouchſafed, and moſt unkindly rejected: means of Clemencie many times moſt graciouſly offered, and moſt ungraciouſly refuſed: yea, faith falſified, and expectation deluded; contempt upon contempt heaped up, that the meaſure is full. Theſe then are the enemies againſt, and this the time when. When not only we may, but muſt; and that, not with GODS leave only, but with His liking and full commiſſion, Go forth in this cauſe. So that, war is lawfull: and this kind, to go forth: and againſt theſe enemies, moſt juſt and moſt lawfull. At this time, againſt theſe enemies, it is a war ſanctified, they ſhall conſecrate their hands, they ſhall præliari prælia Domini, that fight againſt them. So much for the Commiſsion.

The Inſtruction.

The Commiſsion being had, we are not to depart, but to ſtay and take our Inſtructions alſo with us: Which is the later part, of keeping from wickedneſſe. IOSUA had his Commiſsion from GOD, to go up againſt AI: Yet, for leaving out this later, and not looking to Acan better, had not ſo good ſpeed. This therefore muſt accompanie, and keepe time with the former, as a Then to that When.

The Conjunction, that it is needfull.

1. Wherein firſt, of the joyning theſe two, [1] that they muſt goe together [2] and (of the reaſon) why they muſt goe together.

2. And after, of the manner; how we may and muſt keepe our ſelves from this wickedneſſe.

The meeting of theſe two within the compaſſe of one verſe, [1] Going forth with an armie, and [2] Forbearing of ſin, is worth the ſtaying on.

Leading an armie, pertaineth to Military policie: Forbearing of ſinne, is flat divinitie.

For, what hath the leading an armie to do with forbearing of ſinne? Yet, GOD hath thus ſorted them, as we ſee. Therefore Policie of warre; whereto the former; and Divinitie whereto the later belongeth, are not ſuch ſtrangers one to the other, as that, the one muſt avoid while the other is in place. But that as loving neighbours and good friends (here) they meet together, they ſtand together, they keep time, conſequence, and correſpondence the one with the other. God Himſelfe, in whoſe imperiall ſtyle (ſo oft proclaimed in the Prophets) they both meet, The LORD of hoſts, the holy one of Iſrael: GOD (I ſay) Himſelfe in the great Chapter of Warre (the twentieth of this booke) aſſigneth an employment to the Prieſts, as well as the Officers of the Campe: even to doe that (which yer while was aſſayed) to animate the Companies in the LORD and the power of his might; letting them ſee the right of their cauſe, and how ready GOD is to receive the right under the banner and power of His protection. And, from GOD Himſelfe (no doubt) was that happy and bleſſed combination, which in moſt Warres of happie ſucceſſe, we find, of a Captaine and a Prophet ſorted together: [a] Ioſua, with Moſes a Prophet; [b] Baruk, with Debora a Propheteſſe: [c] Ezechias, with Eſay; [d] Ioſaphat, with Iaaziel; [e] Ioas, with Eliſha: And one of theſe doing the other no manner of hurt, but good. Ioſua lifting up his hand, againſt Amalek: Moſes lifting up his hand, for Ioſua. The one leading againſt the enemie and annoying him; the other leading againſt ſinne, and annoying it; Againſt ſinne (what ſome reckon of it, it skils not, but) certainly the moſt dangerous enemie both of private perſons and of publike States.

Theſe two then, [1] Going forth with the Hoſt, and [2] Departing from ſinne, being thus linked by GOD, our ſuit is, Breake not this linke: GOD hath joyned them, that we ſhould joyne them. And this is a needfull ſuit. For, it is one of the diſeaſes under the ſunne; in warre, all our thoughts run upon the Hoſt; Looking to the Hoſt onely, and nothing but the Hoſt: and letting ſinne runne whether it will without any keeper. I know well; I both know and acknowledge, that the Armies going forth is mainly to be regarded: It hath the firſt place in the Verſe; and it hath it not for nought. IOSUA muſt chooſe out men firſt: Victuals muſt be ſupplied (Iudg. 20.) And nemo militat ſtipendiis ſuis, Pay muſt be thought of. We muſt goe forth with our Hoſt; (They bee the words of the Text:) Goe; not ſit ſtill: And, With an Hoſt; not a heape of naked, or ſterved men. We muſt help, and not tempt GOD. To helpe GOD, is a ſtrange ſpeech; yet, ſaid it may be, ſeeing an Angell hath ſaid it. Curſe ye Meroz (ſaith the Angell of the LORD) curſe the inhabitants thereof; Why? becauſe they came not to helpe the LORD, to helpe the LORD againſt the mighty. This muſt firſt bee done. But, when this is done, all is not done: We are not at a full point; We are but in the middeſt of the ſentence yet. As that part (of the Hoſt) is to be regarded; ſo, this (of ſinnes reſtraint) is not to be neglected. As, that hath the firſt place: ſo muſt this have the ſecond, and ſecond the former, or we ſhall have but a broken ſentence without it. There is not, there cannot be a more prejudiciall conceipt, then to ſay in our hearts: the the firſt be well; all is well; then ſin on and ſpare not; it skils not greatly, for the later. Si putas, in robore exercitus bella conſiſtere, faciet te Dominus cadere coram inimicis tuis (ſaith the Prophet to Amazia) If this be your conceipt, ſo the Hoſt be well, all is well: GOD will teach you another leſſon (ſaith he) which I liſt not engliſh. A proof wherof we have, before Gibea. Where the whole power of Iſrael (400000 ſtrong) truſting in their going out ſo ſtrong, fell before a few Benjamites, a ſmall handfull in compariſon; and ſhewed plainly to all ages to come, that it is but a part, it is not all, to go forth with an hoſt, though never ſo well appointed. 2 Chr. 25. 7. 8. Iud. 20. 17.

Let us then (as adviſe leadeth us) make up our period with taking a courſe for reſtraint of ſin. For, what ſinne unreſtreigned can worke, the Valley of Achor may teach us; where, the inhabitants of the poore town of Ai, put to flight IOSUA with all his forces; and all, becauſe this ſecond point was not well looked to. Iud. 7. 5.

Now, this ſecond point being within the compaſſe of our profeſſion, and yet having ſo neceſſ ry a uſe in war, as the ſentence is not perfect without it, may ſ rve to anſwer the queſtion (more uſually then adviſedly oft caſt out) What good do theſe Churchmen? What uſe is there of them (now) at ſuch times as this? Yes, there is a uſe of them, and that in warre, we ſee. The Camp hath uſe of this place; and they that ſerve there, of them that ſerve here. Which GOD ſheweth plainly, in the firſt field that ever his people fought: and, when he had ſhewed it, cauſed it to be recorded ad perpetuam rei memoriam (they be Gods own words) that the ſame courſe might be ever after holden in all. Where it is thus written (and, if we believe not we ſhall not be eſtabliſhed) that Ioſua having the better, or going to the worſe, depended not a little on the ſteddines of MOSES hands: and, that MOSES, ſtaying behinde and ſtriking never a ſtroke, did his part toward the attaining of the victory, not much leſſe than Ioſua, that went forth and fought manfully. Prayer then is of uſe: and though we be (ſaith S. Paul) armed at all points from hand to foot, yet muſt we ſuper omnia, over all, draw this; and arme even our very armour with prayer and ſupplications. Exod. 17. 14. Ephes. 6. 18.

But what availeth prayer, without keeping from ſin? Therefore, to that armour of S. Paul's, we muſt adde S. Peter's too, To arme our ſelves with this mind of ceaſing from ſin that our prayers may be effectuall. Therfore MOSES himſelf joyneth not to our going forth his exerciſe of keeping up our hands at prayer; but this rather of keeping our feet from ſinne. The King of Moab (Balak) When he obſerved what prayer had wrought in the battaile of Amalek, thought to take the very like courſe, and ſent for Balaam into his Campe; to match Prophet with Prophet, and to oppoſe prayer unto prayer. But when all his altars and rammes would doe no good; Balaam knowing well, there is, in ſinne, a power to defeat any prayer, he commeth to the dangerous counſell of cauſing Iſrael to ſinne with the daughters of Moab: which was found too true. For, it turned to their ruine, and all their prayers would then doe no good. Here is then another uſe. For, the chariots and horſes of Eliah, the weapons of our warfare (as the Apoſtle termeth them) though not carnall (if GOD enable them, to caſt downe ſuch ſinfull thoughts and wicked deſires, as exalt themſelves daily, and to captivate them to the obedience of CHRIST) have (certainly) their uſe to ſecond the former: and we, in our turnes, ſerviceable, as by crying unto GOD by prayer, and drawing Him to the Hoſt, who is our chiefeſt and beſt friend; ſo by crying alſo againſt ſinne and chaſing it away, which is our chiefeſt and worſt enemie. Since then theſe two have this mutuall uſe either of other, let this be our petition (and withall, the concluſion of this part) That we ſingle them not, or leane to either alone, but ſuffer them, as they ſtand together in the verſe, ſo, in our care and regard, joyntly to keep time and goe together. So much for them. 1 Pet. 4. 1. Num. 22. 5. 2 King. 13. 14. 2 Cor. 10. 4.

III.

2 The Reaſon of the conjunction.

And now to enquire into the reaſon of this coupling. Why, now? why, at this time (in war) a giving over ſinne. For that (indeed) they be not barely joyned; but, ſo joyned, as one is made the antecedent, the other the conſequent. One, the time, and (as it were) the reaſon to infer the other. Truly MOSES word [כי] will beare both, ether Quando or Quia: When thou goeſt, then keepe; or Becauſe thou goeſt, therefore, keepe thy ſelfe from ſinne. With the ſame word ſpeaketh the vertuous Ladie to King

1 Sam. 25. 28. DAVID, Quia præliaris præla Domini, ideo non invenietur in te iniquitas, Becauſe thou fighteſt the LORD's Battailes, therefore let there not any iniquitie be found in thee, all thy dayes.

Sin (certainly) at all times is to be forborn. When it is warre: and not only when Luk 21. 34. it is warre, but when it is peace too, Take ye heed, leſt at any time (ſaith CHRIST) Your hearts be overlayed with ſurfeiting, with drink, &c. Not allowing us any time, to be wicked in. But, though at all times we be to refraine ſinne; Yet, not at all times, alike (ſaith MOSES) here. For it is, as if he ſhould ſay: Be it at other times, ſinne may better be borne with; It is leſſe perilous: But, when thou goeſt forth with an Hoſt: Then, then, with an high accent, with an Emphaſis (that is) then eſpecially; then, above alll other times, then, if ever, it importeth you to have leaſt to doe with it. Good LORD, how croſſe and oppoſite is mans conceit to GOD's, and how contrary our thoughts unto his! For, even ad oppoſitum, to this poſition of His, We ſee (for the moſt part) that even they, that are the Goers forth, ſeem to perſwade themſelves, that, Then, they may doe what they liſt; that at that time, any ſinne is lawfull: that, War is rather a Placard, then an Inhibition of ſinne. A thing ſo common, that it made the Heathen man hold, that betweene Militia and Malitia, there was as little difference in ſenſe, as in ſound: And the Prophet DAVID, to call Sauls Companies in his
Sam. 22. 5. daies, Torrentes Belial, the Land-floods of wickedneſſe. Which being well conſidered, we may ceaſe to murmure or to marvaile, if our going forth have not beene ever with ſuch ſucceſſe, as we wiſhed. GOD, who would give the ſucceſſe, commanding then a reſtraint; and man, that ſhould need it, then, taking moſt libertie. Verily, if we will learne of GOD, if He ſhall teach us, Sin is never ſo untimely, as in the time of war: never ſo out of ſeaſon, as then: for, that is the time of all times, we ſhould have leaſt to do with it. To inſiſt then a little upon this point, becauſe it is the maine point, and to ſhew the vigour of this conſequent.

1. From the very nature of war, firſt: Which is an act of Iuſtice, and of Iuſtice corrective, whoſe office is to puniſh ſinne. Now then, conſider and judge, even in reaſon; What a thing this is, how great, groſſe, and foule an incongruitie it is, to powre out our ſelves into ſinne, at the very time, when we goe forth to correct ſinne: To ſet forth to puniſh rebells, when we our ſelves are in rebellion againſt GOD, His word, and
Mat. 12. 24. Spirit. Which, what is it but to caſt out Divels by the power of Belzebub? Sure, our hearts muſt needs ſtrike us in the middeſt of our ſin, and tell us, we are in a great and grievous prevarication; allowing that, in our ſelves, that we goe to condemne and to ſtone to death, in others. Therefore, ſince to goe to Warre, is to goe to puniſh ſin: Certainly, the time of puniſhing ſinne is not a time to ſin in.

2. Secondly, from war, in reſpect of GOD. I know not what we reckon of War: Peace is His bleſſing (we are ſure) and a ſpeciall favour it is from him (as the Prophets account it) for a land to ſpend more iron in ſcithes, and plow-ſhares, then in ſword-blades or ſpeare-heads. And, if peace be a bleſſing, and a chiefe of His bleſſings, we may deduce from thence what Warre is. To make no otherwiſe of it then it is, the rod Eſay 10. 5. Am. 1. 3. Ier. 50. 23. of Gods wrath (as Eſay termeth it:) his iron flaile (as Amos:) the hammer of the earth (as Ieremie) whereby he daſheth two nations together; One of them muſt in 2 Sam. 2. 14 peeces; both, the worſe for it. War is no matter of ſport. Indeed, I ſee Abner eſteeme of it as of a ſport; Let the young men riſe (ſaith he to Ioab) and ſhew us ſome ſport.
Ver. 26. But I ſee the ſame Abner, before the end of the ſame Chapter, wearie of his ſport, and treating with Ioab for an end of it: How long ſhall the ſword devoure (ſaith he) ſhall it not be bitterneſſe in the end? So, it may be ſport in the beginning: it will be bitterneſſe in the end, if it hold long. Warre then being GOD's rod, His fearefull rod, and that ſo fearefull that King David (though a Warriour too) when both were in his choiſe, preferred the Plague before it, and deſired it of the twaine: When Gods hand, with this rod, this His fearefull rod, is over us, to be ſo far from feare, and all due regard, as, then, not to ſhun ſinne any whit the more, but to fall to it as faſt as ever: it cannot be, but a high contempt; yea, a kind of defiance and deſpite, then, to doe it: Doe we pro- 1 Cor. 10. 22.

voke the LORD to anger, are we ſtronger than he? Then, ſince Warre is GODS rod, chooſe ſome other time: under the rod, ſinne not; then, forbeare it: Certainely, that time is no time to ſinne

3. The rather, for that, ſinne it is, and the not keeping from ſinne, but our keeping to it and with it, that hath made this rodd, and put it into His hand. For, ſure it is, that for the tranſgreſsion of a people, GOD ſuffereth theſe diviſions of Ruben within; GOD ſtirreth up the ſpirit of Princes abroad, to take peace from the earth: therby to chaſten men, by paring the groweth of their wealth, with this His hired razor; by waſting their ſtrong men (the hand of the enemies eating them up;) by making widdowes and fatherleſſe children; by other like conſequents of warre. If then our ſins (common unto us, with other nations) and that our Unthankfullneſſe (peculiar to us alone) have brought all this upon us; if this enemie have ſtirred up theſe enemies; if War be the ſickneſſe, and ſin the ſurfeit; ſhould we not (at leaſt-wiſe now, while the ſhivering fit of our ſinnes is upon us) diet our ſelves a little and keepe ſome order? but drink iniquitie as water, and diſtemper our ſelves as though we were in perfect ſtate of health? Shall we make our diſeaſe deſperate, and haſten our ruine by not conteining from ſinne, that hath caſt us in it? Know we, what time this is? Is this a time of ſin? Certainly, we cannot deviſe a worſe. In the time of War, it is high time, to keepe us from ſin.

4. But, above all (which will touch us neereſt, and therefore againe and againe muſt be told us over,) that the ſafe and ſpeedy comming againe of them that now goe forth (whoſe proſperity we are to ſeek with all our poſſible endeavors) that their good ſpeed dependeth upon GODS going forth with them: And GOD'S going or ſtaying dependeth very much upon this point. Moſt certaine it is, the event of warre is moſt uncertaine. When Benhadad went forth with an armie, that the duſt of Samaria was not enough to give every one in his campe a handfull, it was told him (and he found it true) Ne glorietur accinctus, &c. He that buckleth on his armour muſt not boaſt, as he that puts it off. They that fight can hardly ſet downe, what name the place ſhall have that they fight in: It may be the valley of Achor (that is, ſorrow) by reaſon of a foyle, as that of Ioſua; It may be the valley of Beracha (that is, bleſsing) by meanes of a victorie, as that of Ioſaphat. All is, as GOD is, and as He will have it. *Once, [a] twiſe, and [b] thriſe, by David, by Salomon, by Ioſaphat, we are told it, that It is neither ſword nor bowe; It is neither Chariot nor horſe; It is neither multitude nor valour of an Hoſt will ſerve: But that the battaile is GOD'S, and He giveth the upper hand. We need not be perſwaded of this; we all are perſwaded (I hope,) and we ſay with Moſes, If thy preſence goe not with us, carrie us not hence. Then, if we ſhall need GOD'S favour and help in proſpering our journey, and to make that ſure which is ſo uncertaine; it will ſtand us in hand, to make ſure of Him, in this, this needfull time; and to keepe Him ſure, if it may be. For, if He keepe with the Hoſt, and take their parts, Rebelles tui erunt quaſi nihil (ſaith Eſay;) and theſe ſmoking tayles of firebrands, ſhall quickly bee quenched. But, if GOD either goe not with them, or retire from them; If there were among them but naked or wounded men; (what ſpeake I of men? If but frogs or flies) they ſhall be ſufficient to trouble them.

Eſay 41. 11. Eſay 7. 4.

Now then, we are at the point. For, if we will have hold of GOD, make Him ſure, be certaine of Him; we muſt break with ſinne, needs. Sin and Satan are His enemies; and no fellowſhip nor communion, no concord, no agreement, no part, no portion between them. If we will draw Him into league, we muſt profeſſe our ſelves enemies unto his enemies, that He may do the like to ours. At one and the ſame time enter, as an outward war with wicked rebels, ſo an inward hoſtilitie with our wicked rebellious luſts. For that if we keep our ſelves from the one, He will keep us from the other: and theſe being ſuppreſſed, thoſe ſhall not be able to ſtand. Thus doing, the ſword of the LORD ſhall be with the ſword of Gedeon: GOD ſhall be with us, Ittiel; and we ſhall prevaile, Vcal. For where Ittiel is, Vcal will not be away. But if we will needs hold on our league league with hell, and continue our wonted entercourſe with wickedneſſe ſtill, and go forth unto it when it beckens or calls, and be ſo far from keeping from it, that we keep it as the apple of our eye, and cheriſh it between our breaſts: if we retaine the marke of it in our very fore-heads, and the price of it in the skirts of our garment: for not keeping from it, He will keepe from us, and withdraw His helpe from us, and put us clean out of His protection.

Therefore, without keeping from ſinne, there is no keeping GOD; out of whoſe keeping there is no ſafety.

3 The Contents of the Inſtruction, to keepe from ſinne.

This adviſe being ſo full of behoofe, ſo agreeable to reaſon and religion both, ſo every way for their and for our good: it remaineth, we ſet our ſelves to think of it and keepe it. * Every one returning to his owne heart, to know there (as Salomon ſaith) his owne plague, even the ſins wherewith he hath grieved GOD; and to make a covenant with Himſelfe, from henceforth more carefully to ſtand upon his guard; and not to goe forth to ſinne, or entertaine it as a friend, but to repute it as an enemie, and to keep him from it.

* 1 King. 8. 38

Firſt, for the terme of keeping. When thou goeſt forth againſt thy enemie, goe forth againſt ſin. We ſhould indeed goe forth againſt ſin, and practiſe thoſe militar impreſſions, that are done in camp againſt the enemie: Give it the aſſault, annoy it, purſue it, never leave it till we have driven it away. Theſe we ſhould doe againſt it. But, the Scripture offereth more grace; and bids us (if we liſt not go forth againſt it, only not to go forth to it) but keep our ſelves (that is) ſtand upon our defence, to keep good watch, that it ſurpriſe us not, that it get not dominion over us: do but this againſt ſin, and it ſhall ſuffice.

Rom. 6. 12.

But this muſt extend to all wickedneſſe. Wherein yet, we do humanum dicere, propter infirmitatem noſtram, ſpeake after the manner of men, becauſe of our infirmitie: retching this [All] no further, then humane infirmitie, then the frailty of our nature will beare; then this corruptible fleſh wherewith we are compaſſed, and this corrupt world in the midſt whereof we live, will ſuffer and give us leave. In the bodie, we put a difference betweene the ſoyle, which, by inſenſible evacuations goeth from our bodies, keep we our ſelves never ſo carefully; and that, which is drawn forth by chafing or ſweat, or otherwiſe gotten by touching ſuch things wherewith we may be defiled: That, cannot be refraind; This, falleth within reſtraint. And even ſo, there is a ſoyle of ſinne, that of it ſelfe vaporeth from our nature (let the beſt doe his beſt:) I ſay not, we ſhould keepe our ſelves from this. But, from provoking it, by ſuffering our minds to wander in it; by not keeping our eares from ſuch company, and our eyes from ſuch occaſions, as will procure it (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) by putting the ſtumbling block of iniquitie before our faces. From that, by the help of GOD, we may keep our ſelves well enough. From ſins lighting upon our thoughts, it is impoſſible; it cannot be: but, from making there a neſt, or hatching ought; that, we are willed to look to, and that (by Gods grace) we may. And the word that Moſes uſeth here דבר רע is not without a Dixit (at leaſt) in corde; not without a ſaying within us, This, or that, I will do. It muſt be dictum, or condictum, ſaid to, and ſaid yea to; or els it is not דבר רע. The heart not reſolving or laying, content; but keeping it ſelfe, from going forth to any act: though wickedneſſe be not kept from us, becauſe of the temptation; yet we are kept from it, becauſe of the repulſe: and with that, will Moſes be content at our hands, as our eſtate now is.

Ezek. 14. 3.

But with theſe proviſo's. We ſay generally, they that goe forth, keep from all: from all ſuch, both deeds, and words, as juſtly may be cenſured to be wickedly, either ſpoken, or done. Words (I ſay) as well as deeds. For the word דבר beares both. And indeed, if in good words (as in prayers) there be force to help: I make no queſtion, but, in wicked words (as, blaſphemies, irreligious ſayings, locis fulmine dignis) there is force alſo, to doe miſchiefe. Therefore keepe from all: All thoſe eſpecially (as very reaſon will lead us) which have been the ruine of armies in former times: a view wherof we may

may take, when we will, out of Liber Bellorum Domini, the booke of GODS battailes.

Wicked Words firſt. Rreſumptuous termes of truſt in our owne ſtrength: I will goe: I will purſue and overtake: I will divide the ſpoyle: Pharaos words, the cauſe of his periſhing and all his hoſt (Exo. 15.) To keepe them from that. Rabſakehs blacke mouthed blaſphemy: Let not Hezekiah cauſe you to truſt in GOD over-much: the eminent cauſe of the overthrow of the hoſt of Aſſur, (Eſay 36.) to keepe them from that. Exod. 15.9. Eſay 36.15.

And, if from words; from wicked works much rather. Achans ſinne, that is, ſacrilege; Anathema in medio tui, non poteris ſtare coram hoſtibus tuis (GODS owne words to Ioſua:) The cauſe of the armies miſcarrying, before Ai. To keep them, from that wickedneſſe. Such ſhamefull abuſes as was that at Gibea: the expreſſed cauſe of the deſtruction of a whole Tribe. To keep them from that. Prophaining holy veſſels or holy places, with unholy uſage: the ruine of Balthaſar, and with him of the whole Chaldæan Monarchie. To keepe themſelves from that. Corrupting our compaſſion, and caſting off pitie quite, and ſpilling blood like water: the ſinne of Edom, and the cauſe he took ſuch a foile, as he was never a people ſince. To keep them from that wickednes. From theſe and from the reſt; you ſhall have a time to read them, I have not, to ſpeak them. Arming themſelves with a mind to ceaſe from ſinne; keeping their veſſells holy: having pay wherewith they may be content, and being content with their pay: Et neminem concutientes (ſaith S. Iohn Baptiſt:) nor being Torrentes Belial, land-flouds of wickedneſſe. Or, if this will not be, that private conformitie will not keepe them; at leaſt, that Publike authoritie do it: that kept they may be, one way or other from it. If Achan will ſo farre forget himſelfe, as to ſinne in the execrable thing: Or Zamri, to play the wretch, and abuſe himſelf in the camp: Let Ioſua find out Achan, and ſee him have his due; and Phinees follow Zamri, and reward him for his deſert. That the ravine of the one, and the villanie of the other be removed, as it is committed; and ſo kept from polluting and pulling downe GODS wrath upon the whole hoſt. For, ſure it is, Phinees ſtanding up and executing judgement, hath the force of a prayer, no leſſe then Moſes ſtanding in the gap, to make interceſſion; and both alike forcible, to turne away GODS anger, and to remove evill from the midſt of Iſrael. This adviſe is to take place, as in them that go (as before hath been touched) ſo, in us likewiſe that ſtay at home: that what the one build, the other deſtroy not. Not, by Moſes exerciſe of prayer, and unceſſant prayer; or Ioſaphat's exerciſe of faſting and abſtinence, 2 Chro. 20. (both, are out of the compaſſe of the text:) but (that which is in it) by turning from ſin to GOD, and that, with a ſerious, not ſhallow; and an inward, not hollow repentance. Out confeſſing our ſinnes to day, and committing them to morrow: But every one ſaying, Dixi cuſtodiam I have ſaid, I will henceforth more narrowly look to my wayes; at leaſt, while the ſound of war is in our eares. Thinking with our ſelves, it is now war, it is now no time to offend GOD, and ſeparate betweene Him and us, in this needfull time of His help and protection: By entring into that good and vertuous conſideration of URIA's: The Arke of the LORD and all Iſrael and Iuda dwell in Tents, Ioab and the ſervants of our Soveraigne abide in the open fields, and ſhall we permit our ſelves as much as we would, in the time of peace, and not conforme our ſelves, in abridging ſome part of our wonted libertie, and forbearing to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon? To conclude, if we ſhall, or when we ſhall be tempted to any of our former ſins, to think upon GODS owne counſell, even GODS owne counſell from GODS owne mouth, Memento belli & ne feceris. To remember the Campe, and not to doe it: To think upon them in the fields, and their danger; and for their ſakes, and for their ſafeties to forbeare it. 2 Chron. 20.3. Pſal. 39 1. 2 Sam. 11.11. Iob 40.17.

Thus, if we ſhall endeavour our ſelves, and eſchew our owne wickednes, our hoſts ſhall goe forth in the ſtrength of the Lord, and the LORD ſhall goe with them and order their attempts to an happy iſſue.

He that made our forreine enemies like a wheele, to goe round about us, and not to come neere us; ſhall make theſe as ſtubble before the winde: cauſing feare and faintnes of heart to fall upon them as upon Madian: ſending an evill ſpirit of diſſenſion among them as upon Abimelech, and the men of Sichem: cauſing their owne woods to devoure Pſal. 83.14. Ibid. Num. 22.3. Iud. 9.23.

voure them, as rebellious Abſalon; and their own waters to ſweepe them away, as it did Siſera: Yea, the ſtars of Heaven in their courſes, to fight againſt them, as under Debora's conduct, He did. Many ſuch things are with Him; many ſuch He hath done, and can do againe, if, to our going forth, we joyne a going from ſin.

Iudg. 5. 20.

Even ſo Lord, ſo let it be. Thoſe whom thou now carrieſt forth, by thy mercy bring them back: by thy might, in this place, the place of thy holy Habitation. That Debora may praiſe thee for the avenging of Iſrael, and for the people that offer themſelves ſo willingly: For letting her eare heare, and her eye ſee the fall of the wicked that riſe up againſt her: That ſhe may praiſe thee and ſay, The Lord liveth, and bleſſed be my ſtrong helpe, and praiſed be the God of my Salvation.

Iudg. 5. 2. 9.

Pſal. 18. 46.

Even the God that ſeeth I be avenged, and ſubdueth the people unto me. It is He that delivereth me from my cruell enemies, and ſetteth me up above all my adverſaries.

48. Great proſperity giveth He unto His Hand-maid, and ſheweth ſtill, and continually
50. His loving kindneſſe to His Annointed: Prayſed be the LORD for evermore.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED

before Queene ELIZABETH, at White-hall, on the XVII. of February, Anno Domini, MDCII. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

IER. Chap. VIII. &c.

4. Thus ſaith the LORD: Shall they fall and not ariſe? ſhall he turne away, and not turne againe?

5. Wherfore is this people of Jeruſalem turned back by a perpetuall rebellion? they gave themſelves to deceit, and would not return.

6. I hearkned and heard, but none ſpake aright: no man repented him of his wickedneſſe, ſaying, What have I done? Every one turned to their race, as the horſe ruſheth into the battell.

7. Even the Storke in the aire knoweth her appointed times; and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow obſerve the time of their comming; but my people knoweth not the judgement of the Lord.

THE Apoſtles counſell is, Qui ſtat, videat ne cadat, He that ſtandeth, let him take heed leſt he fall. And, there is (ſaith Eſay) a voyce behind us that crieth, Hæc eſt via, this is the right way, keep it, turn not from it. Good counſels, both; to thoſe; quorum vita, via vitæ, whoſe life is a journey, and a journey to another, a better life: To looke to their feet, they fall not; to looke to their way, they erre not. Good counſels indeed, but, of which, we muſt ſay (with CHRIST) Qui poteſt capere capiat; Follow them that may. 1 Cor. 10.11. Eſay 30.12. Mat. 19.12

For true it is, that, not to fall nor erre, nor do amiſſe at all, is an higher perfection, than our nature (in ſtate it is) can attaine to. Being men (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) ἄνθρωποι ὄντες and παιλιν τὸν σαρκὸς φορεῦντες bearing about us this body of fleſh, the ſteps whereof are ſo unſtayed; Καὶ τὸν κόσμον οἰκοῦντες, and walking in this world, the wayes whereof are ſo ſlippery. It is an Apoſtle that ſaith it, In multis, omnes, &c. In many things we offend all: and it is another that ſaith, that, whoſoever ſaith otherwiſe (not, he is proud, and there is no humbleneſſe; but) he is a lyar, and there is no truth in him.

Iam. 3. 2.

1 Ioh. 1. 8.

Our eſtate then (as it is) needeth ſome Scripture, that offereth more grace: And ſuch there be (ſaith S. Iames) and, this, is ſuch. That they which have not heard the Apoſtle and his counſell. Qui ſtat &c. May yet heare the Prophet here and his Qui cecidit, let him up againe. That they which have not heard Eſaies voice, Ambulate; you are in the way, turne not from it; May yet heare Ieremies voice, Qui adverſus eſt, &c. He that is out, let him get into it againe.

Iam. 4. 6.

The Summe. So that, this is the ſumme of that I have read. If we have not beene ſo happy, as to ſtand and keepe our way; let us not be ſo unhappy, as not to riſe, and turne to it againe. Beſt it were, before we ſin, to ſay to our ſelves, Quid facio, what am I now about to doe? If we have not that, yet it will not be amiſſe, after to ſay: What have I done? God will not be pleaſed, to heare us ſo ſay. We ſhould not follow thoſe foules; we ſhould have no wings, to fly from God: but if in flying away, wee have followed them; then, that we follow them too, in the retrive or ſecond flight. In a word: Yeſterday, if we have not heard his voice, To day if we will not heare His voyce, not to harden our hearts, when He calleth us to repentance.

Pſal. 95. 7. 8.

2 This is the ſumme. The manner of the delivery is not common, but ſomewhat un-uſuall and full of paſsion. For ſeeing, plaine pœnitentiam agite doth but coldly affect us, It pleaſeth God, hâc vice, to take unto him the termes, the ſtyle, the accents of paſsion; thereby to give it an edge, that ſo it may make the ſpeedier and deeper impreſſion.

1 And, the Paſsion, He chooſeth, is that of Sorrow: For, all theſe verſes are to be pronounced, with a ſorrowfull key. Sorrow (many times) worketh us to that, by a melting compaſſion, which the more rough and violent paſſions cannot get at our hands.

2 This ſorrow He expreſſeth, by way of complaint: (For, all the ſpeech is ſo) which kind of ſpeech maketh the better nature to relent; as mooved, that by His means any ſhould have cauſe to complaine, and not find redreſſe for it.

3 That, He complaines of is (not that we fall and erre, but) that we riſe not, and return not; that is, ſtill delay, ſtill put off our repentance. And that 1. Contrary to our own courſe and cuſtome in other things: we do it every where elſe; yet here we do it not. 2. Contrary to Gods expreſſe pleaſure. For, glad and faine He would heare, we do it, yet we do it not, 3. Contrary to the very light of nature. For, the fowles here flie before us, and ſhew us the way to do it, yet we do it not for all that.

4 Ver. 4. Ver. 8.

Which three He uttereth by three ſundry wayes of treatie. 1. The firſt, by a gehtle yet forcible expoſtulation (Ver. 4.) Will you not? Why will you not? 2. The ſecond by an earneſt proteſtation (Ver. 5.) How greatly He doth harken after it. 3. The third by a paſſionate Apoſtrophe (Ver. 7.) by turning Him away to the fowles of the aire, that do that naturally every yeare, which we cannot be got to, all our life long.

3 Of which Paſsions, to ſay a word: It is certaine, the immutable conſtancy of the Divine nature is not ſubject to them, howſoever here or elſewhere he preſenteth himſelfe in them. I adde, that as it is not proper, ſo neither is it not fitting for God thus to expreſſe himſelfe. But that He (not reſpecting what beſt may become Him, but what may beſt ſeeme to move us and doe us moſt good) chooſeth of purpoſe that dialect, that Character, thoſe termes, which are moſt meet and moſt likely to affect us.

And becauſe good morall counſell plainly delivered enters, but faintly, and of paſſionate ſpeeches we have a more quick apprehenſion, He attireth His ſpeech in the habit, uttereth it in the phraſe, figure, and accent of anger or ſorrow, or ſuch like, as may ſeeme moſt fit and forcible to prevaile with us.

2 Att. Mor. 1. Tertullian ſaith, the reaſon (this courſe is uſed) is ad exaggerandum malitiæ vim, to make the hainouſneſſe of our contempt appeare the more. GOD (indeed) cannot complaine: it falleth not into his nature to doe it. But, if He could, if it were poſſible by any meanes in the world, He might; ſuch are our contempts, ſo many, and ſo mighty, that we would force Him to it.

2. But S. Auguſtines reaſon is more praiſed: Exprimit in Se, ut exprimat de te, In Himſelfe He expreſſeth them, that from us He may bring them: Sheweth Himſelfe in paſsion, that He may move us; and even in that paſsion whereto He would move us. As here now: As in griefe He complaineth of us, that we might be grieved and complaine of our ſelves, that ever we gave Him ſuch cauſe: And ſo conſequently that, we might bethink our ſelves to give redreſſe to it; that ſo, His complaining might ceaſe.

And from the complaint, it is no hard matter to extract the redreſſe. 1. To yeeld to but even as much, for Him (for Him? nay, for our ſelves) as, every where elſe, we uſe to doe. 2. To ſpeake that, which GOD ſo gladly would heare. 3. To learne that, which the poore fowles know, the ſeaſon of our return; and to take it, as they do. Three wayes to give redreſſe to the three former grievances: (Theſe three:) and the ſame the three parts of this Text, orderly to be treated of. The Diviſion

TO make His motion the more reaſonable, and His complaint the more juſt, he makes them Chancellors in their owne cauſe: And, from their owne practice otherwhere, God frameth and putteth a Caſe; and putteth it in queſtion-wiſe: and therefore quiſtion-wiſe that they may anſwer it, and anſwering it condemne themſelves by a verdict from their owne mouth. Will they (this people) themſelves fall, &c. Is there any, that if he turn, &c? In effect, as if He ſhould ſay: Goe whither you will, farr or eare, was it never heard or ſeene, that any man, if his foot ſlipped and hee tooke a fall; that he would lye ſtill like a beaſt and not up againe ſtraight? Or if he loſt his way, that he would wittingly go on, and not with all ſpeed get into it againe? 1

I proceed then. Men riſe if they fall: and ſin is a fall. We have taken up the term our ſelves, calling Adams ſin, Adams fall. A fall, indeed; for it foules as a fall; for it bruiſes as a fall; for it bringeth down as a fall; downe, from the ſtate of Paradiſe, downe to the duſt of death, down to the bar of judgement, down to the pit of hell. 2

Againe: Men turne when they erre; And ſin is an errour. Nonne errant omnes, &c. (ſaith Salomon) make you any doubt of it? I doe not: No ſure, an errour it is. What can be greater, than to go in the wayes (of wickedneſſe) they ſhould not, and come to the end (of miſery) they would not. It is then a fall and an errour. Prov. 14. 22

Upon which he joyneth iſſue, and inferreth the fifth verſe, Quare ergo? and why then? If there be no people ſo ſottiſh, that when they fall will lye ſtill, or when they erre, goe on ſtill, why doe this peoole that, which no people elſe will do? Nay, ſeeing they themſelves, if they be downe, get up; and, if aſtray; turne backe; how commeth it to paſſe, it holds not here too? That (here) they fall, and riſe not? ſtray, and returne not? Fall and ſtray (peccando) and not riſe and returne (pœnitendo?) Will every people, and not they? Nay, will they, every where elſe and not here? Every where elſe, will they riſe, if they fall; and turne againe, if they turne away; and here, only here, will they fall, and not riſe, turne away, and not turne againe? In every fall, in every errour of the feet, to doe it, and to doe it of our ſelves; and in that fall, and that errour, which toucheth God and our ſoules, by no meanes, by no entreatie to be got to do it? What dealing call you this? Yet this is their ſtrange dealing (ſaith the LORD.) Both theirs and ours: Which GOD wonders at and complaineth of; and who can complaine of His wondering, or wonder at His complaining? 3

But what ſpeak we of a fall, or an errour? There is a word, in the fifth verſe, (the word of rebellion) maketh it more grievous. For it is (as if he ſhould ſay) I would it were nothing but a fall, or turning away: I would it were not a fall, or turning away into a rebellion. Nay, I would it were but that; but rebellion; and not a perpetuall Rebellion: But, it is both: and that is it which I complaine of.

There is ſin, a fall: men fall againſt their wills: that, is ſinne of infirmitie. There is Sin, an Errour: men erre from the way, of ignorance: that, is ſin of ignorance. The one, for want of power; The other, for lacke of skill. But rebellion: the third kind (that hatefull ſinne of rebellion) can neither pretend ignorance, nor plead infirmitie; for, wittingly they revolt from their known allegiance, and wilfully ſet themſelves againſt their lawfull Soveraigne: That is the ſin of malice.

Take all together. Sinne, a fall, an errour, a rebellion: (We ſee, ſinne aboundeth: will you ſee, how grace over-aboundeth?) Yet, not ſuch a fall, but we may bee raiſed; not ſuch a departure, but there is place left to returne; no, nor ſuch a rebellion, but (if it ſue for) may hope for a pardon. For behold: He, even He, that GOD, from whom we thus fall, depart, revolt, reacheth His hand to them that fall; turneth not away from them, that turne to Him; is ready to receive, to grace them; even them, that rebelled againſt Him. It is ſo: for Hee ſpeaketh to them; treateth with them, asketh of them, why they will not riſe, retire, ſubmit themſelves.

Which is more yet. If ye marke, He doth not complaine and challenge them, for any of all thoſe three; for falling, ſtraying, or for rebelling: The point He preſſeth, is not, our falling, but our lying ſtill: not our departing, but our not returning; not our breaking off, but our holding out. It is not: why fall, or ſtray, or revolt? But, why riſe yee not? Returne yee not? Submit yee not your ſelves? Thus might Hee have framed His interrogatories: Shall they fall and not ſtand? He doth not; but, thus: ſhall they fall and not riſe? Shall they turne from the right and not keep it? No: But, ſhall they turne from it, and not turne to it? As much to ſay as; Be it you have fallen, yet lye not ſtill; erred, yet goe not on; Sinned, yet continue not in ſin, and neither your fall, errour, nor ſin, erunt vobis in ſcandalum, ſhall be your deſtruction, or doe you hurt.

Nay, which is farther, and that beyond all. It is not theſe, neither; (though this be wrong enough, yet upon the point, this is not the very matter.) Neither our lying ſtill, nor our going on, nor ſtanding out, ſo they have an end, they all, and every of them may have hope. Perpetuall is the word, and perpetuall is the thing. Not, why theſe, any of theſe, or all of theſe; but, why theſe perpetuall? To doe thus; to doe it and never leave doing it; To make no end of ſin, but our own end; To make a perpetuitie of ſin; Never to riſe, return, repent, (for Repentance is oppoſite, not to ſin, but to the continuance of it:) that is the point.

In ſinne are theſe: [1] The fall, [2] The relapſe, [3] The wallow: it is none of theſe. It is not falling, not, though it be recidiva peccati, often relapſing. It is not lying ſtill; not, though it be Volutabrum peccati, the wollow: It is none of all theſe: It is πρὸ ἀνάπαυσον, the never ceaſing, the perpetuitie, the impenitency of ſin. To ſpeake of ſin, that is the ſin out of meaſure ſinfull; that, is the offence, that not only maketh culpable, but leaveth inexcuſable. That fall, is not, Adams, but Lucifers fall; not to erre, but to periſh from the right way; not Shemeies rebellion, but the very Apoſtaſie and gainſaying of Coreh.

This then, to adde ſin to ſin, to multiply ſin, by ſin to make it infinite, to eternize it as much as in us lyeth; that, is it, to which God crieth, O quare? Why do you ſo? Why perpetuall?

Why perpetuall? Indeed, why? For, it would poſe the beſt of us to find out the Quare? a true cauſe or reaſon for our doing?

Before, ſhew but an example: Now here, ſhew but a reaſon, and carry it. But they can ſhew no reaſon, why they will not. It were to be wiſhed, we would repent or ſhew good cauſe to the contrary.

But as (before) we violate our own cuſtome, ſo (here) we abandon reaſon; wee throw them both to the ground (order, and reaſon) and ſtamp upon them both, when we make perpetuities. Verily true cauſe, or good reaſon there is none. Being called to ſhew cauſe why? They tell not: we ſee, they ſtand mute; they cannot tell, why: God Himſelfe is faine to tell them. Why, all the cauſe that is, is in the latter part of

of the verſe Apprehenderunt, &c. that is, ſome Non cauſa pro cauſa, ſome lye or other they lay hold of, or elſe they would returne, and not thus continue in it. To flatter it ſelfe that it may not repent, Mentita eſt iniquitas ſibi, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Sinne doth even cooſen it ſelfe, telling a faire tale to it ſelfe, which is (in the XI Verſe) Pax, Pax Peace, well enough; and that is a lye: for, there is no peace for all that. It is (ſaith the Apoſtle) the deceitfulneſſe of ſin, that hardeneth men in it; that is, if there were not ſome groſſe errour, ſtrong illuſion; notable, faſcinatio mentis, it could not be, that ſin ſhould prove to a perpetuitie. There is ſome errour ſure. Pſal 26. 1. Heb. 3. 13.

But why is not that errour removed? GOD anſwereth that, too. But, the errour hath not taken hold of them, for then it might be cured; but, they have taken hold of it; faſt hold; and will not let it goe. That is: it is not in the weakneſſe of their wits, but in the ſtubbornneſſe of their will. For, ſo is His concluſion. Not, Non potuerunt, they could not: but, Noluerunt, they would not returne. So ſaith David, It is a people that doe erre, in their hearts: Their errour is not in their heads; but in their hearts; and if it be there, forty yeares teaching will doe them no good. If they had a heart to underſtand, they might, ſoone: but, they aſſot themſelves; they will not conceive aright of their eſtates. If they did, they could not chooſe but returne: But now, returne they will not: that, is reſolved: therefore they get them ſome lewd irreligious lying poſitions, and with them cloſe up their owne eyes; even hood-winck themſelves. Is it not thus? Yes ſure: Rather than returne, to apprehend a lye. This is a woefull caſe: but let it be examined, and thus it is. It is a lye, they apprehend; that maketh they lye ſtill. Peradventure, that errour, inter alias, may be ſuch an illuſion as this: that if they ſhould make meanes, it would be to no purpoſe; GOD would ſtop His eares, He would not heare of it. May it not be thus? Deſpaire of pardon hath made many a man deſperate. Yes ſure. And if that were it; if they would, and GOD would not, they had ſome ſhew of reaſon, to abandon themſelves to all looſeneſſe of life. But it is contrary: they would not returne. For, I for my part faine would (ſaith GOD:) It is their Not: and not mine. My Nolo is, Nolo ut moriatur: My Volo is, Volo ut convertatur. I will not their death; I will their converſions: This is my Volo. Nay, quoties volui? How often would I? Et noluiſtis, and ye would not. Pſal 95. 10. Verſ. 6. Ezek. 18. 32. 33. 11. Mat. 23. 37.

My outward calling by My Word, inward movings by My Spirit, My often exhortations in your eares, My no leſſe often inſpirations in your hearts: Tactus mei & tractus, My touches, and My twitches; My benefits not to be diſſembled, My gentle chaſtiſements, My deliverances more than ordinary, My patience while I held My peace; ſuch periods, as this, when I ſpeake; My putting you to it by Quid debui facere? to ſet downe, what I ſhould have done and have not: theſe ſhew, Quoties volui, that many times I would when you would not. The two verſes paſt, His compaſſionate complaint in them. And, is there no hope? Will you not? O why will you not? Other where you will, and not here; why not here? You have no reaſon, why you will not. Why will you not? If not, why fall, or erre, or revolt, yet only, why perpetuall? Theſe are evidences enough, He is willing enough therewithall. But (to put it out of all doubt) we ſee. He breaketh out into a proteſtation, that if this bee the lye, we lay hold of, we may let it goe when we will. And ſure how earneſtly GOD affecteth the ſinners converſion, we might be thought to miſ-informe, and to blow abroad our owne conceits, if this and ſuch places were not our warrant. I not heare? Why, I ſtand wiſhing, and waiting, and longing, and liſtening to heare of it, Wiſhing, O that my people! Waiting, Expectat Dominus ut miſereatur; Longing, even as a woman that is great, after greene fruit (Mic. 7. 1.) Liſtening, that I might but heare two good words from them, that might ſhew, that they were but thus forward as to think of this point. It is not all one; it is not neither here nor there with me, whether you doe it; it is a ſpeciall thing, I hearken after: No Merchant, for his commoditie; no Athenian for his newes, more oft or more earneſt. Eſay 4. 5. Eſay 30. 18. Mic. 7. 1.

Then, lay not hold on that lye, that I would not heare. Be your errour what it will be, let it not be, that; let not the charge be mine, but yours, if you will needs caſt away that; I would have ſaved.

Should not this move us? Now truly, if all other regards failed, and men for them ſhould not returne; yet, for this, and this only, we ought to yeeld to it, that GOD ſhould be liſtening ſo long for it, and in the end be deluded.

2 GOD harkeneth and liſteneth: and (after) there is a kind of pauſe, to ſee what will come of it. And loe, this commeth of it; this unkind, unnaturall effect: After all this, not ſo much as locuti ſunt rectè, a good honeſt confeſſion. Nay, not ſo little as this, Quid feci? What have I done? He expecteth no great matter; no long proceſſe; but two words, but three Syllables: and thoſe, with no loud voice, to ſpend their ſpirit or breath; but, even ſoftly ſaid, for He layeth His eare and liſteneth for it.

Thus ſaith the LORD. But, what ſay they? None of them, either audibly (for, I hearkened;) or ſoftly (for, I liſtened,) ſaid (no long ſolemne confeſſion, but not this) Quid feci? GOD wot, this is not repentance: erre not, this is farr from it.

From whence yet this we gaine: What GOD would heare from us, and when Mic. 7. 1. we ſaying, may give Him ſome kind of contentment. This, is but Mica's fruit (we ſpake of:) which yet, He ſo much deſired, that he will take it, greene and unripe as it is. This is but a ſtep unto a proffer; but yet begin with this. Say it; Dic, dic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) ſed, intus dic: ſay it, and ſay it from within; ſay it, as it ſhould be ſaid, not for forme, or with affectation, but, in truth and with affection. Doe but this onward, and more will follow. Indeed as (before) we ſaid of the Quare; ſo (here) we may ſay, of the Quid: If either of them; If but this latter were well weighed, rightly thought on, or rightly ſpoken, there is much more in it than one would think. What have I done? 1 What, in reſpect of it ſelfe: What a foule, deformed, baſe, ignominious act! which we ſhame to have known; which we chill upon, alone and no body but our ſelves. 2 What, in regard of God, ſo fearefull in power, ſo glorious in Majeſtie! 3 What, in regard of the object: for what a trifling profit; for what a tranſitory pleaſure! 4 What, in reſpect of the conſequent: To what prejudice of the ſtate of our ſoules and bodies, both here and for ever! O what have we done? How did we it? Sure, when we thus ſinned, we did we knew not what.

Sure to ſay it with the right touch; with the right accent, is worth the while. Say it then: ſay this, at leaſt. Leſt, if you will not ſay, Quid feci? What have I done? When He hearkens; you may come into the caſe, you know not what to doe; and ſay to Him, What ſhall I doe? And, if you heare not, when Hee complaines; one day, when you complaine, He refuſe to bow down His eare and hearken to you, at all.

3 Yet one ſtep further. Nothing they ſaid: Is that all? have we done? Nay: He heares and ſees (both) a worſe matter. For in ſtead of this, He ſees and heares, that forth they runne to their careleſſe courſe of life, tanquam equus ad prælium. We ſaw (before) their ſlowneſſe, in that: Now ſee we their vigour in this. VVherein obſerve: Here, they goe not; It is no ſoft pace; they runne: Not, as men; but, as horſes: And, not every kind of them neither; but, as the barbed horſe for ſervice: and hee, not every way conſidered; but when he is enraged by noiſe and other accidents of warre, yet rather ruſheth, like a violent breach of waters (from whence it is taken) than runneth: ὡς ἵππος κάβαλος (ſaith the Seventy) as a horſe all of a white fome, into the battell, where a thouſand to one, he never commeth out againe. That is, with as great fury, and as little conſideration, as a warre-horſe runneth upon his owne deſtruction. And all this, when GOD hearkneth and liſteneth to heare and receive them;
Prov. 26. 11. 2 Pet. 2. 22. Verſe 7. even then, and at no other time; then, ſo fling they from Him. All returne to ſin is brutiſh: Reci diva peccati, that, is tanquam canis ad vomitum: Volutabrum peccati; that, is tanquam ſus ad lutum: But, this fury and fierceneſſe of ſin, is tanquam equus ad prælium. Should there be no more regard in the rider, than, in the beaſt, he rides on? Should ſuch a minde as this, be in men?

No, verily, we be now gone from men: VVe be come among beaſts. And, thither, doth GOD follow us. And, even among them (if we will but looke to the leſſe brutiſh ſort) He hopes to doe it: even among them, to point us to to thoſe, that, if we will will learne, it will teach us as much as this commeth to. This is His Apostrophe of the last verse. Where breaking off (occasioned by their abrupt breaking off) He even sets downe Himselfe upon the light of Nature, Well yet, the Stork, &c.

Two kinds of forcible reasons (or Apostrophe's) there are to move us. 1. One, To send the people of GOD, to heathen men, that would shame to deale with their Idols, as we doe daily with the GOD of heaven: Get you to Chittim and to the Isles, (saith Ieremie 2. chapter) See, if the like measure be offered by them, to their gods. Then the Conclusion is, Quis audivit talia? GODS people, worse than the Heathen? This is such a thing, as the like was never heard. This was done in the first verse, If any fall, &c. Ier. 2. 10.

2. Yet more effectuall is it, when He goeth yet further; thus farre. That, not finding, among men, with whom to sort them, because they keepe no rules of men, He is forced to a second Apostrophe, to seeke among beasts, with whom to suit them.

3. But then, if it come to this, that the beasts be not only compared with us (as in the last tanquam equus,) but preferred before, as better advised or disposed, than we (as in this, the Swallow doth know, my people doth not:) that we, in the comparison, goe not even with them, but are cast behinde them; that, is ὡς οὐδαμῶς (indeed) a foule check to our nature. And to that the Prophet crieth, Audite cœli, Heare yee heavens, and be astonished at it. O the damp and mist of our sinnes! so great, that it darkeneth not only the light of religion, which God teacheth; but even the light of nature, which her instinct teacheth, even the reasonlesse creature it selfe. With a very patheticall conclusion doth the Psalmist breake off the XLIX. Psalme: Man being in honour, &c. but becommeth meet to be compared to the beasts that perish. Which is no small disgrace to our Nature, so to be matched. Profecto (saith Chrysostome) pejus est comparari jumento, quam nasci jumentum, Now (sure) it is farre worser to bee matched with a beast; than to be borne a beast. To be borne, is no fault: we, nor they, make our selves. But, to be borne a man, and to become matchable with beasts, that is our fault; our great fault: and therefore, the worse certainly. Ier. 2. 12. Psal 49.

Well; this Interrogate Iumenta, in the Old; this Respicite Volatilia, in the New; this Apostrophe, this sending us to beasts, and fowles to schoole; setting them before us, as patternes; setting them over us, as Tutors, to learn of them how to carry our selves, is (certainly) a bitter Apostrophe, a great upbraiding, to us; a great aggravating our sin, or our folly, or both. Iob 12. 7. Math 6. 16.

Especially in them, who (as, in the next verse he saith) would hold it great scorn, to be reputed of, otherwise than as deep wise men; that they, should passe their lives, with as little consideration (not, as Heathen men, for they be men; but with as little) yea, lesse, than the beasts in the field, or the fowles in the aire. Thus speaketh GOD, often, and with diverse. The slothfull body He setteth to schoole to the Ant, (Prov. 6.) The unthankfull person, to the Oxe: the distrustfull man, to the young Ravens: the Covetous wretch, to that beast which reproved the madnesse of the Prophet, who for the wages of unrighteousnesse, was ready to make sale of his soule (that is) Balaam's beast, the Asse (2. Pet. 2. 16.) And, here now in this place, the wilfull impenitent sinner, one so farre gone, as He appointeth him not one (as to all the former) but, no lesse than foure at once. Belike, either the number is great, that so many Vshers need (and so, it is: Or, their capacitie very dull and hard to take, that no fewer will serve them (and so, it is too:) Or, He sorteth them thus, that every countrey may be provided for, of one to teach in it. For though, in some places, all are not; yet, in all places, some of them are to be found. Verse. 8. Prov. 6. 6. Esay 1. 3. Luk. 12. 24. 2 Pet. 2. 15. 16.

The lesson, with these foure (all of them, from the Storke in the top of the Firre tree, to the Swallow that buildeth under every pent-house) would take us forth, is, that which they themselves are so perfect in, that they may be professours of it, And, it is of foure sorts: 1. They have a time to return in. 2. That time, is certaine, and certainly known. 3. They know it. 4. They observe it.

They have a time. The place, the Climate, which the cold of the weather maketh them to leave, they faile not, but finde a time to turne backe thither againe.

This they teach us, firſt: Who, in this reſpect leſſe carefull, and more ſenſeleſſe than they, finde a time and times many, oft and long, to take our flight from God; occaſioned, by no cold or evill weather (for commonly, we doe it when times are beſt and faireſt:) But we can find no time, not ſo much as halfe a time, to make our returne in. This muſt be learned. Sure, we muſt (ſaith Saint Paul) σχολάζειν τῇ νηστείᾳ, take ſome time of vacancie and leaſure: we muſt (ſaith Saint Peter) χωρίζεσθαι εἰς μελέτην, take ſome ſeverall retiring place, where and when to doe it to purpoſe; and intend it not as a ſlight matter, but as one of the chiefeſt and moſt important affaires of our life. Sure, this adoe that GOD keeps about it, theſe paſsions, complaints, proteſtations, apoſtrophes give it for no leſſe.

2 Cor 7.5. 2 Pet.3.9.

2 They have a time certaine: When if you wait for them, you ſhall be ſure to ſee them come; and come at their appointed ſeaſon: they will not miſſe. It will not be long, but you ſhall ſee the Swallow here againe. This they teach us, ſecond: Us, who have ſometime, ſome little perſwaſions, In modico (like Agrippa's) to do as Chriſtian men ſhould doe, but (as Felix) wee can never εὐκαιρίζειν, find a convenient ſet time for it. Returne we will, that we will; but, are ſtill to ſeeke for our ſeaſon: and ever, we will doe, and never we do it. Verily though no time be amiſſe (but [a] at what time ſoever wee repent, that is the acceptable time, that the day of ſalvation:) yet Eſaus [b] teares when the time was paſt; and the [c] five Virgins that came too ſhort, and but a little too ſhort; and that very word of GOD to Saul, [d] Now was the time, Now, if thou hadeſt taken it: theſe plainly ſhew, that (as, for [e] all things under the Sun, ſo) for this great and weighty buſineſſe, there is not only עת but מזער; not only χρόνος but καιρός, not only a time, but a ſet ſeaſon. Which ſeaſon is in time, as a joynt, in a member: If you hit on the joynt, you may eaſily divide; if on this ſide or beyond, you ſhall not doe it, or not doe it ſo well; therefore, to diſcerne it, when it is.

Act 26.28. Act 24.26.

3 They have their certaine time, and they know it. What time of the yeare the time of their returne is, is commonly known: who knowes not, when Swallowes time is? And our ignorance in not diſcerning this point, doth God juſtly upbraid us withall; and bids us, if we know not what time to take, to get us to theſe fowles, and to take their time, the time they returne at; (that is) now, even this time, this ſeaſon of the yeare; to returne with the Swallowes, and to take our flight backe, when they doe theirs. Rather doe thus, than waſte our lives (as we doe) and take none at all; neither faire nor foule, neither hot nor cold, neither Fall nor Spring, to do it in. This is the third they teach us.

4 The laſt leſſon is, to obſerve it. Opportunitie (it ſelf) is a great favour, even to have it; but a ſecond grace it is, to diſcern it when we have it: and, a third (better than both) when we diſcerne it, to obſerve and take it. And many are the errours of our life, but all the errours of our repentance come from one of theſe: either, our ignorance; that while we have it, diſcerne it not: or our negligence, that when we diſcerne it, obſerve it not. The one (our ignorance) CHRIST with bitter teares lamenteth: the other (our negligence) doth GOD (here) complaine of. This is the laſt leſſon.

There want not, that ſtretch it farther: that by theſe foure fowles, there is not only taught the time, but even the manner alſo, how to performe our Repentance.

1. That vox turturis, which is gemebam, a mornfull note: 2. That the very name and nature of the Stork חסידה of חסד full of mercy and compaſsion: 3. That the Swallows neſt, ſo neare the Altar of GOD, (*Pſal.*84.) 4. That the painfull watching, and abſtinence of the Crane, ſpecially when they take their flight, ſo credibly recorded in the Naturall Hiſtories: That theſe (Embleme-wiſe) teach us the [1] mornefull bewailing of our life paſt; [2] the breaking off our former ſinnes, by works of mercy; [3] the keeping neere this place, the houſe, and Altar of GOD; [4] the abſtinence and watching to be performed, during this time of our returne: That is, that all theſe are allyed to the exerciſe of our Repentance, and are meet vertues to accompanie and attend the practice of it.

This, the Turtle dove mourneth; the Swallow chattereth: this, all of them found as well as they can: This, if they ſerve not (as Maſters) to teach us, they ſhall ſerve (as

(as a Queſt) to condemne us, whom neither our owne cuſtome, reaſon, religion, before, nor (now) the light of Nature can bring to know ſo much as they: either to learne it our ſelves, or to be taught it by others. This we ſhould learne, but this we doe not; therefore He taketh up His laſt complaint, But my people, &c.

The word Iudgement receiveth two conſtructions: For, either by Iudicium Domini is meant that within us, which is anſwerable to that ſecret inſtinct, whereby the fowles are inclined to do this, which is, the prick and dictamen of our conſcience, τὸ ἐνδὸν δαιμόνιον, (the impreſſion whereof is apparent in the moſt miſcreant on earth; in whom Nature it ſelfe ſhrinketh and ſigheth, when it hath done amiſſe; and joyeth and lifteth up it ſelfe, when it hath well done: and by which we are moved inwardly, as they by their inſtinct, to returne, but that the motion (with us) paſſeth, and with them, not:) And then, the complaint is, that their parva naturalia carry them further, than our great judicials do us in this point. 1

Or elſe, by Iudicium Domini, is meant His viſitation, hanging over our heads; called therefore Iudgement, becauſe it commeth not cauſually, but judicially proceedeth from GOD; (that is) when GOD calleth to judgement by invaſion, by ſcarcity, by gentle, generall diſeaſes, and ſuch like: and then the complaint is, that where wee ſhould imitate theſe fowles, and returne againſt the ſweet ſpring, and faire time of the yeare (that is, while the dayes of peace and proſperity laſt) we are ſo farre behind them, as, not againſt faire, nay, not againſt foule (againſt neither) we can be brought to it: Not in the dayes of adverſity, no, not againſt the winter of our life. 2

That they regard Natures inclination, ſo as, every ſpring, ſure to come: We have loſt our regard ſo even of judgement and all, as neither vernall nor hibernall repentance we bring forth. Nay, not the everlaſting judgement of the LORD do we regard; to which, ſooner or later, we muſt all come, and there receive the ſentence, under execution whereof we ſhall lye eternally.

Παῦλα δίχομεν (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) I embrace both ſenſes: Both be good and profitable to men: Take whether you will, or both, if you will, you ſhall not take amiſſe: and if both, you ſhall be ſure to take right, Regard judgement, when, either it awaketh, from within, or when it threatneth, from without. And when any of theſe ſummons us before the great Judge, know (for a certainty) that, the time of returning is come: the Angell is deſcended, the water is moved; let us have grace to go in; Even then, ad aquæ motum: We know not how long it will be, or whether it will be ſtirred againe. Ioh. 5 3.

And thus we be come to anchor, at this laſt word judgement. A word, which if with judgement we would but pauſe on, and rowle it a while up and downe in our thoughts, duely weighing it and the force of it, it would bring us about, and cauſe this whole Scripture to be fulfilled; make us flye as faſt back, as any fowle of them.

For indeed, the not judiciall apprehending of this one word; the ſhallow conceiving and ſleight regard of it is the cauſe, we foreſlow the time. The foreſlowing the time, the cauſe, we come not to Quid feci? the not comming to that, the cauſe, why we run on ſtill tanquam equus; why we riſe not, returne not, yeeld not, but ſtand out in perpetuall rebellion. Did we heare this word; heare it and regard it aright; and ſcire terrorem hunc, know the terrour of it; that God hath fearefull judgements in ſtore, even here, to meet with us: Or (howſoever, here, we ſcape) He hath (there) a perpetuall judgement behind; and that, ſo ſtraight, as the righteous ſhall ſcarce eſcape it; ſo heavie, as the mightieſt ſhall not endure it: Did we regard this one Point, we would find a with-drawing time, for this ſo ſerious a work; we would ſay, and ſay that God ſhould heare it, what have I done? We would riſe, returne, repent; and ſo, His whole complaint ſhould ceaſe. O judgement! of the very mention of this word judgement, if a perfect view were taken of it, that only were enough. But without judgement or regard, we heare it; and therefore the complaint continueth ſtill. 1 Pet. 4. 18.

To conclude: We ſaid at the beginning, God therefore ſheweth Himſelf in paſſion, that He might move us; and in that paſſion, whereto He would move: Thus complaineth GOD, that we might thus inferre, and ſay: And doth GOD thus complain?

Iob 22.3. complaine? Why it toucheth not GOD, it toucheth mee; He needeth not our repentance, and our unrighteousnesse toucheth Him not. It is I, that shall win or lose by it; even the best thing I have to lose, my soule: He is in no danger; it is I, the hazard of whose eternall weale, or woe, lyeth upon it. And yet doth God shew Himself sorry for me, and shall not I be sorry for my selfe? Doth God thus complaine of my sinne, and shall not I be moved, or doe as much for mine own sinne? From this meditation to proceed, to propound the same questions, which GOD here doth, and to aske them of our selves. What then, shall I continually fall and never rise, turne away and not once turne againe? Shall my rebellions be perpetuall? Doe I this any where else? can I shew any reason why not to do it, here? Shall these Swallowes fly over me and put me in mind, of my return; and shall not I heed them? Shall GOD still, in vain, harken for quid feci? and shall I never speak that, He so faine would heare? Shall I never once seriously set before me, the judgements of the Lord? Ask these: aske them, and answer them, and upon them, come to a resolution, saying: I will rise, and returne, and submit my selfe, and from my heart say, quid feci? I will consider volatilia cæli; I will not see them fly, but I will thinke of the season of my returning: but, above all, I will not be without regard of GODS judgement, then which, nothing (in this world) is more to be regarded.

Because the time; the time is the maine matter, and (ever) more adoe about it, than the thing it selfe; to have speciall care of that: knowing, that it was not but upon great cause, that our SAVIOUR, complaining of this point cried: ô if thou hadst Luk. 19.41.42 but knowne, that this day had beene the day of thy visitation! and so was fain to break off, the teares comming so fast, That he was not able to speak out, but forced to weep out the rest of his sentence. O those teares shew, what time is; shew that opportunitie it selfe is a grace, even to have of it, that it is a second grace, to know it; and a third better than them both, to lay hold of it, and use it. That the greatest errours in this manner of repentance come from our ignorance, in not discerning of the time, when we may have it; or our negligence, in not using it, when we discerne it. Therefore, rather than faile, (or rather, that we may not faile) to take the time of the Text. And that time, is at this time, now: Now, doe these fowles returne: Who knoweth whether he shall live to see them returne any more? It may be the last Spring, the last Swallow-time, the last Wednesday, of this name or nature, we shall ever live, to heare this point preached. Why doe we not covenant then with our selves, not to let this time slip? Surely, lest no time should be taken, the Prophet pointeth us at this; and (ensuing the Prophets minde) the Church hath fixed her season at it. And nature it selfe seemeth to favour it, that at the rising of the yeare, we should rise; and returne, when the Zodiake returneth to the first signe.

Let the Prophet, let the Church, let Nature, let something prevaile with us. Et Dominus qui sic instat præcepto, præcurrat auxilio, and Almighty GOD, the upholder of them that stand, the lifter up of those that be downe; that GOD, who is thus instant upon this point by his complaint, prevent us with His gracious help, that we may redresse it. Following, with His Spirit, where his word hath gone before, and making it effectuall to our speedie conversion.

A SER-

before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the X. of February, Anno Domini, MDCXIX. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

IOEL Chap. II. Verſ. XII. XIII.

Nunc ergo Dicit Dominus: Convertimini ad me in toto corde veſtro, in jejunio, & in fletu, & in planctu.

Et ſcindite corda veſtra, & non veſtimenta veſtra, & convertimini ad Deum veſtrum.

Therefore alſo, now (ſaith the Lord;) Turne you unto Me, with all your heart, and with Faſting, and with Weeping, and with Mourning.

And rend your heart, and not your cloaths, and turne unto the Lord your God.

FOR this time hath the Church made choice of this Text. The time, wherein, howſoever we have diſpenſed with it all the yeare beſide, ſhe would have us ſeriouſly to entend, and make it our time of turning to the Lord. And that, Now (the firſt word of the Text.)

For ſhe holds it not ſafe, to leave us wholly to our ſelves, to take any time, it skils not when; leſt we take none at all. Not now (ſaith Felix) but when I ſhall find a convenient time; and he never found any: and many (with him) periſh, upon this not now. Take heed of ὅταν εὐκαιρήσω, when I ſhall find a convenient time: It undid Felix, that. Act. 23. 25.

She hath found, this ſame keeping of continuall Sabbaths and faſts, this keeping the memory of CHRIST'S Birth and Reſurrection all the yeare long, hath done no good: hurt rather. So, it hath ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to Her, to order, there ſhall be a ſolemne ſet returne, once in the yeare at leaſt. And reaſon: for, once a yeare, all Act. 15. 28.

things turne. And, that once is now, at this time : For, now at this time, is the turning of the yeare. In Heaven the Sunne in his Equinoxiall line, the Zodiaque, and all the Conſtellations in it, do now turne about to the firſt point. The earth and all her plants, after a dead Winter, returne to the fitſt and beſt ſeaſon of the yeare. The creatures, the Fowles of the Aire, the Swallow and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Stork know their ſeaſons, and make their juſt returne at this time, every yeare. Every thing now turning, that we alſo would make it our time to turne to GOD in.

Ier. 8.7.

Then, becauſe we are to turne cum jejunio, with faſting; and this day is knowen by the name of Caput jejunii, the firſt day of Lent; it fits well, as a welcome into this time: a time lent us (as it were) by God, ſet us by the Church, to make our turning in.

And beſide the time, Now; the manner (How) is here alſo ſet downe. For, as it is true, that repentance is the gift of God, (Si quo modo det Deus pœnitentiam, ſaith the Apoſtle) and we by prayer to ſeek it of Him, that it would pleaſe him to grant us true repentance; So, it is true withall, there is a Doctrine of repentance from dead works (as ſaith the ſame Apoſtle) and that is here taught us.

2 Tim. 2. 25.

Heb. 6. 1.

The Church turns us to theſe words here of the Prophet Ioel; which, though they be a part of the Old Teſtament, yet for ſome ſpeciall vertue in them (as we are to believe) She hath cauſed them to be read, for the Epiſtle of this day.

And ſurely, had there beene a plainer than this, wherein the nature of true repentance had beene more fully ſet forth, it behooveth us to think, the Church inſpired by the wiſdome of God, would have looked it out for us, againſt this time, the time ſacred by her to our turning.

Againe, that the Church carrying to her children the tender heart of a mother, if there were a more eaſie or gentle repentance than this of Ioel, She would have choſen that rather. For, this we are all bound to thinke, She takes no pleaſure to make us ſad, or to put upon us more, then needs She muſt. Which in that She hath not, we may well preſume, this of Ioel is it, She would have us hold our ſelves to : and that this is, and is to be, the mold of our Repentance.

I wot well, there is in this Text, ſomewhat of Salt terræ, ſomething of the graine of Muſtard-ſeed in the Goſpell : The points be ſuch as we liſt not heare of. Faſting is durus ſermo, an unwelcome point to fleſh and blood : but, as for weeping and mourning, and renting the heart who can abide it? The Prophet (it ſeemes) fore-ſaw, we would ſay as much : and therefore hee takes up the word before us. They be the words next before theſe, Who can abide it? Abide what? Theſe dayes, the abſtinence in them? No, but the great and fearefull Day of the LORD. If you ſpeake of not abiding, who can abide that? As if he ſhould ſay, If you could abide that Day when it comes, I would trouble you with none of theſe. But, no abiding of that. Turne it away you may : turn it into a joyfull day, by this turning to the LORD. Thus you may : and, but thus, you cannot. Now therefore you ſee, how therefore comes in. Here is our choice : One of them we muſt take. And, better thus turne unto GOD in ſome of theſe little dayes, than be turned off by Him in that great Day, to another manner weeping than this of Ioel : Even to weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth. Scientes igitur terrorem hunc, knowing therefore this feare, and that upon this turning, Cardo vertitur, the hinge turnes of our well or evill doing for ever; to be content to come to it, and to turne the Heathen mans Non emam, into emam tanti pœnitere. To this turning then. Our charge is to preach to men, non quæ volunt audire, ſed quæ volunt audiſſe, not, what for the preſent they would heare; but, what another day, they would wiſh they had heard.

Mat. 5 13. 13 31. Io 6.60. Ver. 15.

Mat. 8.12.

2 Cor. 10.11

Repentance it ſelfe is nothing elſe, but redire ad principia, a kind of circling; to returne to Him by repentance, from whom by ſin, we have turned away. And much after a circle is this text : beginnes with the word turne, and returnes about to the ſame word againe. Which circle conſiſts (to uſe the Prophets owne word) of two turnings, (for twiſe he repeates this word; which two muſt needs be two different motions. [1] One, is to be done with the whole heart : [2] The other with it broken and rent : So as one and the ſame it cannot be.

Firſt,

First, a turne, wherein we looke forward to GOD; and with our whole heart resolve to turne to Him. Then, a turne againe, wherein we looke backward to our sinnes, wherein we have turned from GOD; and with beholding them, our very heart breaketh. These two, are two distinct, both in nature and names: One, Conversion from sinne; the other, Contrition for sin. One, resolving to amend that which is to come: the other, reflecting and sorrowing for that which is past. One, declining from evill to be done hereafter: the other, sentencing it selfe for evill done heretofore. These two betweene them, make up a compleat repentance, or (to keepe the word of the Text) a perfect revolution.

And this and none other, doth Ioel teach the Iewes: and this, and none other doth Ionas teach the Gentiles. None other, the Prophets; nor none other the Apostles: For Saint Iames comes just to this of Ioel, Enjoyning sinners to cleanse their hands, and to purge their hearts; which is the former: and then withall, to change their laughter into mourning, and their joy into heavinesse: Where πένθος and κατήφεια, are as full for the New, as Planctus and Fletus are for the Old. These two: both these, and neither to spare: and we have not learned, we hold not, we teach not any other repentance. I speake it for this. There is a false imputation cast on us, that wee should teach, there goeth nothing to repentance but amendment of life: that these of fasting and the rest, we let runne by, as the waste of repentance: Nay, that (for fasting) we doe indicere jejunium jejuniis, we proclaime a fast from it; and teach a penitence with no penall thing in it. That therefore, this Text by name, and such other, we shun and shift, and dare not come neare them. Not come neare them? As neere as we can, by the grace of GOD, that the world may know, and all here beare witnesse we teach and we presse both. Iam. 4. 8. 9.

Indeed, (as Augustine well saith) Aliud est quod docemus, aliud quod sustinemus. What we are faine to beare with, is one thing; What we preach, and faine would perswade, is another. Et væ tibi flumen moris humani (saith he, and we both)) Woe to the strong current of a corrupt Custome, that hath taken such a head, as doe what we can, it carries all head-long before it. But, whatsoever we beare, this we teach, though.

I forget my selfe. I intend to proceed as the words lye. [1] To turne, first: [2] and to GOD; [3] To GOD, with the heart; [4] and with the whole heart. Then the Manner, with these foure: [1] Fasting, [2] Weeping, [3] Mourning, [4] and a Rent heart. Of which the two former are the bodies task; Fasting and weeping: the two latter, the soules, mourning and renting the heart. The former (mourning) the affection of sorrow: the latter (renting) from anger, or indignation: Of both which affections, Repentance is compound, and not of either alone. This for the manner, how. The Division

Then last, for the time, when: Now to doe it; Now therefore.

Repentance a Turning. 1 Turne.

DIversly, and in sundry terms doth the Scripture set forth unto us the nature of repentance. Of renewing, as from a decay (Heb. 6.6.) Of refining, as from drosse (Ier. 6.29.) Of recovering, as from a maladie (Dan. 4.24) Of cleansing, as from soile; Of rising, as from a fall (Ier. 8.4.) In no one, either for sense more full; or for use more ofter, than in this of turning.

To turne is a counsell properly to them that are out of their right way. For, going on still, and turning, are motions opposite. Both of them with reference to a way. For, if the way bee good, we are to hold on: if otherwise, to turne and take another.

Whether a way be good or no, we principally pronounce, by the end. If (saith Chrysostome) it be to a Feast, good; though it be thorow a blind lane: if to execution, not good though thorow the faire st streets in the Citie. S. Chrysostome was bidden to a marriage dinner; was to goe to it thorow diverſe lanes, and alleyes; croſſing the high ſtreet, he met with one led thorow it to be executed: he told it his Auditory, that non quà, ſed quò was it.

If then our life be a way (as a way it is termed, in all writers both holy and humane; via morum no leſſe, than via pedum;) the end of this way is to bring us to our end, to our ſoveraigne good, which we call Happineſſe. Which happineſſe, not finding here, but full of flawes, and of no laſting neither, we are ſet to ſeeke it, and put in hope to find it with GOD, in whoſe preſence, is the fullneſſe of Ioy, and at whoſe right hand, pleaſures for evermore.

Pſal. 16. 11.

From GOD then, as from the journeyes end of our life, our way, we are never to turne our ſteps, or our eyes, but with Enoch (as of him it is ſaid) ſtill to walk with God, all our life long. Then ſhould we never need to heare this convertite.

Gen. 5. 21.

We are not ſo happy. There is one that maligneth, we ſhould goe this way, or come to this end: and therefore to divert us, holdeth out to us ſome Pleaſure, Profit, or Preferment; which to purſue, we muſt ſtep out of the way, and ſo do, full many times; even turne from GOD, to ſerve our own turnes.

And this is the way of ſin, which is a turning from God. When having in chaſe ſome trifling tranſitory I wot not what; to follow it, we even turn our backs upon God, and forſake the way of His Commandements. And here now we firſt need His counſell of Convertite.

For, being entred into this way, yer we go too far in it, wiſdome would we ſtayed and were adviſed, whither this way will carry us, and where we ſhall find our ſelves at our journeyes end. And reaſon we have to doubt: For after we once left our firſt way, which was right, there takes us ſometimes that ſame Singultus cordis (as Abigail well cals it) a throbbing of the heart; or (as the Apoſtle) certaine accuſing thoughts preſent themſelves unto us, which will not ſuffer us to goe on quietly: our minds ſtill miſgiving us, that we are wrong.

Rom. 1. 15.

Beſides, when any danger of death is neere: Nay, if we do but ſadly think on it, a certaine chilneſſe takes us, and we cannot (with any comfort) think on our journeyes end: And heare (as it were) a voyce of one crying behind us, Hæc eſt via; that, is not the way, you have taken; this, that you have loſt, is your way, walk in it. Which voice if we heare not, it is long of the noiſe about us. If we would ſometime goe aſide into ſome retired place, or in the ſtill of the night hearken after it, we might peradventure heare it.

Eſay. 30. 21.

A great bleſſing of God it is; for, without it, thouſands would periſh in the error of their life, and never return to their right way again. Redite prævaricatores ad cor, that ſinners would turn to their own hearts. And this is the firſt degree, to help us a little forward to this turning.

Eſay. 46. 8.

Being thus turned to our hearts, we turne againe, and behold the τροχὸς γενέσεως (as S. Iames termeth it) the wheele of our nature, that it turneth apace, and turnes off daily ſome, and them younger than we; and that within a while, our turne will come, that our breath alſo muſt go forth, and we turne againe to our duſt.

Iames. 3. 6.

And when that is paſt, another of the Prophet, That Righteouſnes ſhall turn againe to judgement: Mercy that now ſits in the Thron, ſhall riſe up and give place: Iuſtice alſo ſhall have her turne. And then comes the laſt turne, Convertentur peccatores in infernum, the ſinners ſhall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget, in time, to turne unto GOD. There was wont to be a ceremony of giving aſhes this day, to put us in mind of this converteris, I feare with the ceremony the ſubſtance is gone too. If that converſion into aſhes, be well thought on, it will helpe forward our turning.

Pſal. 94. 15.

Pſal. 9. 18.

This returning to our heart, the ſad and ſerious bethinking us there, of natures converſion into duſt; of ſins into aſhes (for, aſhes ever preſuppoſe fire:) that the wheele turns apace, and if we turne not the rather, theſe turnings may overtake us: Gods Spirit aſſiſting, may ſo worke with us, as we ſhall think Ioels counſell good: that, if we have not beene ſo happy, as to keep the way; yet we be not ſo unhappy, as not to turne again from a way, the iſſues whereof ſurely will not be good.

And

And would GOD theſe would ſerve to worke it. If they will not, then muſt Converſus ſum in ærumnâ, dum configitur ſpina; ſome thorne in our ſides, ſome bodily or worldly griefe muſt come and procure it. But, that is not to turne, but to be turned: And, there is great odds between theſe two. As, one thing it is, to take up the croſſe; another, to have it laid upon us. Pſal. 32. 4.

To be turned I call, when by ſome croſſe of body or mind (as it were, with a ring in our noſe) we are brought about, whether we will or no, to look how we have gone aſtray.

To turne I call, when the world miniſtreth unto us no cauſe of heavineſſe; all is ex ſententiâ: yet, even then, the grace of GOD moving us, we ſet our ſelves about; and repreſenting thoſe former converſions before us, we worke it out, having from without, no heavie accident to force us to it.

We condemn, not Converſus ſum in ærumnâ: Many are ſo turned; and GOD is gracious and rejects them not. But we commend this latter, when (without wrench or skrew) we turne, of our ſelves, And that man, who being under no arreſt, no bridle in his jawes, ſhall in the dayes of his peace, reſolve of a time to turne in, and take it, that man hath great cauſe to rejoyce, and to rejoyce before GOD. And thus much for Convertite, or (if it may not be had) for Convertimini.

Turn, and turn to Me: and He that ſaith it, is GOD. Why,, whither ſhould we turne from ſin, but to GOD? Yes, we may be ſure, it is not for nothing, GOD ſetteth downe this. In Ieremie, it is more plaine: If ye returne, returne to me, ſaith the LORD: Which had been needleſſe, if we could turne to nothing elſe; were it not poſſible, to find divers turnings; leaving one by-way to take another; from this extreme, turne to that, and never to GOD at all. They that have beene fleſhly given, if they ceaſe to be ſo, they turne: but, if they become as worldly now, as they were fleſhly before, they turne not to GOD. They, that from the dotage of ſuperſtition, run into the phrenſie of prophanneſſe: They, that from abhorring Idols, fall to commit ſacriledge; howſoever they turne, to GOD they turne not. 2 To Me, that is, GOD. Ier. 4. 1. Rom. 2. 22.

And this is even the motus diurnus, the common turning of the world (as Moſes expreſſeth it) to adde drunkenneſſe to thirſt: from too little to too much; from one extreme to runne into another. Would GOD it were not needfull for me to make this note. But, the true turne is ad Me: So from ſinne, as to GOD. Elſe, in very deed, we turne from this ſin; to that ſinne; but, not from ſinne: Or (to ſpeake more properly) we turne ſinne, we turne not from ſinne, if we give over one evill way to take another. Deut. 29. 19.

To me then: and with the heart. And, this alſo is needfull. For (I know not how, but) by ſome, our converſion is conceived to be a turning of the braine only (by doting too much on the word reſipiſcere) as a matter meerly mentall. Where before, thus and thus we thought, ſuch and ſuch poſitions we held; now, we are of another mind than before; and there is our turning. This of Ioel's is a matter of the heart, ſure. This? Nay (to ſay truth) where is converſion mentioned, but it is in a manner attended with in corde? And ſo requireth not only an alteration of the minde, but of the will: a chang, not, of certaine notions only in the head, but of the affections of the heart too. Elſe, it is vertigo capitis, but not converſio cordis. 3 With the heart.

Neither doth this [in corde] ſtand only againſt the brain, but is commonly in oppoſition to the whole outward man. Elſe, the heart may be fixed like a Pole, and the body (like a ſphere) turne round about it. Nay, heart and all muſt turne. Not the face, for ſhame; nor the feet, for feare; but the heart, for very hatred of ſinne alſo. Hypocriſie is a ſin: being we are to turn from ſin, we are to turne from it alſo; and not have our body the right way, and our heart ſtill wandering in the by-paths of ſin. But, if we forbeare the act, which the eye of man beholdeth, to make a conſcience of the thoughts too; for unto them alſo, the eye of GOD pierceth. Thus it ſhould be: Elſe, Converſion it may be, but heart it hath none.

4 With the whole heart.

With the heart; and with the whole heart. As not to divide the heart from the body; So, neither to divide the heart in it ſelfe. The devill to hinder us from true turning, turnes himſelfe (like Proteus) into all ſhapes. Firſt, turn not at all, you are well enough. If you will needs turne, turne whither you will, but not to GOD. If to GOD, leave your heart behind you, and turne and ſpare not. If with the heart, be it in corde, but not in toto; with ſome ends or fractions, with ſome few broken affections, but, not entirely. In modico (ſaith Agrippa) ſomewhat, there is a peece of the heart. In modico & in toto (ſaith S. Paul) ſomewhat and altogether; there is the whole heart. For which cauſe, as if ſome converted with the brimme, or upper part only, doth the Pſalme call for it, de profundis; and the Prophet, from the bottome of the heart.

Act. 26. 28. 29.

To rend the heart in this part, is a fault; which is a vertue in the next. For, it makes us have two hearts, hovering (as it were) and in motu trepidationis: and faine we would let goe ſinne, but not all that belongs to it: And turne we would, from our evill way; but not from that which will bring us back againe, the Occaſion, the Object, the Companie: from which, except we turne too, we are in continuall danger, to leave our way againe, and to turne backe to our former folly; the ſecond ever worſe than the firſt.

When the heart is thus parcel'd out, it is eaſily ſeene. See you one would play with fire, and not be burned; touch pitch, and not be defiled with it; love perill, and not periſh in it; dallying with his converſion; turning, like a doore upon the hinges, open and ſhut, and ſhut and open againe; with vult & non vult, he would, and yet he would not: Be bold to ſay of that man, he is out of the compaſſe of converſion: back again he will ad volutabrum luti.

Eccle. 1. 3. 1 Eccl. 3. 27.

And as eaſily it is ſeene, when one goes to his turning with his whole heart. He will come to his Quid faciemus? Set him downe, what he ſhould doe, and he will do it. Not come neere the place where ſinne dwelleth: Refraine the wandring of his ſenſe, whereby ſin is awaked; fulneſſe and idleneſſe, whereof ſin breedeth: but chiefly, corrupt company, whither ſin reſorteth. For, converſion hath no greater enemie, than converſing with ſuch, of whom our heart telleth us, there is neither faith nor feare of GOD in them. To all theſe he will come. Draw that mans apologie, pronounce of him, he is turned, and with his whole heart turned to God. And ſo may we turn: and, ſuch may all our converſion be: [1] Voluntary, without compulſion: [2] To God, without declining: [3] With the heart, not in Speculation: [4] With the whole heart entire, no purpoſe of recidivation.

Luk. 3. 10.

II The manner of it

All this ſhall be done: we will turne, with the heart, with the whole heart. Is this all? No; here is a Cum, we muſt take with us; Cum jejunio, with faſting. Take heed of turning Cum into ſine: To ſay, with it, or without it, we may turne well enough: Since, it is GOD Himſelfe, that to our turning joyneth jejunium, we may not turne without it. Indeed (as I told you) this is but the halfe-turne. Hitherto, we have but looked forward, we muſt alſo turne back our eye, and reflect upon our ſinnes paſt, be ſorry for them, before our turning be, as it ſhould. The Hemiſphere of our ſinnes (not to be under the Horizon, cleane out of our ſight) muſt aſcend up, and we ſet them before us; and we teſtifie by theſe foure that follow, how we like our ſelves for committing of them.

I know, we would have the ſentence end here, the other ſtripped off; have the matter betweene our hearts and us, that there we may end it, within, and no more adoe: and there, we ſhould doe well enough. But the Prophet tels us farther (or God Himſelfe rather; for, He it is that here ſpeaketh) that our repentance is to be incorporate into the body, no leſſe than the ſin was. Hers hath beene the delight of ſin, and, ſhe to beare a part of the penaltie: that the heart within, and the body without may both turne, ſince both have gone aſtray. It is a taxe, a tribute, it hath pleaſed God to lay upon our ſins, and we muſt beare it.

I ſpeak it for this. It is a World, what ſtrange conceits there are abroad, touching this this point. To the animalis homo, flesh and blood reveales a farre more easie way, not encombred with any of these. To turn, and yet not loose a meale all the yeare long; and not shed a teare; and not rent, either heart or garment: and yet doe full well. And with this conceipt, they passe their lives; and with this they passe out of their lives; as it seemes, resolved to put their soules in a venture, and to come to heaven after their owne fashion, or not come their at all: Change Ioel into Iael; take a draught of Milke out of her bottle, and wrap them warme, and lay them downe, and never rise more. Iud. 3. 24. 17.

And (that which is worse) they would not, by their good-will, have any other spoken of. For, this is a disease of our nature: Look how much we are (of our selves) disposed to do, just so much, and no more, must be preached to us. For, more than we have a liking to perform, we cannot at any hand abide, should be urged as needfull. But these conceipts must be left, or else we must tell JOEL, we can turne to GOD; without any of these, But, it is not JOEL; GOD it is, that speaketh, who best knoweth, what turning it is, that pleaseth him best: and whom we must needs leave to prescribe the manner, how He would have us to turne unto Him.

To speak after the manner of men, in very congruitie, when after a long aversion, we are to turne and present our selves before God, there would be a forme set down, how to behave our selves, in what sort to performe it. This is it; how for our cheare, our countenance, how for our carriage every way. Very duty will teach us, if we will not break all the rules of Decorum, we should doe it suitably to such as have stood out in a long rebellion, and being in a just disgrace for it are to approach the highest MAIESTIE upon earth. Now, would they (being to returne) make a feast the same day they are to doe it, with light merrie hearts, with cheerefull lookes? and not rather, with shame in their countenance, feare in their hearts, griefe in their eyes? As they would, so let us. Still and ever remembring what the Prophet saith, Magnus Rex IEHOVAH, GOD is a more High and mighty Prince than any on earth: stands on His State, will not be thus turned to, thus slightly; with, or without, it skils not. But, we in our turning, to come before Him, all abashed and confounded in our selves; that for a trifle, a matter of nothing, certaine carats of gaine, a few minutes of delight (base creatures that we be) so and so often, Sic & sic faciendo, by such and such sins, have offended so presumptuously against so Glorious a MAIESTIE; so desperately against so Omnipotent a POVVER; so unkindly against so Soveraigne a BOUNTIE so gracious a God and so kind and loving a SAVIOUR.

To take them as they stand. Fasting: Which, were there nothing else but this, that the Church maketh this time of our returne a time of fast, it shewes plainly, in her opinion, how neere these two are allyed, how well they sort together. Which Fast, the Church prescribeth, not only by way of regiment to keep the body low, that it may be a lesse mellow soile for the sinnes of the flesh, (for, this pertaineth to the former part) so to prevent sinne to come; but awards it, as a chastisement for sinne already past. For, to be abridged, whether by others or by our selves, of that which otherwise we might freely use, hath in it the nature of a punishment. They be the words of the Psalme, I wept and chastned my selfe with fasting: Chastned himselfe; So, a chastisement it is. With Fasting. Psal. 69. 10.

And thus preach we fasting: [1] Neither as the Physitians enjoyne it in their Aphorismes, to digest some former surfet. [2] Nor, as the Philosophers in their Morals, to keep the sense subtile. [3] Nor, as the States politike in their Proclamations, to preserve the breed of Cattell, or increase of strength by Sea. But as the holy prophets of God, as Ioel straight after, we doe Sanctificare jejunium, prescribe it, and that to a religious end: Even to chasten our selves for sinne by this forbearance. So, no Physicall, Philosophicall, Politicall; but a Propheticall, yea an Evangelicall fast. For, if in very sorrow, we are to fast, when the Bridegroome is taken away; Much more, when we our selves by our sinnes committed, have beene the cause of His taking, nay, of His very driving away from us. Vers 15. Mat. 9. 15.

And muſt we then faſt? Indeed we muſt, or get us a new Epiſtle for the day, and a new Goſple too. For, as GOD here (in the Epiſtle) commands it; So CHRIST (in the Goſple) preſuppoſeth it with His Cum jejunatis, taking it as granted, We will faſt. That ſure, faſt we muſt, or elſe wipe out this cum jejunio, and that Cum jejunatis, and tell GOD and CHRIST they are not well adviſed; we have found out a way beyond them, to turne unto GOD without any faſting at all.

Mat 6.16.

But, how faſt? To relieve all we may: When we ſpeake of Faſting, Humanum dicimus propter infirmitatem veſtram; we intend not, mens knees ſhould grow weake with faſting. Two kinds of faſting, we find in Scripture: 1. Davids, who faſted, taſted neither bread nor ought elſe, till the Sun was downe: No meat at all: That is too hard. 2. What ſay you to Daniels faſt? He did eat and drink, but not cibos deſiderii, no meats of delight, and (namely) eat no fleſh. The Church (as an indulgent mother) mitigates all ſhee may: Enjoynes not for faſt, that of David (and yet, qui poteſt capere capiat, for all that:) She only requires of us that other of Daniel, to forbeare cibos deſiderii (and fleſh is there expreſly named) Meates and drinks provoking the appetite, full of nouriſhment, kindling the blood: Content to ſuſtaine Nature, and not purvey for the fleſh, to ſatisfie the luſt thereof. And thus (by the grace of GOD) we may: if not Davids, yet Daniels. For, if Davids we cannot, and Daniels we liſt not, I know not what faſt we will leave: for a third I find not.

Rom 6.19. Pſal. 109 24. 2 Sam. 3.35. Dan 10.3. Mat. 19 12. Rom. 13 14.

And yet, even this alſo doth the Church releaſe to ſuch as are in Timothes caſe; have crebras infirmitates. It is not the decay of nature, but the chaſtiſement of ſin ſhe ſeeketh. But, at this doore, all ſcape through: we are all weake and craſie, when we would repent; but, luſty and ſtrong, when to commit ſin. Our Phyſitians are eaſie to tell us, and wee eaſie to believe any that will tell us, Propitius eſto tibi, favour your ſelfe, for it is not for you.

1. Tim. 5.23. Mat. 16.22.

Take heed, God is not mocked, who would have ſin chaſtened. Who ſees (I feare) the pleaſing of our appetite is the true cauſe; the not endangering our health is but a pretence. And He will not have His Ordinance thus dallied with, faſt or looſe. Said it muſt be, that Ioel here ſaith: Turne to God with faſting, or be ready to ſhew a good cauſe why: And to ſhew it to GOD. It is He (here) cals for it (the pen is but Ioels:) He beſt knowes, what turning it is will ſerve our turne, will turne away Ira ventura, which Quis poterit ſuſtinere, who is able to abide? And, take this with you: when faſting and all is in, if it be, Quis ſcit, ſi convertatur Deus? If we leave, what we pleaſe out, then it will be Quis ſcit? indeed.

Ver. 14.

2 With weeping.

The next point (and GOD ſend us well to diſcharge it) is Weeping. Can we not be diſpenſed with that neither, but we muſt weepe too? Truly, even in this point, ſomewhat would be done too: Elſe Ioel will not be ſatisfied, but call on us ſtill. There is (ſaith the Pſalme) a flagon provided by God of purpoſe for them: Therefore, ſome would come; ſome few drops at leaſt. Not, as the Saints of old: No; humanum dicimus here too. [a] Iob's eyes powred forth teares to GOD: [b] David's eye guſhed out with water, Hee all to wet his pillow, with them: [c] Mary Magdalen wept enough to have made a bath. VVe urge not theſe. But if not powre out, not guſh forth, Nonne ſtillabit oculus noſter (ſaith Ieremie) ſhall not our eye afford a drop or twaine?

Pſal. 56.8.

[a] Iob 16.20. [b] Pſal. 119 136 [c] Luk 7.38. Ier. 13.17.

Stay a little, turne and looke backe upon our ſinnes paſt: it may bee, if we could get our ſelves to do it in kind, if ſet them before us and looke ſadly, and not glance over them apace: Think of them not once; but (as EZEKIA did) recogitare, thinke them over and over; conſider the motives, the baſe motives; and weigh the circumſtances, the grievous circumſtances; and tell over our many flittings, our often relapſing, our wretched continuing in them: It would ſet our ſorrow in paſſion, it would bring down ſome; Some would come: our bowels would turn, our repentings rowle together; and lament we would the death of our ſoule, as we do otherwhile the death of a friend; and for the unkindneſſe, we have ſhewed to GOD, as, for the unkindneſſe we doe, that man ſheweth us.

Eſay 38.15.

But,

But, this will aske time. It would not be posted through, as our manner is: we have done straight. It is not a busines of a few minutes: It will aske Saint Peter's χωρῆσαι, retired place, and Saint Paul's σχολάζειν, vacant time. It would aske a Nazarites vow, to doe it as it should be done: Even a sequestring our selves for a time, as they did: In other respects (I grant;) but among others, for this also, even to performe to GOD, a Votive repentance. This (I wish) we would trie. But, we seek no place; we allow no time for it. Our other affaires take up so much, as we can spare little or none for this; which, the time will come, when we shall thinke it the weightiest affaire of all. 1 Pet. 1 9. 1 Cor. 7. 5.

And yet it may be, when all is done, none will come though. For, who hath tears at command? Who can weep when he lists? I know it well, they be the overflowings of sorrow; not of every sorrow, but of the sensuall parts: and being an act of the inferiour parts, reason cannot command them at all times, they will not be had.

3 With mourning.

But if they will not, the Prophet hath here put an ἐνπεφυσιωμένον instead of it (for, so do the Fathers all take it:) Mourne. If weepe we cannot, mourne we can: and mourne we must. Et vos non luxistis (saith the Apostle:) He saith not, Et vos non flevistis, and you have not wept; But, and you have not mourned; as if he should say, that you should have done at the least. Mourning they call, the sorrow which reason it selfe can yeeld. In Schooles, they terme it Dolorem appretiativum, valuing what should be,; rating what the sinnes deserve, though we have it not to lay downe: yet what they deserve, we should; and, that we can. These and these sins I have committed, so many, so heynous, so oft iterate, so long lyen in: these deserve to be bewailed even with teares of blood. 1 Cor 5. 2.

2 This we can: and this too, wish with the prophet (and so let us wish) O that my head were full of water, and my eyes fountaines of teares, to doe it as it should be done! This we can. Ier 9 1.

3 And pray we can, that He which turneth the flint stone into a springing well, would vouchsafe us (even as drie as flints) gratiam lachrymarum (as the Fathers call it) some small portion of that grace to that end. Though weep we cannot, yet wish for it, and pray for it we can. Psal. 114. 8.

4 And complaine we can, and bemoane our selves (as doth the Prophet) with a very little variation from him: My leanesse, my leanesse (saith he) woe is me: My drinesse, my drinesse (may each of us say) woe is me. The transgressors have offended, the transgressors have grievously offended. Grievously offend we can; grievously lament we cannot; My dryneſſe, My dryneſſe, woe is me. Nay, we need not vary, we may even let leanneſſe alone, his owne word. For, dry and leane both is our sorrow (GOD wot) GOD helpe us, This mourne we can. Esay 24. 16.

5 And lastly, this we can: even humbly beseech our mercifull GOD and Father, in default of ours, to accept of the strong crying, and bitter teares, which in the days of His flesh, His blessed SON, in great agonie shed for us: for us (I say) that should, but are not able to do the like for our selves: that what is wanting in ours, may be supplyed from thence. These (by the grace of GOD) we may doe, in discharge of this point. These let us do, and it will be accepted.

4 With renting your hearts

And so now to the last: Rent your hearts. You see, first and last, to the heart we come. For indeed, a meale may be missed, a teare or two let fall, and the heart not affected, for all that. * Esau wept; † Ahab gave over his meat; their hearts both swelling and apostumate still. To shew, that though these be requisite (all;) yet that the passion of the heart is caput pœnitentia: to the heart He commeth againe alwayes, to verifie, that, in both and in all, quod cor non facit non fit; if it be not done with the heart, if the heart doe it not, nothing is done. As in conversion, the purpose of amendment must proceed from the heart: So in our contrition, the sorrow, the anger, for our turning away must pierce to the heart: Some cardiaque passion to be; the heart to suffer. * Gen. 27. 38. † 1 Kin. 21. 27.

And, what muſt it ſuffer? Contrition: It ſhould even conteri, be ground to powder. A contrite heart, it ſhould be: If not that, not contritum, yet cor confractum, a broken heart; broken in peeces, though not ſo ſmall. If neither of theſe; yet with this qualifying here, cor con-ſciſſum, with ſome rent, or cleft. Solutio continui, ſomewhat there is to bee opened; Not only that the apoſtumate matter may breath forth, but much more (which is the proper of this part) that feeling the ſmart there, we may ſay, and ſay it with feeling, Quòd malum, & amarum, that an evill thing it is, and a bitter, to have turned away and forſaken the LORD. Some ſuch thing is the heart to feele, or elſe nothing is done.

Ier. 2. 19.

Now, this renting (if we mark it well) doth not ſo properly pertaine to the paſsion of ſorrow: but rather to another; even to that of anger. [a] Their hearts rent for anger (it is ſaid Act. 7.) And, it eaſily appeareth; For we uſe violence to that we rend. [b] Ephraims ſmiting his thigh, [c] the Publican his breſt: both, the acts of anger, rather than heavineſſe. The Apoſtle puts into his repentance, indignation and revenge, no leſſe than he doth ſorrow.

[b] Ier. 31. 19.
[c] Luk. 18. 13.

2 Cor. 7. 11.

To ſay truth, they are to goe together. Sorrow, if it have no power to revenge, growes to be but a heavie dull paſsion: But, if it have power, indignation and it goe together. One cannot truly be ſaid to be grieved with the thing done, but he muſt be angry with the doer, And we, if we be ſory indeed for our ſin, we will be angry with the ſinner. So was Iob: Therefore I abhor my ſelfe, My ſelfe (ſaith he:) Not ſo much the ſin, which was done and paſt, and ſo uncapable of anger; as my ſelf, for the ſin. Which if it be indignation indeed in us (and not a gentle word) will ſeeke revenge ſome way or other: Grind to powder, break in peeces, at leaſt make a rent, Contritio, Confractio, Conſciſsio, Compunctio, Somewhat it will be.

Iob 42. 6.

But, when we returne to enquire, whether and which of theſe two Acts hath in it the very true eſſence of Repentance? In converſion I find it not: Why? For, after I converted, I repented (ſaith Ieremy;) and Nihil prius aut poſterius ſeipſo, Nothing is after it ſelfe. Converſio then, is not it. And, when we ſeeke for it in this latter: Firſt, in Sorrow it is not: Why? for triſtitia operatur pœnitentiam (ſaith the Apoſtle) Marke that [operatur] workes it, therefore is not it: For, nihil ſui cauſa. It remaines then, of force, that it is in this now of indignation. So that now, (and not before) are we come to the eſſence of it indeed. And, ſet downe that: that ἀγανάκλησις, Indignation is the eſſentiall paſsion; and ἐκδίκησις, reveng (or this renting here) the principall and moſt proper act of a true turning unto GOD.

Ier. 31. 19.

2 Cor. 7. 10.

Now, if you aske, how or which way we can come to make a rent in the heart, ſince no hand may touch it and we live? the meaning is not literall: but that, the heart by reflecting on it ſelfe, is able to make ſuch an impreſsion on it, as the Prophet may well call a rent in the heart. As firſt, even by good morall reſpects, wherewith the very heathen ſet themſelves in paſſion againſt vice. That it is a brutiſh thing; So againſt the nobleneſſe of reaſon: that a ſhamefull; So, againſt publike honeſtie: that, ignominious; So, againſt our credit and good name: That pernicious, as ſhutting us out of heaven (whither we would come) the greateſt loſſe, and pœna damni; and preſſing us down to hell (which we faineſt would flie) the greateſt torment, and pœna ſenſus: (For, even the heathen believed the joyes aud paines of another world:) And yet we for all this, ſo evill adviſed as to commit it.

But, theſe are but κατ' ἄνθρωπον, drawn from man: the Chriſtian man's is to bee εἰς Θεὸν, his eye to GOD. Who, with great indignation, cannot but abhor himſelf, for the manifold indignities offered to God thereby. To the Law of His Iuſtice, to the aw of His Majeſtie, the reverend regard of His Preſence, the dread of His Power, the long-ſuffering of His Love: That (being a creature of ſo vile and brittle conſiſtence) he hath not ſticked, for ſome lying vanitie, ſome trifling pleaſure or pelting profit, to offend ſo many wayes at once; all, odious in themſelves and able to make a rent in any heart that ſhall weigh them aright.

Sure, if we take the impreſsion right, So GOD may work with us, as theſe may worke in us, a juſt indignation: which, if once it be in ſorrow, what the hand can come to,

to, it will ſmite; and would the heart alſo, if it could reach it. And, if it be in kind, it will award the body to faſt, and the mind to ſpend ſome time, in theſe meditations. And this is the Act of renting (as the Prophet;) of revenge (as the Apoſtle.) And theſe two, between them both, in Ioel and in Paul, make up the full power and conſummatum eſt, of our Converſion and Contrition both.

It remaines, that we ſet not the Church to teach us that, which we never meane to learne: but, that we intend and endeavour to do, as we have been taught.

III. The Time: Now therefore.

And to do it now. For, (as in a circle) I returne to the firſt word [Now] which giveth us our time, when we ſhould enter our firſt degree: Now therefore. And when all is done, we ſhall have ſomewhat to do, to bring this to a Nunc, to a timo preſent. But beſides that, now at this time, it is the time that all things turne; Now, is the only ſure part of our time. That which is paſt, is come and gone. That which is to come, may peradventure never come. Till to morrow, till this Evening, till an houre hence, we have no aſſurance. Now therefore. Or if not now, as neere now, with as little diſtance from it, as may be; If not this day, this time now enſuing.

For, though no time be amiſſe, to turne in; yet ſeeing many times goe over our heads, and ſtill we cannot find a time to do it in, the Church (as I ſaid) willing to reduce the diffuſedneſſe of our repentance at large, to the certainty of ſome one ſet time, hath placed this [now] upon the time now begun, and commends it to us for the time of our turning to God.

And we by a kind of form which we perform, by the altering of our diet to a leſſe deſirefull, by oftner reſort hither to Sermons, than at other times (every week twiſe;) theſe make, as if we did agree; ſeeme in a manner to promiſe, as if we would perform ſomewhat now, that we have not all the yeare before.

Sure, the Chriſtian Church ever looked otherwiſe, had another manner face, going in the ſtreet, you ſhould have ſeen by mens countenances, what time of the yeare it was: more grave, more compoſed, than at other times.

Perform it then: And when our turn is done, God ſhall begin His, Et pœnitentiam ſuam gratificabitur noſtræ, Our repentance ſhall beget His. If we turne from the evill we have done, He will turne from us the evill that ſhould have been done to us. Where there was Commination read, with many curſes; He ſhall turn them away, and in ſtead of them, ſhall leave a bleſsing behind Him. We ſhall turne His very ſtile, which at firſt was, ad Me, and in the end is, ad Dominum Deum veſtrum: and ſo make a chang in Him.

In nullo detrimentum patiemini (ſaith the Apoſtle) we ſhall be no loſers by it, A leſſe ſorrow ſhall turne away a greater, by a great deale. Weigh the endleſſe ſorrow we ſhall eſcape by it; it admits no compariſon. The Contriſtation is but ὡρὰν (ſaith he) for an houre; the Conſolation is, for ever and ever. 2 Cor 7. 9. 2 Cor. 7. 8.

To this lugentes there belongeth a Beati, Bleſſed they that thus mourne. To this hunger and thirſt, a ſaturabimini. It is ſo ſet by the Church (the time of it) that our Lent ſhall end with an Eaſter, the higheſt and moſt ſolemne Feaſt in the yeare; the memory of CHRISTS riſing, and the pledge of our bleſſed and joyfull reſurrection. A SER-before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the XIIII. of February, Anno Domini, MDCXXI. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. VI. Verſ. XVI.

Cum autem jejunatis, nolite fieri ſicut hypocritæ triſtes; Exterminant enim facies ſuas, ut appareant hominibus jejunantes: Amen dico vobis, quia receperunt mercedem ſuam.

*Moreover, when you faſt, * look not ſowre as the hypocrites; for they disfigure their faces, that they might ſeem unto men to faſt: Verily I ſay unto you that they have their reward.*

* Or be not like ſowre hypocrites.

Ioel 2.12.

THE Leſſons which this day have beene, and yearly, as upon this day, are read in our eares, doe all ſpeake to us of Faſting. The Leſſon of the Old Teſtament, Turne to me with faſting. The Leſſon of the New, as you have heard: When you faſt, &c. All, either (as the Epiſtle (telling us, what we ſhould doe (Faſt:) Or (as the Goſpell) taking it for granted, that we will faſt, and teaching us, how to faſt, ſo as we may receive a reward for it at GOD's hands.

Theſe being the Leſſons, this the tenour of them; by them there is intimation given us, that the matter of theſe Leſſons, that a Faſt is at hand: that, this when is now. How in our practice it will fall out I know not; but certainly, in the Churches meaning, now. Who would not (we may be ſure) look out an Epiſtle for us beginning with turn to me, cum jejunio, with faſting; and a Goſpel beginning with cum jejunatis, when ye faſt, &c. but when ſhe preſumeth, we meane to faſt, to diſpoſe poſe our ſelves that way. It were all out of ſeaſon to ſeek and ſelect Scriptures, what to avoid, how to behave our ſelves in our faſting, if we meane no ſuch matter; if it ſhall be with us, as yeſterday and the day before it was, and no otherwiſe.

This being the Churches intent; this, her Time, and this her Text; What She commends to us, we commend to you, that you would take notice of it, and prepare your ſelves, for it accordingly: that the Epiſtle be not ſent, and the Goſpell brought you, and both, in vaine.

The Church thus reaching it forth, I tooke this Text: And I tooke it rather (if it might be) to ſtop the mouths of them that maligne it; at leaſt, to remove from it the ſlander of any untrue imputation. They preach it, they print it, and (no remedy) ſo they will have it, that the Locuſts (Apoc. 9.) muſt needs meane us here. Why? The Locuſt is all belly, and we are all for the belly; hoſtes jejuniorum, the profeſt enemies of faſting and of all abſtinence. That we (the Preachers) entertaine you with nothing but with diſcourſe about the myſterie of Godlineſſe: but never with exhortation to the exerciſe of it. That, you (the Hearers) fall ſad, and (as the hypocrites here in the Text) look ſower, not at the act, but at the very name and mention of faſting, at the reading of a Text that tends but that way, as it might be, of this, now.

Sure, for faſting, how we practiſe it, every one is to anſwer for himſelfe: But, that we preach it, I take, this day, you all to witneſſe. Ioel ſhall beare record with his Cum jejunio; And now CHRIST, with his Cum jejunatis, that we call for it. If it come not, it is not our fault, it is not for want of calling for. We ſpeake to a thing that hath no eares: but we ſpeak though: Liberamus animas noſtras, we deliver our owne ſoules, and we deliver our Church from that falſe ſlander of theirs. Ezek 3.19.

The Summe.

To follow then, whither the Scripture leads us, we are to underſtand, that as the Morall Law of GOD (in the Chapter before;) and as Alms and Prayers (in this Chapter.) going through the Phariſees hands, had gathered much droſſe; So had the exerciſe of faſting, likewiſe. It is the manner of the world, and ſo it is of the Prince of the world, to ſophiſticate ever the beſt things with hypocriſie, with ſuperſtition, with a thouſand deviſes more. Our SAVIOUR then, as He had done to the other of the Law, to Almes and Prayer; So, here now He comes to faſting: and comes with his fan in his hand, to do to it, as He had done to them before: to ſever the precious from the vile; the corne in his floore, from the chaffe. Cum jejunatis, is his floore; Nolite, his fan; hypocriſie, the chaffe to be blowen away. Chap. 3. 12.

His purpoſe is, He would have all ſtand and continue in force; as the Law it ſelf, ſo the lawfull and laudable practice of almes, prayer, and faſting, all three. And it is, as if He ſhould ſay: That you give almes, pray, and faſt, I like it well: do ſo ſtill. Only, take this Caveat from me, When ye faſt, beware of the ſower leaven of hypocriſie in your lookes, and of the love of videamini ab hominibus, to be ſeen of men, in your hearts, and all is well: Faſt on and ſpare not. To GOD it is, you faſt; and GOD your heavenly Father ſhall ſee it in ſecret, and ſhall reward you for it openly Luk 12. 2. Ver. 5.

The Diviſion

The parts ariſe of their own accord; and, at the firſt view, give forth themſelves, two. [1] For faſting, one: [2] Againſt hypocriſie, the other. As it were a blaſt of the trumpet of Sion, to the former: A retreit, from the latter. Cum jejunatis is ſet downe to be kept: Nolite eſſe ſicut is fanned away, to be left; the leaven of the Phariſees (which is hypocriſie) is caſt out.

In the former, we are to doe two things, to ſettle the duty in both words, 1. In jejunatis, (firſt) faſting it ſelfe: 2. After, in Cum, the time when. I

In the latter, two things more: 1. The act of ſeparation and caſting out the old leaven, firſt. 2. And then the danger, if we doe it not. The Separation: that we be not like the hypocrites, or, not like ſower hypocrites. Not like them in two things. [1] Not, in making it our labour to compoſe our outſide or countenance. [2] Not, in making it our end, Vt videamini, to be ſeene of men. II

But,

But what if we doe? Then followeth the puniſhment: You have receiued your reward. A gentle puniſhment (one would think) to receiue a reward: but a Puniſhment, and a grieuous one, when we ſhall weigh, how ſilly a thing it is, they receiue, Mens breath: and how great a one they looſe by it, GOD's reward.

Thus ſtand the parts. Of which, the former (I feare) will take up this time, Cum jejunatis only, and no more.

I Iejunatis, The duty of faſting.

CVm jejunatis. Two queſtions there be: [1] One, about jejunatis; whether wee will faſt at all: [2] The other, about Cum, When we will do it. Beſt get us a faſt firſt; and get us a time, after. If the thing, if faſting it ſelfe be looſe, the time will be to ſeeke: God knowes, when. The firſt thing then we are to doe, is to poſſeſſe mens minds with a true conceit touching it. Men ſeeme but faintly perſwaded of it, as it were no needfull part of a Chriſtian mans duty. When yee faſt, yea when we faſt: What make you of this? This leaves us to our ſelves: When, is no precept, to 2 Commanded. enjoyne it. Take it right: Here is Cum jejunio, in the Epiſtle: Cum jejunatis, in the Goſpell. The Precept is in Ioel, Turne to me with faſting: And (within a verſe after) Sanctifie Me a faſt: That is a Precept (I am ſure.) Here, it ſtands thus: What Ioel impoſeth, Chriſt ſuppoſeth: implies the thing out of the Prophet, and ſupplyeth the manner how, from himſelfe.

Ioel. 2. 15.

1 By the Law. Eſay 8 20. But, if we ſtand upon a Precept, we may go higher than Ioel: Even ad Legem (ſaith Eſay) Goe to the Law it ſelfe, and there is one. Nay there are more than one. One, for a ſtanding faſt every yeare, enjoyned with a ſevere pain: he that faſted it not was to be cut off from the people of God, (Numb. 29.) One, for a voluntary faſt, (Num. 30.) For, whatſoever is votive, is voluntary of it ſelfe, but who ſo took it on him by vow, was bound to performe it. One for (both) Integrale, an entire faſt from all, upon the Kipparim day ([a] Levit. 16.) And another for Portionale Iejunium, the Nazarites faſt, from ſome and not from other ([b] Numb. 6.) [c] The Law will be for it: The Law it ſelfe was given at a faſt to Moſes; a faſt of forty dayes.

Num. 29. 7. 30. 2. 13.

[a] Levit. 16. 29.
[b] Num. 6. 3. 4.
[c] Exod. 24. 18. 24. 18

1 By the Prophets The Prophets are for it too: Under them, and by their direction, to the ſtanding faſts in the Law, you have five more added. One, in [d] Eſter: foure, in [e] Zacharie: all enjoyned.

[d] Eſt. 4 16.
[e] Zac. 7. 5. 8. 19. &c.

Amo. 8. 11. It went then, as now it does; The common ſort (by their good wills) would neither have holy day nor faſting day. In Amos they complaine of the Sabboth, Quando tranſibit? When will it be over? They thought it as long as any two dayes, that they might be at vendamus merces, opening their ſhops and ſelling their wares. In Zachary,

Zac. 7. 3. they ſhrugge at their faſts, What and muſt we faſt ſtill: Yet more faſting? have wee not faſted enough, and have done it thus and thus long? A ſign, they would have been ridde of their faſting. Willingly, had the ſhambles open, as well as the ſhops. But it would not be, they could not obtaine it: The Prophet held them to it, and would not releaſe them.

3 By Chriſt himſelfe. But, this is Old Teſtament: When the New came, what then? I had rather you heard S. Auguſtine than my ſelf: Ego (ſaith he) animo revolvens, &c. I going over in my mind, the writings of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles in the New Teſtament [video jejunium eſſe præceptum] ſee faſting is commanded, there is a precept for faſting. So, faſting is

Mat. 2. 20. in precept there, if we will truſt S. Auguſtines eyes. And we may: He that (in this place) ſaith [Cum jejunatis] when ye faſt: ſaith, in another, Tum jejunabunt, Then they ſhall faſt: and that amounts to a Precept (I trow.)

Here you ſee Cum jejunatis a part of the Goſpell, a head in Chriſts firſt and moſt famous ſermon, His ſermon in the mount.

So that, if there ſhould be a meeting about it (ſuch as happened in the holy mount at the transfiguration of CHRIST) of Moſes for the Law, Elias for the Prophets, CHRIST for the Goſpell, famous all three for their faſts, and for one kind of faſt, all (the faſt we now begin) all would be for it: at no time to be left, but, in all three eſtates to be retained; to have the force of a precept in all.

But lawes and their precepts do often ſleepe and grow into diſuſe. How is jejunatis for practice? Hath it beene uſed, and when hath it? The faſt of [a] Ai, under Ioſua; [b] At Gibia, under the Iudges; At [c] Mizpa, under Samuel; [d] At Hebron, under David; [e] Of Ieremie, before the Captivitie; [f] Of Daniel, under it; Of [g] Zachary, after it: At [h] Ierusalem, of the Iewes, at the preaching of Ioel; [i] At Ninive, of the Gentiles, at the preaching of Ionas: All of theſe ſhew when, and that it was no ſtranger with Gods people, ſo long as the Law and Prophets were in force.

And what was it, when the Goſpell came in? At [k] Antioch (where the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians) we find them at their faſt: the Prophets of the New Teſtament there, as well as the Prophets of the old. Our Saviour ſaid to them, [l] When He was gone they ſhould faſt. So they did. S. Paul for one; [m] he did it oft (2 Cor. 11.) And for the reſt they approved themſelves CHRISTS Miniſters (inter alia, by this proofe for one) [n] by their faſting (2 Cor. 6.) And, what themſelves did they adviſed others to do; even to [o] σχολάζειν, to make them a vacant time to faſt in. So that where the Church for this day (otherwiſe than her cuſtome is, on other dayes) hath ſorted us an Epiſtle, out of the Old Teſtament, and a Goſpell, out of the New (both uſe to be out of the New) She did it for this end, to ſhew, that faſting hath the wings of both Cherubins to cover it: both Teſtaments Old and New; Ioel, for the one; Chriſt, for the other. So at all hands to commend it to us.

Sure, in the prime of Chriſtianity, it cannot be denied, it was in high eſteem (faſting) in frequent practice, of admirable performance. Which of the Fathers have not Homelies yet extant in the praiſe of it? What Story of their lives, but reports ſtrange things of them, in this kind? That, either we muſt cancell all Antiquity, or we muſt acknowledge the conſtant uſe and obſervation of it in the Church of Chriſt. That Chriſt ſaid not here [Cum jejunatis] for nothing. They that were under Grace, went far beyond them under the Law, in their Cum, and in their jejunatis, both.

Precept then, or practice it wanted not. Neither did they want a ground. It was then holden (and ſo may yet, for ought that I know) that, when we faſt, we exerciſe the act of more vertues than one. Firſt, an act of that branch of the vertue of Temperance that conſiſts (not in the moderate uſing, but) in abſtaining wholly. Abſtinence is a vertue. Sure I am, the primordiale peccatum, the primordiall ſin was * not abſtaining. Secondly, an act or fruit of repentance: there is pœna in pœnitentia, in the very body of the word; ſomething penall in penitence. And of that penall part is faſting: And ſo an act of Iuſtice corrective, reduced to S. Pauls * vindicta, or his * Caſtigo Corpus meum. Thirdly, an act of humiliation, to humble the ſoule, which is both the firſt and moſt uſuall terme for faſting, in the Law and Prophets. For ſure, keep the body up, you ſhall but evill, you ſhall have much adoe to bring or keep the ſoule down, to humble it. Fourthly, They that are CHRISTS (ſaith the Apoſtle) have and doe crucifie the fleſh with the luſts of it. Faſting is one of the nailes of the croſſe, to which the fleſh is faſtened, that it riſe not, luſt not againſt the Spirit: At leaſt, faſting, we fulfill not the luſts of the fleſh. Fifthly, Nay, they goe further, and out of Ioel's Sanctificate jejunium, and out of Luk. 2. 37. Where the good old Widow is ſaid to have ſerved GOD (and the word is λατρεύω) by faſting and prayer (not by prayer only, but by faſting and prayer) they have not doubted, but that there is Sanctitie in it, nor to entitle it an act of the Service of GOD: that we ſerve GOD by it. Sixthly, And ſerve Him with the chiefe ſervice of all; even of Sacrifice. For ſure, they are all of one aſſay (theſe three) Almes, Prayer, and Faſting. If the other two, if Almes bee a Sacrifice ([a] with ſuch ſacrifices GOD is pleaſed;) If Prayer be one (one, and therefore called [b] the calves of our lips;) no reaſon, to deny Faſting to be one too. If [c] a troubled ſpirit be a ſacrifice to God, why not a troubled body likewiſe? (And it troubles us to faſt, that is too plaine:)

Rom.12.1. Since we are to offer our bodies as well as our ſoules, both a Sacrifice to God: As our ſoule by devotion, So our bodie by mortification. And theſe three, to offer to God our [1] ſoule by prayer, [2] our body by abſtinence, [3] our goods by almes-deeds, hath beene ever counted tergemina hoſtia, the triple or threefold Chriſtian Holocauſt or whole burnt offering. Seventhly, and laſt, the exerciſe of it, by inuring our ſelves to this part of true Chriſtian Diſcipline, ſerves to enable us to have ventrem moratum, the maſtery of our bellie againſt need be: The Fathers call it ἀσκησιν and thoſe that uſed it ἀσκητας. S. Paul gave it the word firſt (Act.24.16) and ſaith, he took it himſelf, 1 Cor.9.27.

Uſe is much; for if before we need, we be not uſed in ſome ſort, at times, to abridge our ſelves, but ſtill fill and farce our bodies, weekes, moneths, yeares together; habituate our ſelves in it; what need ſoever there ſhould be, what occaſion though never ſo preſſing (ſuppoſe God ſhould call us to faſt, as Eſa.22.12. Say the daies ſhould Chap 9 14. come, of the loſſe of the Bride-groome) we ſhould not be able for our lives, to break our ſelves of that, which all our lives long we have been accuſtomed unto. But, as it is ſaid of Dionyſius lying at a ſiege and forced to keepe order, he fell ſick becauſe he kept order and forfeited not ſtill (that, having beene the corrupt cuſtome of his former life) So ſhould we. Or for lacke of it, grow as impatient as Eſau, rather than looſe our
Gen.25.30. broth, for our birth right. Or as they in Numb 11.5. not part with our fleſh pots to die for it, but ſit by them, and die by them, and ſo with them alſo be buried in the graves of luſt.

The want of which enuring, you ſee what it hath brought us to. We are ſo evill able to doe it, as we are ſcarce able to heare of it. Our Saviour, when He ſpeakes of faſting, points at this: Having beene ſo long at our old wine, we cannot away, nor re-
Chap.9.17. liſh new. We ſee the experience in our preaching it. Our bottles are ſo uſed to the old, that they leake with the new; as faſt as we powre it in, it runs out again. We muſt provide us new veſſels. Elſe, all we ſpeak of this theme, will be ſpoken into the aire. But, I forget my ſelf.

I To come to the Text: Cum jejunatis. When ye faſt: To worke out of it a little. I ſay firſt, this very when ſhewes CHRISTS liking of it; that there is a time allowed. Elſe Luk.21.34. would he allow it no Cum, no when, no time at all. For, videte ne quando, not a moment for ryot, or for any thing, God hath not required. And, if for no idle word, for no idle act (we may be ſure) is there any Cum allowed.

2 Again, When ye faſt: This when, is a preſuppoſing at leaſt: and qui ſupponit, ponit. For, can any man phanſie, that Chriſt would preſuppoſe ought that were not required of us by God? to be asked by the Prophet (or rather by God himſelf) Quis iſta quæſivit Eſay 1.12. de manibus veſtris? Who ever required of you to do any ſuch thing?

3 Nay, His manner of the delivery, thus breaking into it with a Cum autem, But when you faſt (as faſt you will, I make no doubt;) here, But when, is plaine poſitive: Nay, it is of the nature of a Poſtulatum; takes it as granted, layes it for a ground. This (I ſay) is a precept, and more than a precept; more binding. Ever more forcible is that which is preſumed, than that which is enjoyned. One, we are confident, will be yeelded to ſtraight; needs no injunction. The other, we muſt uſe our authoritie, and well if we ſo get it.

4 The very things he conſorts it with (to wit) Almes and Prayer (for, them and this He marſhals in one and the ſame rank, cares for them all alike, rewards them all alike:) and they (I truſt) are in precept: Yet they are no otherwiſe but preſuppoſed, even as this is, When ye faſt, when ye pray.

5 Then the paines He takes with it, to fan it, to purge the old leven from it, to rectifie and reduce it to the right manner and end: He would never have taken theſe paines, but that he held it worth His paines; but that He would have us uſe it, and uſe it not ſeldome. For, things ſeldome to happen the Law takes no order for,

6 The parties to whom He ſpeaks this; they be his Diſciples. Whereby it will fall out to be, not a dutie only, but a Chriſtian dutie; becauſe they were Chriſtians, the firſt Chriſtians of all, to whom this Cum jejunatis here is ſpoken. It is for them too; they are not exempted from it.

Nay,

Nay, He likes it ſo well, as he goes about even to prepare even hypocrites, and to frame them fit for it. A ſign, it was not their double faſt, but their double face (that is) their diſſembling firſt, and then their diſdaine of other, He found fault with. 7

And (to conclude) a double promiſe He annexeth: Firſt, to anſwer their complaint (Eſay 58. 3.) Why do we faſt and thou ſeeſt it not, puniſh our ſelves and thou regardeſt it not? That they ſhall never need to feare, their faſting ſhall be begged for concealed; though it were never ſo ſecret done, though not a man on earth ſee them, He from heaven will caſt his eye on them and regard them. 8

And ſecond, as He ſhall not want an eye to ſee, ſo neither ſhall He a hand to reward them for it: They ſhall not faſt for nothing. His heavenly father that ſees them in ſecret, ſhall reward them openly: the upſhot of all. 9

All theſe, [1] The manner, He delivers it in: [2] The Parties, He delivers it to: [3] The things, He matches it with, [4] The honour, He doth it, [5] The Care, He ſhewes of it, [6] That He frames his Diſciples, [7] That He frames even hypocrites for it, [8], [9] The double promiſe He aſſureth upon it: All theſe are ſo many paſſings thorow the furnace. Would He do all this and not hold it a duty required by God, and acceptable to Him? Have we a Precept, a Practice, a Promiſe; a flat Precept, conſtant Practice, and an ample Promiſe, and doubt we yet whether we ſhould do it or no? No ſure. As long as theſe words ſhall ſtand in S. Matthew, Iejunatis muſt ſtand, and have a Cum, a time when allowed for it. And now to that Cum let us come.

II. Cum The time for faſting.

Allowing jejunatis, the thing, we cannot but allow it a time, when. For, * there is a time when for every thing under the Sun. Only, when that when ſhall be, we ſhall not ſo eaſily agree. We would fain have our faſt, looſe; be left to our ſelves for the time: This when to be, when our ſelves pleaſe. And, when will it be? Indeed, the practice of the world would make one think, this when to be without a then; a time (as they ſay) in nubibus. A caſe but put; When, (that is) when we liſt, and if we liſt, and not elſe. As if CHRIST had ſaid; If ever you do, if at any time you feele your ſelf diſpoſed, then to obſerve this caution. Otherwiſe, left to our own libertie, when that ſhall be, or whether it ſhall be, or no.

* Eccleſ. 3. 1.

If this ſhould be ſo, I have hit upon a very happy Text. For, if this be all; It is no ſooner ſaid than done; done every where all this Land over. Nay, we may ſay with the Young-man in the Goſpell, All this have we done from our youth up. For, when we faſt, we look not ſowre, we diſfigure not our faces, we never ſeek to be ſeen of men. I ſay, when we faſt: for, the truth is, we faſt not at all: But when we faſt, all this is kept. That if this ſhould be the meaning, we have done, before we begin. Luk. 18. 21.

To deſtroy a Text, is not ſo evill, as to make a Text deſtroy it ſelf; which, by this ſenſe will come to paſſe. But, if this ſenſe be ſenſleſſe, this gloſſe (as a viper) eats out the bowels of the Text. We muſt then reſolve, this is no caſe put; it is a ground laid. No Hypothetical faſt, if you ſhall; but, Categorical, when ye do. For except it be, all that followes is to no purpoſe. To what purpoſe is it, to direct what not to doe, what to doe is our faſt, if we never meane to faſt? for CHRIST to ſet us down inſtructions how to carry our ſelves, in that, we never meane to go about? Plain dealing were, to tell Him, we would uſe His counſell in ſome other matter: as for faſting, we find our ſelves no way diſpoſed to it. But, by the grace of GOD, we are not ſo far gone yet. We ſee, His will is, we ſhould do it; and take a time to do it we will, and when is that? When ye faſt? when faſt ye? A time (we ſaid) there is, if for all things under the Sun, then for that.

Let us ſpeak but after the manner of men, go to it but naturâ tenus (as ſaith Tertullian) and Nature it ſelfe will teach us when. Mark but when Nature will yeeld to it; when and in what caſe, the naturall man will faſt, without eye to God, or Chriſt, or Religion at all. So ſhall we be within the Apoſtle's, Doth not nature it ſelfe teach you? 1 Cor. 11. 14.

1 Nature's time. 1 When in feare

The time of feare, is a time of faſting with the naturall man, Nec eſt ſibi tempus in periculo periculo, for in time of danger men have no mind of meat. They in the ſhip with S. Paul when they looked every houre to be caſt away (the tempeſt was ſuch,) there was (ſaith S. Luke) πολλὴ ἀσιτία, no ſpending of victuals, all that while. Will we naturally faſt for feare of the wrack of our ſhip, and not be afraid as much of the wrack of our ſoules by ſin, and faſt for that? Doth not Nature teach us this? There is one when.

Act 27.21.33.

3 When in griefe.

When the naturall man is in any inward grief of heart, it will take away his ſtomack, he will faſt; Semper mœroris ſequela jejunium, ut lætitiæ acceſsio ſagina (ſaith Tertullian) faſting followeth mourning, as feaſting doth mirth. The [a] time of mourning is one of Salomons times: Why that is our time of faſting. [b] Faſting and mourning Ioel joynes them both. The afflicted ſoule, in his prayer (Pſal. 102. 4.) My heart was ſmitten with heavineſſe, how then? So that I forgat to eat my bread. Our Saviour Chriſt ſhewes it beſt: He was asked, Why faſt not your Diſciples? He anſwers not, how can they faſt? (as He ſhould, for that was their queſtion:) but, how * can they mourne, while the bridegroome is with them? As much to ſay as, if they could mourn, they would not faile but faſt certainly. So (we ſee) did Anna, [c] Flebat, & non capiebat cibos. So (we ſee) did [d] David, for the death of Ionathan: and again when his child lay a dying, mourned and faſted for both. Upon ſorrow for the death of a friend, or a child, can we faſt then, dictante naturâ; and can we not do as much for our ſins, the death of our ſoules? Doth not Nature teach us that? Nor, for the death of Chriſt neither, which our ſins were the cauſe of? There is another, a ſecond when.

3 When in anger.

Thirdly, Anger him throughly, the naturall will to his faſt: * Ahab, for curſt heart that he could not have his will, Naboth would not let him have his Vineyard: to bed he goes, and no meat will down with him. Could he, out of his pure naturals, for curſt heart, leave his meat and faſt, and cannot we doe the like for juſt indignation at our ſelves; for provoking Gods anger with the curſed thoughts of our heart, and words of our mouth, and deeds of our whole body? cannot we be got to it? Will not Nature teach us, this? A third when.

* 1 King. 21.4

4 When in a longing deſire.

Fourthly, The naturall man, when he is in the fervour of his deſire (if it be an earneſt deſire) he will perſue that he deſires ſo hard, as he will forget his meat quite. Not a man ſo hardy as to eat any thing till Sun ſet, ſaith Saul, when he had his enemies in chaſe: Such was his deſire of victorie.

1 Sam. 14.24.

What ſpeak we of victorie? we ſee Eſau ſo eager in following his ſport, that he came home at night ſo faint, and he paid deare for his Supper; yet felt it not all day, while he was hot on his game.

Did we hunger and thirſt for the recoverie of GODS favour (as did Saul for his victorie, or Eſau for his ſport) we would not think it much to faſt as they did. Will not Nature teach us this neither? A fourth when. Put the naturall man into any of theſe paſſions kindly, you ſhall need proclaime no faſt for him, he will do it of himſelfe.

Now mark theſe foure well: [1] Feare, [2] Sorrow, [3] Anger, and [4] Deſire, and look into 2 Cor. 7. 11. if they be not there made (as it were) the foure elements of repentance, the conſtitutive cauſes of it. [1] Feare, the middle point, the center of it. [2] Sorrow, that works it. And if ſory for ſin, then of neceſſity, [3] Angry with the ſinner (that is our ſelvs) for committing it. It is there called indignation, and no ſlight one, but proceeding ad vindictam, to be wreaked on our ſelves for it. [4] And Deſire is there too, and Zeale joyned with it to give it an edge. Theſe foure the proper paſſions all of repentance, and theſe foure carry every one (as we ſay) his faſt on his back. Much more, where they all meet, as, in true earneſt repentance, they all ſhould.

It is ſure, God planted theſe paſſions in our nature, to be beſtowed chiefly upon their Chiefe objects. And their chief objects are: [1] Of feare, that which is moſt fearful, the wrath of God. [2] Of anger, that which moſt certainly procureth it (that is) our ſin. [3] Of Deſire, that, than which nothing is more to be deſired, Gods favour. [4] Of Sorrow, that we have moſt cauſe to be ſory for, the loſſe of it. There then to ſhew them, there to beſtow them: which if we did in kind, we need never take thought for a cum to our jejunatis.

For grief of heart, for worldly loſſe, for bodily feare of drowning, for bitter anger we can do it: why not, for the griefe of our grievous offences? for feare of being drowned in perdition dition eternall? Why not, for indignation of our many indignities offered GOD? Alas, it but ſhews our affections of ſorrow, anger, feare, deſire, are quick, have life, are very affections (indeed) in ſecular matters: but dead and dull, and indeed no affections at all, but plain counterfeits, in things pertaining to God, or that concern the eſtate and hazard of our ſoules.

To take down a peccant humour (as we call it) in our body, whereby we feare impaire of our health, we can and do enter into a ſtrict and tedious diet, and hold out wel: We can forbeare this and that, as we are bidden (though we love it well) if we be but told, it will do us hurt. If for the health of our body, we will do that, which, for our ſoules health, we will not, I cannot tell what to ſay to us.

What ſpeak I of health? To win but a prize at a running or a wreſtling, Abſtinet ſe ab omnibus (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*9.) They will abſtaine from all things, and undergo a ſtrict regiment for a long time before: and all is but for a poore Silver game. What ſhall I ſay then, if we cannot be got to endure ſo much, to obtain the heavenly prize, which is in part done (as there he ſaith) by caſtigo corpus meum? This for the naturall mans cum, when he will faſt. 1 Cor.9.25. Ibid. Ver.27.

Will ye now ſee the Scriptures when, when that ſets us out our time? They bee in a manner the very ſame: Scripture and Nature vary not, dictate to us the ſame time, both. The Scriptures when.

Our firſt When: What time any great danger hangs and hovers over our heads; that, is God times (ſaith Eſay 22.12.) GOD Himſelfe doth then call us to faſting. No time then, to kill oxen, or dreſſe ſheep, eat fleſh and drink wine: A great pain is there ſet upon it. God muſt needs take it ill, if when he bids us faſt, we fall to feaſt. And this when, is of greateſt example: None ſo frequent in all the Bible, as faſts of this nature. Never came their danger toward them, [a] of plague, but David: [b] of famine, but Ioel: [c] of war, but Ioſaphat: [d] of any deſtruction threatned, but not onely good Queene Heſter, but wicked [e] Ahab; nay, even the heathen King of [f] Ninive, to their faſts ſtraight; flying to it, as to a forcible meanes (and ſo they ever found it) to turne away GODS wrath, and ſo the danger, the matter of their feare. This is a time When: and we (then) to do it. When in danger.

Now, if for the effect we faſt; for the cauſe much more. Of theſe, of all other our miſeries, the cauſe is within our ſelves. Our ſin, whereby GODS anger is kindled and theſe ever follow upon it. When therefore we would proceed againſt our ſelvs for ſin [a] humble our ſelves (the phraſe of the Law) [b] chaſten our ſelves (of the Pſalme) [c] puniſh our ſelves (of the Prophets) [d] take reveng of our ſelves (the Apoſtles phraſe) tum jejunabunt in die illo: this, is a way; then, is a time to do it. Faſting is a puniſhment to the fleſh, [e] Modicum panis & pauxillum aquæ was a part of Michea's puniſhment. By it, as to amerce our ſelves (as it were) for abuſing our liberty before, and making it an occaſion to the fleſh, and thereby to prevent his judgement by judgeing our ſelves: Do de me pœnas ut ille parcat (it is Auguſtine.) This ſo proceeding of ours to take puniſhment on our ſelves, it is illex miſericordiæ (ſaith Tertullian) it allures, inclines God to mercy; when he ſees us angry with our ſelves in good earneſt, and doe ſomewhat, His anger ceaſes: Nam qui culpâ offenditur, pœna placatur, whom the fault offends, the puniſhment appeaſes; whether His puniſhment, or ours. But, He had rather, ours than His: that we ſhould do it, than He. 2 When in ſin. 1 To puniſh it

And this to extend to the body alſo, and to the chaſtening of it. For, doth the ſoule only ſin? Doth not the body alſo? And ſhall the ſoule ſuffer ſorrow for ſin, and ſhall the body ſuffer nothing, and yet was in the ſame tranſgreſſion? If it ſhall, then at leaſt pœna damni (for, pœna ſenſus I am ſure, we would be more loth to come to.) And what pœna damni but abſtinere a licitis quia illicita concupivit, To deny our ſelves, that we might, for doing that we might not? There is another Cum.

Secondly, As it is a chaſtiſement for ſin, when it is done: So hath it alwaies beene held to have in it a medecinable force, a ſpeciall good remedie to prevent ſin, when it is not yet fallen on us, or we into it; but grudges us only (as it were) and whereinto To prevent it.

we are like to fall, for that we are now leading, even entring into tentation. This alſo is a time when. And this time we ground upon Chriſts time of faſting : His faſting went immediately before His tentation.

Mat. 4. 1, 2.

No wayes needfull for Himſelfe was CHRISTS faſt. None is ſo ſimple as to thinke, the Tempter would have prevailed againſt Him, though He had taken His meales; eat, and drunk, the forty dayes before. It was not for Himſelfe, it was for us His faſt: Exemplarily to teach us, it will be a great vantage, if (prepared by this exerciſe) we ſhall encounter the evill Spirit. Specially if it be ſome kind of them, if an uncleane ſpirit : For, that kind is not caſt out (no not kept out) but, either by jejunatis, or not at all. CHRIST's faſting then before His tentation, is to ſhew us, it is good faſting againſt tentation. At leaſt, this way we ſhall weaken his forces, by keeping downe our fleſhly luſts, which (ſaith S. Peter) fight againſt the ſoule, and lying in our owne boſome, oft betray us to the Fiend. For, when all is ſaid that can be, Bernard's ſaying will be found true; that Nutriuntur cum carne & vitia carnis. And, if Religion did not, experience teacheth us, that. Ply the body apace, let it be kept high, how mellow a ſoyle it proves for the ſins of the fleſh! And that, if by abſtinence we crop not the buds of Senſualitie, they will ripen and ſeed to the ruine of our ſoules. So, there is uſe both wayes of it. [1] Uſe of caſtigo corpus, for the time paſt : Uſe [2] of in ſervitutem redigo, for the time to come. Iejuna, quia peccâſti, Iejuna, ut ne pecces, both (ſaith Chryſoſtome.) One, as a puniſhment, with reference to ſin already committed: The other, as a preſervative for noli amplius peccare, that we commit it not again. Two cauſes more, and two times, When.

4 When in want of ſome good.

But, hath faſting his uſe in evill things only, and repelling them? hath it not alſo in good things, and procuring them? Yes ſure. I demand, doth there never happen us, that we have ſome cauſe more than ordinary, the procuring of GODS favour whereto, and the ſucceſſe whereof, with more than ordinary prayer we would commend to GOD? Why there then, is another Cum. As, when Heſter would move the King, for the ſafety of her people : or Nehemias, for the new building of the wall of Hieruſalem; Both found good of this, that when there is uſe of earneſt and heartie prayer, it will bee the more earneſt and hearty, if cum jejunatis do alſo go with it. We have otherwhile extraordinary occaſions in our worldly affaires, and then, we make no account of a meales loſſe : have we none ſuch in ſpiritualibus to GOD-ward? None but vulgar there? Never any, but ſuch as we can entertaine with our common dull devotion? Need none other, but as if the buſineſſe, between GOD and our ſoule, were the ſillieſt and pooreſt buſineſſe we had to go about?

Heſter. 4 16.
Nehem. 9. 1, 2.

5 When in ſpirituall exerciſe.

But ſay we have none; ſhall we at no time ſequeſter our ſelves, and, for ſome ſmall time χωρίζειν, (it is * Saint Peters word) get us a withdrawing-place; σχολάζειν (it is † S. Pauls) make us a vacant time, of purpoſe, to intend devout and ghoſtly meditation throughly? A caſe, which S. Paul preſumes, at one time or other, every good Chriſtian man and woman will not faile but do. Then, hath faſting a time too; and one vacancy to ſerve for both.

* 2 Pet. 3. 7.
† 1 Cor. 7. 5.

It is a ſpeciall friend to prayer; to feather it, to put a vigour or fervour into it. Therefore, where (almoſt) ſhall you find them but coupled, faſt and pray, one following ſtraight in the necke of another? Even here, preſently before, was CHRIST in a treatie of prayer : and here now, immediately after it, He fals to ſpeake of faſting. This was not for nothing: But, as if He ſhould give thereby a ſpeciall Item, that there is a mutuall reciprocall correſpondence; nay, an alliance betweene them, to ſanctifie and ſupport either the other. And namely, a ſpeciall vertue in faſting, to awake up and quicken our devotion, thereby the better to elevate our mindes unto GOD. We feele this, or we feele nothing; that dull is our devotion, and our prayers full of yawning, when the braine is thicke with the vapour, and the heart preſſed downe with the charge of the ſtomacke : And that our devotion and all elſe, is performed (as Tertullian ſaith) pollentiore mente, and vivaciore corde, our wits more freſh, our ſpirits more about us, while we are in virgine ſalivâ, yet in our faſting ſpittle; when faſting and prayer are not aſunder, but we ſerve God in both. Our Morning prayer, that, that that is the Incenſe (ſaith the Pſalm:) Our Evening, is but the ſtretching out of our hands, in compariſon of it, faint and heavie. Pſal. 141. 2.

Theſe then: the time, [1] Of feare of the danger ſin will draw upon us: [2] Of indignation at our ſin the cauſe of it. [3] Of ſorrow for that we have done, [4] Of care, that wee do ſo no more: [5] Of taking down the fleſh: [6] Of lifting up the ſpirit: [7] Of averting evill: [8] Of procuring good: [9] Of giving our ſelves wholly to Spirituall exerciſe: Theſe are all cauſes, Why: Theſe are all times, When; all of the Scriptures limitting; all, of the Saints practice, there.

And indeed, all of Chriſt's owne aſſigning. For, venient dies, there will come daies (ſaith CHRIST.) Doe thoſe dayes never come? When come they? Verily when evill dayes come upon us, we may hang up our harps then, the marriage feaſt is at an end with us, and we then to faſt (ſaith CHRIST) according to the letter. 1 Chap. 9. 15. Pſal. 137. 2.

But, goes He from us only corporally by adverſity? Goes he not ſpiritually alſo? Yes: and whenſoever we fall into any grievous ſin, though the piping may continue (perhaps) yet the Bridegroome is gone; aſſure your ſelf, gone he is; Et tum jejunabunt, and then faſt we muſt: Why? even for very grief, that by our wretched folly, we have ſet Him gone. For, if when He is taken from us, faſt we muſt: muſt we not much more, when we our ſelves, by our lewd carriage have been the cauſe (I ſay not, of His taking, but) even of His very chaſing and driving away from us? 2

Thirdly, againſt tentation, we need to faſt; for, againſt His tentation Chriſt faſted, that needed it not. 3

And laſt, His cloſe ſo joyning, and ſo oft, of theſe two ([1] faſting, and [2] prayer) ſo together ſtill, makes that the time of fervent prayer is a time of CHRISTS appointing too; and that ſo intimated, even in this very place here. 4

But, all this while we have been ſpeaking of when we are to faſt at large, or when upon ſome occaſion: In the meane time, we ſay nothing of this time now at hand. This is not upon any occaſion: it is a yearely recurrent faſt: Will this alſo come within the liſts of Cum jejunatis? I take it, it will. For ſhall our faſting be altogether when we will our ſelves? ſhall it not alſo be ſometime when the Church will? May we bind our ſelves, and may not ſhe alſo bind us? Hath ſhe no intereſt in us, no power over us? The Synagogue of the Iewes (we ſee) had power to preſcribe faſts, and did: Hath the Church of CHRIST none? Is ſhe in worſe caſe than the Synagogue? No indeed. If Recab might enjoyn his ſons, She may hers. She is our Mother, ſhe hath the power of a Mother over us; and a Mother hath power to give laws to her children. And ſo Cum jejunatis is, When you faſt by the Churches appointment, alſo: the Churches cum. This is ſure: No man hath GOD to his Father, that hat hnot the Church for his Mother: and that, once and twiſe in the Proverbs, order is taken, as to keep the preceps of our Father, ſo not to ſet light by the lawes of our Mother. Ira Patris and dolor Matris, are together in one verſe: He that grieves her, angers him. And he cannot but grieve her, that little ſets by her wholeſome orders. The Apoſtle (we ſee) S. Paul by name, though he had beene in the third heaven, yet he deferred to talem conſuetudinem, the Churches cuſtome, and reſts in it. We muſt learne to do the like, and not ſet light by, them as our manner is. The Application to the time of Lent. Ier. 35. 6. Prov. 1. 8. 17. 25. 1 Cor. 11. 16.

This I may ſay for this Cum, It is no Cuſtome lately taken up: No Law of the Church our Mother that now is She is growen old, and her ſenſes faile her: She erres, or at leaſt is ſaid to erre, at every bodies pleaſure. It is a cuſtome (this) of the Church, while it was à Chriſto recens, yet freſh and warme from Chriſt, The Church, which was the Mother of the Apoſtles themſelves, at all times kept; every where obſerved; then, and ever ſince. Some, to ſhift it, frame to themſelves a feare of (I wot not what) ſuperſtition, where no feare is. Before any ſuperſtition was ſtirring, any popery hatched, it was, this faſt was. Lex abſtinendi in Quadrageſimâ ſemper fuit in Eccleſia (ſaith the Oracle of Antiquity, Theophilus Alexandrinus) Lent was ever in the Church. Nos unam geſimam ſecundùm traditionem Apoſtolorum, we have but one Lent, (the Montaniſts had three) but, that one was delivered us by the Apoſtles (ſaith S. Hierome.) Why ſhould I weary you with reckoning them up? What one more ancient Writer than other is there, but you ſhall find it in him expreſly, even up to Ignatius, who lived with the Apoſtles themſelves? Apoſtolike then, it is; and for ſuch S Hierome avowes it; and when that is ſaid, enough is ſaid for it, I think. Yet it is good (you know it) the faſt ſo delivered, and by the Church ever and every where ſo kept, the Councell of Gangra hath laid an Anathema on them that keep it not, avoid it how they can that keep it not.

And ſure in generall, that this power ſhould remain in the Church, to preſcribe us ſet times, was moſt behoofefull. Every man (ſo we would have it) to be left to himſelf, for prayer, faſting, ſacrament. Nay for Religion too (now) and all? For GOD's ſake let it not be ſo: let us not be left altogether to our ſelves; No, not in Prayer. Private prayer doth well; but let us be ordered to come to Church, and to doe it there, Phariſees, Publicans, Peter and Iohn and all: Let us have our daies appointed and our houres ſet for it. If all were left to us, God knowes, I durſt not promiſe, what ſhould become of Prayer it ſelfe. The like ſay I for the Sacrament: Let us have a cum when to come to that, too. And ſo for Faſting: Faſt privately in GODS name: But heare you, let not the Church truſt to that. Nor ſhe hath not held it wiſdome ſo to do: but, as in both them, (Prayer and the Sacrament,) So in this, holds us to our order of dayes and times eſtabliſhed. Them if we keep, ſo it is: Otherwiſe, were it not for the Churches times, I doubt there would be taken ſcarce any time at all. Now yet, ſomewhat is done: but leave us once at libertie, libertie hath loſt us ſome already, and will looſe us the reſt, if it be not looked to in time.

The reſt, are matters of Diſcipline, rather than Doctrine: [1] The number of fortie: [2] The ſeaſon of the yeare: [3] The manner of abſtinence. Somewhat may be ſaid to content us: But remember, it came from the Apoſtles: that is it that binds us; that is it, that ſets it faſt.

The cauſe of it.

That which hath beene ſaid, is for ſome ſet time at large, for a cum: but, why this cum, at this time, now? Why forty dayes? Why before Eaſter? Why this faſt? It is of all hands confeſt, that ordained it was, as a part of the Diſcipline of Repentance: And much was done in it, about Publike Penitents. Yet not for them only. But, even with them, out of the bowels of a Mother, the Church her ſelf would become a Penitent, and have all her children do the like. Her ſelf become one; For, the whole body of the Church hath her faults (beſide the private offences of every particular member) for which there was a ſeverall ſet ſacrifice in the Law. For us: to become penitents likewiſe for who knows whether we be not as falty in private, as they (the open penitents) in publike? As great ſinners as they, though not known for ſuch?

So the cauſe is generall, that ſhe with them, and we with her and with them: with them and for them! For them, and for our ſelves, in whole and in part, all in one, uniformly might perform a ſolemn annuall Repentance to God.

I
The number of 40 dayes.
* Ion. 3.4.

As to the number of dayes: GOD ſaith (in the Revelation) † Dedi ei tempus ad pœnitendum. Hee gave a time for to repent in: What time was that he gave? The time that God gave was * forty daies, in the famous Repentance of Ninive: happy for the iſſue; recommended by CHRISTS own mouth, and propounded to us as a patterne. Other ſet time (ſave this) ſhe found not: She took the ſame then: She could not tell how or when to take a better, than that of GODS own giving. The rather, that Moſes, Elias, and CHRIST himſelf had hit upon the ſame number in their faſt. It is not nothing that it containeth, though it be but an imperfect expreſſing of the pattern of ſo worthy authors; of CHRISTS ſpecially. Ignatius hath ſaid it before me: I dare ſay it after him.

For

For the ſeaſon: The Prophet hath ſaid it, if we know not when to lay our faſt, our returning to God, lay it with the * Stork and the Swallow; take their time, do it cum hirundinibus, rather than faile. 2 The Seaſon: In the Spring. * Ier 8.7.

But beſides that, the Church hath laid it moſt conveniently to end with the feaſt of Chriſts riſing, and ſo to go immediately before it: that againſt that time (as the Fathers in the firſt great councell of Nice wiſh it) all being reſtored, and all prepared by it, we may of all hands celebrate that high Day, and bring to God a pure offering (the very words of the Councell.) Then to end with that high feaſt, that the ſaying of Zacharie may be fulfilled, that our faſt ſhall be to us turned into high Feaſts: as that is the higheſt and greateſt of our Religion; for which cauſe this faſt is called, jejunium Paſchale, with reference to it. For Eaſter and Lent ſtand upon one baſe; both ſtand and fall together. Against Eaſter. Zach 8.19.

As to the manner of our abſtinence. It is ſure, the faſt in kind was in theſe three, [1] Panem non comedit, [2] potum non bibit, [3] ad veſperam: neither eat nor drink at all till night. But non omnes capiunt ſermonem hunc, all are not capable of this ſaying: Yet, he that can, let him. But for them that cannot, the Church (as a tender indulgent Mother unto all) that ſhe may win ſomewhat, is content to remit of the rigour of this; turnes her on all ſides, to lay no more on us than we can endure, if ſhe can finde ought in Scriptures to relieve us. And that doth ſhe three waies. 3 The Manner.

1 Non panem, No manner meat: None at all: Nay, not no manner meat at all (too hard that.) What ſay you to non talem, not altogether none, but not ſuch or ſuch meat? Non panem deſiderabilem, no dainty alluring meates, and namely, no fleſh (Dan. 10.) Now we do alter the quality yet. Daniels faſt we termed it, on which the Church did ground her ξηροφαγία, and ours may ground her eating of fiſh (ſay what we will) a leſſe pleaſing diet, and leſſe deſired by us. 1 Daniels faſt. Dan. 10.3.

2 Again, Non comedit, Not eat at all, not altogether any? That were too ſtrict. What ſay you to Non tantum? To ſome, but not ſo much? Before, altered the quality: here, abates of the quantitie. Not in that quantitie, not ſo much, not ſo oft as at other times. To cut off one meal if both you cannot. They call it Tobies faſt, quando derelinquebatur prandium, he left his dinner: (Dinner or Supper, all is one, ſo one be left,) nec ventrem cibo oneres duplicato, (It is S. Hierome, and we do not double ballaſt our bellies.) And theſe two we call portionale jejunium: takes not away all, takes ſome, and leaves ſome; leaves an honeſt portion, leaves us a meale. Some kind and ſome meaſure (only) abridged. 2 Tobies faſt. Tobi. 2. 4.

3 Not uſque ad veſperam, not till night, forbeare: (too long that.) What ſay you to (as before not ſo oft, ſo here) not ſo ſoon, as at other times? Put off the time of our repaſt: Make our moleſtus cliens break his houres a little: if not ad veſperam, as neere veſperam as we may. Cornelius faſt they call it: he was faſting at the ninth houre (that is) our three at afternoon: till then. Peters faſt they find, and that is the loweſt; he was faſting till paſt the ſixth houre: till then. Thus indulgent ſhe is: for theſe are not without example in Scripture (we ſee) nor unknown to Antiquitie. But, for Antiquitie, then, they preſſed forward as much as they could; and we draw backward all that ever we can. Theſe then, or as many, or as much of theſe as we can; ſo to make ſome manner ſhew, ſome countenance toward it: that, if not keep pace with the ancient Church, yet not to give them over clean; not to fall behind them ſo far, till we looſe the ſight of them quite, and ſo fall to abandon Cum jejunatis altogether. And thus much for this Cum, this very time, and the manner of jejunatis, our faſting in it. 3 Cornelius and Peters faſt. Act. 10.13. 10.9.

And, now we have found us a time for our faſt, God ſend us to get a faſt for our time, a jejunatis for our Cum. For, this Cum is now come. Here then is the place and time to anſwer CHRISTS when ye faſt; to ask, when faſt we? Every one to enter into his own heart and convent himſelf about the taking of theſe times, how oft we have taken them. How oft? I would it were come to that. I feare, it muſt be, whether we have taken taken them at all or no? Whether any of them? And if this queſtion ſhould be put us, I report me to our conſciences (a many of us) whether it would not appoſe us to tell, when this when laſt was.

But if (as I doubt) we have not taken them; then I ask why have we not? Have we no ſins to be cenſured? are we in no feare of wrath to come? Our caſe (ſure) is fearefull, if we feare not.

Are our ſoules ſo very humble, our bodies ſo in ſubjection, we need it not? I marvell, it ſhould be ſo: it ſhould be needfull for S. Paul; his holy ſhould need chaſtening; ours none. What, is the Bridegroome alway with us? He with us, and we with him always? do we never part? doth that time never come? Never all our life long? Yes, yes: we want no times, nor we want no cauſes: we want wils. Whereof ſure we ſhould doe well to bethink our ſelves better, leſt we be out of the Goſpell quite. CHRIST cannot ſay to us, when ye faſt, it we faſt not at all. Somewhat would be done (ſure) if it were but to make CHRIST ſpeake to ſome purpoſe: Somewhat; or all that hath beene ſaid, and all that ſhall be is to no purpoſe. No uſe of it, of a Caution, how to doe that, we have no meaning ever once to do at all.

I ſhould have now come to the Cautions: and (if God will) ſo I will: but at ſome other time. But as our times are inclined to leave ſenſualitie to our owne (which wee would faine have called Chriſtian) libertie; we had need to bend, and to ſpend our whole exhortation, not ſo much againſt hypocriſie, as for faſting, to keepe life in it. As our age fals out, that is not ſo neceſſary. Time was, when faſting was in credit: And when a thing is in requeſt, then is counterfeiting to be feared, then take heed of hypocriſie. But now, when little it attributed to the true, then ſhould (I think) there neede little feare of the falſe. So that it were not altogether without reaſon, as the world goes, not to ſtand on the later ſo much, but even let it goe; and, ſo men would faſt, let their countenances be as pleaſed them: let them looke as ſowre as they liſt.

Should I ſay ſo, I might well enough, for any feare, faſting will now be made matter of vaine-glory. But, that were to extend my Commiſſion: I dare not; but leave it as CHRIST hath left it, and ſay with the Apoſtle, Quod accepi à Domino, What
1 Cor. 11. 23. I have received of the Lord, that, and no other thing; and, as I have received it of the Lord, ſo, and no otherwiſe, deliver I it unto you; And perſwade, exhort, intreat, and even beſeech you to do it; but not as hypocrites: and back againe, not as hypocrites to doe it; not ſo; yet in any wiſe to do it; to fulfill, to make good Chriſts Cum jejunatis.

Iejunatis, you know what tenſe it is. In the preſent tenſe He hath put it, for at the preſent time He requireth it. It is not, Cum jejunabitis, or Cum jejunaturi eſtis, when you ſhall faſt, but when you do. He ſpeaks, as if He would have us fall in hand with it preſently, make no future faſt of it. This Cum, is already come; and we to do it, now it is come: to make anſwer to CHRIST's When you faſt, with Now we faſt, now we are at it, this day commonly called Caput jejunii, the head of it: to which head (I truſt) we will allow a body, and ſo make a faſt of it.

And even ſo then, let us do. And He that ſaith it, will ſee it, and ſeeing it, will ſee it ſhall not go without a reward at His hands; See, that, any hunger or thirſt, for Him and and upon His word ſuffered, ſhall be ſatisfied at His heavenly table, at the great Eaſter-day, the Day of the laſt reſurrection; where there ſhall be no faſting any more, but a Feaſt with all Ioy and Iubilee for ever.

A SER-

before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the VI. of March, Anno Domini, MDCXXII. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. VI. Verſ. XVI.

Cum autem jejunatis, nolite fieri ſicut hypocritæ triſtes; Exterminant enim facies ſuas, ut appareant hominibus jejunantes: Amen dico vobis, quia receperunt mercedem ſuam.

*Moreover, when you faſt, * look not ſowre as the hypocrites; for they disfigure their faces, that they might ſeem unto men to faſt: Verily I ſay unto you that they have their reward.*

* Or be not like ſowre hypocrites.

OUR laſt yeares endeavours were out of the two firſt words, Cum jejunatis, When ye faſt; to ſettle a true conceit, what every good Chriſtian man is to hold, both of Ieiunatis, faſting it ſelfe, and of Cum, the time when. And that not without great need; the moſt part ſeem ſo faintly perſwaded of faſting, as if it were no needfull part of a Chriſtian mans duty: And, of the time, as if CHRIST'S Cum did never come.

And this we did, as for liberâſti animam tuam, to deliver our owne ſoules; ſo to deliver the Doctrine of our Church, from a malicious ſlander caſt on it, as if it favoured any way the filling or farcing our ſelves, at this no leſſe than at other times; and did not require and enjoyne a more ſtrict and penetentiall kind of life, at this time, than all the yeare beſide.

Wherin, if GOD have ſo bleſſed our endeavours, that theſe two points be ſetled, we may then goe forward to the reſt; that is, Be not like the hypocrites. If we reſolve, that CHRIST'S when ſhall have a then, and then, faſt we will.

The next point is a Caveat, what we are to take heed of, when we faſt: That we faſt in ſecret, make no ſhew of it: Our faſt be to God and not to men: that we faſt not for vaine-glory as hypocrites doe,

I confeſſe, I proceed to this ſecond part, as to that, whereof there is not ſo much need; And, but that I take my ſelfe bound to proſecute the text, I have begun, I would chooſe rather to ſpend the houre in ſpeaking againe for the duty, to have it done; than to deale with the Caution, what to eſchew in the doing. We cannot get men to it (to faſt:) what need we then ſpend any ſpeech, how they ſhould not do it, when they doe it not?

We divided the Text into two parts: One, for faſting; the other, againſt hypocriſie. As our times are, there is more need, to ſpeak for faſting, then againſt hypocriſie. And yet againſt that too: (God forbid, that, or any vice ſhould be favoured:) but, not againſt hypocriſie, in faſting. There is little feare of that. Men faſt not like hypocrites, when they faſt not at all.

But you will be pleaſed to call to mind how wee then left, and wherewith wee concluded the laſt yeare. That we muſt not thinke any thing more than needs, in any ſpeech of CHRISTS. That, what we have received of the Lord, that, and no other thing. And as we have received it of the Lord, ſo and no otherwiſe are we to deliver it unto you. And, from him we have received both Cum jejunatis, and Ne Sitis; the one as well as the other. And ſo we ſet forward, to Ne ſitis ſicut, the Caution. Yet ſo as our firſt caution ever be, we omit not to faſt. Not, at other times: but not at this eſpecially, when the Church, or rather, God, by the Church her ancient order and cuſtome cals us to it.

For when are we to looke to all this, what time? Why, When we faſt: That when is ſtill to be kept in mind; to that we muſt come. That, the ground of all; thither we muſt returne againe in the end.

The Summe, & Diviſion.

We ſay then, Cum jejunatis, is the good ſeed-corne which CHRIST Himſelfe hath ſowen. All beſides, is but chaffe to be blowen away. And, now He takes His fan in his hand, to fan away this chaffe. For, quid palea ad triticum (ſaith God, in Ieremie) wheat and chaffe, what ſhould they do together? Theſe muſt be ſevered: One to be laid up in the Garner, the other to be burnt with unquenchable fire.

Ier. 23. 28.

I 1 The fan in theſe words. Nolite fieri ſicut, Be not like. The chaffe, is in the word Hypocrites. Firſt then, Hypocriſie in generall to be avoided.

II 2 But here is a ſpeciall kind, ſicut hypocritæ triſtes, Not, ſowre, like hypocrites: Or, not like ſowre hypocrites. Not like them.

III 3 Not like them, wherein? In two points upon which the fan goes. [1] Not like them, in their Sicut: [2] Not like them, in their Vt. Not, in their manner, how: Not, in their end, why. [1] Not in their manner how: Why, what doe they? they are all for their countenance; and, that they disfigure. In making it their labour, to have it appeare in their countenance. [2] And, why doe they ſo? That ſo, men may know them for faſters. In making it their end, to be ſeene of men. Theſe two Hee fannes away.

IIII 4 But, what if one could find in his heart to faſt, and yet would have men ſee it, and commend him for it, Ad quod damnum, what hurt will come of it? One would think, none: CHRIST ſayes Amen to it. They make it their reward, to be ſeene of men: Why, it ſhall be their reward, they ſhall be ſeene of men: that is all, they would have to come. Why, this, one would never think a puniſhment: But it is one. And think it not a ſmall one, for though it ſeeme no great harme to receive a reward of praiſe: yet when we ſhall lay together, how poore a thing it is they receive, Man's prayſe: And, how great an one they looſe by the meanes, God's reward: they had better be without it. For, when they have that, there is all; all that ſhall come of their faſting: Acceperunt ſuam, amiſerunt meam, They have received their reward, they have loſt mine; and CHRIST to ſay Amen to it; This, ſay I, is ſure a heavie puniſhment. Therefore looke to it.

Luk. 12. 1.

And, when the Chaffe is blowen away, and the floore purged: when the old leven which is hypocriſie, is caſt out; of the reſt, we are to make our ſweet-bread, now againſt the great feaſt of our Paſſeover, we make ready for.

When

WHen we have got paſt the two firſt words; when the thing is won, and the time; and we reſolved, that faſt we will; and when we will; and we ſet our ſelves ſeriouſly to it: What, is all ſafe? Will the Divell bee gone his way? Shall we heare no more of him, as ſoone as he ſees us ſo ſet? No, indeed: but hovers about us ſtill: as if there were yet ſomewhat for him to doe. Our Bleſſed SAVIOUR when the Spirit led Him into the wilderneſſe, and Hee fell to His faſt, it is ſaid, that then, the tempter came to Him: So, we muſt make reckoning, hee will to us. It is exceeding behoovefull for us, to take notice of this: as they ſay, to know the length of the Divels chaine: That, neither full nor faſting, we are out of his reach, but he will be buſie with us in them both. Attends our Feaſts, to make [a] our table a ſnare: Attends our Faſts, to turne them (as well as our prayers) [b] into ſinne. Eating, he is buſie with us, to make us eat like [c] Eſau. Faſting; no leſſe buſie, to make us faſt like the [d] Phariſee. And looke what in this, in the reſt: Both Alms and Prayer too, are ſubject to it. Therefore, in and through all, whether we give Almes, pray, or faſt, to have an eye to him, in all. Praying, Faſting, giving Almes, he leaves us not; gives us not over, till he have corrupted the manner, perverted the end: till, one way or other, he have ſet them awry. His firſt aſſay is, Ne bonum, we doe not that which is good, we faſt not at all: His ſecond is, Ne bonum benè, we do it not, as wee ſhould; by putting to it a wrong ſicut, an undue manner; or a wrong Vt, an undue end; that ſo, we may do what GOD commands us, for the Divels end. Sure, it is not enough to be exerciſed in doing good; we muſt look to both the Sicut, the manner how we do it; and to the Vt, the end, why we do it; or he may hap go beyond us; and both ſpoile them, and ſpoile us of our reward for them.

I
The Finne, Be not like.

Mat 4.3.

[b] 109 7
[c] Gen 25.30.
[d] Luke 18.12.

But then againe, take heed, ye be not caught here; and, for doubt ye may doe it amiſſe, be brought not to doe it at all, but let all alone. That is another of his tricks: For his method and manner of proceeding, in this point, is well worth our obſerving: Nôſſe hæc ſalus eſt. It is one of the Profunda Satanæ (as the Revelation calls them) the deepe fetches, or policies of Satan. For, would any man thinke, he would uſe this Text, theſe very words of our Saviour, [Be not like Hypocrites] to draw men from faſting? He doth. For, finding here, faſting, and Hypocrites thus cloſe together; and ſo, that hypocrites uſe to faſt; he perſwades ſome (and ſuch, as weene themſelves no fooles) to think, they cannot faſt, but they muſt ipſo facto prove hypocrites. Sets up this for a ſcar-crow, to raiſe up a vain feare in them, and ſo to chaſe them from it. Will ye faſt? Gods Lord take heed what you do; do it not: why? Ne ſitis ſicut hypocritæ; for, and you do, you will be taken for an hypocrite.

Revel. 2.24.

And mark the double taking of Ne ſitis: Ne ſitis, Be not like (ſaith CHRIST:) Ne ſitis, Leſt you be like (ſaith he.) Now, the bellie is apt and eaſie enough to apprehend any feare in this kind; any oppoſition, or expoſition, any thing that makes for it.

Nay, hereby he prevailes with them, not only to give over faſting themſelves: but drawes them further to grow jealous, leſt every one that faſts, be not tainted that way: and, leſt every one that preaches for it, be not juſtly to be ſuſpected, as that way given; as having in him ſome ſparks of a Phariſee. Thus doth he.

And, will you ſee how compendious a way he deviſeth, to rid us clean of all hypocriſie? Thus: to keep no Lent; not to faſt at all: and ſo, he will warrant us, we ſhall be ſure to be cleare from being any hypocrites. So, to avoid hypocriſie, he voids faſting quite.

But, what is this, but to caſt out divels by the power of Beelzebub, one divell with another? To caſt out hypocriſie by gluttony? To caſt out ſuperſtition with the profaneneſſe of Eſau? Who, rather than offend his bellie, cared not what became of his birth- right. To bring in Ne jejunetis, Faſt not; under colour of Ne ſitis hypocritæ, not Being like hypocrites. To caſt out Ne ſitis hypocritæ, Be no hypocrites, with ſitis Epicuri, Die not in debt to your bellies. The Divels only way, to rid hypocriſie, by engroſſing Epicuriſme.

Mat. 12.25.

Heb. 12.16.

But (alas) what will this availe us? what is gotten by this? Small eaſe will it be (GOD knowes) for any, not to be condemned as an hypocrite, Seeing he that fell to Mat. 24. 51. eat and drink with good fellowes (in the XXIIII. Chapter after) had his portion given him with hypocrites, as good a trencher-man as he had beene, all his life time. So that, both come into one room, both lye together, and fry together in one place of torments. And, thither it is he would bring us, he cares not whither way. This is his firſt aſſay: and much hurt he hath done this way.

I know not how, but faſting is laid aſide: In a manner clean gone: Few or none keep it. How is it gone? What is pretended, or given out for it? But for feare of doing that, which perſons doe that are ſuperſtitiouſly given; feare, of being like them. For, no feare of hypocriſie, now: Sicut hypocritæ is now gone. But, by this one precedent, this one ne ſitis ſicut, he can make more. As now, in place of Be not like hypocrites, is come a feare of, Be not like Papiſts: we ſhall be like Papiſts, if we do. And not to faſt, is made a Superſedias of all Popery; as if that alone were enough, to make us truly reformed. This is all our feare now.

Pſal. 14. 5. But, ibi trepidaverunt timore, ubi non erat timor, there were they afraid, where no feare was. This is but a ſcar-crow neither. [1] Firſt ſet down this: we muſt do ſomething, that hypocrites and ſuperſtitious perſons do, or we muſt give over Alms too, and Prayer as well as Faſting; for, they have a like Ne ſitis upon them. You ſhall find Hypocritæ in, at all three.

[2] Then the ſecond: we may do what hypocrites do, and yet not do it, as they doe it. And it is the ſicut, the manner (not the thing it ſelfe) that CHRIST here excepts too. So, that feare is at an end.

[3] Laſtly, theſe words being directed by CHRIST, and by Him ſpoken to His Diſciples, by the grace of GOD, all be not hypocrites, or ſuperſtitious, that faſt; For, CHRISTS Diſciples were neither. We may faſt then like CHRISTS Diſciples; we may be of their number. And indeed the truth is; CHRISTS Diſciples are only truly ſeiſed of it. Hypocrites doe but incroach upon it, or rather on the outſide of it, as doth the Wolfe upon the ſheeps cloathing. But neither is the ſheep to leave or lay down, his fleece; nor the Chriſtian man, his faſt; becauſe other-while, the Wolf is found in the one, or the hypocrite, at the other.

In three ſhort words CHRIST teacheth us a way to anſwer both. His ne ſitis ſicut will make both fly away, as chaffe before the fan, and Cum jejunatis never be ſtirred, but lye ſtill. Do the Hypocrites faſt, to be ſeene, doe they? And do the Papiſts faſt, with opinion of merit? Why, Be not like hypocrites, but yet faſt: Nor, be not like Papiſts, no more than like hypocrites, yet faſt though. CHRISTS ne ſitis will ſerve for theſe, and for as many as the Divell can deviſe. Faſt not like them; faſt like CHRIST'S Diſciples, and all is well. And this, for his firſt way of turning CHRISTS Cum jejunatis into Ne jejunetis, upon feare of being like hypocrites, if we ſo do.

But if, this way he ſucceed not to keep us from it, but faſt we will; then comes hee about, with a new ſtratagem. And that by way of wholſome counſell; that, if we will needs faſt, we would do it to ſome purpoſe: (that is) doe it ſo, as wee may be knowne to do it, in any wiſe. For, to what purpoſe will it be to doe it in tenebris? It is no work of darkneſſe; or, as good in a blind corner, where no man can take notice of it; as if we were aſhamed to be ſeene about ſo good a worke. Nay, in any wiſe;
Chap. 5. v. 15. take heed of concealment of your faſt, of hiding it under a buſhell. And, good reaſon; they bee works of light (all three) Almes, Prayer, and Faſting; and ſo love to bee brought to light, to be ſet on a Candleſticke, and to be ſeene. Therefore, as before,
* Verſe. 2. in our Almes, he had deviſed we ſhould call our Almes-folk about us with a * Trumpet: and, as in Prayer, that we ſhould doe it in † choiſe places, where folk may come by,
† Verſe. 5. and ſee us at it; and to be a good deale longer than ordinary, that ſo, we may ſeeme

ſomewhat

ſomewhat ſingular, and to have more in us, than our fellowes. So, here now, when it is Faſting-day with us, to get us a faſting-day face, at any hand. For that, except we be ſomewhat altered in countenance, no man will looke at us, or marke us; there will be no notice taken of it; and ſo as good not faſt at all: But if it appeare in our faces, we ſhall both get reputation to our ſelves, and our Profeſsion ſhall receive credit beſides. Thus doth he medle his chaffe; mold in his ſowre leven into CHRIST's nova conſperſio; to make us do, what God would have us, for his owne; to doe Gods work, for the Divels end. Sanctifie me a faſt (as I told) ſhewes, there is ſanctitie in it; a holy dutie it is, and he ſeeks to breed moths in it. For, ſo the Fathers call hypocriſie (tineam ſanctitatis) the moth that fretts in ſunder all, that holy or good is; and ſo by that meanes, make it a meere moth-eaten faſt.

1 Cor. 5. 7. Ioel 1. 14. 2. 15.

Thus, whitherſoever we turne our ſelves, he meets with us ſtill. Theſe are his deſigns: this doth he, diverſis itineribus, by contrary wayes, ſeek to circumvent us. Firſt, down he ſits in his Court, and offers us a licence, not to keep Lent, to keep what diet we will: And if we refuſe it, threatens us, he will get us preſented for hypocrites. But if that move us not, but we ſtand out reſolute for all his ſcar-crow, then, out he comes in a new ſtyle; fals to commend to us, as good orderly men: but (withall) to adviſe us friendly to do all ſo, as may be for our beſt behoofe: which is, to have it ſeen in any wiſe. And (that which is ſtrange) ſcars us with that, in the beginning, which hee brings us to, in the end: Even, to doe that in hypocriſie, that (before) he wiſhed us, in no wiſe to do, for feare of hypocriſie. So as, upon the matter, now it is come to ſitis hypocritæ, though not in ſo broad terms; but, ſo is his meaning, do it like hypocrites to be ſeen.

This, is the proper place: here now comes CHRIST with his fanne, and ſevers the precious from the vile, with Ne ſitis ſicut. And think it never a whit the worſe for this Ne ſitis. Almes hath the ſame before; and ſo hath Prayer the very ſame: And many a Ne ſitis belong to theſe, and to every good duty. They are not the worſe; the better rather, for the fanning: they are rid by it of much refuſe ſtuffe. And, even to this of faſting, there belongs more Be not like's than one. Not like the Manechees, that thought the creatures uncleane. Not like them, whoſe faſt is a Commutation of Gluttony. Not like them, that faſt to ſave charges. Not like them, that make it an opus operatum: and, ſo it be done, it skils not how with them; it skils not for any Sicut. Not like any of theſe. One ne ſitis ſerves them all, ſends them all going one after another, as many as come. Ne ſitis to them all, and to every, or any of them all. And ſo, you ſhall not need give over your faſting for any of them all. I would faſt, but for being like one of theſe: why, be not like any one of theſe, and yet faſt notwithſtanding.

II
The Chaffe.
1 Not like hypocrites in generall.

Not like any one of theſe, But ſpecially (ſaith CHRIST here) not like Hypocrites. Why, not like them? For, then, the Phariſees faſted, and their diſciples: and Iohn faſted, and his diſciples: there was, then, faſting on all hands. And then is the time of hypocriſie: Then, doth it abound moſt, when things are in requeſt. when moſt uſed; then, is moſt danger of counterfeiting. And hypocriſie is but a kind of counterfeiting (as I ſhall ſhew you.) Therefore, as thoſe times were, Be not like Hypocrite.

Mark 7. 18.

Not like them? and them, of all other, one would chooſe to be like, they of all others are more like to faſt; they look as if they faſted, they carry their faſt im their face, they. Why, that, CHRIST likes not; the carrying it in their face: tels us plainly, they be not the men, we take them for: no true faſters, they; they be but hypocrites.

Hypocrites? What is that? We muſt needs ſtay a little, to ſearch out the true ſenſe of that word: They be ſo baited, all the Goſpell thorow; there be ſo many Woes cried againſt them. The word Hypocrite is neither Engliſh nor Latine, but as a Demiſon. Originally, it is a knowne Greeke word; and is (in that tongue) the ordinary and proper name for thoſe, whom the Latine terme Hiſtriones, and we in Engliſh Stage-players: Such as in diſguiſed attire and haire preſent themſelves on a Stage, and there oft repreſent thoſe, whom (GOD knowes) they are far from; but yet, outwardly take upon them their perſons; as if they were.

And the ground of the word is, they are therefore called Hypocritæ, for that, to give a true judgment of them, you muſt ὑποκρίνειν judge them (not by their Players coat above but,) by that, they are underneath in their owne, when their gorgeous and gay attire is off. That, may be gallant and brave: they themſelves are, it skils not what; Peradventure, he that plai'd the Souldan but a Sowter.

The word (in the tongue CHRIST ſpake) is as much to ſay, as one in a vizour, Aſſumens vultum, a face-taker; one that hath got him a taken-on-face, which is none of his own, nor nothing like it; as in Plays and Shews, the manner is. But, we hold us to the word Hypocritæ. The native ſenſe of the word you ſee: and it is, as if Hee had ſaid in plain Engliſh; When ye faſt, be not like theſe ſame Stage-players. So, it ſignifies at the firſt. And at the ſecond hand, all others, which do off of the Stage, that which they do upon it; and in Court, City, or Countrey, carry themſelvs with other faces than their own, as theſe do on the Stage at Playhouſes.

The Heathen man long ſince obſerved, that Mundus, ſcena; that, in his conceit, the world, for all the world, was like a ſtage or theater; ſcarce a true face in it: all in a manner perſonate. And the actions in the world, not much unlike to their acting of their parts in the Acts and Scenes of a Stage-play. But our Saviour CHRIST, hee goes further: he tels us here, of a ſtranger matter. That, there want not, that make his Church a very Stage; and play with Religion, and play Religion and every part of it: So carrying themſelves in things pertaining to GOD, as if they had ſome Play or Pageant in hand. It is but too true, this. If you will ſet up a ſtage, I will find you Actors for it now.

Will you ſee Almes played? Out comes Iudas ſagely, with a ſentence in his mouth [a] Vt quid perditio hæc? Alas, it would have beene better beſtowed, upon a many of poore people: why ſhould there bee ſuch waſte upon Chriſts head? right, the Supplication of beggers.

[a] Mat 26 8. Iohn 11.5.

Will you ſee Prayer played? Looke upon the Players in the XXIII. Chapter after, that, under colour of [b] a long prayer, now and then prey upon the houſes and goods of a ſort of ſeduced widdowes: and make as good gain of their Prayers, as Iudas would have done of his Almes.

[b] Mat 23.14.

But, Sermons goe away with it now: The Church is, then, full: and (GOD knowes) a few true hearers: the reſt are but a ſort of Sermon-Hypocrites. The Scene is in the 33. of Ezechiel: O let us go heare the word: and the Prophet addes, So was the faſhion then, and for faſhion, it was. And thither they come, and when they are come, here ſit they, but their heart is elſe where, wandring where it will. Either they attend not: or, if they doe, it is to make jeſts. Or, at the beſt, it is but, as they heare a ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voyce; and no more comes of the Sermon than of the ſong. Or, if you love the New Teſtament better, there have you (in the 6 of Mark) [a] Herod ſending for Iohn Baptiſt oft, and hearing him full devoutly, till (for a [b] Non licet tibi, in one of his Sermons) hee made his Head fly off his Shoulders. And in very deed, the Marriage at [c] Sichem, and the Circumciſion for it; [d] Abſaloms vow; [e] Iehu's ſacrifice, what were they but very playes, meere masks, imitations of him that is Roſcius in ſcenâ, the Maſter Hypocrite of all, who (in the Old Teſtament) got him on a mantle, and played [f] Samuel at Endor: and (in the New) got him wings, and bright rayment, and came forth [g] transformed into an Angell of light. To whoſe companie they belong, and whoſe they are, that get them [h] S. Pauls μόρφωσις εὐσεβείας, the vizor, or mask of Godlineſſe; and make of it Saint Peters πέπλωμα κακίας, a cloake or cover, for every bad intent. They doe no better, but even play religion. And of this Scenicall, theatricall hiſtrionicall godlineſſe, there is good ſtore abroad in the world. GOD grant it bee not found in Iſrael. Be not like ſtage players, when about any religious act; Not, when about any.

But,

But, of all parts of Religion, our Saviour (here) may ſeeme to have made choiſe of the worſt. To ſay, when ye faſt, be not like players, not then, of all times. For, a Play and a faſt ſuit not. A Play is lightly had at Feaſts. Men when they faſt are in heavineſſe: theſe agree not well. Well, as evill as they agree, for all that, Faſts have been played too. There was a Faſt played, to get Naboths vineyard: It coſt him his vineyard, and his life too. There was another played (Acts 23.) to have got S. Paul made away. And they ſay, there was one played againſt the fift of November; and a Proceſsion too; and all, to have made us all away. From ſuch faſts playing the Lord deliver us. But ſo, you may have a faſt played too, for a need.

Not like them in faſting.

1 King 21. 9.

Act. 23. 14.

That we may not marvell, theſe Hypocrites that play in faſts (Christ tels us) are a ſpeciall ſort by themſelvs. Be not like Hypocrites at all: but, of all other, not like them. Why? the common ſort of Hypocrites abroad, ſeek to put on a better face than their own: but, here have you a Monſter, exterminans vultum, out-lawing (as it were) and baniſhing his own naturall countenance, ἀφανίζω is Christs word, defacing his face, as you can hardly know, it is he: taking to himſelfe a worſe face far, than ever God made him. To lay on a little (I wot not what) to the end, to look the more faire, the better coloured, of a clearer complection; that, is not ſtrange: But, to affect a looke more dimme, more hollow, more evill favoured; and to be-leven his face to that end, that paſſes; that, is a new kind of hypocriſie, per ſe; a kind by it ſelfe, that. Yet, ſuch there be. There were, that wore a courſe garment to deceive, (ſaith Zachary:) So, there is not only gay, but ragged hypocriſie. And, there were (ſaith Christ here) that rough-caſt their countenance, and that, to deceive too. That, there is not only fucus, but fermentum pietatis. Not only ſleering, but lowring; Not only well complexioned, but pale-coloured hypocriſie. Such are they, that play in Christs faſt, here; triſtes, torvi, auſteri, the word is σκυθρωποι; which is (properly) the look of a wild-beaſt (a Lion, or a Beare robbed of their whelps) grimme and ghaſt; one would be afraid to look on them. Theſe, would Christ have us not be like; As indeed who would be like them, but ſuch hypocrites as they?

2 Not like ſome Hypocrites.

Zach. 13. 4.

Not like them? Why, how do they? Exterminant vultum. We begin with vultum, The hypocrites whole labour is but his looke. Blame him not; for he is nothing but look. Nothing but face, and caſe; but a very out-ſide only. As for any inward matter, ne never looks after.

1 Not like them in their Sicut, their manner.

In which point, they ſuit well with Players, whoſe names they beare. It is a very fit reſemblance for them, that are nothing but reſemblance. In the very true and lively perſon of a Prince, the outward pomp or ſhew is the leſſe part, by farre. The Regall qualities, the Princely vertues are they, we chiefly admire; A religious heart, high wiſdome, heroicall courage, Clemencie, like that of God, without meaſure or end. In him that playes the King, it is quite otherwiſe. No Royall qualitie is required at all; No princely vertue needs, he never cares for them. But, geſture and gate, the carriage of his countenance, to ſay his part, to pronounce and to act it well; that is all that is cared for by him, or that is looked for at his hands. And even ſo it fares here: Contrition of ſpirit, a broken heart, unfained humilitie, truth in the inward parts; theſe are moſt requiſite in the true faſt. It skils not a whit for any of theſe, in the Stage-faſt; So he can ſet his countenance well, have the clouds in his forehead, his eyes ſomewhat hollow, certaine wrinckels in his cheeke, carry his head like a bulruſh, and looke like leven; all is well. As for any inward accompliſhment, he never takes thought for any. Vultum only is it; He goes no further. Only to be like, to be ſicut; as one, though (indeed) none.

Pſal. 51. 6.

But, why do they take all theſe paines to disfigure themſelves? That doe they, Vt videantur, that they might be ſeene of men, and ſeem to men, appeare to them in the likeneſſe of ſuch as faſt indeed. The leven of hypocriſie in their lookes, is from the love of a Videantur in their hearts. Vain-glory, the ground of hypocriſie, ever. And, here now, they match again. The Hypocrites end, is as the Players end; Both, to be ſeen. You never ſee the play begin, till the Spectators be come, ſo many as they can get. Nor, no more ſhall you ſee this faſt acted, unleſſe there be ſome, to eye and to note it, He will not faſt on the ground; there muſt be a Stage ſet up for him; where I dare ſay, they wiſh the ſcaffolds full to ſee them: the more, the better.

Both match in videantur; and it muſt be ab hominibus, of men. Angels eyes, Gods eyes will not ſerve the Hypocrites turn. Other eyes then, there muſt be entreated, to gaze on them, or ye get no faſt.

Why, is there any harm in mens eyes, that they may not ſee, nor we may not bee ſeen of them? Verè oculi hominum (ſaith Bernard) baſiliſci ſunt bonorum operum: Now truly there is in mens eyes venome, like that of the Cockatrice, to infect our well-doing, with a well-weening of our ſelves. O now, I am ſeen! O ego quantus ſum, mundo cenſore! O what a holy mortified man, am I taken for! It troubled Alms before (this:) it troubled Prayer: and now, faſting: it troubles all. In all, this, it the point, this is the Vt, to be ſeen of men. Not, that it is unlawfull to be ſeen well doing: You will eaſily put a difference, between, to be ſeene to do well; and, to do well, to be ſeen: between facere & videri; and facere, ut videare. Do, and be ſeen, may be caſuall, never thought on by us. Do, to be ſeen, that is the Vt (and that Vt is it) the very end, we do it for, and otherwiſe we ſhould not do it. It happens otherwhile, many good people do well, and are ſeen ſo doing as it fals out: but, beſide their purpoſe quite. But, none, ſave this masked crew, ſacrifice themſelves and their faſts to the eyes of men; and doe, what they doe, for no other end but that.

Mat. 4. 1. Luk. 5. 16. You ſhall eaſily diſcerne them. You ſhall not get one of them, to do as CHRIST did, get Him aſide out of the way into the wilderneſſe, faſt there: No: CHRIST was not ſo well adviſed, to do it there, in a deſart deſolate place, where there was no body to meet Him, or ſee Him at it. They be all for the eye (theſe:) a perſpective faſt, or not at all. Nothing out of ſight; never, by their good-will, where no body to look on. Iejunium oculare, ὀφθαλμονηστία, this. The Heathen man ſaid well: Ergo, iſte, in tenebris, non ſervaret hominem; Such a one would not be entreated to ſave a mans life in the dark (if he might:) Not, but by torch-light. For, all, is loſt, he is clean undone, if no body ſee or look upon him.

Luk. 4. 1. Well, if it were the Spirit of GOD led CHRIST into the wilderneſſe to faſt there, like an Hermite; you may well know, what ſpirit it is, that ſets one up a Stage, there, to faſt like an hypocrite. To be ſeene then, is their Vt, the very butt they ayme at.

And wherefore to be ſeen? in the play, that they may have a plaudite: So plaine, as they even crave it in their laſt words. So, in this eye-ſerving faſt, ſeene they muſt bee: And why muſt they be ſeene? To be given out, for ſuch an one is a great faſter. And why that? That men ſeeing that good work of theirs, might glorifie GOD? No indeed: but, them: the earthly child; not, the heavenly Father. And, mark it, when you will: There is no animal ſo ambitious, no Chameleon ſo pants after aire, as doth the hypocrite after popular praiſe. For it, he faſts; and ſo hungry and thirſty he is after it, as you ſhall heare him even beg for it: Honora me coram populo hoc; ſaith one of them (it is Saul:) O grace me, for the love of GOD; ſeeme to honour me in the peoples eyes. Loquimini in auribus populi hujus, ſaith another (it is Abimelech) O give it out in the peoples eares; I am thus and thus. Mark: the Peoples eyes, and the Peoples eares; for, hypocriſie is ever popular: for their, for mens applauſe, all in all.

1 Sam. 15. 30. Iudg. 9. 2.

Nay then, will ye heare them expoſtulate for it, and that, even with GOD Himſelfe? Wherefore (ſay they, in the 58. of Eſay) faſt we, and thou ſeeſt it not? So, they would be ſeene. And, why do we pinch and puniſh our ſelves, and thou regardeſt it not? So, they muſt be regarded, or they will not take it well. To be ſhort: the putting forth of the finger (as Eſay there cals it) or (as the Poet) Digito monſtrari, to be pointed at, and dicier Hic eſt, and ſaid Looke yee, there he goes: To have it whiſpered, That is Eſay 58. 3. Verſ. 9.

He

He: To be magnified up and down the Peoples mouth, that, is even the conſummatum eſt of all this Stage-devotion.

Which very point makes the faſt looſe; and indeed, makes it to be no faſt at all: They extermine their countenances ſo long, that they extermine faſt and all. This very Vt videantur makes, that it ſeemes to be, but is (indeed) none. For, in the true faſt. It is as David ſaith of his; I ſorrowed, and my ſoule faſted: It is an humbling of the ſoule. Elſe, if it go no further than the body, it is a faſt without a ſoule. But theſe though their ſtomacks be emptie, yet their ſoules doe feed and feaſt all the while. Nam eſt quædam ſagina laudis (ſaith the Heathen man:) Praiſe will feed and fill both, And, it is our meat and drink (and ſo we call it) that we take delight in. And ſure, if Eſay be right, that one may be drunk, and no cup come at his head; it is like poſſible, one may ſurfet, and yet no meat come in his bellie: And with pride both. As for meat and drink the Divell never takes any; keepes a perpetuall faſt for that matter: but; feeds on pride, as one doth on his meale; and ſurfets that way, as much us any Epicure. And even ſo (for ought I know) one may eat and drink no more than the Divell, and yet be as proud as the Divell; why not? So as upon the matter, their faſt is but even the Divels faſt, and no better.

Pſal. 69. 10.

Eſay 51. 21.

Faſting then being an act of humility, if the Divell can make it matter of pride, habetur propoſitum, he hath what he would; he will give you good leave to faſt and ſpare not. And, even matter of pride, he makes it. The Phariſees, whom CHRIST would have us Non ſicut, they were, in their own conceits, the Non ſicuts of the world. They tell it GOD, Non ſicut alii, Not like other men. Others did but faſt once a weeke, if that: they twiſe, and never miſſed. And in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory, there is a rare example of it. He, that ſame Iohn the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, that firſt tooke upon him the proud title of Vniverſall Biſhop, that very man was called and known by the name of Ἰωάννης ὁ νηστεύτης, Iohannes Iejunator, Iohn the great faſter. So pride will grow of faſting. Being then ordained to take down the ſoule, if he can bring it to puffe it up, and ſo, turn our faſt into ſin; that, is even a Faſt of the Divels own chooſing. One, which (he is ſure) GOD will never look at. The Prophet gives the reaſon: If we faſt for mens eyes, we faſt for men, not for God. If we faſt for our own praiſe, we faſt for our ſelves, not for GOD neither. Now, what GOD ſhould reward, ſhould be done for GOD. And, with GOD, a righteous thing it is, to put men over to receive their rewards, at their hands, for whom they faſted: that they pay them their wages, that ſet them on work: For, at His hands, they are like to receive none, ſeeing, for Him they did it not: He was not the Vt of their faſting. And this is the laſt point. As before; not like them in their Sicut; So, not here in their Vt neither: neither in their manner nor in their end.

Luk. 18. 11.

Zech. 7. 5. 6.

III.

The Danger of it.

Veri'y they have their reward.

Suppoſe now, one may be ſo in love with the praiſe of men, as he is altogether out of love with an inviſible faſt, and muſt needs look a little that way; what harm will come of it? Amen dico vobis, qui a receperunt mercedem ſuam: This muſt needs be their puniſhment; for, there is none other but this. And ſure, as ſtrange a puniſhment, as you ſhall read of: To ſay Amen to that, one deſires; to ſay, one ſhall receive a reward. Can it be a puniſhment to receive, to receive a reward, and a reward of our own deſiring? It is ſurely none. You do it, to be ſeen; you ſhall be ſeen to be praiſed; why, you ſhall be praiſed: This is your end; your end be it. You hunger and thirſt for mens praiſe, faine you would have it; you ſhall have it; There it is, take it to you, much good doe it you with it. Call you this a puniſhment, to receive a reward, to have ones deſire? Surely, it ſeemes but an eaſie one, if it be one.

True, if the reward be worth the while, firſt. And ſecondly, if by receiving it, we forfeit not one incomparably greater. But, in theſe two caſes, [1] If the reward, be but ſome ſlight thing, little worth: [2] And then, if by getting it, we looſe another above all worth, then have we no great cauſe to rejoyce at our receiving: then, in ſtead of a reward, it is a puniſhment, ſay I; and that an heavie one, whenſoever both theſe caſes meet.

1 Their Reward (popular praiſe) is ſlight.

Now, both theſe caſes meet here. Firſt, it is but a poore thing, they receive. Shall we value it as it is? I meane this goodly reward, of popular praiſe, which they ſo it ch after. What is the popularitie, but a ſort of men nothing judiciall? Not one among an hundred. Not praiſing, but out of paſsion (lightly) if that: and not conſtant in that paſſion neither.

2 As not judiciall.

Praiſe if it be judiciall, is ſomewhat worth; and ſo worth the deſiring. The popular is not ſo. CHRIST ſaith; they have alwayes ſpoken all good of the falſe Prophets: as for the true, they have ever followed them with all diſgrace: And, then, what judgement is there in them? CHRIST himſelf, will ye heare their verdict of Him? Some there was ſaid, He was a good man; but ſome other (and the greater ſumme) ſaid, No, but a very ſeducer, a cooſener of the people: And then, who can think, there is any judgement in them?

Luk. 6.26.

Iohn 7.12.

Act 19.28.32.

In the 19. of the Acts, the whole multitude was together, and when Demetrius had ſet them in, for two houres they never left crying, Great is Diana: and the moſt part of them never knew why they were come together, nor why they cried ſo: And then what judgement is there in them? No ſure: out of lightneſſe of mind; out of paſsion it is, they praiſe or diſpraiſe, magnifie or vilifie a man, for the moſt part.

3. Not durable.

But is this (be it paſſion, or what it will) of any endurance? will it hold? No indeed. Sicut luna mutatur, Every new moone, a new mind; nay, every quarter. No better witneſſe of this, than our Saviour Himſelf, who heard Hoſanna in the higheſt, and Not Him but Barabbas, both, within the ſpace of a ſevennight. S. Pauls was yet ſhorter; for he was firſt a murtherer, and ſuddenly, a God and no leſſe, in a manner with one breath. There is their conſtancie; this, the hold you can have of it. No lock nor key, to ſhut up our reward in: No tenendum to our habendum, to hold it when we have it. And who then would much eſteeme it?

Chap. 21.9.
Chap 27.21.
Iohn 18.40.
Act. 28.4.6.

But, ſay there were both lock and key; yet, what is praiſe but words? and words but wind? what is ſpeech but breath? breath but aire? tenuiſsimus fructus, a thin reward (God wot.) For, what is more thin than aire? This is ſure, no great reward. Mihi pro minimo eſt: So, Paul makes but a minim of it, we make ſo much of.

1 Cor. 4.3.

2 It is their finall reward.

And yet even this, ſlight as it is, were it onely to receive it, and that were all, there were no great hurt in it. But, now comes the hurt, For, when it ſhall come to this, that we are ſo to receive it, as in full payment: (for, ſo it is; not ἔχειν, have it; but ἀπέχειν, have it for all, that ever they ſhall have) So to receive it; tanquam mercedem, as it ſhall bee our laſt pay, our finall and full recompence and ſatisfaction, for all that ever we have done, then it goes hard.

And that is it, CHRIST meaneth: And that is it every good mind feareth: That here ſhall be all; a few good words, a little warme breath, a blaſt of vaine praiſe, of a ſort of vain men. And when we have this, we have no more for ever to receive or look for beſide this. That, as CHRIST tels us (in the firſt verſe of the Chapter) this acceperunt infers an amiſerunt: Acceperunt ſuum here, an Amiſerunt meum elſewhere. And that, where (of all) we would leaſt be without it. That the receiving of this, cuts us off from another, infinitely above and more worth than this. The reward we receive; nothing leſſe to be regarded: the reward we loſe, the damage we incurre; nothing more to be feared. Lay theſe together, mercedem juxta mercedem, we ſhall find it a puniſhment; ſuch a puniſhment, as no man would ever wiſh his very enemie more.

Of this Amen here, of theſe words [they have received their reward] you ſhall read in S. Gregory, that never did any ſaying ſo ſound in his eares, ſo run in his head, reign in his heart, work upon his conſcience (as he deeply proteſts) as did theſe. This, he tooke for one of the moſt fearefull ſayings in the whole Bible: that what he did here receive (were it praiſe, or preferment, or what other earthly thing) it ſhould be his laſt receipt, his finall reward, his portion for ever, his Amen: for Amen is the laſt word (we know) that, ends all. For, ſo are we in a manner proceeded againſt, and deprived of all hope of further reward, at the laſt great receipt of all.

The

The praiſe of men, which we here ſought and found, ſhall deprive us of hearing Euge Serve bone; One ſyllable whereof is more worth, than all the Pangyricks that ever were. And not only of that, but of Intra in gaudium Domini beſides, much more to be eſteemed than all the Euges in the world, nay, than the world it ſelf. That the winning of one ſhall be the looſing of the other. Mat. 21.23.

And now judge, whether this receiving, be not a loſſe unvaluable; this reward, a puniſhment inſufferable; this Amen, to be prayed againſt of all. Nay, whether there be any ſo penall a puniſhment, ſo heavie a cenſure: This ſhall be your puniſhment, that this ſhall be your reward; and, never more but this.

For, doe but ask: Why doe they this wrong to their faces? To ſeeme to men to faſt. And what then? Then they ſhall be commended of men. And what then? Nay, there is all. And GOD comes to a point with them: ſaith, Let them be commended for it: And they have no wrong, they makeing it their end, if GOD make it ſo too.

To puniſh one by his own deſires; to ſay (as GOD doth in Oſee) Becauſe Ephraim will have altars to ſin, they ſhall be to ſin; becauſe you make this your reward, it ſhall be your reward, take it for your reward: To ſay, So be it, to have our faſt conclude with the Hypocrites Amen: no more fearefull puniſhment in the world. Oſee 8.17.

* Knowing then this feare, we perſwade, exhort, intreat men (and no otherwiſe, than CHRIST here doth) to faſt. And the Cum is now come: Now then to doe it. Not to do it as theſe, yet in any wiſe to doe it. To faſt to GOD; not to the world: to our owne hearts, not to other mens eyes: to conſcience, not to forme, Not, to ſet us up a ſtage to do it; but (with CHRIST) to do it apart, in ſecret. And think not, if men ſee it not, it ſhall not be ſeene (be it never ſo ſecret:) that you ſhall do it without witneſſe. Beſide the witneſſe, Teſtis in corde (ſet by the Heathen man at a thouſand witneſſes) there is (as Iob cals Him) Teſtis in cælo, One in heaven who ſees it; needs no light to ſee it by: whoſe theater is the darke, and beholds us as cleerely when the candle is put out, as when it burnes. Faſt then, do it to be ſeene of Him; and being done not for men, but for him, Him ſhall you be ſure of, to caſt His eyes to look on it, to like it; to regard it and reward it, both. The Application * 1 Cor. 5.11. Iob. 16.19.

So much doth CHRIST undertake in the verſe following; and that, in His Fathers name · and ſeale it with His Verily, that moſt certaine it ſhall be ſo. Our ſecret faſt ſhall have his open reward. It may be, even here upon earth, He will make our light break forth as the Morning. If here He doe not; there, He will. The leſſe earth anſwereth, the more heaven reſerveth. [a] Euge Serve bone, in that day, is another manner praiſe, if praiſe be it: [b] Intra in gaudium Domini, another manner reward, than earth hath any. Both together [c] Merces magna nimis, Abrahams reward, an exceeding great reward: [d] ſed non aſcendit in cor hominis, it exceedeth the heart of man, to think how exceeding great. Which reward Almighty GOD grant we may ſet before us, and ſeek it in all our doings: So ſeek it here on earth, in this life, as we may there finde it in heaven, in the life to come, to our endleſſe comfort, and content, through before King JAMES, at White-hall, on the XXVI. of February Anno Domini, MDCXXIII. being ASHWEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. III. Verſ. VIII.

—Progenies viperarum, quis demonſtravit vobis fugere a ventura ira?

Facite ergo fructum dignum pœnitentiæ (Vel, Proferte igitur fructus dignos pœnitentia.)

—O generation of vipers, who hath fore-warned you to flee from the anger to come?

* Or repentance. Bring forth therefore fruits worthy amendment of life.*

TO ſpeake of repentance, at the time of faſting, or of faſting at the time of repentance, is no way out of ſeaſon: As tree and fruit, they ſtand. Of theſe fruits faſting is one. And this, we now begin, a worthy fruit ever from yeare to yeare, religiouſly brought forth in the Church of Chriſt. That we go not from one, when we fall upon the other. The time of repentance will fall out to be a Cum jejunatis.

Repentance is here brought in, and preſented to us, as a tree with fruit upon it. The tree of Gods planting; The fruit medicinable; of the nature of a counter-poyſon, againſt our baine taken

Gen. 3. 6. by the fruit of another tree. The fruit of the forbidden tree had invenomed our Nature: the fruit of this tree, to expell it, to recover and cure us of it.

Now this Metaphor (of trees and fruit) puts us in mind, that the manner of fruit-trees is, once a yeare they beare fruit. All do ſo; once at leaſt: And if all, this tree likewiſe, within the ſame compaſſe, to bring forth hers.

And, though at no time repentance comes amiſſe; good all the yeare long; it may be bee taken every day (for, repentance would bee as familiar to us; as ſinne it ſelfe; and, as the one, ſo the other, daily: Yet at ſome time, more than other; and at this time, moſt proper, for then wee have ſpeciall uſe of it. That the bodie and the ſoule may keepe time: and when wee take phyſicke for the bodie, we may doe likewiſe for the other. If all were well knowne, of the twaine, the ſoule hath more need.

This medicine is to be taken faſting; as the rules of Phyſicke are, and as medicines uſe to be. Men come neither eating nor drinking to take phyſicke: when we will take that, we take nothing elſe. Thus. faſting is a friend to phyſicke both of ſoule and body. When wee repent, no man will adviſe us to doe it upon a full ſtomacke, but Cum jejunat is.

Of this tree and fruit, GOD (knowing the great need we have) hath a ſpeciall care, we be not without it: that it be planted and growing ſtill in our gardens; and that it beares us fruit, whereof we have ſo continuall uſe. As that in Paradiſe, was termed the forbidden fruit; So may this (as truly) the fruit bidden, it is ſo enjoyned, ſo called for of us.

And that, firſt called for, and before all other, as the firſt fruits of the Spirit returning to GOD. There was a firſt commandement in the Law: This, I may juſtly ſay, was the firſt Commandement of the Goſpell. Mat. 22. 36. 37.

Goe no further, but even where we are, where the Booke opens; Saint Iohn is at it, at firſt. It is his very firſt word [Repent] Sermo in apertione oris, the opening of his mouth. So begins He: And ſo begins CHRIST; takes it up after him, word for word the ſame: Repent, for the kingdome of Heaven is at hand: neither more nor leſſe. It is the firſt fruit of their lips both. And as our Saviour CHRIST began with it himſelfe; So gives Hee it in charge to his Apoſtles; they with it, to begin likewiſe. Both, when He ſent them to preach, to the Iewes firſt; And againe after when, at His Aſcenſion, He renewed and enlarged their Commiſſion, and ſent them to all Nations. That repentance firſt; (firſt that;) and then, remiſſion of ſins (after) ſhould be preached in His name. Verſe 2. Chap. 11. 4. Chap. 10. 5. Luke 10. 9.

Which was accordingly by them purſued. Ever, they ſtood on it, as the groundwork, the fundamentall point of all the reſt. So it is expreſly termed, Heb. 6. the foundation of repentance from good works. On which foundation, would GOD, more coſt were beſtowed: that, while we are buſie aloft on the Scaffolds, in our high points, the groundſils of Religion decay not for want of looking to. To lay them ſurely: Which S. Iohn doth here, and we may all learn of him. Heb. 6. 1.

For, having begun (above at the 2. verſe) with his pœnitentiam agite: when hee ſaw, in the throng of his Auditory, diverſe Scribes and Phariſees hypocrites, he knew where they would be ſtraight: (we ſhould have an Agite; a repentance with a penitentiall face, and all acted:) Repent? Yes, in any wiſe, that they would, and could do it full well, and never trouble themſelves with any ſuch matter as fruit. This made him lay it a new; to his Agite, to put a Facite; to Agite pœnitentiam, a Facite fructus. Els, hee diſclaimes fruitleſſe repentance. It is none of his: it will do them no good: it will never quit them of the wrath to come. Verſe 3.

Where we ſee the good of repentance, what it is: To free us from ira ventura propter peccata præterita: Which, theirs will never do: Which none will ever do, unleſſe, beſide pœnitentiam agite (that is, the Act) there be alſo fructum facite, matter of fact beſides; ſome reall fruits. And S. Iohn asks, Who did it? and marvels much that any ſhould do it: teach them any other way, how to eſcape wrath to come. Tels them directly there is no other way: but, that they do but beguile themſelves, while they vainly imagine, to ſlip thorow GODS wrath with this fruitleſſe, formall, ſlight kind of repentance. Ver. 7.

If they will go to it indeed, and do it, and ſo do it, as it may be available to rid them of wrath to come, then muſt it not be barren, but bring forth: and that, fruit: and that, not ſuch ſlight and ſlender fruit, as they commonly poſt it over with, but worthy fruits and ſuch as may well be-ſeeme repentance indeed.

The

The Summe. The points we are to take into our conſideration, are: 1 That there is wrath to come: 2 but, it is yet but to come. That it will come. There is no falling into it, when it comes: nor no abiding, till it comes. Fly from it we muſt, and fly from it we may. It may be fled from, is in the Text: we may be ſhewen a way, how. Who ſhall ſhew it us? That will S. Iohn here; who well can: He was ſent to prepare it. But (it ſeemes) we may be ſhewed a wrong way too; the Phariſees way: But S. Iohns is the right. He that takes any other, the wrath of God will come on him, which is to come upon all impenitent ſinners.

The Diviſion All which may be reduced to theſe two heads, which S. Iohn would have imprinted in them and us: 1. There is no flying Gods wrath, but by a true repentance. 2. There is no true repentance, without fruits, and thoſe worthy, and well becomming it. Bring forth fruits therefore.

Of which words there is not any one waſte or to ſpare. Every one of them is verbum vigilans (as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaks) awake all; never an one aſleepe among them, Each hath his weight. Nor, never an one out of his place, but (as Salomon ſpeakes) upon his right wheele, ſtanding juſt where it ſhould. We will take them as they lye, 1. Bring forth. 2. Bring forth fruit. 3. Bring forth fruit therefore: wherefore? That you may fly the wrath to come: There, will that fall in. It is the only true way: Let no man teach you any other way to fly it. 4. Then, fruits of repentance. And, if repentance beare fruits, then it is a tree. 1 Of the tree then firſt, that beares them. 2 Then, of the fruits it beares: Repentance's fruits. 5. And laſt, that they be worthy fruits of Repentance. Bring forth fruits therefore, &c. So fall they in order, of themſelves. To order them otherwiſe, were but to diſ-array them and doe them wrong.

Prov. 25. 11.

I. II. III. IV. V.

I

Bring forth: carry not in.

Bring forth: At which, at the very firſt, we ſhall have ſome ſticking, as the world goes. All, in carrying in: little in bringing forth. For, to take our Age at the beſt, and our ordinary Profeſſours in the prime of their profeſſion, and this is our vertue; we carry well in; we are ſtill carrying in: but nothing, or as good as nothing comes from us, bring we forth. So, this word comes very oppoſite to our times. All our time, is ſpent in hearing; in carrying in Repentance ſeeds, and other good ſeeds many. All, in hearing in a manner; none, in doing what we heare: None, in bringing forth repentance, or any other good fruit.

Act. 17. 20. At Athens they ſaid of S. Paul: Nova quædam infers auribus noſtris. It is our caſe right, infers auribus: but it is an infers without a profers; any profers at all. In, at our eares, there goes I know not how many Sermons: and every day more and more, if we might have our wills. Infers auribus, into the eares they go; the eare and all filled, and even farced with them: but there, the eare is all.

1 Cor. 12. 17. It puts me in mind of the great abſurdity, as Saint Paul reckons it. What, is all hearing? (ſaith he) All hearing? Yes: all is hearing with us. But that all ſhould bee hearing is as much as if all one's body ſhould be nothing but an eare, and that were a ſtrange body. But, that abſurditie are we fallen into. The corps, the whole body of ſome mens profeſſion; all godlineſſe with ſome, what is it, but hearing a ſermon? The eare is all, the eare doth all that is done: and but by our eare-marke, no man ſhould know us to be Chriſtians. They were wont to talke much of Auricular Confeſsion: I cannot tell, but now, all is turned to an auricular Profeſsion. And (to keep us to Proferte) Our Profeſsion is an inning Profeſsion. In it goes, but brings nothing out; nothing comes from it again.

Chap. 13. 3. But, Proferte, bring forth (ſaith Saint Iohn,) be not alwayes loading in. And there is reaſon for it. As, there is a time for Exiit qui ſeminat ſeminare ſemen ſuum (in the Parable Parable) wherein the Sower goeth forth and carrieth with him good ſeed, and caſts it in. So is there a time too (ſaith the Pſalm:) for Rediit meſſor ferens manipulos ſecum, that the Reaper comes backe and brings his ſheaves with him; the ſheaves, which the ſeed (he carried in) brought forth. But, with us, it is otherwiſe. For, a wonderfull thing it is, how many Sermons, and Sermons upon Sermons (as it were, ſo many meaſures of ſeed) are throwen in daily; and what becomes of them, no man can tell. Turne they all to wind? Or run they all thorow? For, fruit there comes none. Omnia te adverſum, all in: Nulla retrorſum, None out. It went hard (ſaith Aggee) when, for twentie meaſures of ſeed, there came but ten of graine; but halfe in halfe: Why, we would thinke our ſelves happie, if that were our caſe. Nay, it was worſe with Eſay, an Homer of ſeed yeelded but an Epha of corne; that, was but one in ten. It were well with us, might one but ſay that: for, that were ſomewhat yet. To be wiſhed we might ſee more: but, till more come, ſee but even that.

Pſal. 126. 6.

Agge. 2. 16.

Eſay 5. 10.

Now, that ground (ſaith the Apoſtle) that receives ſuch a quantitie of Seed, and returnes no more for it, is neere a curſe. And that tree (ſaith the Goſpell) that was well leaved, and no fruit found on it, was ſo neere, that it had a curſe. And thoſe eares that have (I know not how many) Sermons and Lectures, and all in a manner ſine fructu, without any fruit that can be ſeene, are not far from it, from a curſe.

Heb. 6. 8.

Chap. 21. 19.

Which I would not have drawne to bee ſpoken any way againſt hearing; but againſt our evill proportioned hearing: Not to ſlake our devotion in receiving good Seed; but to make a conſcience, in ſome degree to proportion our fruit to our ſeed: To reduce our inferte and our proferte to ſome analogie. For, if there be an analogie of faith; ſo is there of hearing alſo. Sure, if the body thrive not with it, and yet be alwayes hungry, it is no good ſigne. It is a diſeaſe, which they call βελιμία, or Canina appetentia; and would be looked to.

Well; there hath beene old carrying in, and little elſe: let us have ſome bringing forth another while. Bee not alwayes lading in: bring forth ſomewhat: Elſe, wee ſtumble at the verie threſhold of the Text; and are not come to the firſt word of it, Proferte, bring forth.

Bring forth fruit. With much adoe, at laſt ſomewhat there comes. Forth they bring; but what is it? It is well knowne, trees bring forth ſomewhat elſe, before fruit. And, ſomewhat brought forth there is, but it is but leaves. Fruit it ſhould bee, leaves it is: there is all our product. So that here, wee ſhall bee ſtaid againe. Leaves come of the kernell, as well as the fruit: ſo doth chaffe, of the Seed, as well as good graine. What of that? We plant not for leaves; nor we ſow not for chaffe. Wee count that no bringing forth. Quid palea ad triticum? (ſaith the Prophet:) And, Quid foliis ad fructum, may wee ſay? It is not chaffe, or leaves; fruit it is, wee are willed to Bring forth.

II. Bring forth fruit, not leaves.

Ierem 13. 28.

Vitis frondoſa Iſrael wee finde in Hoſee, and Ficus frondoſa, wee have in the Goſpell. A Vine and a Fig-tree, that brought forth, both; and ſo paſſed the firſt; but ſtumble at this ſecond: For, fruit it was not: But, as for leaves, well taken both; ſtore of them. And ſo, to many a tree ſhall CHRIST come among us, and finde leaves poſſibly; but, that will not ſerve. It is bring forth fruit. What became of Hoſea's Vine, wee may there reade: what, of the Fig-tree, we all know.

Hoſ. 10. 1. Chap. 21. 19.

Verſe 6, 7.

Will you know, what theſe leaves be? Saint Auguſtine tells us (No man can doe it better:) It is, to heare a Sermon, and to praiſe the Preacher: There comes ſomewhat; ſome leaves. His words are: Audiviſtis, laudâſtis, Deo gratias; Semen accepiſtis, verba reddidiſtis. Laudes veſtræ gravant nos potius, & in periculum mittunt. Toleramus illas, & tremimus inter illas. Tamen fratres mei, laudes veſtræ folia ſunt: modò fructus quæritur. You heare, and you commend (ſaith Auguſtine:) well, thankes bee to GOD. Good ſeed you receive, good words you give backe. Theſe good words profit us not; peradventure, doe us hurt other-while. Beare with them wee muſt; tremble at them we ſhould. Yet, when all is done (good brethren) good words are but leaves; and it is fruit, fruit is it, we preach for. Not the fruits of your lips; they be but leaves: but, fructus operis, that fruit.

What the leaves be.

Now if you marke, what it is our beſt Sermons bring forth, wee ſhall eaſily obſerve, the moſt is a few good words of ſome point or other in the Sermon, handled (peradventure) not amiſſe: and (heare you) well, if that: but, if that, looke for no more; there's all. And this leafe, it laſts not long neither; fades quickly, as did the leaves of Iona's gourd: One day greene, the next drie.

Ion. 4.7.

Chap. 6.2. And, is this the fruit of our labours? Is not this the Phariſees Accepiſtis mercedem veſtram? If the fruit of our labours be but the fruit of mens lips, wee are like to make but a cold reckoning of it, to inherit the wind. As if we came hither to bring forth a leafe of praiſe; to preach art, and not Spirit: Art, to draw from men a vaine applauſe; And not Spirit, to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, fructifying to newneſſe of life, by fructus facite; fruit, that may abound to your account and ours: Yours, that did; Ours, that preached to have them done.

Prov. 11.29.

The only true praiſe of a Sermon is, ſome evill left, or ſome good done, upon the hearing of it. One ſuch fruit, ſo brought forth, were a more ample commendation, than many mouthes full of good words ſpent, and copies taken, and printing, and I wot not what. And ſure it is, On whom a Sermon workes aright, it leaves him no leaſure to ſay much, to uſe many words, but makes him rather full of thoughts. And when all comes to all, fructus factus, the deed done, is it. And, it is no good ſigne in a tree, when all the ſap goes up into leaves; is ſpent that way: Nor, in an auditor, when all is verball that comes, and nothing elſe: No realitie at all.

Acts 2.37.

Verſe 9. Saint Iohn himſelfe (in the next words following) tells us, the fruit he meanes, it is not Dicentes: And begin not (ſaith he) to Say: For, it is no matter of ſaying, either to your ſelves, or to others. This is but a greene leafe; and, with the fruit, doth not amiſſe; without it, is little worth. It is not repentance in the leaves, but with the fruit, he calleth for.

I will ſhut up this point with St. Auguſtines prayer, before one of his Sermons: that God would vouchſafe, quod utiliter meditatum eſt cor meum, what my heart hath profitably thought on, to bring it thence into my tongue, and from thence into your eares, and from thence into your hearts, and from thence into your deeds: that ſo, all may end in Proferte fructus, Bring forth fruits.

III. Bring forth fruit, therefore. The Root or Reaſon.

Eſay 37.31. Proferte fructus igitur. Igitur, everie where you finde, ſlip it you muſt not: the whole weight of the ſentence lyeth upon it. There is in it the ground and reaſon, wherefore; And ſo is indeed the root, all theſe fruits muſt grow from. And the Prophets Rule is, to looke to the root downward, before to the fruit upward. Firſt then, to finde a wherefore for this therefore. Therefore, is the knowne note of a concluſion: Then muſt there be a Syllogiſme: and here it is, Quicunque vult, Whoſoever of you will fly from the wrath to come, hee is to bring forth fruit worthy of repentance? But you are all of this minde, that you would fly from the wrath to come; Bring forth fruit therefore.

Flying from the wrath to come. We muſt then caſt our eye backe to this flying from the wrath to come, which is the medius terminus, or cardo, whereupon all the argument runs, and the verie life of the whole inducement. There is wrath to come: That muſt you fly from: Fly from it you cannot, but by this igitur: Proferte fructus igitur.

Many are the Therefore's, why we ſhould repent, and of divers natures. The goodneſſe of God (ſaith the Apoſtle) doth (even) lead us to repentance: And well is him that will be led. But, theſe (here) would not lead. St. Iohn had uſed that before (ver. 2.) Doe it; Repent, and the Kingdome of heaven is at hand, hard by you. One would thinke, this would have done it; have even led them to it. It ſtirred them not: Hee is faine to lay Heaven by, and the life, joy, glorie to come; And to take him to hell, to the anguiſh, tribulation, torments there (for, all theſe are in the wrath to come.) So, to drive them (if it may be) to it, ſince leading will not ſerve.

Rom. 2.4.

Verſe 2.

Strange:

Strange: but ſuch is our indoles. The Kingdome of Heaven workes not with us, as doth Wrath to come: So doth ſin bewitch us. For the loſſe of Heaven, if that were all, wee would never abſtaine from it: if no ira ventura, never care for the loſſe of Heaven. Repent, or you loſe Heaven, will not: Repent, or you muſt to Hell (the place of wrath to come) that bites ſoone; that makes an Igitur; that will move us: And, to fly from it, makes us fly to Repentance.

Saint Iohn takes the courſe to ſhew us ſomewhat to come: He chooſeth ventura: For, the things preſent carrie us and keepe us from Repentance. Preſent good cheere, preſent ſport and mirth, preſent good company, preſent twentie things elſe, they make us no fit ſoile, for theſe fruits to grow in. But then (as GOD would have it) beſides theſe preſent things, there are ventura, ſome other to come, that would be thought on. For, in all our jollitie, before wee venture too farre, it will not be amiſſe, to looke to thoſe ventura, and what will come of it. There is an ira ventura for peccata præterita.

Ventura, It is ſomething to come.

Knowing the vertue of this peece of perſpective, Moſes doth wiſh but this, ô Si, O that men would but looke לאחריתם, looke but that way to the hindmoſt dayes, to the latter end! There is ſomewhat, there, worth our ſight. The Prophets doe the like: Populus meus dilexit talia (it is Ieremie:) My People, this ſin they like; and that ſin they love, Sed quid fiet in noviſſimo, but what will be the end of this? What will become of it, at the laſt? Yea, our bleſſed Saviour Himſelfe (and He ſhould move us) moſt earneſtly with teares in his eyes: O that thou hadſt knowne in this thy day! and could not ſpeake out the reſt for weeping: His meaning was, the ventura, what was to come upon them. So much doth it import us, ſometime to open a window that way. The clapping it to, and the putting them from us out of our ſight, makes us, we care not, never looke after the tree, or the fruit. Ventura would much helpe forward this Proferte fructus igitur.

Deut. 32. 29.

Ier. 5. 31.

Luk. 19. 41, 42.

What that ventura is.

These Ventura (three of them) follow here cloſe in the tenth and twelfth verſes: 1 the Axe, 2 the Fanne, 3 and the Fire: I will onely touch them. The Axe firſt: For ſure, our dayes be numbred: there is a line ſtretched upon everie one of our lives, and it is no long line neither, quia velox eſt depoſitio tabernaculi hujus, the taking downe of this Tabernacle is not farre hence: death will come with his axe and downe wee goe. For, it is not (ſaith St. Iohn) laid to the branches, but, to the root; and then, we are paſt fruit-bearing for ever. Proferte fructus igitur.

The Axe.
2 Pet. 1, 14.
Verſe 10.

After the Axe, comes the Fan, to ſhew whether our bringing forth be corne or chaff; which is our doome after death. So long agoe told of by old Enoch in his Maranatha, that the Lord will come, come to Iudgement: Et omnes ſtabimus, and we ſhall all ſtand before His Iudgement Seat, and the fan goe over us: And there, by theſe fruits here; and by theſe fruits only, all ſhall goe: for, none is in Heaven, but by it. Sinners, both they in Heaven, and they in Hell: only, this difference; they in Heaven had theſe fruits, they in hell had them not. And then, ſeeing they will be all in all, Proferte fructus igitur.

2
The Fanne.
Verſe 12.
Iude 14.

These two ventura, come they will to all, and to all alike: we heare not of wrath yet? But, here it comes. I goe further and aske, Ventura, to come: to come, what? Ira ventura, wrath to come. Whoſe wrath? His, who when He hath killed the body, can caſt both body and ſoule into hell fire.

Luk. 12. 5.

For, after the Fan comes the Fire. The fan divides the corne and the chaffe, ſends each to his owne place, the Corne to the Garner, the chaffe to the fire; and everie tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, thither too. Proferte fructus igitur: Elſe, how will you ſcape the wrath to come (ſaith St. Iohn?) How will you ſcape the damnation of hell (ſaith CHRIST?) and meane the ſame thing. That of CHRIST is but a Commentarie of this of St. Iohn. Ire and fire are but one thing.

3
The Fire.
Verſe 12.
Chap. 23. 33.

Now the noiſe of fire will ſtartle any of us, even at midnight, out of his dead ſleepe. Of any fire: but, much more, of this: Non eſt iſte ignis ſicut qui ardet in foco tuo (ſaith Auguſtine.) This fire is another manner fire, than that on our harthes. Why? ours may bee quenched: that, is (ſaith the twelfth verſe) unquenchable fire. A worme ever

Mat. 9. 44. 46. gnawing, and never dying: So doth our Saviour deſcribe it: a flame ever burning and never going out.

Eſay 33. 14. Now will I but aske the Prophet Eſay's queſtion, (Chap. 33.) who of us can dwell in conſuming fire? That, is our fire, which as it conſumes, ſo will it be conſumed it ſelfe: But then, hee comes over againe, but who is able to abide in everlaſting burnings? That can none doe: Proferte fructus igitur. This (loe) is the wrath, the verie dregs of the wrath to come. But who regardeth the power of this wrath? They (I feare mee) leſt, that ſhall feele it moſt.

I have purpoſely ſtood upon this a little, For that, as upon this day they were wont, by the ceremonie of giving aſhes, to put men in minde of this fire. For, aſhes were not given to put men in minde of their mortalitie: duſt had beene more proper to have done that. Our mortalitie is grounded upon Pulvis es & in pulverem. But, aſhes, they come not without fire: where they are, fire muſt have beene firſt. And, ſo they moſt meet to repreſent fire and make us thinke of it. The aſhes, they be blowen away; but, not the memorie of them (I hope.) Whatſoever becomes of the ceremonie, the ſubſtance would not be blowen away after it. Sure, theſe aſhes laid well to the root of the tree, it hath beene thought, will make it beare the ſooner. The preſent feare of future wrath for ſins paſt, will put ſome force into this igitur: If this will not, nothing will. This or nothing make the ſap to aſcend: This, or nothing bring them forth.

The comfort of ventura, it may be fled from.

[a] Scientes igitur terrorem hunc: you have ſeene the terrour: Shall I open you a [b] doore of hope in the valley of Achor? All is not terror in ventura: there is ſome comfort, that it is but to come (this wrath;) it is yet to come. So, while it is yet to come, there is time given us to take order for it, before it come: that the fruit may come before the wrath, and not the wrath before the fruit: for then we are gone for ever.

[a] 2 Cor. 5. 11.
[b] Hoſea 2. 15.

There is another comfort: that though the axe and the fanne ſhall come upon all; and none fly from either of them, ſo ſhall not wrath. That ſhall not come upon all; but all may, and ſome ſhall fly from it. Fly from it (I ſay) for, there is no meeting it, no abiding of it when it comes: No ſtanding it out, but fly from it wee muſt (ſaith the Text;) and fly from it we may. There is a right way, if we may be ſhewed it; and there is no right way, but one, and who will ſhew us that? that will St. Iohn teach us. He prepares it, and he is beſt able; and he knowes no way but by Proferte igitur.

By Proferte. But if there be a flight, there is no flying it, not with the wings of an Eagle; not with the ſix wings of a Seraphin: only the wings of repentance, will fly from it. But, there is no flight intended: Proferte igitur will ſerve: onely ſtand and beare this fruit, and it ſhall be a Superſedeas to all wrath to come. You need not fly; you need not ſtir, no more than a tree; but keep your ſtanding, and beare your fruit, and it ſhall not come Exod. 12. 23. neere you, but fly over you, as did the deſtroying Angell, their houſes in Ægypt. To come it is (this wrath:) fly from it we may: this, the way to doe it.

Yea, this is one way: but, is there no way but this? It ſeemes, there was ſome bodie ſhewing ſome other way beſides, that St. Iohn was a little ſtirred, and asked, Who hath ſhewed you it, who? Whoſoever he was, he had ſhewed them a wrong way. So that, even then, even in CHRIST'S time and St. Iohns, ſome there were that tooke a phanſie, they had found a neerer way to cut between, to fly this wrath, and yet let tree

Verſe 9. and fruit alone, and care for neither. And (as it followes) by a dicentes intra ſe, ſaid within themſelves (ſomewhat ſtrange things men will ſay there) fruits are for them, that have not Abraham for their father, but wee have him for our Father: and ſo tooke themſelves privileged from fruit-bearing, by that. Chriſt ſhewes them their folly:

Ioh. 8. 39. Have you ſo, have you Abraham to your Father? then doe the works of Abraham: that is, bring forth the fruits that he did. For, Abraham himſelfe brought forth theſe fruits; went no other way but this, by Proferte igitur.

The ſame may be ſaid to another Dicentes intra ſe of ſome of us. Wee have Abraham to our Father, ſo they: Wee have CHRIST to our Saviour, ſo wee: and make a ſhort cut and ſteppe to CHRIST ſtraight, and lay hold on Him by faith, without any more adoe: Thruſt by Saint Iohn Baptiſt; Him, and his Repentance, Both. Indeed, ſo ſome goe (but with more haſte than good ſpeed) that vainly imagine to come to remiſsion of ſins, per ſaltum, over repentance head, But, it will not be: Eſay's qui crediderit, ne feſtinet, is good counſell in this ſenſe; Not to caſt away all, with making too much haſte, but take St. Iohn in their way. To him it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt goe before His face to prepare His way: And, but by that way he prepares, CHRIST will not be come to. If hee prepare one way, and you goe another, you will never come at Chriſt. Therefore hee wonders, Quis oſtendit? who hath ſhewed them any other way. St. Iohn knew it not; CHRIST knew it not: And I cannot tell what to ſay, but, they that goe it, I pray God, it deceive them not. Luk. 1. 76.

But, for this [of no other way] CHRIST Himſelfe is more peremptorie than S. Iohn. See you any, Heare you of any that periſh? Niſi, &c, Vnleſſe you repent, and ſcape that way, ſo ſhall you too: that is flat. There is no Iron, no Adamant binds ſo hard, as Chriſts Niſi. If any but CHRIST had ſaid it, wee might have ſought ſome evaſion: Now when it is He that tells us, there are but two wayes, [1] Repent, or [2] Periſh, chooſe you whether; Repent here, for a time; or periſh there under Gods wrath for ever; Not to repent, and not to periſh, is not poſſible. Luk. 13. 5.

Which Dilemma of CHRISTS (no way to be avoided) makes, of the twaine to chooſe this fruit of Repentance, rather than to fall into the Wrath to come: To flie to the one, to flie from the other: which otherwiſe we are of our ſelves but coldly affected to. For, though it be ſomewhat bitter (this fruit) yet (ſure we are) if it were ten times more, the bitter paines of ira ventura, are far beyond it. Now, the Phyſicke of the bodie and ſoule ſtand upon one Maxime both, Melior eſt modica amaritudo in faucibus, quàm æternum tormentum in viſceribus: Better the bitter Electuarie than a burning Ague: Better a ſhort diſtaſte in the mouth, than a perpetuall torment in the bowels: Better Repent Ninive for fortie dayes, than no Ninive at fortie dayes end. Ion. 3. 4.

Shall wee conclude then with the Pſalmiſt, What man is hee that would deliver his Soule from the wrath to come? And they all began at once to ſay; that would I: Yea, even they that ſhall not eſcape it, will yet ſay, That would I. Why, by the bringing, or not bringing forth of this fruit all goes; depends the comming, or not comming of this wrath: comming if you doe not; Not comming if you doe bring them forth. Proferte fructus igitur. Pſal. 34. 12.

And, now wee have beene at the root downeward, to come upward to [1] the tree, [2] the fruits, [3] the worth of the fruits, (three points yet behind) which will aske more time than is left; Nay, more than hath beene already ſpent; and ſo, the worke of ſome other time. A word or two, of Proferte, and I have done.

1 Proferte, a Precept. Mark. 1. 21. Chap. 8. 9.

First, take it not (this Proferte) by way of advice, or as the wiſh of a well-willing friend. No, St. Iohn delivers it, quaſi authoritatem habens, as a Precept, or Injunction: the word will warrant it. To ſay, doe this, belongs to authoritie; (the Centurion will tell you ſo:) and requireth obedience; Doe this, and He doth it.

2 Proferte igitur, a Concluſion.

Then, beſide authoritie to enjoyne us, there is reaſon, to conclude us. It is not made a Propoſition barely, Doe; It is (beſide) a binding Concluſion, Bring forth therefore; whereto we in reaſon, to conforme our ſelves, and conclude, we will ſo bring them.

3 Proferte, an injunction with a penaltie.

Laſt, beſides both theſe, it bindes the harder by the penaltie annexed to it, As you will avoid the wrath to come: And falling into it, you fall from the fruition of Heaven to the damnation of Hell. Which is pœna pœnarum, the penaltie of all penalties moſt penall. This is the three-fold cord that bindes it about: Let ſome, or all of them prevaile with us to bring them forth.

4 The Time: now, Proferte: in the Preſent Tenſe.

But oft it fals out, when we are agreed of the thing, we are not ſo, for the time. Will we at all bring them forth? If we will, we will take ſome time to doe it in. Some time: yes; that we all agree to. At what time then? It is not proponite, or promittite, purpoſe or promiſe to doe it, hereafter to bring them forth; but Proferte. What Tenſe is Proferte? The Preſent: Do it then in Preſent. It requires an act inſtantly to be done, Bring them forth out of hand. This is a ſmall note: but, it is no ſmall matter, to get this ſmall note borne well away; to get our Repentance into the Preſent Tenſe.

In the Aoriſt. ποίησατε.

Nay, then it ſits neerer: For, to tell you the truth as it is, The word, is not Bring forth, at this time, now; then, it ſhould be ποιεῖτε, in the Preſent: But, it is not: It is ποιήσατε, in the Aoriſt; (a tenſe the Latine hath not, nor our Tongue neither.) It ſignifies rather, Have done bringing forth; rather, than Bring forth preſently. And I would to GOD wee had even done ſo; had done bringing them forth; for then, all feare were paſt. Ventura is to come, but come it will; and, when we know not. Both, are yet to come (for ought I ſee) wrath, and our fruit. If the fruit come before the wrath come, it is well: But, if the wrath come, before the fruit come, where are wee then? Wee are paſt recoverie.

But, what ſpeakes hee to us, of having done? We have ſcarſe yet begun, ſcarſe ſet the root that ſhould beare this fruit. Well yet, this ſhewes us, it is time we were about it, ſeeing Saint Iohn ſaith, it is more than time, wee had done bringing them forth.

But well, to take no advantage of that tenſe, we will be content with the preſent, if wee may obtaine that. And ſo would he have it, now: For, now (ſaith hee) is the axe laid to the root: Now then, or not at all. Nay, not now: this is not a time; we have appointed other buſineſſe which wee cannot put off. Well, one queſtion more will make an end; if not at this time; at what time? If not now, when? But then, this muſt be ſet downe, now before we ſtir hence; And ſo ſet downe, as if it be not now, it be as neere now, as may be. for feare ventura come not too ſoone, and take tree and all. This is ſure; the ſooner the better, becauſe the more likely; the later, the worſe, becauſe the leſſe certaine.

That time more than a moment. Eſay 66.8.

But, when we ſpeake of the preſent, we ſhut it not up in ipſo nunc, in a day or two, or three. Fruits require a time to bring them forth: who ever heard of fruits brought forth on a ſudden? Saw ever any man ſuch a thing? (It is Eſay) Shall the tree bring, or the fruit be brought forth at once? A Gourd or a Muſhrome may ſhoot up in a night; So cannot fruit: It askes time. I take it to bee an errour, and that of dangerous conſequence; teaching repentance, to thinke it a matter of no more moment, than to be diſpatched in a moment. Commonly, our repentance is too ſoone done.

Application to Lent. Apoc. 2.21. Ion 3.4.

GOD knew it well; and therefore Hee allowes a time for it: Ecce dedi ei tempus (ſaith Hee to the Church of Thyatira) Hee gave a time to repent, to bring forth theſe fruits. What time might that bee? Hee never gave certaine time, but to Ninive; and that was fortie Dayes. You know, where wee are now, and what that meanes.

Acts 24.25.

Wee are not againſt allowance of time, ſo it bee not to ſlip the collar, to be ſtill uncertaine. But, I like not his ſaying ὅταν καιρὸν, yea, when I finde a convenient time, then He that ſaid it, never found it: had it then, never found it after.

Levit. 16.29. Ioel 2.12. Ion. 3.5.

But, if we meane, as we ſay, would doe it at a convenient time, we cannot find ſo convenient a time as this. Take it firſt, as the time of the Faſt; that time may ſeeme to claime a propertie in it. They goe alwayes together; In the Law, their ſolemne repentance was ever at the time of their generall Faſt. In the Prophets, Ioel tells us the beſt turning to GOD (that is, repentance) is cum jejunio. They that had not the Law (as Ninive) Nature it ſelfe taught them to doe it faſting; when they tooke this fruit, to taſte nothing. In the Goſpell, Iohn Baptiſt the Preacher of repentance, came neither eating nor drinking.

Chap. 11.18. Ioh. 13.15.

And our Saviour though Hee did both, yet this faſt Hee kept, though not for any need He had of it Himſelfe, but (as in other) for Exemplum dedi vobis, to give us an example, and to point us that had need, what time to doe it in. Which hath ever ſince, from yeare to yeare beene religiouſly obſerved; both, as a time of publique penance, and as a time of Generall abſtinence in the Church of CHRIST, Convenient, for the time of Faſt.

Pſalm. 1.3.

And, convenient, for the time of the yeare. For, if it will be the tree in the I. Pſalme, to bring forth fruit in due ſeaſon, this way it fits our turne: that ſeaſon is at this ſeaſon. It is now tempus proferendi: when can we better ſay Proferte fructus igitur? You can never bring forth at a better time. The ſeaſon is now come; and bringing forth will ſhortly be in ſeaſon, of which the Poet ſaith----Nunc omnis ager, nunc omnis parturit arbos, when the trees will fall in travaile, and they and the earth (both) make proffer toward, and give pledges in their buds and bloſſomes, of fruit that is comming, and will follow in due time.

We are made theſe offers, chooſe which we will; If we will keepe time with the heavens, Now the heavens returne againe to their firſt degree: It is turning time in heaven. If with the foules of heaven (and them CHRIST bidds us looke to) they know their times juſt, and juſt at this time make their returne; the poore ſwallowes and all: And ſo let us; that the Prophet Ieremie upbrayd us not with them. So, whether wee will goe by heaven and the fowles of heaven; or, by earth and the fruits of the earth, they all invite us to the diſpenſation of this ſeaſon. Yea, if wee will give our ſoules leave to keepe time with out bodies, the time we take phyſicke for one, may be (if we will) allowed in like ſort for the other: The opening of the yeare for both. Equall need is of both: if any odds, on the ſoules ſide.

Chip. 6 26.

Ier. 8. 7.

Nay, it hath ſo fallen out, that Repentance, Faſting, and the verie ſeaſon of the yeare (for the moſt part) hit together. That of Ninive the moſt famous: by the ſpringing up of Iona's gourd, we may gheſſe, what time it was: wee know what time it is, when gourds ſpring. And, for our Saviour CHRIST, if we will take up His time, it is ſuppoſed, Hee laid His alſo much about this time. For, when the people were baptized, then was CHRIST alſo with them, as St. Luke ſaith: And immediately after His Baptiſme, He was carried away into the wilderneſſe, and there began His fourtie dayes faſt. Exemplum dedi vobis, A paterne for us; both for our faſt, and for our time of it.

Luk. 3 21. 4 1.

It is true, the ſolemne faſt in the Law, was in Tiſri, which anſwers our September: But then, take this withall; when it was ſo in Tiſri, Tiſri was with them their firſt moneth. So they alſo began their repentance with the beginning of the yeare.

And, take this beſides, that, in that firſt moneth, the trumpets firſt blaſt of all, was to aſſemble them to their Kipher, their great Repentance-day. That, was their firſt worke of all.

Now I ſhall tell you, how it was. Betweene the Faſt and the Sabboth, it is well knowen, there was neere alliance, inſomuch as the Faſt is called a Sabboth, and both are ſaid to be ſanctified. Sanctifie a faſt, as well as Sanctifie the Sabboth. Their Sabboth was the ſeventh day; their Faſt was the ſeventh moneth. And it may well be thought, by whom and when the Sabboth was removed from the ſeventh day to the firſt; by the ſame perſons, and at the ſame time, was the Faſt removed from the ſeventh moneth to the firſt, from Tiſri to Niſan the firſt moneth of all. Now Niſan is alſo called Abib of the firſt bringing forth fruits in it.

Ioel 2. 15.

Now, in Niſan, was the time when their Paſchall Lambe was ſlaine and eaten. The ſame is alſo the time of the killing of ours; of St. Iohn Baptiſts Lambe, the Lambe of God; when CHRIST our Paſſeover was offered; Offered for us in Sacrifice; Offered to us in Sacrament; to whom St. Iohn Baptiſt will point us to take ſpeciall notice of Him, and of His time both.

Ioh. 1. 29.
1 Cor. 5. 7.

And we, now at this time, to ſet thoſe ſowre herbes and ſee them come up, wherewith the Paſſeover is to be eaten; which are nothing elſe but theſe fruits of Repentance. Now, to ſet them; that, then, we may gather them to ſerve us for ſawſe to the Paſchall Lambe. Thus everie way, we may ſay (with the Apoſtle) Ecce, &c. Behold this is the due ſeaſon, Behold, now is the convenient time. Now then, Bring them forth.

Exod. 12. 8.

2 Cor. 6. 2.

And, now all that hath beene ſpoken, would GOD it might bring forth but this; that, ſeeing the time ſerveth ſo well, we can no way except to it, wee would not ſlip it. If we did but truly apprehend the words ira ventura, our eyes would not ſleepe, nor our eye-lids ſlumber, nor the temples of our heads take any reſt, till we had taken ſtraight order with our ſelves, for the when, when it ſhould be; At what time wee ſhould not faile but to doe it; and nothing ſhould let us, but performe it once to purpoſe, and ſeale to our ſelves this fruit; that, yet once we may aſſure our ſelves, we are in good earneſt, and that done it is, and ſuch and ſuch were the fruits, we had of it.

Pſal. 132. 3. 4.

A time, whenſoever it ſhall happen, which will be to us no leſſe memorable, than the day of our birth, or the day of our comming to any place or dignitie. And as much joy and comfort ſhall we take in the remembrance of it, as of any of them. The reſt and repoſe, our ſpirits ſhall finde upon the accompliſhment of it, will bee worth our paines, and abundantly recompenſe our going through with it.

And, when come backe againe to St. Iohn Baptiſt, and to bring him word, you have brought forth this fruit, hee will then ſhew you Agnus Dei: And, then is (indeed) the ſhewing of Him in kind, and the right time of Seeing Him. And, that ſight ſhall be worth all: we will thinke, we never ſaw Him before.

We ſhall be ſure to fly the wrath to come. Nay, it ſhall fly from us; by us, or over us, but, from us ſure Wrath ſhall fly; and in ſtead of it, the Kingdome of heaven ſhall come neere to us, and we to it. For, Repent, and it is at hand, ſay St. Iohn and CHRIST, both. It is our daily Prayer, it may come; and, this is the way to make it come. What ſhall I ſay? we ſhall ſanctifie thereby this time of faſt; and as it hath ever bin counted, make it an holy time: And we in it, ſhall have our fruit in holineſſe, and the end everlaſting life.

A SER-

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED

on the Xth. of Februarie, A. D. MDCXXIV. being ASH-WEDNESDAY.

MATTH. Chap. III. Ver. VIII.

Proferte Fructus igitur dignos Pœnitentiæ.

Bring forth Fruits, therefore, worthy amendment of life (or, Repentance.)

OF this Text, three points we have gone through; theſe three, [1] Proferte, Bring forth, be not alwayes carrying in: [2] Proferte fructus, Bring forth fruit; Leaves will not ſerve: [3] Proferte fructus igitur, Bring forth fruits therefore: Wherefore? that ſo you may eſcape the wrath to come. There is no way to eſcape it, but that. Now we goe on.

Bring forth fruits therefore. What fruits? Fruits of repentance; fruits growing on a tree called Repentance: For, the fruits ever carrie us to the tree that carries them. If we be to have fruit, it muſt be brought forth: If brought forth it muſt be, there muſt be a tree to bring it forth. That tree is Repentance.

The reaſon, that St. John in his whole Sermon runs all upon this metaphor of tree and fruits, and axe, and root; that hee, brings in Repentance as a tree, I have touched formerly. It ſeemes to refer us (this tree) to another, the forbidden tree. That tree had fruit: This tree to have ſo too: Tree for tree, fruit for fruit. The worthy fruits of Repentance, for the unworthy fruits of diſobedience. The fruit of that tree was our bane; the fruit of this to be our medicine. The fruit of that made ira ventura to come; The fruit of this will turne it away. Gen. 2. 17.

It it true; the fruits of this tree of Repentance, they were not primæ intentionis, firſt or principally intended. There was another a more excellent plant, called the tree of innocence; the fruit whereof was, Ne peccetis, not to ſin at all. There were no fruit to that, if it were to be had. But, where ſhall we find that? Where growes the tree that beares that fruit? Who is there that ſinneth not? The forbidden fruit was no ſooner taken, but, that tree withered and died; could never be got to grow in our nature ſince. No talking of that. Rom. 3. 12.

That

That tree failing, it pleaſed GOD, of his great goodneſſe, to graft upon a new ſtocke, this ſecond plant, the Plant of Repentance: To the end it might ſerve for a counterpoyſon: the fruit of it againſt the venome of the forbidden fruit. To the end alſo Iob 33 26. that it might ſerve to ſupply that other of Innocencie (they be Elihu's words in Iob) to reſtore unto man his innocencie. For, quem pœnitet peccâſſe penè eſt innocens, (could the Heathen man ſay) the next degree to Innocence, is Penitencie. That if we cannot preſent God with the fruit of Innocencie, at the ſeat of His Iuſtice, yet, with the fruit of Repentance, we may, at the throne of his grace.

And this tree will grow in our ſoile; our ſoile will beare it, and with good tending, bring forth fruits, worthy fruits, which we may offer unto God, and He will take it in good worth. And this is the tree wee muſt truſt to, now: and bleſſed be God, that ſo we may.

The Diviſion.

I. To keepe us cloſe to our metaphore. We ſay firſt, that Repentance, if it be right, is no Logge, no dry peece of wood: A Tree it is; hath life in it; vegetable life at the leaſt.

II. 2 A Tree, and that no barren tree: Such there be, that for all their root, bring forth no fruit at all. This tree is a bearing tree, you may ſay Proferte to it. It will bring forth.

III. 3 Bring forth, and what? That, it was ſet for. It was not ſet for ſhadow, nor for ſewell. It was planted for fruit, and fruit it is to bring.

IV. 4 But, will any fruit ſerve? No: trees there be that carrie fruit, but fruit, of no worth; porcis comedenda, for ſwine (perhaps) not for men. Neither for meat nor medicine. Neither meet to be preſented to God, nor uſefull for the ſervice of men. So [1] a tree: [2] a bearing tree: [3] a fruit-bearing tree; and [4] the fruit it beares worthy the tree that beares it. [1] If it be a dead ſtocke, and no live tree. [2] If it be a tree, but bare and barren; No proferte; Bring not forth. [3] If it bring forth, be it what it will, if it be not fruit. [4] If it be fructus and not dignos, fruit, but ſuch as is nothing worth, it comes not hence: St. Iohn acknowledges it not. None of his tree; ſome baſtard ſlip it is: None of his ſetting. His, lies faire before us. Bring forth therefore, &c. Of theſe foure we are to proceed. [1] Of the tree, [2] The bearing of the tree, [3] The fruit it beares, [4] The worth of
V. the fruit: and a word (if you will) of the fruit time, the time of all this: which will fall out to be at this verie time.

I. Of the Tree.

VVE are to treat of Repentance, as a tree, firſt. To ſpeake properly, Repentance is a Vertue, a morall Vertue, a branch of Iuſtice, of Iuſtice corrective; and ſo ſhould be delivered in morall termes, as (in the Ethicks) other Vertues uſe to be. It is not, though: you ſhall ſeldome find it ſo: but moſt-what ſet out in the termes of ſome one paſſion of the mind or other. And why ſo? For no other cauſe, but that we are ſo dead and dull, when, we are about it (this buſineſſe) as if Repentance were a Heb. 6. 1. verie log, and no quick or live tree. Which cannot be; Repentance being from dead works, and therefore cannot be a dead thing it ſelfe, but have life in it. Marke it when you will, the Holy Ghoſt (as it were of purpoſe) ſtill chooſeth to expreſſe it, under ſome terme of paſſion (as ſorrow, feare, anger, and the like) rather than the other way: Rather in Patheticall, than in Ethicall termes. And this hee doth in a manner continually. For, Paſſions be quicke; there is life in them. Therefore, their termes He chooſeth, to put life in us. To ſhew Hee would have us affectionate, when wee are about this worke: and not ſo cold and ſo calme, as we uſe to be. And indeed, theſe affections be the verie radicall humour or ſap: If they goe up, there is hope of ſome fruit: If downe, and riſe not, no proferte to be looked for.

Now, if affections give life, the quicker the affection, the more life it gives. And there there is none quicker than that of Anger. For which cauſe, when time was, you may remember, we made it the chiefe Ingredient into Repentance. Even, Anger at our ſelves, we were ſo evill adviſed as to bring our ſelves into the anger of GOD. Whoſe anger when it comes, Quis poterit, who can, who is able? (that is, none can, none is able) to abide. And why found we it ſo? Becauſe moſt life and ſpirit appeares in that: Feare and Sorrow and the reſt, are but dull and heavie in compariſon of it. Pſal. 129. 3.

And this, I now mention the rather, becauſe the paſſion of Anger (if you marke it) ſtrikes upon ira ventura in the Text: doth even in a manner lead us by the hand unto it. One anger to another: God's anger, to ours: God's to come, to our's for the preſent. For by our anger for the preſent, we turne away His to come. Our anger is a Superſedeas to His. Or, if you will have it in termes of Iuſtice, judging our ſelves we ſhall not be judged of the Lord.

But our Anger, and (generally) all our affections are well compared to lime. Out of the water, where they ſhould bee hot, no heat appeares in them: in water, where they ſhould be cold, there they boile and take on. Uſed there moſt, where they ſhould be leaſt: and againe leaſt, where they ſhould be moſt. For, take me a worldly man, and let him but over-reach himſelfe, in ſome good bargaine, in matter of profit, you ſhall ſee him ſo angrie, ſo out of patience with himſelfe, as oft it caſts him into ſome diſeaſe. There (lo) is repentance in kind: there, is that which makes it a tree, the Spirit of life. Ours (for the moſt part) towards GOD is dull and blockiſh; neither life nor ſoule in it.

II. The Bearing of the Tree.

But we may not ſtand thus about the tree: We are called on for Proferte, to bring ſomewhat forth: Elſe how ſhall we know, it is a tree, and no log? Small ods or none at all, between a dead ſtocke and a barren tree; one brings forth as much as the other. It is the bringing forth, that makes the difference.

Bringing forth is oppoſite to keeping in, we muſt have no kept-in repentance. Forth it muſt come, forth it muſt be brought. From whence? from within. Carying in (before;) Keeping in (now:) all within's are againſt, utterly againſt Proferte.

St. Iohn ſaw well, which way the world would goe. Men would have their repentance prove res intus peragenda, a matter to be ſped, diſpatched, ſhuffled up within, between their conſcience and them (forſooth.) And then they would tell you great matters, what they are within. There, within, they have it, that they have; where no body can ſee what they have. Under the buſhell much, but nothing on the candleſticke, that any man can ſee. So, inſtead of Proferte, we ſhould have Præferte, nothing but pretending. Nay, no Præferte: Proferte (ſaith St. Iohn:) No boſome repentance: Bring it out, ſhew it. For, upon St. Iohn's Proferte is grounded St. Iames's Oſtende mihi, Shew mee thy faith: And it holds, in repentance too. Tell them not of a repentance under the ground; downe in the root; within, in the hollow of the barke; They will not heare of it, Vt in pœnitentiâ, ſola conſcientia præferatur; ſed ut aliquo etiam externo actu adminiſtretur: Not only a pretence or faire ſhew to be made of our conſcience within, but ſome outward thing to be done and executed upon it: Somewhat to be brought forth. Take heed of this errour, as if repentance were a matter meerely mentall or intentionall. It is not, good notions in the braine, nor good motions in the minde will ſerve, theſe are but the ſap within: Looke to the branches; what ſee you there? Look to Proferte, what is brought forth. Matth. 5 15. Iam. 2. 18.

III. The fruit it beares.

Bring forth then: And what, Many things doth a tree bring forth, and divers of them as fore-runners to the fruit, as boughs, and leaves, and buds, and bloſſomes. Saint Iohn mentions none of them; paſſeth by them all: ſtayes at none, till he come to the fruits. That is it, the tree was planted for. Not to make materialls, not to give ſhadow: Not for the greene boughs, nor the gay bloſſomes, not for any thing but for the fruit. The tree is for the fruit; and, but for the fruit, there had beene no tree. Fruit it was, for which it was firſt ſet, and for which it is let grow: and when there is no longer hope of

Luk. 13.7. of bringing forth fruit, downe with it (ſaith the Lord of the ſoile) why troubles it the ground any longer? And then comes Ira ventura with his axe, layes it to the root, and downe it goes, and into the fire it is caſt: and ſeeing it will not ſerve for fruit, make it ſerve for fewell; the end of all unfruitfull trees. Marke it well, this. It is the fruit of repentance; not repentance it ſelfe, but the fruit it is, is ſought for. That, is all in all. So, not only a bearing, but a fruit-bearing repentance.

And, good reaſon. For, if the one tree (ſinne) if that have brought forth fruit, ſo muſt repentance (the other tree) doe likewiſe. It is true, in ſinne, the ſenſe (and ſo, the ſoule) is firſt in fault. In at that gate it firſt comes, and out at that, it muſt firſt goe. But, ſinne hath her fruit in the body: So, is repentance to have hers too. Repentance is to bee incorporate, and bring forth her fruits in the body. The ſoule alone, not to be put to penance; all layd upon it: The body to ſhare, as in the pleaſure, ſo in the paine.

Perhaps, in the ſinne, that lyes ſmoothering in the thought within, never comes in actum, there may bee ſome queſtion, whether Repentance alone may not ſerve. But, if it have brought forth the forbidden fruit (the body;) the body muſt have her fruit in Repentance alſo. To both, ſayd it is, ſayd it muſt bee, Proferte igitur fructus.

That fruit is workes.

And what bee theſe fruits? To let goe the metaphore, if you would know in plaine termes what fruits meane, Saint Paul will tell you without any figure. Hee ſaith (Acts 26.20.) he preached; Men ſhould turne to God, and doe workes worthy of repentance. Looke yee: St. Iohn's fruits (Saint Paul being his Commenter) are nothing but works. Both meane the ſame thing: Saint Paul's works are Saint Iohn's fruits: fruits and works are all one. In omni opere bono fructificantes (It is the Apoſtles, Col. 1.10.) Everie good worke is a good fruit. To doe a worke then of Repentance, is to bring forth the fruits of Repentance.

There is no vertue at all but hath her proper act or worke: but not any vertue of them all, ſo proper as repentance. For, of repentance it is ſaid, agere pœnitentiam: So, it is not, of any beſides. That in a worke, it may ſeeme to claime a propertie, above and before all the reſt. And that it ſo requires an Act, as, no Act, no Repentance. Now becauſe we have taken up a diſtinction, that an Act is but a thing tranſient, but a fact, that is permanent. Therefore (to make all ſure) beſides pœnitentiam agere, you have quæ fructum non fecerit. So, both agere and facere, Act and Fact both. And the fact, that is the fruit, that, hath ſome realitie ~~in it~~. So ſome fruit is to come; Something to be done: Not, thought or ſayd; but done, actually done. Otherwiſe, fingitur non agitur pœnitentia (It is Auguſtine) we doe but dally, all is but counterfeit. No ſerious Repentance, if ſomewhat be not done.

For, that ſomewhat is to be done, is ſo ſure, as yee ſhall not find any man in the minde or way to repent, but (ever) his firſt queſtion is, What muſt I doe? And that, even by the verie inſtinct of reaſon. Lord what wilt thou have mee to doe? (Saint Paul's firſt words, when he began:) Quid oportet me facere? The Gaolors firſt words (being now a Convert) to St. Paul, when hee began. As much as to ſay: Somewhat I am to doe, if I knew what. Thrice together you have this queſtion here immediately after. Quid faciemus? Say the Publicans: What ſhall we doe? Say the Souldiers: What ſhall we doe? Say all the people to St. Iohn, when they came to the baptiſme of repentance. All agreeing in this, all implying, ſomewhat there was to be done, whatſoever it was: that the fruit of repentance is in the worke.

Acts 9.6. Acts 16.30. Luk. 3.10. 12. 14.

And, what is that worke? I will anſwer firſt in generall. In morall Divinitie (if we goe that way) the proper worke of Iuſtice, is to give to each his due. Of corrective Iuſtice, to doe juſtice, to inflict correction, where it is due: And to ſin it is due. The difference only is: Correction (for the moſt part) is done upon others: in repentance, it reflects, and is done upon our ſelves.

If you will put more life into it, and utter it more pathetically, goe by the way of affection affections Anger is the predominant affection (we ſaid.) The proper work of anger is to be avenged. What, ſhall I not viſite? ſhall not my ſoule be avenged on ſuch an indignitie? ſaith Indignation. As anger then the chief Paſsion; ſo, that, the chief action. The Apoſtle therefore leaves not off, till he have asked, Yea, but quæ vindicta? what revenge? what puniſhment? That is his laſt queſtion: Comes not to his period till he have ſhut up all with that. For till that be done, all is not done. That is the very Conſummatum eſt of all true repentance. Ier. 5.6. 2 Cor. 7.10.

To grow to more particulars. We ſort the works of repentance, as they may beſt anſwer and ſuite with the works of ſinne. Now, all ſinnes grow out of theſe three heads, and may be reduced to one of them, the [1] Spirit, the [2] Fleſh, and the [3] World: and are corrected each of them, by his contrary. In Phyſicke it holds, Every thing is cured: In Iuſtice it holds, Every thing is beſt corrected by his contrary. Now, it is contrary, much againſt each of theſe, to bee deprived of that, it loves and delights in. What theſe works are. In particular. 1 Ioh. 2. 16.

The Spirit loves to bee at libertie, to range and to ſcatter it ſelfe in many manner thoughts: Or, if it fix, to doe it, upon ſome pleaſing object. Confine the ſpirit, make it undertake ſome task of devotion, ſet it to pray, to read, to meditate, which is a drie object and nothing pleaſing to it: fix it ſo, and you puniſh it. For, nothing is more irkeſome. It is vexatio ſpiritus. 1 Prayer, &c.

The Fleſh, that loves to fare well; put it to faſt: loves to ſleep and take her eaſe; put it to watch, or to lie hard: loves veſtiri mollibus; gird it with ſackcloth: loves mirth and good company; make it retire and ſit penſive: abridge it of theſe all or any, and you puniſh it more or leſſe, I warrant you. 2 Faſting, &c.

The World and the worldling, they love to part with as little as they can. Charge them with any thing that ſhall be to them chargeable, it puniſheth them ſhrewdly, and is to them a puniſhment. 3 Almes.

Thus then theſe three, they may be met with, each of them if they have made a fault. For neglect of ſerving of God, with ſome task of devotion more than ordinary. For fulneſſe of bread, with that truly ſacra fames, the exerciſe of faſting. For looſeneſſe of life, with works tending to the taking down of the fleſh, and making it leſſe fleſhly. For taking that which was others, to depart with that which is our owne. For want of bowels, with works of mercy. In a word, with ſuffering that we would not, for doing that we ſhould not. So, puniſhing our evill concupiſcence, in that it is ſo bent to; and making it leave that; for which it left GOD. So the triplicitie ſtands thus: for ſpirituall ſinnes; Prayer, and works of devotion: for fleſhly; workes pertaining to caſtigo corpus meum: for worldly; Alms, and works of charity and compaſsion. Let me ſhew you them briefly. 1 Cor. 9 27.

For the firſt. Simon Magus went not through with his bargaine; did but thinke the Holy Ghoſt had been ware for his money; all was but thinking; went no further than the Spirit. S. Peter preſcribes him what to do, To fall to prayer: pray (ſaith he) if it be poſsible, this thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee. Prayer ſerves, where it goes no further than thought. 1 Act. 8. 22.

For the ſecond. The King of Ninive and his people, they fell to faſting on all hands. What was their ſin? Nahum will beſt tell us that: He wrote the burden of Ninive. This it was: Becauſe of the fornications of the harlot. For that kinde of fleſhly ſin, that was the proper fruit. 2 Ion 3.5. Nahum. 1. 1. 3. 4.

For the third. One example ſhall be the King of Babylon. He had beene a mighty oppreſſor of his people. There have ye now a worldly ſinne. Breake off thine iniquitie with mercy to the poore, is Daniels preſcript to him. That is the right fruit for ſinnes of that nature. All may bee compriſed under theſe three: 1. Workes of devotion, as Prayer: 2. Workes of chaſtiſement of the body, as Faſting: 3. Workes of mercie, as Almes. Theſe three, betweene them, make up the corrective or penall part of repentance. 3 Dan. 4 7.

Prayer is a fruit of Repentance. For this cauſe (ſaith the Penitentiall Pſalme) even for this and for no other cauſe, ſhall every one that is ſo diſpoſed make his prayer unto thee. 1 Pſal. 32. 7.

Luk. 18. 10. 13 the penitent Publicans firſt moving was, he went up to the Temple to pray. Let them
Ier. 2. 17. pray and ſay: Spare thy people ô LORD, and give not over thine inheritance to be a re-
Ion. 3. 8. proach unto the heathen: (ſaith JOEL, in his repentance.) Let them crie mightily unto the LORD, (ſay they of Ninive, in theirs.) And the prayers of DAVID, JONAS, MANASSES, for their own ſins: of DANIEL, EZRA, NEHEMIAS, for the ſins of the Land; and in a word, the Penitentiall Pſalms ſhew this, that were choſen for no other end but to be a task for penitentiall perſons. There is one fruit.

2 Alms is another. A fruit, and ſo (by the name of fruit) expreſly called, Rom. 15. 28
Prov. 11. 17. For, by mercy ſhewed, ſins are forgiven (ſaith SALOMON:) He that ſeeks mercy is to ſhew Eſay 58. 7. mercy, Pro. 16. 6. DANIEL (you heard) did preſcribe it to no leſſe perſon than the King himſelf at Babylon. And the ſame at Ieruſalem was a fruit too: witneſſe, Eſay 58. Break thy bread to the hungry, made by him, there a part of true repentance. And Zachee ſhewed as much in his own happy practice upon himſelf, of our Saviour CHRIST's
Luk. 19 8. high approbation. There is another fruit,

3 Faſting is a third fruit: and that a ſpeciall one, and ſo hath alwaies been reputed. It
1 Sam 12 16. appeareth by the three Kings. King DAVID, who was a religious Prince: Not only by
1 Reg. 21. 27. him, but by King AHAB, who was ſcarce found in religion. Nor by them only, but by Ion. 3. 6. the King of NINIVE a heathen man, who, even by the light of Nature, brought forth this fruit.

We name it laſt, but it is (indeed) firſt: Firſt in Nature: firſt, quoad nos. Firſt, in nature, as oppoſite to the firſt tranſgreſſion, which was by eating. Firſt (I am ſure)
Gen. 3. 6. quoad nos, ſpeaking of us and our countrey. Exceſſe that way in fare and feeding, hath beene and is counted our Gentile vitium, our Nationall fault. So, no fruit, that our Nation is more bound to bring forth, than it. For Eſca ventri, and venter eſcis, meat for the bellie, and the bellie for meat, it no where reigneth ſo much. This is a third fruit.

A fruit, which if we would frame our ſelvs to bring forth in kind, there would come with it both the other fruits beſides. For if we could ſo faſt, as we ſhould, it would abate luſt certainly; which otherwiſe, keepe the body high, you ſhall hardly bring low: (that fruit.) And if we could ſo faſt, it would mend our devotion much; our Prayers would not be ſo full of yawning as we find them: (that fruit.) And if we could ſo faſt, there would be the more left to enable us to be ſo much the more plentifull in Alms than we be: (that fruit.) So as a good encreaſe or yeeld would come of this third fruit well brought forth.

These three in ſpeciall are choſen out; but in generall, any as well as theſe. There is a way, how it is poſſible, there is not a vertue of them all, but you may make the work of it a fruit of Repentance. In morall matters it holds ever. Finis dat formam, the end (that) gives the form, and ſo the true eſſence to every work: inſomuch as the work is reckoned a fruit, not of that vertue from whence it proceeds, by which it is done; but of that vertue to which it refers, for whoſe end it is done.

Nay, it fals out often ſo, as an act of vertue (as Prayer, Faſting, Alms) done for a vicious end, (ſuppoſe, for vain glory) looſeth his own kind, and becomes the proper act of that vice, it is done for. So powerfull a thing is the End, in moralibus. Whereby it comes to paſſe, the work of any vertue, be it what it will, undertaken with a mind and intent (or, as we ſay) animo corrigendi, enjoyned eo nomine, referred to that, alters the nature, and becomes a work of Iuſtice corrective, and ſo a fruit of repentance.

For even in theſe three before remembred, ſo it goes. Alms, of it ſelf, is a work of charity: Faſting (properly) an act of the vertue ἐγκράτεια abſtinence: Prayer of his own nature, a work of religious worſhip. But, Alms done ſome way to amerce our ſelves: Faſting done animo caſtigandi corpus: Prayer impoſed as a taskwork, to ſpend ſo much time, to ſtand ſo long bent at it: all theſe thus referred ſtill with an eye to that, chang their nature and become acts penall, and ſo fruits of Repentance.

Of

Of fruits, we ſaid at firſt, two Uſes there are: Firſt, to be offered as a preſent. So, JACOB ſent them to the * Governour of Egypt. For the firſt: we have (in all) but three things to offer unto GOD, to preſent, to honour Him with; The [1] Spirit (or Soule) [2] the body, and [3] our worldly goods. [1] The offering of the ſoule is, the powring it out in prayer, and other works of that kind. [2] Of the body the chaſtening it by exerciſes that way tending. [3] Of our goods, by diſtributing and doing good with them in Alms and offerings. The Vſe of this fruit 1. As an offering. * Gen 43.11.

Suppoſing the ſin-offering in the Law beſt to ſuit with repentance (as it doth.) [1] A ſorrowfull ſpirit is a ſacrifice to GOD (that we know;) [2] and no reaſon but a chaſtened body ſhould bee ſo likewiſe [3] and why the price and charges of the Sacrifice ſhould not come into the reckoning, I ſee not, which was part of their worldly State; which being diſtributed and done good withall, in meat and drink offerings, this the Apoſtle call a ſacrifice wherewith GOD is well pleaſed. The firſt Uſe of theſe fruits brought forth. Pſal. 51. 17. Phil. 4. 18.

The ſecond Uſe we ſpake of was, as they are medicinable. This difference there is between the puniſhment of Iuſtice, and repentance. Iuſtice otherwhiles deſtroyes the delinquent; ſo doth repentance never, but ſaves alwayes. So, it is more like the puniſhment of Phyſicke than of Law. For, Phyſick though it be a cure, yet a penance it is to the body, if we deale with it throughly, and go through with it. And repentance is the Phyſicke of the ſoule and body both. Sit obſecro ſanatio (ſaith DANIEL) Let there bee a cure done, when he exhorteth him to repent. Both are a cure: as Corrective of what is paſt, ſo preſervative (or if you will, you may call it corrective too) of what is to come. When the ſinner is corrected, hath correction given him, for the former, he correcteth his wayes, amends his life for ever after. Caſtigo corpus ſerves for what hath beene done: In ſervitutem Redigo ſerves, that he doe it no more. Both to wreak our ſelves for ſo often offering ſo foule indignities to heaven and the GOD of heaven, in our former bad courſe of life: And to keepe under the fleſh, and hold the concupiſcence in awe, that it runne not again into the former ryot. This latter, we call amendment of life, which is not repentance, for it pertaines rather to μετάνοια than to μεταμέλεια (being yet to come) but it never failes to follow it infallibly, inſomuch as if it do not, nothing is done. 2 As a medicine. Dan. 4. 27. 1 Cor. 9. 27.

For I report me to you: Let it be but known to the fleſh that this ſame light or ſlight repentance ſhall not ſerve the turne, but to a round reckoning it ſhall come and make full accompt to taſte of theſe fruits throughly, without hope of being diſpenſed with; whether it will not take off the edge of our appetite, and make it more dull and fearefull to offend? On the other ſide, let it be conſidered, whether this be not to lay the bridle on the necke of concupiſcence to powre it ſelf into all riot, if (ſinning) it know, it ſhall bee diſpatched with any repentance, never ſo ſhort and ſhallow, as doe no more ſo; and all is well? Whether (I ſay) this will not make all the ſappe goe downe, as we ſhall never ſee fruit come: Nay, whether it be not to deſtroy fruit and tree and all?

Verily, they that for pure zeale and indignation at themſelves for their ſins, never ſhew a teare, nor miſſe a meale, nor break a ſleep, nor do, nor ſuffer, nor part with ought; it may ſeeme a queſtion, whether they think not S. Iohn here overſeen in preſſing that for ſo needfull, which they can ſo eaſily diſpenſe with.

But if when we come to Caſtigo Corpus, there we leave S. Paul; when to neither eating nor drinking, there we leave S. Iohn; and when to flevit amarè, there we leave S. Peter, and when to πένθος and κλαῦσαι changing our mirth into penſi-veneſſe, there wee leave S. Iames, I marvell, what manner repentance we will leave before we have done, or what ſhall become of our fruits here? 1 Cor. 9. 27. Mat. 11. 18. 26. 75.

IV.

The Worth of this fruit.

In our repenting (commonly) we make ſuch haſte, as we take away before the fruits come. But if there happen to come any, is not this even out caſe? Our Teares, if any, drie ſtraight: Our Prayers, if any, quickly teadious: Our Almes, indeed pityfull: Our faſts, faſt or looſe, upon any the leaſt occaſion: And ſo our Repentance (if any) penitentia panitenda, a repentance needing another, a new, a ſecond repentance, to repent us of it. To repent us, of our repentance, no leſſe than of our ſin it ſelfe. So that, if any fruit, fruit of no worth. And if the fruit be of no worth, no more is the tree: unworthy one, unworthy both. Thus we are not yet where we ſhould be, till unto fructus we have added dignos.

1 Cor 7.10.

Nay then, if you fall to talk of worthineſſe, we ſhall have ſatisfaction up again. And had we not beſt then to aske firſt, are there any worthy? For, if there be none ſuch, bid Saint JOHN beware how he talke of worthy fruits: bid Saint PAUL beware how hee ſpeak of worthy works of repentance. If none ſuch be, they did ill to clogge the bill with any ſuch word. But they knew well, what they ſaid: therefore, ſuch there be (ſure) get them where we can.

Act. 26. 20.

How it is worthie.

Only, when we ſay worthy, it would be underſtood cum grano ſalis. How worthy? in what ſenſe? whither referred? that we miſtake not. I demand then firſt, ſhall we put them into the balance, to weigh the worthineſſe of our fruits: with the unworthineſſe of our ſins, and the conſequent of our ſinns the wrath of GOD? the dignitie of the one, with the indignitie of the other, and think by their dignitie to ſatisfie GODS great indignation? I trow not. At this beame, no fruits of ours will hold weight: None, ſo, found worthy: No, not if we could (I ſay not, ſhed, or poure out, but) even melt into teares, and every teare a drop of blood. No: Non ſunt condignæ paſsiones (ſaith the Apoſtle) we can ſuffer nothing worthy our ſinnes, but (that, we cannot ſuffer) ira ventura, the wrath of God. The infinite incomparable high worth of Him, that in our ſinne is wronged; the foule contempt that is therein offered, are farre above the worth of any our fruits; weigh them downe as any fether. Why, all Lebanon (ſaith the Prophet) is not ſufficient to find wood; nor, all the [a] beaſts upon a thouſand hils not enough for a Sacrifice, [b] Tekel, tekel, too light all. Take them our of the ſcals, away with them, Non ſunt dignæ; in that ſenſe. In which ſenſe, not the wicked [c] prodigall child only, but even the good [d] Centurion; nay then, even S. Iohn Baptiſt here himſelf, cry all, [e] Non ſum dignus; neither their fruits, nor they. The honour of dignos (in this ſenſe) belongs to the fruits of no tree, but the tree of the Croſſe of Chriſt; to His ſufferings, and to none but His.

Rom. 8. 18.

a Pſal. 50. 10.
b Dan 5. 27.
c Luk. 15. 21.
d Mat. 8. 8.
e Ver. 11.

Yet (I wot well) there hath been another manner eſtimate by ſome men of their owne fruits; but they weighed them with their owne falſe weights, and made them a diſcharge both from pœna and from culpa, and that toties quoties. Nay then, inventus eſt plus habens, they found a further ſurpluſſage too of I know not what beſides. What of that? CHRIST's Caveat is here to take place: that weeding out the tares, we take heed, we pluck not up together good corne and all. That to avoid certaine wormes, that may happe breed in the fruit, if it be not the better looked to, we beat not all the fruit off the tree, and leave it all naked and bare; no fruits at all: and, for feare of teaching a proud, teach a fruitleſſe repentance. Well: though not ſo compared, not this way, yet muſt we have fructus dignos.

How, worthy then? referred whither? As worthy, as the poſsibilitie of our Nature will reach to; as our ſoile will beare, or hath ever yeelded; as the Saints and Servants of GOD are reported to have brought forth in former ages: what ſay you to that dignos? That (indeed) were ſomewhat worth, if it might be had. They? they have become [a] like bottles in the ſmoke, their [b] knees have grown weak through faſting, they have [c] alto wet their pillowes with their teares: they have [d] reſtored bribes, and that foure-fold; given in almes at once, half of all that ever they had. This were (indeed) ſomewhat worth: But, of this (I doubt) our worthineſſe will be found ſhort: or rather I dare not put it upon this dignos neither.

And yet, were there in us any portion of that heroicall free ſpirit, of that Chriſtian magna- magnanimitie that was in the Fathers of our Faith; (The Apoſtle beares them witnes, that to their powers, nay, and beyond their powers they ſhewed themſelves willing;) any never ſo poore fruit would not content us. But we, neither to our power, nor a great deale ſhort of it, endeavour our ſelves: any never ſo ſlight, and ſlender will ſerve us well enough. 2 Cor. 8. 3.

I wonder what we think? Do we think to poſt God off with any, it skils not what fruit? with wind-fals, with worme-eaten ſtuffe? ESAYES ſowre grapes? IEREMIES rotten figgs? Nothing comes amiſſe. Hold we Him in ſo vile account, as any is good enough for Him, it is well with Him, if He get any? Malachie tels us otherwiſe, That He holds us in great ſcorn: bids us go offer ſuch fruit to our Prince: and ſee if He will take it well. Zachary tels us ſo likewiſe: A goodly price (ſaith he) they value me at. Goodly fruit, is it not, they preſent me with? Nay (ſure) we muſt have dignos too: Some worth there would be. Eſay 5. 2. Ierem. 24. 2. Mal. 1. 8. Zac. 11. 13.

Is there any other way to take our dignos by? Compared with the Iuſtice of God, Not ſo: Nor with the great Heroes of our nature; Not ſo neither. Nor (indeed) are they ſaid worthy of either of theſe; but how? Only, fruits worthy of repentance: that is, ſuch as may well beſeeme perſons, as be truly penitent. Referred not to ought, but to Repentance it ſelfe. Laying by ſinne, as it is an averſion from an infinite good: (For ſo it is infinite; admits no meaſure or degree;) but conſidering it, as it is a converſion to the creature, and that more or leſſe: ſo, it fals within compaſſe of more or leſſe worthy.

Say I this of my ſelf? Saith not GODS Law the ſame ſecundùm menſuram æſtimationemque delicti, and pro menſurâ peccati? Is it not a clauſe there, repeated more than once? If there be a meaſure of the one, ſo is there of the other: If an analogie of faith, of repentance too, why not? And, to that, wee to apply our ſelves, in the magis or minus dignos of our fruits. This is once: Repentance may bee too much, one may go too far in it: That, will be granted (I know.) And if too much, then too little: and we may fall too ſhort the other way (that, I am ſure of.) Which part we ſhould offend on (to chooſe) ἀγαθὸν in ἀγαθοειδὲς will ſoone teach us, that it would be home: rather, with the more then with the leſſe. In the Corinthians caſe there it was too much: he was in danger to be ſwallowed up with ſorrow. In Miriams caſe againe, it was too little: For, though ſhe were right penitent for her folly committed, yet becauſe the qualitie of her offence required a larger and more worthy repentance, ſhe was ſhut out of the hoſt yet ſeven daies longer, and then, and not before, received to pardon. If there be an ultra and a citra, then is there a tenus. If too much, and too little, then is there a ſufficit, enough. And, that, is the dignos we ſeek for. Levit. 5. 18. Deut. 25. 2. Rom. 12. 2 Cor. 2. 7. Num. 12. 15.

But who ſhall tell us, this tenus what it is? Who ſhall ſay Sufficit? I thinke it is not beſt to ſay it to our ſelves; It is not ſafe, that. Wee are like enough to give eare to propitius eſto tibi, to ſpare and favour our ſelves, and to think that worthy, that is not: to diſmiſſe the matter with a doe no more ſo, never to follow it to ſentence. Or, if wee doe, to reprive our ſelves, and ſtay the execution. It hath beene held no way ſafe for us, to make our owne aſſeſſment: and as ſafe a way as could bee, would ever bee taken for the ſoule. Better, ſome other body do it: and, who ſhall that other body be? Mat. 16. 23.

In the Law, every man was not left to himſelfe. The offering for ſinne which was to them a fruit of repentance) it was rated ever, ever taxed כערכו by the Prieſt. According to his ordering, ſo it went: he made the eſtimate, how much was enough, what would ſerve. And here now, in Saint Iohns time (which was the intervall or paſſage, as it were, betweene the Law and the Goſpell,) at the baptiſme of Iohn, they knew not what to do, they were not ſo well skilled; to Saint Iohn, they come with their quid faciemus? What ſhall we do? And what ſhall we do? All three one after another, the Publicans, the Souldiers, the Common ſort; and they had all their anſwers ſeverally: One anſwer ſerved not all: Severall kinds of Sinne required ſeverall ſorts of fruit. And, under the Goſpell, there (we ſee) for the Corinthian, Saint Paul ſaid, Sufficit viro huic: Thus much is enough, this ſhall ſerve: his conſcience may be quiet; I reſtore him to Levit. 5. 18. Luk. 3. 10. 12. 14. 2 Cor. 2. 6.

the Churches peace. And the Canons penitentiall which were made in the times under perſecution, the very beſt times of the Church, lay forth plainly, what is to be followed and obſerved in this kinde.

And (ſure) I take it to be an errour added to the former, to think, the fruits of repentance and the worth of them to be a matter, any common man can skill of well enough; needs never ask S. Iohn, or S. Paul, what he ſhould do; knowes what he ſhould do, as well as S. Paul, or S. Iohn either: And that it is not (rather) a matter, wherein we need the counſell and direction of ſuch, as are profeſſed that way. Truly, it is neither the leaſt nor the laſt part of our learning, to be able to give anſwer, and direction in this point. But, therefore laid aſide, and neglected by us, becauſe not ſought after by you. Therefore not ſtudied, but by very few, quia nemo nos interrogat, becauſe it is growen out of requeſt quite.

We have learned (I know not where) a new, a ſhorter courſe, which fleſh and blood better likes of; to paſſe the whole courſe of our life, and, in the whole courſe of our life not to bee able to ſet downe where, or when, or what we did, when wee did that, which we call repenting: what fruits there came of it; what thoſe fruits might be worth. And but even a little before our death (and, as little as may be) not, till then world have given us over, then (loe) to come to our quid faciemus? to aſk, what wee ſhould do? when we are able to doe nothing. And then muſt one come, and (as we call it) ſpeak comfortably to us, that is, miniſter to us a little Divinitie Ladanum, rather ſtupefactive for the preſent, than doing any ſound good: and ſo, take our leaves to go meet with ira ventura.

This way, this faſhion of repenting, S. Iohn knew it not: it is far from his fructus dignos: S. Paul knew it not; it is far from his opera digna: And I can ſay little to it, but I pray GOD it deceive us not. It is not good trying concluſions about our ſoules. Here is the plain way, this is the ſtraight path laid out before us, by him that was ſent to prepare the ways of the Lord, and to make his paths ſtreight: and go we which way we wil, we ſhall heare the voyce behind us, crying to us, Hæc eſt via, ambulate in eâ. Set your tree; bring forth your fruits; ſee to them: altogether unworthy they would not be; Somewhat worth; raiſed to ſome degree of worthineſſe.

Eſay 40.3. 30.11.

Quod potuit fecit, did CHRIST accept of Mary Magdalens caſe; and quod habuit dedit, in the poore Widowes caſe, with her (but) two mites. We doing our endeavours to raiſe them, to what degree we can, He for His part, will not be behind, but relieve and help us out. For expectat Dominus, ut miſereatur noſtri; God (even) waits that Hee may have mercy on us. And therefore laying away His rigour, will not go exactly to work, but be ready to relieve and repute that worthy, that is not all out ſo. So in the Church of Sardi, we find, He ſaith, Non invenio opera tua plena, their works were not found to have the full poiſe, yet notwithſtanding He ſaith, digni enim ſunt, the Parties found worthy for all that.

Mark. 14.8. Mark. 12.44. Eſay 30.18. Revel. 3 2. 4.

All the worth is not intrinſecall, to the thing it ſelfe: When all is ſaid that can be ſaid, that which makes all full, the chief part of their worth lyeth in digni habebuntur. It is therefore CHRISTS counſell, Orate, ut digni habeamini, Pray, they may be found in ſo good a degree towards it, as God may count them, and ſo accounting make them: Quanquam ſat digni ſi quos dignatur (ſaith the Chriſtian Poet.) in one Chapter, we have them both in the 2 Theſ. 2. counted worthy, at the 5. verſe: made worthy at the 11. verſe. Both come to one. Two words there are in the Greeke ἀξιόω and ἀξίωσις: Two, in Latine, dignitas, and dignatio: And, as there is dignatio ex dignitate; So is there dignitas ex dignatione. And, that is it: Worthy is the fruit, He ſo eſteemeth: But, upon the point, rather dignatione Ejus, than dignitate ſuâ, rather by His daigning or dignifying them; than, by the intrinſecall, by their owne dignitie, they have in themſelves.

Luc. 20.35. 21.36.

Yet, let us never think, be ſo baſe as to conceive, He will hold for ſuch, any at all, let them be what they will, it skils not how worthleſſe, how far from all degrees toward it. No: But ſuch, as wherein Hee ſeeth ſome conſcience made, ſome care taken, ſome zealous deſire, ſome earneſt endeavour appeare. Some proffers (at leaſt) toward thoſe ſeven degrees, in 2 Corinth. 7. which may ſerve to aſſure our ſelvs and to ſhew the world we dally not with repentance, but make a ſerious matter of it, and go to it in good earneſt; In witneſſe whereof this and this fruit we have brought forth. Somewhat like yet, ſomewhat beſeeming perſons truly penitent, whereto He would ſay, ſufficit tibi gratia mea, My grace is ſufficient for thee. And, in that we may reſt. 2 Cor. 12. 9.

It remaines, we examine our ſelves, touching theſe points: [1] Our repentance, is it like a live tree, and not a dull heavie mood, neither life nor ſoule in it? [2] Have wee ſet it on growing, brings it forth at all? [3] Is it fruit, it brings forth? For, whatſoever elſe it is, it is not for S. Iohn's turne. [4] The fruit it brings, is it ought worth, for the quantitie, the qualitie, the well laſting of it? GOD grant it be ſo. and thanks be to GOD, if it be ſo.

V.

The fruit-time Ion. 4. 6.

But this proferte will aske ſome time. Iona's repentance was not like Ionas gourd. His gourd was up in a night, ſuddenly: Trees come not up ſo quickly: they require more time than ſo. Never truſt a repentance repentine; no ſudden flaſh or brunt. It is altogether an errour, to thinke; Repentance is a matter of no more moment, than to be diſpatched in a moment.

There be two words (words of weight:) One is S. Peters, and that is χωρησαι εις μεταvοιαν to withdraw, go aſide, to retire, and be private, to ſequeſter our ſelves to our repentance: 2 Pet. 3. 9. The other S. Paul's σχολαζειν τροσευχῃ και νηστεια, to take us a time, nay to make us a time, a vacant time, a time of leaſure to intend faſting and prayer, two fruits of repentance. 1 Cor. 7. 5. I ask then, did we never χωρησαι, withdraw our ſelves to that end? what was the place, where we ſo did? did we at any time σχολαζειν, take any ſuch vacant time? what was the time and when, when we ſo did? I doubt ours hath been rather a flaſh, a quaime, a brunt, than otherwiſe; rather, a gourd of repentance, than any growing tree. A time there muſt needs be taken for this Proferte.

Now the time, S. JOHN gives, is, but while Ira ventura, the wrath to come is in comming. Ira ventura are two words: In that it is wrath, and GODS wrath, there is juſt matter of feare: In that it is ventura, to come, but to come, and not yet come; there is hope yet, ſome good may be done, before venit qua ventura, that come that is to come.

If theſe fruits come, the wrath (when it comes) ſhall not come upon us, but paſſe by us, and not touch any fruit-bearing tree. To take a time then.

Now, there cannot be a fitter time than that the Church hath ſet us forth; that is, (now) at this time of the yeare. For, now, is the time of the yeare to plant in. In the picture of the moneths, in this next moneth at hand, you ſhall ſee nothing but men grafting and ſetting trees: it is the Husbandrie and buſineſſe of the moneth: wonderfull fitly choſen therefore, that this tree may keep time with the reſt. And, now is the time that the ſappe goes up: So as there could not be a fitter time for S. JOHN to call upon us. Look abroad, they begin now to bring forth: now beſt ſpeaking for Proferte. To which Proferte, Differte is cleane contrary. Defer it not then, but take the time while it is in ſeaſon.

And with high wiſdome is this time ſo ſet, that the time of our Repentance, the fortie daies of it end in the Paſſeover, in the paſsing of ira ventura over us, as did the deſtroying Angell over the houſes in Egypt. That the mortifying of ſinne might end in the riſing of CHRIST in us. The uſe of fruit is fruition: And this is the fruition in this life, even the fruits of the Spirit, feare and love and joy in the HOLY GHOST. And in the life to come, the fruit of the Tree of Life in the middeſt of Paradiſe: in ſtead of Ira ventura, vita ventura, gaudia ventura, the glory and joyes eternall of the life to come. To which Life, Glory and Joy, bring us Almighty GOD. Exod. 12. 12.

PSALME LXXV. Ver. III.

Liquefacta eſt terra, & omnes qui habitant in ea: Ego confirmavi Columnas ejus.

The earth, and all the Inhabitants thereof are diſſolved: but I will eſtabliſh the Pillars of it.

IT was MOSES the Man of God, that, by ſpeciall direction from GOD, firſt began, and brought up this order, to make Muſick the conveigher of mens duties into their minds (Deut. 31. 19.) And DAVID ſithence hath continued it, and brought it to perfection, in this Booke, as having a ſpeciall grace and felicitie in this kind: Hee, for Songs; and his Sonne SALOMON for Proverbs. By which two (that is) by the unhappy Adage, and by a wanton ſong, Satan hath ever breathed moſt of his infection and poiſon into the mind of man. Deut. 31. 19.

In which holy and heavenly uſe of his Harpe, he doth, by his tunes of Muſicke, teach men how to ſet themſelves in tune (Pſal. 15.) How not onely to tune themſelves, but how to tune their their houſholds (Pſal. 101.) And not onely there, but (here) in this Pſalme, how to preſerve harmony, or (as he termeth it) how to ſing Ne perdas, to a common-vvealth. So ſaith the Inſcription, vvhich S. Auguſtine very fitly calleth the key of every Pſalme.

For, the time of ſetting this ſong (by generall conſent of all Expoſitors) being the latter end of the long diſſenſion, between the Houſes of David and Saul; evident it is, the eſtate of the Land was very neare to a Perdas, and needed ne Perdas to be ſung unto it.

For, beſides the great overthrow in the Mountains of Gilboa, given by the enemy, wherein the King and three of his ſonns were ſlain, and a great part of the Countrey
1 Sam 31.7. ſurpriſed by the Philiſtin; the Deſolation of a divided Kingdome, was come upon them too. For, within themſelvs, they were at Cujus eſt terra? (2 Sam. 3.12.) even at civill wars: At the beginning, but a play; (So Abner termeth it, 2 Sam. 2.14) but bitterneſſe at the end, as the ſame Abner confeſſeth, verſ. 26. Surely, it was a weake State and low brought: So much doth David imply (in the fore-part of the verſe) that he found the Land a weak Land, by means, the ſtrength and Pillars of it, were all out of courſe, by the miſ-government of Saul. But then withall (in the latter part of the verſe) he profeſſeth, he will leave it a Land of ſtrength, by re-eſtabliſhing the Pillars, and re-edifying the State new again. The earth, &c.

The ſtile wherof runneth in the terms of Architecture: very aptly reſembling the government, to a frame of building; the ſame ſet upon and borne up by certain Baſes and Pillars (the ſtrength whereof aſſureth, or the weakneſſe endangereth the whole:) and David himſelf to a skilfull Builder, ſurveying the pillars, and ſearching into the decays; repairing their ruines, and ſetting them into courſe again.

Whereout ariſeth naturally the entreatie of theſe foure points:

1 That the weakneſſe, or ſtrength of a Land, is a point of important conſideration.

2 That the ſtrength of a Land, is in the Pillars: And, what they are.

3 That the upholding of thoſe Pillars appertaineth to David.

4 How, and in what ſort Saul weakned them in his time; and David, in his, made them faſt.

I

FIrſt David had read, that among the inſtructions delivered by Moſes to the ſpies (Numb. 13. 19.) the very firſt and chief of all was, Whether the Land were weak or ſtrong. So he had read; and ſo he believed it to be: and, ſo it is. For ſure in ſuch Lands, where this is their ſong, The earth is weake; their Muſicke is all out of tune, For, the note is ſuch, as affecteth the Inhabitants with feare. 1. Feare, Pſal. 22.14.15. in the inhabitant, for theſe two, [1] Virtus teſtacea, and [2] Cor cereum, ſtrength like a potſheard; and a heart like wax: A weake Land, and a fearefull Inhabitant goe together. 2. Courage, in the enemie: For, where RABSAKETH knoweth but ſo much, that the Land is weake, you ſhall not intreat him to ſpeak anything but Hebrew, (Eſay. 36.12.)

This Muſicke is heavie: and therefore David ſaw, the ſong muſt be new ſet. And ſo he doth ſet it new, changeth it into a more pleaſant note, But I will ſtrengthen it. And when the note is ſo changed, in that day ſhall this Song be ſung in the Land
Eſay 26.1. of JUDA, We have a ſtrong Citie; Salvation hath GOD ſet, for the walls and bulwarks of it.

This Muſicke hath life in it, and heartneth the inhabitant afreſh; quaileth the enemie and reſolveth the neighbour to ſay, (1 Samuel 12, 18.) Thine are wee

ô DA-

O DAVID, and on thy ſide, thou ſonne of JESSE. When a Prince may ſay of his Land, as Moſes did of Iuda, *Deut.*33.7. His owne hands are ſufficient for him (if the Lord help him) againſt all his enemies: And the Land may ſay of the Prince, that which Salomon ſetteth down, as the high commendation of a Prince, that he is Rex Alkum (that is) Ne ſurgito, riſe not; No riſing, againſt him; for that, they which have riſen, had better have ſate ſtill. And they both may ſend word to the enemie (if he threaten to come and viſit them) the word that Ioas ſent (2 Reg. 14. 10.) Tarry at home, and provoke not evill againſt thyſelfe. This Muſick is bleſſed; and ſuch hath hitherto beene the ſong of our Nation. Prov.30.31.

What Samuel ſaid, when he pitched the Stone of Help (1 Sam. 7.12.) we cannot deny, but we may ſay the ſame, Thus farre hath God holpen us: whoſe arme is not ſhortned, though Pharaoh's heart be hardned. Hitherto, Salvation hath GOD ſet for our wals and bulwarks, and our Prince, Prince Alkum; and our enemie hath not boaſted himſelfe at the putting off his armour, as at the buckling it on: and our Neighbours glad to lay hold of our skirts and ſay, We will be yours, for we ſee, GOD is with you; (*Zach.*8.10.) The great bleſsing of GOD having beene upon us (*Deut.*28.12) Thou ſhalt lend to many Nations, but ſhalt borrow of none. Such hath hitherto beene our ſong: and, ſuch may it long be; yea, ever, O LORD. And, that it may ſo be, David teacheth the way of keeping it ſo ſtill; Namely, by Setting faſt the Pillars of it. Which is the ſecond principall point: What this ſtrength is; and what the Pillars are that beare it up. 1 Reg. 20.

The HOLY GHOST ſpeaking of ſtrength, nameth two (Gen. 32.28.) as (indeed) the Scripture knoweth no more: [1] The ſtrength of Iacob; and [2] the ſtrength of Iſrael: [1] Of Iacob, ſupplanting, or prevailing over men: [2] and of Iſrael, prevailing with GOD. II.

JACOB'S ſtrength I call, whatſoever the counſell or might of man affoordeth; His prudent forecaſt, whereby he over-reached ESAU (Gen. 27. 36.) and LABAN (30. 37.) And his bow and ſword, whereby hee wanne from the Amorite (Gen. 48.10.) Under theſe two, I comprehend all humane ſtrength, the ſtrength of Iacob. 1

But, when all is done, we muſt reſerve and keep a ſtrength for GOD, ſaith David (*Pſal.*59.9.) Who if he forſake Alexandria, though it have the Sea for his ditch, it ſhall be carried captive: who if he forſake Ephraim, though they be well harneſſed and carry bowes, they ſhall turne themſelves back in the day of battaile. Therefore, ever DOMINUS commeth in: (*Deut.*33.7.) Iuda's owne hands are ſufficient to help, Si tu DOMINE, If thou LORD helpe him againſt the enemie: And Niſi Dominus, If that the LORD doe not keep the houſe, and watch the houſe, and make faſt the Pillars, all is in vain (*Pſa.*127.1.) Ioyn (ſaith the Wiſeman) Ittiel (that is, Dominus mecum;) and then, Vcal (that is Prævalebo) will not tarry from you: Vcal and He go ever together. Sever (ſaith David) Hii in curribus, Hii in equis, from In nomine Domini, the next newes, you ſhall heare of them, is, * Ibi ceciderunt, There they are brought down and fallen. Therefore we muſt allow Iſrael a ſtrength, alſo; without which, Iacobs forecaſt ſhall faile: (for, He caſteth out the counſels of Princes, *Pſal.*33.10.) and his ſword too: For, He can rebate the edge of the ſword, *Pſal.*89.43. 2 Nahum.3.8. Pſal.77.9. Prov.30.1. * Pſa.20.8.

Two ſtrengths then there are: and theſe two DAVID (here) termeth two Pillars (that we may know what be the Pillars of the Land. For, ſuch was the manner of the Jewiſh building; arch-wiſe, upon two main pillars to ſet it. Wee may ſee it by Sampſons deſire, *Iudg.*16,29. ſo to be placed, as the two Supporters of the Temple might be in his two hands, that bowing them, all the Church might come downe upon their heads Such an arch of government doth David here deviſe, and two Pillars bearing it up. He telleth us, they be two: and he telleth us, what they be; for, he hath already named them, in the two former Uſes: [1] Celebrabimus te JEHOVA in the firſt: And, [2] Iuſtitias judicabo, in the ſecond. GOD, and Right, the pillars

The worſhip of God; and the execution of Iuſtice or right. With theſe two he beginneth; and with theſe two again he taketh his farewell; the regard of Religion (in the ninth:) and the care of Iuſtice (in the laſt.) Theſe two he teacheth us: For, theſe two (he ſaith) GOD taught him (2 *Sam.*23.3.) GOD (ſaith he) the ſtrength of Iſrael, ſpake to me and ſaid, thou ſhalt beare rule over men, [1] Doing Iuſtice, and [2] guiding them in the feare of God. So that theſe two are the Pillars: [1] GOD, and [2] Right, Iuſtice, and the feare of God. Theſe two give ſtrength, to that, and to all Lands: [1] Celebrabimus te IEHOVA; and [2] Iuſtitias judicabo. Theſe two decay all; and weaken the Land, [1] Negligimus to Iehova; and [2] Injurias judicabo.

I GOD is a Pillar; So, is His moſt common name, in the Hebrew ADONAI; My Pillar: and His Sonne, a Rocke; Not onely Peters Rocke (Matthew 16.19.) but, Davids Rocke too (2 *Sam.*22.2.) the Rocke both of Church and Kingdome: And His Spirit, a Spirit, not of Holineſſe only and Truth; but, a Spirit of Iudgement, to them that ſit on the Throne; and a ſpirit of ſtrength for them that keepe the battaile, from the gate, Eſay 28.6. And his favour a ſhield, Pſalme 5.10. and his NAME, turris fortiſſima, Proverbs 18.10. And therefore Celebrabimus te IEHOVA, wee will praiſe thy name. For, the neerer thy name is to us and we to it, the more wondrous works wilt thou declare towards us. *Ariſe O God into thy Reſting place, Thou and the Arke of thy Strength, Pſal.*132.8. therefore the Arke ſendeth forth a Strength. And Salomon when hee called the two Pillars (which he ſet at the Temple gate) Strength and Steddineſſe, meant, that, out of that Gate, there proceeded Strength and Stabliſhing to the whole Realme, 1 *Reg.*7.21.

Jachin and Boaz.

Even the Strength and Stabliſhing of Si crediderit is Stabiliemini, Eſay 7.6. By which, not only the Devils darts are repelled in the Spirituall, *Epheſ.*6.16. but the armes of the aliens are put to flight in the earthly warfare, (*Heb.*11.34.) Therefore Moſes made ſuch reckoning of Celebrabimus, that having recounted (as the ſtrength of Cain's progeny) their inventing of the Tent, making of the Flute of braſſe, and iron works, *Gen.*4.20. he oppoſeth to them all, as able to match them all (in the poſterity of the Sons of God) the Invocation of his Name, begun and ſet on foor, firſt, by Enoch, verſe 26. as the maine pillar of ſtrength which the People of God truſt to. And Saint Paul is bold, 1 *Tim.*2.1. Where, laying (as it were) the Chamber-beames and ſtories of each Chriſtian Government; (Princes, firſt, by whoſe meanes Peace, and Quietneſſe, from thence knowledge of the truth; from it, godly and honeſt life; and from them, Salvation;) As the baſe or Pillar of all, and that which beareth up, and giveth Strength to all, ſetteth prayer: prayer to be made, that ſo, Princes preſerved; that ſo, peace maintained; that ſo, knowledge intended; that ſo, a godly and honeſt life practiſed; that ſo, Salvation attained. Reckoning invocation as a ſpeciall pillar of each ſtate; And as a Prerogative Royall, prayer for all men, but above all men, for Princes. Thus doth Religion ſtrengthen us, and is Iſrael with God: And not with God onely, but is Iacob alſo and prevaileth with men too.

Heb.11.34.

Indeed, nothing prevaileth ſo much, nor worketh ſo deepe, with man, as doth it: And, no men more faſt and faithfull, than quorum DEUS corda tetigit, 1 Samuel 10.26. DAVID therefore, undertaking, in this verſe, to Stabliſh the pillars; ſheweth, how he will doe it, in the next: Dicam, by telling them their duty out of Divinity; by laying before them Deus eſt judex, GODS judgement, and the dregges of the cup which Hee holdeth in His hand. To make ſo many men ſo many pillars, well and wiſely ſaid the Heathen man, Odium oportet peccandi non metum facias: To hate ſinne, is the pillar; to feare it, is not: for, feare will fall away, if his underſtanding be removed, and where the duty is not grounded on Deus eſt judex, it is no pillar to be built on. Certaine it is, that (except GODS Law) all Lawes, feare of ſinne they breed; but a kind hatred or conſcience of ſinne, they breed not. Well may they binde the hand, fetter the foot, and impriſon the body; there is nothing can impriſon the heart or thought, ſave

Arma

Arma militiæ noſtræ. And thus is Religion, a Pillar among them alſo.

For ſure, the Chriſtian duty of bearing wrong (where it is well perſwaded) doth mainely ſtrengthen the Civill, of doing no wrong: And, the Chriſtian, of departing with our own charitably, doth ſtrengthen the Civill of not taking other mens injuriouſly: And ſo, of the reſt. That he called it not amiſſe, that called Divinitie the Back-bone of the Princes Law; and conſequently, Religion of the Common-wealth. So that, not only Moſes and Paul, by calling on the name of God; but, Elias and Ieremie, by teaching the will of God (Not by Prayer only, but by Preaching) are the one, an Iron Pillar (Ier. 1.48) the other, the chariot and horſemen of Iſrael, in his time. 1 Cor 10 4. 2 King 12.

Now, if all men had faith, Dicam would have ſerved, and this one Pillar have beene enough: But, becauſe all men have not Religion, but there be in the world evill and abſurd men (2 Theſ. 3.2.) therefore needed the ſecond, therefore needed Iuſtitias Indicabo. Indeed, meliores ſunt, the better part be they quos dirigit amor, whom love leadeth: but plures ſunt, quos corrigit timor, the greater by far, that feare driveth: Even ſuch as will not be led with the cords of a man (that is,) inducements of Religion and reaſon, (Hoſ. 11.4.) but they muſt be held with bit and bridle (that is) the curb of Juſtice, Pſal 32.9.

Which kind of men are of two ſorts (therefore is it Iuſtitias.) 1. The enemie or Egyptian ſmiting Iſrael, from without. 2. The Injurious Iſraelite wronging his brother; from within. Why then, Sit nobis Rex, ſay the people, 1 Sam. 8.20. (which is a perfect comprehenſion of this pillar of Iuſtice) to do them right: And to defend them by War, when need is, againſt the forreine enemie; by Juſtice, when cauſe is, againſt the domeſticall oppreſſor. Againſt the one, Iehoſophat placeth garriſons (2 Chro. 17.2.) that is, againſt outward hoſtilitie: Againſt the other, he ordaineth Iudges (2 Chr. 19.5) that is, inward injury. Exod. 2.11.13

Dicens Cyro, (ſaith God) Paſtor meus, &c. (Eſay 44.28.) which ſay to Cyrus (the mighty Monarch) thou art my Shepheard. A Shepheard, by paſtorall Juſtice, To ſee the flock ſafe from without, and quiet from within. From without, To keep the wild Bore of the forreſt from ſpoiling our lives and goods (Pſalm. 80.13.) and from within, the ravenous Wolfe from making havock of our ſoules (Acts 20.29.) Will you know, what theſe two mean? O my people, (ſaith God) Remember what Balack the King hath deviſed againſt you (ſpeaking of a forreine Prince, of the Bore.) And what Balaam hath anſwered him (ſpeaking of a falſe Prophet, of the Wolfe.) The caſe is very like ours, and God grant us a thankfull remembrance and meditation of it: Of the long intelligence between Balack and Balaam, for our overthrow; and how graciouſly and marvellouſly God hath delivered us. Mic 6.5.

Now, as without the fold, theſe beaſts be buſie, and God therefore hath girt the Prince with a ſword: So, within, alſo, there are certaine fed Rammes (ſaith Ezekiel) that with their hornes, puſh; and with their heeles, lay out againſt the poore weake ſheep (that with vis and fraus, deceit and violence, keep evill rule within;) againſt whom He hath given into their right hand a Scepter, That, by the arreſt of the Scepter, they might be quiet from within; and by the edge of the ſword, ſafe from without: So intending the myſterie of godlineſſe, and the knowledge thereof, and after it, the exerciſe of godlineſſe, and the practice thereof; that ſo after Stabiliatur Regnum meum in this life, by Juſtice, we may come to Adveniat regnum tuum in the life to come, by Religion. And this is the ſecond pillar yeelding us Iacobs ſtrength, who (as we ſaid) was furniſhed both with his Staffe, to ſee good order in his flock, and with his ſword and bow againſt the Amorite. Verſ 45.3. Ezek. 34.20. Pſal. 45.6. 1 Tim 3.9. 4.7. Gen. 31.10. 48.22.

Thus have we the two pillars of the earth, each ſtrengthening other: Religion rooting Iuſtice within; Iuſtice fencing Religion without, and they both making an arch of government irremovable.

III. Yet, theſe two Pillars as ſtrong and as ſteady as they are, except they be looked to, and upheld; except they have an Vpholder; and that a good one, Religion will cleave, and Iuſtice bend, and they both ſinck and the whole frame with them. Therfore mention is made here of a perſon, put in truſt, with the bearing them up; which is the third point.

Which Perſon, is here, Ego autem, the firſt; that is, David; the firſt and the chiefe Perſon in any government. He it is upon whom both theſe leane: He is the head, that guideth theſe two armes. He the breath of life in both theſe noſthrils: Yea, of all the body (ſaith Ieremy of Ioſias.) Even Chriſtus Domini, the Annointed of the Lord, is the breath of all our noſthrils.

2 Sam. 15. 17. Lam. 4. 20.

Familiar it is, and but meane, but very full and forceable, the Simile of Eſay: wherein he compareth the Prince to a naile driven into a wall, whereon are hanged all both the veſſels of ſervice, and the Inſtruments of Muſick; (that is) He beares them up all. And great cauſe to deſire God, faſt may it ſtick and never ſtirre (this naile:) for, if it ſhould, all our Cuppes would batter with the fall, and all the Muſicke of our Quire bee marred: (that is) both Church and Countrey be put in danger. Which GOD willing to ſhew (ſaith Philo Iudæus) Hee did place the fifth Commandement (which is the Crown-commandement) ὡς ἐν μεσοτοίῳ, as it were, in the middle, and confines of both Tables,' Thoſe touching Religion, and thoſe touching Iuſtice; that, with one arme He might ſtay Religion, and with the other ſtay Iuſtice, and ſo uphold both.

Eſay 22 23.

And, where ſuch ſupport hath wanted, both have lyen on the ground. For, both of Mica's Idolatrie (that is, corrupt Religion) and of the villanie offered at Gibeah, and of the outrage committed by them of Dan, both in rifling houſes, and ſacking whole Townes (that is) of open injuſtice, God rendereth no cauſe but this, Non erat Rex: the Pillars went downe: Ego wanted. Without which (that is, an eſtabliſhed government) we ſhould have no Common-wealth, but a wild forreſt, where Nimrod and his crew would hunt and chaſe all others: No Common-wealth, but a Pond, where the great fiſh would devoure the ſmall: Nothing but a ſort of ſheepe ſcattered without a Shepheard (ſaith Moſes.) No more Oves Paſcuæ, ſheepe of the Paſture, when their Governor is gone, but Ovis occiſionis, ſheepe for the ſlaughter. Non populus, ſed turba, No People, but a rout; No building, nor Pillars, but a heape of ſtones. Therefore a joyfull noiſe is the ſhoot of a King among them.

Gen. 10. 5. Abac 1. 15. Num. 27. 17. Pſal. 95. 7. Pſal 44. 22. Num. 23. 21.

Ioyfull indeed every way; but joyfull eſpeciall, if this Ego, be not Saul, but David. David, which giveth ſtrength unto the Pillars, and not Saul, an impairer or Weakner of them. It is David's complaint, in the forepart, he found the land weak, when he came to it. So, Saul had left it. It is his promiſe that, as Saul by his ſlackneſſe, had brought the eſtate low; So he, by his vigilancy, would raiſe it up again. And this is the laſt point, how Saul decayed, and David reſtored the Pillars again.

IV. The Wiſeman ſaith, that evill looking to, will decay the principals of any building: and that was Saul's defect (as the Scripture recordeth.) Religion firſt: Inſtead of Celebrabimus, Negligimus IEHOVAM. King David, in his oration to the States of his Realme before his firſt Parliament, teſtifieth, the Arke was not ſought to in the daies of Saul: That Pillar, was not looked to. Sought to it was, after a ſort (Religion:) but nothing ſo as it ſhould. Come let us have the Arke (ſaith he.) And then, Goe to, it skils not greatly; carry it back againe: which, what was it, but to play faſt and looſe with Religion? To intend Paul (as Felix ſaith) at our idle time; and not to Redeeme time, to that end? Judge of Religion's caſe, by the reverence of the Ephod: A daughter of his owne bringing up (Mical) ſaw David, for honour of the Arke, weare it, and deſpiſed him in her heart. Judge of it, by the regard of the Prieſt, Eccl. 10. 18. 1 Chr. 13. 3. 1 Sam. 14. 18, 19. Act. 14. 25. 2 Sam. 6. 20.

Prieſt, the keeper of the Arke: For very love to it, that calling was kept ſo low and bare, that they were tyed to the allowance of their Shew-bread, the High prieſt had not a loafe in his houſe beſides. This was the firſt root of his kingdome: The Ark not ſought to; The Ephod in contempt; the Prieſt-hood impoveriſhed: Et Saulo nihil horum curæ, and Saul regarded not any of theſe things. 1 Sam. 21.4. Act. 18.17.

Such another indifferencie for Church matters, we find in Ieroboam. Tuſh (ſaith he jeſtingly) let them kiſſe the calves, and ſpare not. Let it go which way it will. But therefore God ſends him word by Ahijah, that Iſrael ſhould be as a reed in the water, bowing to and fro, at the devotion of every wave, and every wind, without any ſteadineſſe. And was it not ſo? Search the Chronicles. So, God ſaw this mind in Saul to His Arke, and was wroth; withdrew from him his religious and good Spirit, and ſent upon him a prophane and furious ſpirit; which carried him on, firſt to a ſinfull life, and never left him, till it had brought him to a ſhamefull death. And God was even ſaying his diſperdas, to the Kingdom, but Dauid (here) entreated for a Ne perdas) and promiſed a better care of Celebrabimus Iehovam. Hoſ. 13.2. 1 Reg. 14.15. Deut. 33.27.

Now where Religion thrives not, the other (of Iuſtice) will not hold long: when one ſtaffe is broken, the other holdeth not whole, long after. And ſurely his Juſtice was ſuitable to the former, to his weake regard of Religion; That alſo was weak too. Zach. 11.4.

1. Weake toward the enemy. It is ſaid, there was want of neceſſary furniture of armour and munition, in his dayes. And there had been defect, in teaching them to ſhoot: which David ſupplyed at his entrance. 2. Weake at home too: where, he did not juſtitias, but injurias judicare. 1 Sam. 13.22. 2 Sam. 1.18.

The parts of Juſtice are two (as we find in the tenth verſe.) [1] To exalt the horns of the righteous, [2] and to break the hornes of the wicked.

1 For the firſt. Reaſon was, and ſo was promiſed too, that David ſhould have beene rewarded with Meroe his eldeſt daughters marriage. I know not how, one Adriel (an obſcure fellow, never to have beene nam'd, but to ſhew, ſuch an one put David by) had his horne exalted above him. This for reward. 1 Sam. 18.17. 19

2 And his puniſhment was no better. Mercifull to Agag (whoſe hornes ſhould have beene broken) and in Abimelechs caſe, too rigorous, putting him, and eighty foure more, to the ſword for a dozen of bread. 1 Sam. 15.9.

And whereas, in kindly juſtice, the rigour of frangam cornua commeth not at firſt, but Clemency giveth gracious warning, with Dicam imprudentibus (verſ. 4.) So without regard hereof, as upon any diſpleaſure, without any word at all, his Iavelin went ſtraight to naile men to the wall, they knew not, wherefore. Thus did juſtice decay after Religion, and one Pillar fall upon another, wherof enſued his overthrow, and the Land dangerouſly ſick of the Palſey. Whereof David complaineth, and prayeth, Heale the ſores thereof, for it ſhaketh. 2 Sam. 22.17. 1 Sam. 18.11 19.10. 20.33. Pſal. 60.2.

Now, David, as when he read Abimelechs miſhap in the book of the Iudges, he made his uſe of it as appeareth, 2 Sam. 11.21. So here, when he ſaw, what had turned Saul to damage, tooke warning by it (Ruina præcedentium, admonitio ſequentium,) and to make the Land ſtrong, falleth to underſet the Pillars.

And firſt, of the firſt (that is) the ſtone which Saul and his builders caſt aſide. For, comming to the Kingdome, he conſecrates all his Lawes, with his Act De Archa reducendâ: whereat, he would needs be preſent in his owne perſon, becauſe it touched Celebrabimus Iehovam; and that with ſome diſgrace, as Mical imagined: but he was reſolute in that point, He could receive no diſhonour, by doing honour to God's Arke. And, when it was brought backe, ſet ſuch an order for the Service of it, by the Levites; for maintenance ſo bountifull; ſo reverend for regard; ſo decent for order; ſo every way ſufficient, as the care of the Temple might ſeeme to reigne in his heart. As indeed it did; and as he profeſſeth, he could not ſleep, till he had ſet a full order for Gods matters, and brought this Pillar to perfection. Which his care was ſecundum cor Dei, and God would ſignifie ſo much; by the ceremonie in the Coronati- 1 Chron. 13. 1 Chron. 26. Pſal. 132.3.

2 Reg. 11. 12. Booke of the Law alſo, upon the Kings head; It was intended, that booke ſhould be as deare to them as their Crowne, and they equally ſtudie to advance it. And in putting

That is (as David here expreſſeth it) two Celebrabimus's, to one Iudicabo.

Thus was ſtrengthened the firſt Pillar: and for the ſecond; the Holy Ghoſt giveth him an honourable teſtimony (I ſpeak not of his Military Juſtice, I need not, therein

And ſure, the diligent deſcription, the Holy Ghoſt uſeth of his Worthies, and men of Place, ſheweth him to have beene moſt exact in this point: Firſt, his Three; and then after, his thirty in their order; and that thoſe thirty attained not unto the firſt three, but every one eſteemed and regarded, in his worthineſſe.

And for depreſſing the wicked, it was his morning work, as he teſtifieth Pſa. 101. 8.

I will adde this, that if David offended in ought, herein it was, in that he uſed Dicam too much, and Frangam not oft enough. Abſalom could object it, when it ſerved his turne: And, when David was to leave the

Thus did David repaire Sauls ruines; theſe are his ſteppes, thus did hee ſhew Himſelfe as good as his promiſe (here) a Skilfull Vpholder of theſe two maine Pillars, which beare up and give ſtrength to every Land. And by this meanes, he changed both the Nature and name of his Countrey; finding it Iebus (that is) conculcata, (and ſo, indeed, it was a Citie contemned and trodden downe with every foot:) And leaving it a new name, Ieruſalem; and ſo it was Salem Ieru; a Citie to bee feared and envied of all round about it. So, the land grew ſtrong, and the Pillars faſt; and

A SERMON PREACHED

BEFORE QVEENE ELIZABETH,

At GREENWICH, on the XXIV. of February,

A.D. MDXC. being S. Matthia's day.

PSALME LXXVII. Ver. XX.

Thou diddeſt lead thy People like Sheepe, by the hand of Moſes and Aaron.

SOme, either preſent or imminent danger, and that no ſmall one had more than uſually diſtreſſed the Prophet at the writing of this Pſalme: wherwith his ſpirit, for a while being toſſed to and fro in great anguiſh) as may appeare by thoſe three great billowes, in the 7, 8, 9, verſes) yet at laſt hee commeth to an Anchor (in the tenth ver.) upon the remembrance of the right hand of the moſt High. Which right hand in one even tenour, throughout all ages, not only to that of Davids, but even to this of ours, hath ever ſhewed it ſelf a right hand of pre-eminence and power, in the two poiñts in the latter part of the Pſalm ſpecified, the ſpeciall matter of his and all our comfort.

1. The finall confuſion of his enemies, though for a while exalted (untill this verſe.)

2. The finall deliverance of his people, though for a while diſtreſſed (in this verſe.)

Which twain, of many Pſalms are the ſubſtance, and of this now before us; and indeed all the whole ſtory in a manner is nothing elſe but a Calender of theſe two. That the Lord of Hoſts, the GOD of Iſrael, is El Nekamoth, a God of Vengeance againſt His enemies; and but a letter changed, is El Nechamoth, a God of comfort unto His people. That His Cherubims hold a flaming ſword to repreſſe the one, and have their wings ſpread to ſhadow and ſuccour the other. That His creatures; the cloud from above is a miſt of darkneſſe to confound the Egyptians; and the ſame cloud a pillar of light to conduct the Iſraelites. That the water from beneath, to the Egyptian is a gulfe to devoure them, but to the Iſraelite, a wall of defence on their right hand and on their left. Exod. 14. 22.

We need not to ſeek far; in the Pſalme next before, and againe in the Pſalme next after this, you ſhall find theſe two coupled; as (indeed) for the moſt part they goe ſtill together.

And as they goe ſtill together, ſo ſtill they end in the ſafeguard of the Church. Of all Prophecies, of all judgements, of all miracles, paſt or preſent, new or old, that is the key and concluſion. The laſt verſe (if I may ſo ſay) of the Deluge was the Rainbow; of the Egyptian bondage, was the feaſt of Paſſeover; and even here in this Pſalme, after it hath, in the foure verſes next before, rained and powred downe, and lightned and thundred, and heaven and earth gone together, there doth in this verſe enſue a calme to GODS people. This is the bleſſed period that ſhutteth up the Pſalm: Them that hated thy people, or delt unkindly with thy ſervants, them thou drowneſt and deſtroyedſt. But Thy people thou leadeſt like ſheepe by the hands of Moſes and Aaron.

And in theſe two, may all Kingdomes and Countries read their owne deſtinies, what they are to hope for, or to feare, at the hands of GOD. If they be Lo-ammi not His people, they may looke backe, what they finde in the verſes before, and that is ſtorme and tempeſt. If they be His (and we I truſt are His; and more and more His, He daily make us) this verſe is for us, that is, ſafe and quiet conduct: Thou diddeſt lead thy, &c.

The Summe. In which verſe there is mention of three perſons: 1. GOD. 2. GODS hand. 3. GODS people. 4. And of a bleſſing of benefit iſſuing from the firſt (that is) GOD: conveighed by the ſecond (that is) Gods hands, Moſes and Aaron: and received by the third (that is) Gods people: And it is the benefit of good guiding or government. This is the ſumme of the verſe.

The Diviſion As for order, I will ſeeke no other, than as the Holy Ghoſt hath marſhalled the words in the Text it ſelfe. Which of it ſelfe is right exact: every word, in the bodie of it, containing matter worth the pauſing on.

1 Firſt, in the foremoſt word. Tu, God, who vouchſafed this benefit.

2 And ſecondly, in Duxiſti: The benefit it ſelf of guiding from him derived.

3 And thirdly, derived to His people the parties that receive it.

4 And fourthly, derived to His people by His hands, which hands are Moſes, and Aaron, the meanes that conveigh it.

I. Thou leadeſt thy people, &c.

The firſt part. Thou. TO begin with GOD; who beginneth the verſe, by whom and to whom wee lead and are led, and in whom all right leading both beginneth and endeth.

It is Thou (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) that leadeſt Thy people, and (in the next Pſalm) it is He that carried His people in the wilderneſſe like a flock, who is that He, or this Thou? It is God, ſaith the Prophet in the ſixteenth verſe.

That is: whoſoever be the hands, GOD is the Perſon, He is the Tu. Whoſe names ſoever we heare; whoſe hands ſoever we feele; whoſe countenance ſoever we behold; we muſt yet look up higher, and ſee GOD in every Government. To Him wee muſt make our Apoſtrophe, and ſay, Thou leadeſt, &c. For He it is leadeth properly: and, in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech, Moſes and Aaron lead not; but God, by the hands of Moſes and Aaron. And that thus it is, that GOD is the Perſon that leadeth, and all other but hands under Him and unto Him, the Prophet giveth us in this ſame verſe, matter of three markes of difference, between Him, and them.

1. The firſt is in Duxiſti. Thou diddeſt lead (ſaith the Prophet:) diddeſt and doeſt lead; diddeſt then and doeſt ſtill: But, Thou diddeſt lead by Moſes and Aaron, ſo doeſt Thou not now. The hands are changed. Then, Moſes and Aaron; after; Ioſue and Eliazar; after, Othoniel and Phinees; after, others: Sed tu Idem es, But Thou art the ſame ſtill, and thy yeares ſhall not faile: As if hee ſhould ſay; Their yeares (indeed) faile, and come to an end; within ſo many yeares they were not ſo ledde, and within ſo many more they ſhall not bee. But GOD hath a prerogative, that Hee is Rex a Sæculo, and Rex in Sæculum, was our King of old, and ſhall be our King for ever and ever. Pſal. 102.27. Pſal. 74.12. 146.10.

The ſecond is in populum tuum, Thy people: another limitation. For, this people are (in the 15. verſe before) ſaid to be the ſonnes of Iacob and Ioſeph: ſo farre ſtretcheth Moſes line, and no further. But, Tu Duxiſti, GOD's line ivit in omnem terram, goeth over all Nations, even to the uttermoſt parts of the world. GOD's leading hath no marches. This people and all people are His: and He by ſpeciall prerogative is Rex univerſæ terræ, King (not of one people, or of one countrie or climate, but) of all the people of the whole earth. 2 Pſal. 19.4. Pſal. 47.7.

The third is, Per manus, By the hands. For as He guideth the people by the hands, ſo Hee guideth the hands themſelves, by whom He guideth; Ruleth by them, and ruleth them; ruleth by their hands, and ruleth in their hearts: Is both the Shepheard of Iſrael, leading them like ſheep, and further leadeth Ioſeph alſo (their leader) tanquam ovem, like a ſheepe. That is, they be Reges Gentium, Kings of the nations, but He is Rex Regum, King over Kings themſelves. Moſes and they with him bee ἡγεμόνες, Guides (as S. Paul calleth them;) but JESUS CHRIST is ἀρχηγός, the Arch-guide. Aaron and his familie be ποιμένες, Shepheards (as Saint Peter termeth them) but JESUS CHRIST is ἀρχιποίμην, the high and ſovereigne Shepheard over all. Why then, Dicite in Gentibus, Tell it out among the Nations (ſaith the Prophet) that God is King; that He is the Tu, the Leader, the perpetuall, the univerſall, principall Leader of His people. 3 Pſal. 30.1. 1 Tim. 6.15. Heb. 13.14. Heb. 12.2. 1 Pet. 5.4 Pſal. 69.10.

From which plaine note (that the LORD is Ruler) the Pſalmiſt himſelf draweth a double uſe, containing matter both of comfort and feare.

1 Of Comfort; (in the 97. Pſal.) Dominus regnavit, exultet terra; The LORD is Ruler (or Leader) let the earth rejoyce. Pſal. 97.91.

2 Of feare (in the 99. Pſal.) Dominus regnavit, contremiſcat Populus; The LORD is Ruler (or Leader) let the people tremble. Pſal. 99.1.

Firſt, from GOD's ruling, matter of joy. For if we will be ruled by Him, He will appoint over us, a Ruler according to his owne heart, He will prevent her with the bleſsings of goodneſſe: He will deliver the power of Siſera into her hands: He will cloath her enemies with ſhame, and make her crown flouriſh on her head, and ſet the dayes of her life as the daies of heaven. 1 1 Sam. 13.14. Pſal. 21.4. Pſal. 132.18. Pſal 89.29.

Secondly, matter of feare too. The Lord is Ruler, let the people tremble. For if they fall to be un-ruly, He can vindemiare ſpiritum principum, as eaſily gather to Him the breath of a Prince, as we can ſlip off a cluſter from the vine. He can ſend them a Rehoboam without wiſdome; or a Ieroboam without religion; or Aſſhur (a ſtranger) to be their King; or (which is worſt of all) Nullum Regem, a diſ-ordered Anarchie, quia non timuimus Iehovam. Therefore exultantes & trementes, in joy and trembling let us acknowledge GOD and his ſupreme leading, that our parts may be long in DOMINUS' regnavit, exultet terra. The LORD doth lead us, let the Land rejoyce. 2 Pſal 99.1. Pſal 76.13. Hoſ 10.3.

Yet one point more, out of this Tu. By comparing it with the verſes before, on which it dependeth: that as it is the Perſon, and Power of GOD that is chiefe in every Rule: So, not every power, but even that very power of His, whereby he worketh wonders. For the Prophet (in the fourteenth verſe) having ſaid of GOD, Thou art the GOD that doeſt wonders, and ſo particulariſing, Thou thundereſt from Heaven, Thou ſhakeſt the earth, Thou divideſt the Sea; at laſt commeth to this Thou, Thou leadeſt the people. Very ſtrange it is, that Hee ſhould ſort the leading of the people with GOD's wonders, and that not only among them all, but after them all, as chiefe Verſ. 14. 18. 19.

of all. Recount the Government of the people, as if it were ſome ſpeciall miracle. And indeed, a miracle it is; and whoſoever ſhall looke into the nature and weight of a Monarchie, will ſo acknowledge it. The Rod of Government is a miraculous rod: both that of Moſes, for it would turne into a ſerpent, and back againe: and Aaron's rod too, for, of a dry and ſeare ſtick, it came to bloſſome againe and to beare ripe almonds: To ſhew, that every Government is miraculous, and containeth in it matter of wonder, and that in two reſpects.

Exod. 4. 3. Numb. 17. 8.

I

Ezek. 11. 3. Gen. 49.

Eſter. 6. 1. Dan. 6. 18.

For, whereas there is naturally in every man a ſeeking his own eaſe; to lie ſoking in his broth (as Ezekiel ſpeaketh;) not to be cuſtos fratris, nor to afflict and vex his ſoule with the care of others: it is ſurely ſupernaturall, to endure that carke and care, which the Governours continually doe (a matter that we inferiours can little skill of;) but to read Eâ nocte dormire non potuit rex, Such a night the King could not ſleep; And again, Such a night no meat would downe with the King, and he liſted not to heare any Muſick: To endure this (I ſay) is ſupernaturall, and it is God, which above all nature, by His mighty ſpirit worketh it in them.

Again, whereas there is, in every inferiour, a naturall wildneſſe or unwillingneſſe to brooke any Ruler, or Judge over them (as was told Moſes flatly to his face;) For, by nature, the people are not like ſheepe: It is not (certainly) any power of man, but a meere ſupernaturall thing, to keep the nations of the earth in ſuch awe and order, as we ſee them in. Quis poteſt (ſaith Salomon) who is able, to mannage this mighty multitude, ſo huge in number, ſo unruly in affection? Nonne poteſtatem habeo? Have not I power (ſaith Pilate) But our SAVIOUR CHRIST very fitly telleth him, Power hee hath indeed, but it is not innata, but data deſuper; and except it were given him from above, he ſhould have none at all. It is Tu duxiſti that doth it: even Thou O LORD, and thine almighty power, that holdeſt them under. And very fitly from the wonder in appeaſing the ſea (in the laſt verſe before) doth the Prophet paſſe (in this) to the leading of the people: Their natures are alike; Himſelf, in one verſe, matcheth them; Thou ruleſt the raging of the Sea, and the noyſe of the waves, and the madneſſe of the people. That is: no leſſe unruly and enraged, by nature, is the multitude, than the Sea. No leſſe it roreth, Dirumpamus vincula eorum, and Noluimus hunc regnare ſuper nos, when God unlooſeth it. Of one and the ſame power it proceedeth, to keep them both within their banks: thou that calmeſt the one, charmeſt alſo the other.

Wherefore when wee ſee that carefull mind in a Prince (I will uſe Moſes owne words) to carrie a people in her armes, as if ſhe had conceived them in her wombe, as no nurſe, nor mother more tender: and againe, when we ſee the tumultuous and tempeſtuous body, this ſame Sea of popularitie kept in a quiet calme, and infinite millions ebbing and flowing (as it were) that is, ſtirring and ſtanding ſtill, arming and diſarming themſelves, killing and being killed, and all at the monoſyllables of one perſon, Goe, and they goe; Come, and they come, Do, and they do it: Let us ſee God ſenſibly in it, and the power of God, yea, the miraculous power of God; and ſay with the Prophet, Thou art the God, That doeſt wonders, Thou leadeſt thy people like Sheep, by the hands of MOSES and AARON. And ſo much for the firſt part, firſt word, and perſon.

Numb. 11. 12. Mat. 8. 9.

II.

The ſecond Part Duxiſti. Exod. 17. 15. Eſa. 9. 6. Pſal. 82. 1.

The ſecond word compriſeth the benefit iſſuing from God, which is a leading or conduct, the ſecond part. A word of great compaſſe; and includeth many leadings under it. For, to be our Iehovah-Niſſi, our ſtandard bearer, and to leade our Forces in the field; To be our wonderfull counſeller, and to lead that honourable Boord. To ſit in the middeſt of our Judges, and to lead them in giving ſentence; All theſe and more than theſe are all in duxiſti. And all theſe are eſpeciall favours: but the chiefe of all, and that whereof all theſe are but the traine, is the leading us in his heavenly truth, and in the way of his Commandements, to the land of the living. All the reſt attend upon this: this is chiefe, and therefore the leading of principall entendment.

And,

And in this leading there be theſe foure points. For that it be a leading, it muſt be orderly without ſtraying, skilfully without erring, gently without forcing, and certainly without miſſing our journies end. Firſt, orderly without ſtraying: led and not wander. Second, skilfully without erring: led and not miſſed. Third, gentle without forcing: led, and not drawen. Fourth, certainly without miſſing: led, and not led about, ever going, but never comming to our place of repoſe.

In the firſt whereof, we are but let ſee, the wandring and ſtay-leſſe ſtate we were in, till God vouchſafed to ſend us this gracious conduct: ſicut Oves, like Ezekiels ſtray ſheep, ſtragling upon every Valley and upon every Hill. The very caſe theſe people here were in, when God in mercy ſent them theſe two Guides, ſcattered all over the Land to ſeek ſtubble. Which eſtate of theirs, is the expreſſe pattern of the world, wandring in vanitie, picking up ſtrawes, and things that ſhall not profit them, ſeeking death in the errour of their life, till God look mercifully upon them, and from this wild wandring, reduce them into the right way. 1 Ezek. 34. 5. 6. Exod. 5. 12. Sap. 1. 12.

Which right way is the ſecond point; For elſe, it is not Duxiſti; but Seduxiſti; and as good no leading at all, as miſ-leading. Now this right-way, if we aske where it lyeth, the Prophet will tell us, Thy way O God is in the Sanctuary: (that is) it is the word of GOD which is the Load-ſtarre, when GOD is the leadſ-man. Sicut oves it muſt be, and this is the voyce of the true Shepheard, to be liſtned to of all his flocke, that will not rove and run headlong into the Wolfs den. This is the Pillar of the cloud in regard of this people here, to be kept in view of all thoſe that will not periſh in the wilderneſſe, wherein is no path. Indeed it is both: [1] the Pillar of the cloud before, directing us in the day; [2] and the voyce of the Shepheard behind us (as Eſay ſaith) telling us when we miſſe, and crying, Hæc eſt via, ambulate in eâ, This is the way, the right way, walk in it. 2 Verſ 13. Exod. 14. Eſay 30. 21.

And in this way, our guiding muſt be milde and gentle: Elſe it is not Duxiſti, but traxiſti; drawing and driving, and no leading. Leni ſpiritu, non durâ manu, rather by an inward ſweet influence to be led, than by an outward extreme violence to be forced forward. So did GOD lead this people here. Not the greateſt pace (I wis) for they were a yeare marching that, they might have poſted in eleven dayes (as Moſes ſaith.) No nor yet in the neareſt way neither, as Moſes telleth us. For, He fetched a compaſſe divers times; as all wiſe Governours by his example muſt do, that deſire rather ſafely to lead, than haſtily to drive forward. The Spirit of God leadeth this people (ſaith Eſay) as an horſe is ridden down the hill into a valley; which muſt not be a gallop, leſt horſe and ruler both come down one over another; but warily and eaſily. And ſicut oves ſtill giveth us light, ſeeing the Text compareth it to a ſheep gate. Touching which kind of Cattell to very good purpoſe, Iacob (a skilfull ſhepheard) anſwereth Eſau (who would have had Iacob and his flocks have kept company with him in his hunting pace. Nay not ſo Sir (ſaid Iacob) it is a tender cattell, that is under my hands, and muſt be ſoftly driven, as they may endure; if one ſhould over-drive them but one day, they would all die, or be laid up for many dayes after. Indeed, Rehoboam left ten parts of his flock behind, only for ignorance of this very point in Duxiſti. For, when in boiſterous manner he chaſed them before him, telling them what yokes he would make for them (a far unmeet occupation for a Prince to be a yoke-maker) they all ſhrunk from him preſently, and falſified his prophecy cleane. For whereas he told them ſadly, His little finger ſhould be as big as his Fathers whole body, it fell out clean contrary; for, his whole body proved not ſo big as his Fathers little finger. A gentle leading it muſt be; and in the beginning, ſuch was the courſe. Therefore ye have the Kings of Canaan in Geneſis, for the moſt part called by the name of Abimelech (that is) Pater Rex, a King in place, a Father in affection. Such was Moſes our leader here, a meeke man above all the men on the earth. Such was David himſelfe, who full bitterly complaineth, Ah theſe ſonnes of Zervia are too hard, too full of execution for me. And (to end this point) thus deſcribeth he his good Prince (in the 72. Pſalm) He ſhall come downe (not like haile-ſtones on a houſe top, but) like the dew into a fleece of wooll (that is) ſweetly and mildly, without any noiſe or violence at all. 2 Deut. 1. 2. Exod. 13. 18. Eſay 63. 14. Gen. 33. 13. 1 Reg. 10. 11 Num. 12. 3. 2 Sam. 3. 39. Pſal. 72. 6. 3

Laſt of all. All this reducing and right leading and gentle leading, muſt end in an end: they muſt not go and go ſtill in infinitum; that, is no leading but tyring outright.
Pſal. 23. 2. It muſt be ſicut oves, whom the good Shepheard (in the three and twentieth Pſalme) leadeth to a place, and to a place meet for them, where there is greene paſture by the waters of comfort. So was it in this people here. They were led out of Egypt to ſacrifice to God, and to learn His Law in the Mount of GOD, Sinai; and from thence alſo to Sion it ſelf, His own reſt, and holy habitation. And even ſo our people are led from the Pſal. 73. 24. wandrings of this world, unto the folds of GODS Church, where (as the Prophet ſaith in the 73. Pſalme) firſt GOD will a while guide them with His counſell, and after will receive them into His glory. And this is the end of all leading. To bring us all from the Eccl. 1. 2. vain proffers of the world, which we ſhall all find (as Salomon found it) vanitas vanitatum & omnia vanitas, to the ſound comfort of His Word in this Book, which is indeed veritas veritatum & omnia veritas: in the knowledge and practice whereof when they ſhall have fulfilled their courſe here, GOD will bring them to His owne reſt, to His heavenly Ieruſalem, where is and ever ſhall be felicitas felicitatum & omnia felicitas.

But in this life here, we come no further than the borders of his Sanctuary, (as he Pſal. 78. 54. telleth us in the next Pſalme) in the way whereof if God lead us conſtanter, conſtantly; not after our wanton manner, out and in when we liſt, all the other inferiour leadings ſhall accompany this one. For, this leading leadeth them all. He ſhall lead our Counſellours, that they ſhall adviſe the counſels of his own heart: He ſhall lead our Iudges, that they ſhall pronounce the judgements of His own mouth: He ſhall lead our forces into Edom, the ſtrong Cities and holds of the enemy: He ſhall lead our Navie in the Sea, by unknown paths, to the place it would goe; and I can ſay no more. Thorow all the dreads and dangers of the world, thorow the perils of the Red-ſea, thorow the perils of the Deſart, thorow the malice of all our enemies, He ſhall Pſal. 27. 17. ſafely lead us, and ſurely bring us to his promiſed Kingdome, where we ſhall ſee the goodneſſe of the Lord in the Land of the living. And this is the benefit, and thus much for that part.

The third part Populum tuum.

The value of which benefit we ſhall the better eſteem, if we conſider the ſtate of the Parties, on whom it is beſtowed, ſet down in theſe words Populum Tuum: which is the third part. That all this good is for the people, worthy not ſo much as the leaſt part of it. For, what is the people? Let Moſes ſpeak (for, he knew them) Siccine populo ſtulte & inſipiens? And Aaron too (for, he had occaſion to trie them) This people is even ſet on miſchiefe. And (if you will) David alſo, Inter Belluas populorum. And to conclude, GOD himſelf, Populus iſte duræ cervicis eſt. This is the people. We may briefly take a view of all theſe.

Populum.
Deut. 32. 6.
Exod 32. 22.
Pſal 68. 30.
Exod. 32. 9. 33. 3.

Will you ſee the folly and giddineſſe of this multitude? ye may, Acts 19. there,
Act 19. 32. they be at the Towne-houſe, ſome crying one thing, ſome another; and the more part knew not why they were come together. Therefore Moſes truly ſaid, it was a fond and giddy-headded people.

Will ye ſee the brutiſhneſſe of the people? In the 22, Acts, you ſhall ſee them ta-
Act 22 23. king up a crie, upon a word ſpoken by S. Paul, and caſting off their cloaths and throwing duſt into the aire, as if they were quite decayed of reaſon; that David truly might ſay, inter belluas populorum.

Will ye ſee the ſpight and malice of the pepole. In the ſixteenth of Numbers, for Num. 16. 41. Corehs death they challenge Moſes and Aaron, ye have perſecuted and killed the people of the Lord. Yet neither did Moſes once touch them, but God Himſelf from heaven, by viſible judgement, ſhewed them to be as they were. Neither were Coreh and his crew the people of God, but the ſons of Belial. But that is their manner, in deſpight of Moſes, if for ought they like him not, preſently to canonize Coreh and his complicies, and make them the Saints of God. That Aaron ſaid truly of them, This people is even ſet on miſchiefe.

Laſtly,

Laſtly, if ye will ſee their head-ſtrongneſſe, looke upon them in the eight of the firſt of Samuel; where having phanſied to themſelves an alteration of eſtate, though they were ſhewed plainly by Samuel, the ſundry inconveniences of the government, they ſo affected, they anſwer him with; No (for that is their Logick, to deny the concluſion) but we will be like other countries about us, and be guided as we thinke good our owne ſelves. That (of all other) GODS ſaying is moſt true, It is a ſtiffe-necked and head-ſtrong generation. 1 Sam. 8. 19. 20

And yet, for all theſe wants, ſo well weening of themſelves, as they need no leading, they: every one among them is meet to be a leader, to preſcribe Moſes and controll Aaron in their proceedings. So that, where God ſetteth the ſentence thus, Thou leddeſt thy people like ſheep by the hands of Moſes and Aaron; might they have their wils, they would take the ſentence by the end, and turn it thus, Thou leddeſt Moſes and Aaron like ſheepe by the hands of thy people.

And this is the people, Populus. And ſurely, no evill can be ſaid too much of this word people, if yee take it apart by it ſelfe, Populus without Tuus, The people and not Thy people. But then, here is amends for all the evill before, in this word Tuus; Which qualifieth the former, and maketh them capable of any bleſſing or benefit. Tuum.

A common thing in Scripture it is, thus to delay one word with another. Si peccaverit in te frater tuus: Peccaverit ſtirs our choler ſtraight; but then, Frater makes us hold our hand again. Tolle feſtucam ex oculo: Feſtucam, a mote? our zeale is kindled preſently to remove it: but then Ex oculo, the tenderneſſe of the part tempers us, and teacheth us to deale with it in great diſcretion. And ſo it is here: Populus ſo unruly a rout, as Moſes and Aaron would diſdaine once to touch them, but when Tuus is added, it will make any of them, not only to touch them, but to take them by the hand. For, it is much that lieth upon this pronoune Tuus; indeed, all lyeth upon it: and put me Tuus out of the verſe, and neither God reſpecteth them, nor vouchſafeth them either Moſes to govern, or Aaron to teach, or any heavenly benefit elſe. For, populus is unworthy of them all: But, for tuus, nothing is too good. Mat. 18. 15. Luk. 6. 41. 42.

For there is, in Tuus, Not only that they be men, and not beaſts; Free-men, and not Villaines; Athenians or Engliſhmen (that is, a civill) not a barbarous people (the three conſiderations of the heathen Ruler:) but that they be GODS owne people and flocke; and that is all in all. His people, becauſe He made them; and ſo, the lot of His inheritance. Pſal. 100. 3. His people againe, becauſe He redeemed them from Egypt with His mighty arme; and ſo His peculiar people. His people, the third time, becauſe He redeemed their ſoules by His ſufferings; and ſo, a people purchaſed moſt dearly, purchaſed even with the invaluable high price of His moſt precious blood. This is that, that ſets the price on them. For over ſuch a flock, ſo highly prized, ſo dearely beloved, and ſo dearely bought, it may well beſeeme any, to be a Guide. Moſes with all his learning; Aaron with all his eloquence; yea, even Kings to be their foſter-fathers, and Queenes to be their Nurſes. No leading, No leader too good for them. I conclude (with S. Auguſtine upon theſe words) Quamdiù minimis iſtis feciſtis fratribus meis, feciſtis & mihi: Audis minimis (ſaith he) & contemnis. Thou heareſt they be the baſe people, the minims of the world, and thou ſetteſt thy foot on them; Audi & fratribus, Take this with thee too, that they be Chriſts brethren, thou leadeſt: Et mihi crede, non eſt minima gloria horum minimorum ſalus, And truſt me, it is no poore praiſe to protect this poore flocke, but a high ſervice it is, and ſhall be highly rewarded. CHRIST will take and reward it, as done to Himſelf in perſon. Verſ 15. 1 Pet. 1. 9. Eſay 49. 23.

Sicut Oves ſtandeth doubtfull in the Verſe; and may be referred, either to the manner of leading, thus; Thou leadeſt like ſheepe: Or, to the perſons led, thus; Thy people, like ſheepe. There we touched it before, in Duxiſti, in every of the foure manners of leading; and here now we take it in again, with the people, to whom it may have reference. And indeed, there is no term, that the HOLY GHOST more Sicut Oves.

often ſendeth for (than this of His flock) to expreſſe His people by, for, in the eſtate of a flock they may beſt ſee themſelves. As here it is added reſpectively to Duxiſti, to let them ſee, both what intereſt they have in it, and what need they have of it. I mean of Government.

1 Lo-ammi. Pſal 32 9. First, as a note of difference betweene Ammi and Lo-ammi : Thy people, and the People : GODS People and ſtrange children : Every People is not Sicut Oves, nor every one among the People. There is a People (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeakes) Sicut Equus & Mulus, like the untamed Horſe or Mule, in whom is no underſtanding : And among the people there bee too many ſuch. Surely by nature we are all ſo wilde and unbroken, as the Aſſe-colt (ſaith Iob.) Which wildeneſſe of nature when they are untaught, and taught to ſubmit themſelves to government; to become gentle and eaſie to be led, Sicut Oves, led to feeding, led to ſhearing, to feed thoſe that feed them; tractable of nature, and profitable of yeeld : It is a good degree and a great worke is performed on them. For, by it, as by the firſt ſteppe, they become GODS people. For, His people are populus ſicut oves, and they that are not His, are populus ſicut Hirci, a people like He-Goats, in nature intractable, in uſe unſerviceable.

Iob. 11. 12.

Now, being His People, they come to have an intereſt in Duxiſti, the benefit. For, populus ſicut oves muſt be led gently; but populus ſicut hirci muſt be driven forcibly. Duxiſti is not for both : It is a priviledge. And if there bee any retaine their wilde nature, or degenerate from ſheepe into goats (as diverſe do daily :) for them, Aaron hath a rod to ſever them from the fold, by cenſure of the Church. And if that will not ſerve, Moſes hath another, which he can turne into a Serpent and ſting them : Yea, if need ſo require, ſting them to death, by the power ſecular. For Nachah is leading, and (the ſound remaining) Nacah is ſmiting; and a neceſſary uſe of both. The one, for thy people like ſheepe, who will be led, the other for the ſtrange thildren like goates, who will not ſtirre a foot, further than they be forced. And this is the intereſt.

2 Mat. 24. 23. 24 But now againe, when they be brought thus far, to be like ſheepe; they are but like ſheepe, though : that is, a weak and unwiſe cattell, far unable to guide themſelves. Which ſheweth them their need of good government, and though they be the people of God, yet that Moſes and Aaron be not ſuperfluous. For a feeble poore beaſt (we all know) a ſheepe is; of little or no ſtrength for reſiſtance in the world, and therefore in danger to be preyed on by every Wolfe. And; as of little ſtrength, ſo of little reach. None ſo eaſily ſtrayeth of it ſelf; None is ſo eaſily led awry by others. Every ſtrange whiſtle maketh the ſheep; Every Ecce hic maketh the people caſt up their heads, as if ſome great matter were in hand.

These two defects do mainly enforce the neceſſity of a Leader. For, they that want ſight (as blind-men) and they that want ſtrength (as little children) ſtir not without great perill, except they have one to lead them. And both theſe wants are in ſheep, and in the people too.

If then they be ſicut Oves, like ſheep : What is both their wiſdome? Sure, to bee in the unitie of the flock; and what is their ſtrength? Truly, to be under the conduct of a Shepheard; In theſe two is their ſafetie. For, if either they ſingle themſelves and ſtray from the fold; or if they be a fold, and yet want a Shepheard; none more miſerable than they. And indeed, in the HOLY GHOST's phraſe, it is the ordinary note of a private mans miſery, to be Tanquam ovis erratica, as a ſtray ſheepe from the flock; and of the miſerie of every Eſtate politike, to bee Tanquam grex abſque Paſtore, as a flock without a Shepheard, Therefore guiding they need : both the ſtaffe of unity (Bands) to reduce them from ſtraying, and the ſtaffe of order (Beautie) to lead them ſo reduced. And would God they would ſee their own feebleneſſe and ſhallowneſſe, and learne to acknowledge the abſolute neceſſitie of this benefit; in all dutie receiving it, in all humility praying for the continuance of it, that GOD break not the fold, and ſmite not the Shepheard, for the flocks unthankfulneſſe.

Eſay 53. 6. Mat 9. 36. Zach. 11 7.

Duxiſti ſicut Oves. Ducti ſumus ſicut Oves.

But

By the hands of Moſes and Aaron.] This part of theverſe that is behinde, and containeth the Meanes by whom GOD conveigheth this benefit to His people, had had no uſe, but might well have beene left out, and the verſe ended at populum tuum, if [Author aliene potentiæ perdit ſuam] had been Gods rule. For, He needed no meanes, but immediately from Himſelf, ſine manibus, could have conveighed it, without any hands (ſave thoſe that made us; that is, His almighty power, but) without any arme or hand of fleſh; without Moſes or Aaron, without men or Angels, He was able (Himſelfe) to have led us. And à principio fuit ſic; for a time, He did ſo; Of Himſelfe immediately, and of his own abſolute ſoveraigntie, held He court in the beginning, and proceeded againſt Adam, Eve, Cain, the old World; and there was none joyned in commiſſion with Him. He only was our King of old (ſaith the Pſalmiſt:) and for a ſpace, the juſtice that was done on earth, He did it Himſelfe. And as He held court before all, ſo will He alſo hold one after all. Veniet, Veniet qui malè judicata rejudicabit dies: There will come a day, there is a day comming, wherein all evill judged caſes ſhall be judged over again. To which all Appeales lie, even from the daies of affliction in this world (as ſometimes they be) to the day of Iudgement in the world to come.

The fourth Part. Per manus Moſis & Aaronis. Pſal. 74. 12.

This eſtate of guiding being wholly inveſted in Him, there being but one God and one Guide, He would not keep it unto Himſelf alone, as He might, but it pleaſed Him to ſend Moſes His ſervant, and Aaron whom he had choſen, to aſſociate them to Himſelf, in the Commiſsion of leading, and to make hominem homini Deum, One man a Guid and god to another. Pſal. 105. 26.

And thoſe, whom He thus honoureth, [1] Firſt, the Prophet calleth GODS hands, by whom He leadeth us: [2] and ſecondly telleth us, who they be; MOSES and AARON. Per manum.

GODS hands they be: For that, by them He reacheth unto us Duxiſti, and in it, Religion, and counſell, and juſtice, and victory, and whatſoever elſe is good. He ſendeth his Word to Moſes firſt, and by him (as it were, thorow his hand) His ſtatutes and ordinances unto all Iſrael. Pſal. 103. 7.

And not good things onely, but (if they ſo deſerve) ſometimes evill alſo. For as, if they be vertuous (ſuch as Moſes and Aaron) they be the good hand of GOD for our benefit, ſuch as was upon Ezra: ſo, if they be evill (ſuch as Balaac and Balaam) they be the heavie hand of GOD for our chaſtiſement, ſuch as was upon Iob. But the hand of GOD they be both. And a certaine reſemblance there is between this government and the hand: For, as we ſee the hand it ſelf parted into divers fingers, and thoſe again into ſundry joynts, for the more convenient and ſpeedy ſervice therof; ſo is the eſtate of government, for eaſe and expedition, branched into the middle Offices, and they again as (fingers) into others under them. But the very meaneſt of them all, is a joynt of ſome finger of this hand of God. Nazianzen (ſpeaking of Rulers, as of the Images of God) compareth the higheſt, to pictures drawn clean thorow, even to the feet: the middle ſort, to half pictures drawn but to the girdle: the meaneſt, to the leſſer ſort of pictures drawn but to the neck or ſhoulders. But all, in ſome degree, carry the Image of God.

Out of which terme (of the hands of God) the people firſt are taught their dutie; ſo to eſteeme of them, as of GODS own hands: That as GOD ruleth them by the hands of Moſes and Aaron (that is) by their miniſterie; ſo Moſes and Aaron rule them by the hands of God (that is) by His authoritie. It is his name, they weare; it is his ſeat, they ſit in; it is the rod of God, that is in Moſes and Aarons hands. If we fall down before them, it is he that is honoured, if we riſe up againſt them, it is he that is injuried: and that Peccavi in cælum, & in te muſt be our confeſſion, againſt heaven, and them; but firſt, againſt heaven and God himſelfe, when we commit any contempt againſt Moſes or Aaron. Luk. 15. 21.

1. And the Rulers have their leſſon too. Firſt, That if they be GODS hands, then 1 his Spirit is to open and ſhut them, ſtretch them out, and draw them in, wholly to guid and govern them; as the hand of man is guided and governed by the ſpirit that is in man. Heavenly and divine had thoſe hands need be, which are to be the hands, and to work the work of GOD.

2 Again, they be not only hands, but manus per quam (that is) hands in actu. Not to be wrapped up in ſoft furr, but by which an actuall dutie of leading is to be performed. Moſes own hand (in the fourth of Exodus) when he had lodged it in his warme boſome, became leprous; but being ſtretched out, recovered againe. Hands in actu then they muſt be: not looſly hanging down, or folded together in idleneſſe; but ſtretched out; not only to point others, but themſelvs to be foremoſt in the execution of every good work.

Exod 4.6

3 Thirdly, Manus per quam ducuntur: That is, as not the leprous hand of MOSES, ſo neither the withered hand of IEROBOAM ſtretching it ſelf out againſt GOD, by miſleading his people, and maki g them to ſin. Leading back again into Egypt (a thing expreſly forbidden) either to the oppreſſion and bondage of Egypt; or to the ignorance and falſe worſhip of Egypt, from whence MOSES had led them. For as they be not entire bodies o f themſelves, but hands; and that not their own, but GODS: ſo, the People they led, are not their own, but His, and by Him, and to Him to be led and directed. So much for Gods hands.

Deut. 17. 16.

Moſes and Aaron.

This Honourable title (of the hand of GOD) is here given to two parties, MOSES and AARON, in regard of two diſtinct duties performed by them. Yee heard, how we ſaid before, The people of GOD were like ſheepe, in reſpect of a double want: [1] want of ſtrength by meanes of their feebleneſſe, [2] and want of skill by means of their ſimpleneſſe. For this double want here commeth a double ſupply, from the hand, [1] of ſtrength, and [2] of cunning: For, both theſe are in the hand.

1 It is, of all members, the chief in might; as appeareth by the diverſity of uſes and ſervices, it is put to. In Potentatibus dextræ (ſaith the Prophet.)

Pſal. 20. 6.

2 And ſecondly, it is alſo the part of greateſt cunning; as appeareth by the variety of the works, which it yeeldeth by the pen, the pencill, the needle, and inſtruments of muſick. In intellectu manuum (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, in the end of the next Pſalm: and let my right hand forget her cunning.)

Pſal. 78. 72.
Pſal. 137. 5.

This hand of God then, by his ſtrength affordeth protection to the feebleneſſe of the flock: and again by his skill affordeth direction to the ſimpleneſſe of the flock. And theſe are the two ſubſtantiall parts of all leading.

Theſe twaine (as two arms) did GOD appoint in the wilderneſſe, to lead His people by. Afterward, over theſe twaine did he yet ſet another, even the power and authority Regall, in place of the Head (as Himſelf termeth it;) and to it, as ſupreme, united the regiment of both. The conſideration of which Power, I meddle not with (as being not within the compaſſe of this verſe) but only with the hands of regiments Eccleſiaſticall and Civill. Which (as the two Cherubims did the Arke) overſpread and preſerve every eſtate. One (ſaith Iehoſaphat) diſpenſing Res Iehovæ, the LORDS buſineſſe; the other dealing in negotio Regis, the affaires of Eſtate. One (ſaith David) intending the worſhip of the Tribes; the other, the Thrones for Iuſtice. One (ſaith Paul) being for us in τὰ πρὸς Θεὸν, things pertaining to God; the other in τὰ βιωτικὰ, matters of this preſent life. The one Pro aris, the other Pro focis, as the very Heathen acknowledge.

Rom. 15. 17.
1 Cor. 6. 3.

1 Theſe two are the hands, neceſſary to the body, and neceſſary each to other. Firſt, they be (both) hands: and the hands (we know) are paires. Not Moſes the hand, and Aaron the foot; but either, and each the hand. And as they be a paire of hands, ſo be they alſo a paire of brethren. Not Moſes de primis, and Aaron de noviſſimis populi; Not Moſes the head, and Aaron the taile: Not Moſes a Quis (as S. Hierome ſpeaketh, out of the the twenty two of Eſay) and Aaron a quaſi quis; but, both of one parentage, both one mans children.

Eſay 22.

2 Secondly, being (both) hands, neither of them is ſuperfluous; no more to be be ſpared, then may the hands : but both are abſolutely neceſſary ; and a maymed and lame eſtate it is, where either is wanting. The Eſtate of Iſrael (in the ſeventeenth of the Iudges) without a Civill Governour prooved a very maſſe of confuſion. The very ſame Eſtate (in the ſecond of Chron. Chapter XV.) Sine ſacerdote docente, no leſſe out of frame. Miſerable firſt, if they lack Ioſua, and bee as ſheepe wanting that Shepheard. And miſerable againe, if they lacke JESUS, and be as ſheepe wanting that Shepheard. Moſes is needfull, in the want of water, to ſtrike the rocke for us, and to procure us ſupply of bodily reliefe. Aaron is no leſſe: For hee in like manner reacheth to every one food of another kinde (which we may worſe be without) even the bread of life, and water out of the ſpirituall Rocke, which is CHRIST JESUS. Moſes we need, to ſee our forces led againſt Amaleck, for ſafeguard of that little we hold here in this life : and Aaron no leſſe, to preſerve our free-hold in everlaſting life : for the great and mighty Κοσμοκράτορες, the legions of our ſinnes, the very forces of the Prince of darkneſſe are overthrown by the ſpirituall weapons of Aarons warfare. Moſes may not be ſpared from ſitting and deciding the cauſes which are brought before him. No more may Aaron, whoſe Vrim giveth anſwer in doubts no leſſe important ; and who not only with his Vrim and Thummim, giveth counſell, but by his incenſe and ſacrifice obtaineth good ſucceſſe for all our counſells. In a word : If Moſes rod be requiſite to ſting and devoure the wicked ; Aarons is alſo, to receive the good, and to make them to fructifie. If Moſes hand want, with the ſword to make us a way : Aarons hand wants too, with a key to give us an entrance. And thus much will I ſay for Aaron (for the Divell hath now left to diſpute about Moſes body, and bendeth all againſt him) that, the very firſt note of difference in all the Bible, to know GODS people by, is, that as Cain and his race begun at the City wals firſt, and let Religion (as it might) come after, any it skilled not what : So the poſterity of Seth (the people of GOD) begun at the Church (Et cœptum eſt invocari) at the worſhip of GOD and His Tabernacle ; as the point of principall neceſſity in their accompt, and (as CHRIST reckoned it) Vnum neceſſarium. And truly, if we be not Populus, a people, but Populus Tuus, GODS people, we will ſo eſteeme it too. For, as for juſtice and law and execution of them both, Taliter fecit omni populo, it is every where to be had, even among the very Heathen and Turks themſelves. So is not GOD'S truth and Religion and the way of righteouſneſſe. No : Notus in Iudæâ Deus (ſaith the Prophet in the laſt Pſalme) that is only to be had in the Church, and Non taliter fecit omni populo, he hath not dealt ſo with every people. Every people have not knowledge of His Lawes. So that, if the Governour be not meerly Paſtor agreſtis, a rurall ſhepheard, ſuch as are in the fields, and the people of GOD, in his eyes, no better than Pecora campi ; ſo that, if he keep them one from goring another with their hornes, and one from eating up the others locke of hey, all is well and no more to be cared for of Gallio : but, that he be like the great Shepheard, the good Shepheard, the Prince of Shepheards, who was Paſtor animarum (as Saint Peter calleth him) a Shepheard of ſoules ; to ſee alſo that they be in good plight, that they be led in the way of truth. It will eaſily be yeelded to, that per manum Moſis, is no full point, but needeth [and Aaron] to be joyned to it. Moſes himſelf ſaw this, and therefore (in the fourth of Exodus) when he had divers times ſhifted off this ſole leading ; while God ſtood ſtill upon Ecce mittam te ; At laſt, when God came further and ſaid, Ecce Aaron frater tuus, mittam eum tecum, that contented him, and then he undertook it ; as knowing, theſe were like hands, maimed, the one without the other ; but that, Moſes and Aaron make a compleat Government.

3 And what ſhould I ſay more? They be hands and the body needeth them both: They be hands and they need each other. Moſes needeth Aaron : For, Moſes hands are heavie and need a ſtay : and Aaron it is, that keepeth them ſteddy, by continuall putting the people in remembrance, that they be ſubject to principalities ; by winning that at their hands by his continuall dropping his word upon them, which Moſes, for the hardneſſe of their hearts, is faine to yeeld to. By ſtrengthening mainely Mo- ſes Debita legalia, duties of Parliament and common Law, by his Debita moralia, duties of conſcience and Divinitie. And whatſoever action Moſes doth impriſon, Aaron impriſoneth all the thoughts any ways acceſſary to the action. Which thoughts if they may run at libertie, the action will ſurely be bailed, or make an eſcape, and not be long kept in durance. And ſo many waies doth Aaron ſupport and make both more eaſie, and more ſteadie, the hands of Moſes.

And Moſes (for his part) is not behind, but a moſt jealous preſerver of Aaron's honour and right every where. Every where mild, ſave in Aarons quarrell, and with thoſe only, that murmured againſt Aaron, and ſaid he tooke too much upon him. Take but his prayer for all (becauſe I would end;) his prayer made for Aaron by Deut. 33. 11. name (in the 33. Deut.) and theſe three points in it: Bleſſe, O Lord, his ſubſtance: therefore he would never have heard, Vt quid perditio hæc? that all is loſt that is ſpent on Aaron's head. Then, Accept the worke of his hands: therefore he would never eaſily
1 Sam. 22. 17. have excepted to, or with a hard conſtruction skanned all the doings of Aaron. Laſt of all, Smite through the loynes of them that riſe up againſt him: therefore he would never have ſtrengthened the hand of his evill willers, or ſaid (with Saul to Doeg) Turn thou and fall upon the Prieſts.

2 Tim. 3. 8. To conclude, Moſes and Aaron (both) have enemies: as Aaron hath Coreh and Dathan, that repine at him; ſo hath Moſes (too) Iannes and Iambres, that would withſtand him. And he that at one time diſputes about the bodie of Aaron, may alſo here-
Iude 9. after (for he hath done it heretofore) diſpute about the body of Moſes. It is good therefore they be reſpective each to other: Aaron help Moſes in his lot; and Moſes Aaron in his; that they ſtand in the gap one for another; that ſo, their unitie may be hand in hand, as the unitie of brethren, ſtrong and hard to break, as the barres of a palace.

The Lord, by whoſe Almighty power all governments do ſtand, thoſe eſpecially wherein the people are led in the way of his Sanctuary; as he hath graciouſly begun to lead us in that way, ſo leave us not, till we have finiſhed our courſe with joy. Knit the hearts of Moſes and Aaron, that they may joyne lovingly: Teach their hands, and fingers of their hands, that they lead skilfully: Touch the hearts of the people, that they may be led willingly: that by meanes of this happy conduct, ſurely without error, and ſafely without danger we may lead and be led forward, till we come to the fruition of his promiſe, the expectation of our bleſſed hope even the eternall joyes of his celeſtiall Kingdome, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. To Whom, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED
BEFORE QVEENE ELIZABETH,
At Saint IAMES'S, on Wedneſday, being the XXX. of March, A.D. MDXCIII.

MARKE Chap. XIV. Verſ. IV, V, VI.

Erant autem quidam indigne ferentes intra ſemet-ipſos, & dicentes, Ut quid perditio iſta unguenti facta eſt? &c.

Therefore ſome diſdeigned among themſelves, and ſaid: To what end is this waſte of ointment?
For, it might have beene ſold for more than three hundred pence, and been given to the poore: And they grudged againſt her.
But Jeſus ſaid: Let her alone; why trouble ye her? She hath wrought a good work on Me.

THis action of waſte, (which by ſome is brought, and, by CHRIST our SAVIOUR, traverſed) was againſt a woman (ſaith Saint MARKE, the verſe before:) which woman (as S. JOHN hath it, Chap. XI. Verſ. 2.) was MARY MAGDALEN; now a glorious Saint in heaven, ſometime, a grievous ſinner upon earth.

Saint Auguſtine noteth; Of all thoſe that ſought to Chriſt, She was the only ſinner, that for ſin only, and for no bodily grief or malady at all, ſued and ſought to Him. Of whom being received to grace, and obtaining a quietus eſt for her many ſins (a benefit inestimable, Et quod nemo ſcit, niſi acceperit, which they only know, and none but they, that have received it) as,

as, much was forgiven her, ſo, much ſhe loved. And ſeeking by all meanes to expreſſe her multam dilectionem propter multam remiſsionem (as CHRIST ſaith, Verſe 8.) ὁ ἔχει ἐπάνω; nothing ſhe had, was too deare. And having a precious confection or ointment, of Nardus, the chiefe of all ointments; and, in it of νάρδου, the chiefe of all Nardi; and in it too, not of the leafe, but (of the very choice part thereof, of) the Spike, or flower; both, for the making, true; and for the value, coſtly; that did ſhe beſtow. And that frankly: For ſhe did not drop, but powre; not a dramm or two, but, a whole pound; not reſerving any, but breaking box and all: And that, not now alone, but three ſeverall times one after another.

Luk. 7. 47.

This ſhe did: and (as it may ſeem) the coherence fell out not amiſſe. This outward ointment and ſweet odour, ſhe beſtowed on Chriſt, for the oile of gladneſſe; for the ſpirituall annointing (as S. Iohn;) and the comfortable ſavour of his knowledge (as S. Paul cals it) He beſtowed on her.

Pſal. 45. 7. 1 Ioh. 2. 20. 2 Cor. 2. 25.

This as it was well done, ſo, was it well taken of CHRIST; and ſo ſhould have beene, of all preſent, but for Iudas (ſaith Saint Iohn.) Who, liking better odorem lucri ex re qualibet, than any ſent in the Apothecaries ſhop, ſeeing that ſpent on CHRISTS head, that hee wiſhed ſhould have come into his purſe; repined at it. But that, ſo cunningly, in ſo good words, with ſo colourable a motion (1. That it was a needleſſe expenſe, indeed a waſte: 2. That it might have been beſtowed much better to the reliefe of many poore people:) as that he drew the Diſciples (ſome of them) to favour the motion, and to diſlike of Mary Magdalen and her doing. So that, both they and he joyned in one Bill: but he, of a wretched covetous mind; they; of a ſimple plain intent and purpoſe, thinking, all that was well ſpoken, had been well meant.

Which action of theirs, for that it was brought, Not only againſt her that beſtowed it; but even, againſt CHRIST alſo that admitted it, though not ſo directly; (as it were, againſt her, with Vt quid perditio? againſt Him, with Vt quid permiſsio?) for that alſo, it might be a dangerous preſident in ages to come, if nothing were ſaid to it; and ſhut all boxes and bar all ointments for ever: Our SAVIOUR Himſelfe taketh on him, to plead her cauſe. Not only excuſing it (in Sinite illam) as no waſte; but alſo commending it (in bonum opus) as a good worke: That the ointment was not ſo pleaſant to His ſenſe, as her thankfulneſſe acceptable to His Spirit: That the ointment, which then filled the houſe with the ſent, ſhould fill the whole world with the report of it; and as farre and wide as the Goſpell was preached, ſo farre and wide ſhould this act be remembred, as well for her commendation that did it, as for our imitation that ſhould heare of it.

We ſee, both the occaſion, and ſumme of theſe words read. Which may aptly be ſaid, to containe in them a diſputation or Plea, about Mary Magdalen's act, whether it were well done, or no. Whereof there are two principall parts: Iudas, with ſome other ad oppoſitum againſt it; to have Mary Magdalen reformed, and her box converted to better uſes: CHRIST for it, and againſt them: Sinite, that He would have it ſtand; yea, that He would have it acknowledged for that, it was, Bonum opus.

The Diviſion

I. In the intreating whereof, theſe three points I purpoſe: 1. Firſt of Iudas his Motion: and in it [1] The ſpeech it ſelfe, Vt quid perditio, &c? [2] The Speaker, Some of them: [3] The Mind, or affection; though much.

II. 2 Secondly, of Chriſt's Apologie: and in it [1] That it is ſufferable: [2] That it is commendable: [3] The reaſon of both, In Me; for that on him.

III. 3 Laſt of all, laying both together: (The former, That it is a good worke; The latter, That yet grudged at:) that good actions oftimes meet with evill conſtructions; therefore, [1] though we doe well, yet we ſhall be evill ſpoken of: and again, [2] though we be evill ſpoken of, yet we muſt proceed to do well. The uſe, we ſhall make, is (briefly) Ex factis facienda diſcere, by report of that which hath beene done heretofore, to learne, what to do in like caſe, hereafter. whereof, that I may ſo ſpeak, &c.

Of

OF the tongue, the Pſalmiſt ſaith, it is the beſt member we have, (Pſal. 108.1.) and S. Iames (*Chap.*3.6.) it is the worſt, and that it marreth all the reſt. The nature of the tongue (thus being both good and bad) maketh, that our ſpeech is of the ſame complection, Good and bad likewiſe. Whereof this ſpeech, (here) is a pregnant example. Good in ſubſtance, as I ſhall ſhew preſently: Evill, in circumſtance (as we ſhall afterward ſee) as neither well meant, nor well applyed. I Iudas motion.

1 The ſpeech.
Vt quid perditio

In the ſpeech, I commend two good things: 1 The Abuſe noted, Vt quid, &c. 2 The Vſe ſet down, Potuit, &c. Not only the Defect; Not thus waſted: but, the Proviſion how; Turned into money, and diſtributed to the poore.

We begin with the firſt: Vt quid perditio, &c? Surely a good ſpeech, and of good uſe, and to be retained. Religion and Reaſon (both) teach us, In all things, to regard both Quid, and Vt Quid: No leſſe to what end, we do, than what we do: And both of them cenſure, Not only what is done to an evill end, wickedly; but, what is done to no end, vainly. Quem fructum, What fruit (ſaith S. Paul) A good queſtion: and, if it have none, Vt quid terram occupat, Why troubleth it the ground? (ſaith CHRIST.) So that Religion alloweth not waſte; cenſureth idleneſſe: and in all things calleth us to our Vt quid hæc? Rom.6.21. Luk 13.8.

And this, as in all things (in waſte of time waſte words, addle queſtions:) ſo yet chiefly, in that which we call Bonum utile. The very goodneſſe of which things is, in their uſe; and they, no longer good, than they have an uſe, which if they loſe, they ceaſe to be good. So that in them, not only thoſe things that are miſpent upon wicked uſes; but, even thoſe alſo that are idly ſpent to no uſe, they are loſt, laviſhed, and no good commeth of them. And therefore in them, Vt quid perditio, indeed? is well ſaid. This they learned of Chriſt himſelf: who in the gathering of the broken meat, gave charg ut ne quid perdatur, that no waſte ſhould be made. Indeed, Vt quid perditio ulla? whereto, either this or any waſte at all? So that, Religion is an enemy to riot; and good huſbandry is good Divinitie. Ioh.6.12.

It is GODS will, that, of our goods Iuſtitia condus ſit, Iuſtice ſhould be Purveyor; and they rightly gotten: Temperantia promus; Temperance the Steward; and they not waſtfully ſpent. Conſequently, Neither waſte, in buying: but (as Chriſt) ὧν χρείαν ἔχομεν (Not ὧν χῆτε, but ὧν χρείαν; Not, whereof we may have uſe, but, whereof we have need, and cannot be without it.) 1 Ioh.13.29.

Neither waſte in ſpending: Οἰκονομία, a diſpenſation, not a diſſipation; a laying forth, not διασκορπισμὸς, a caſting away; a wary ſowing, not a heedleſſe ſcattering; and a ſowing χείρει, ὐ δρακτῇ, by handfuls, not by basketfuls (as the Heathen man well ſaid.) 2

Neither waſte in giving; Not, making χάριτας, πόρνας, the Graces (which be Virgins) not proſtituting them and making them common; but (as the Apoſtles rule is) καθότι τις χρείαν εἶχε, as need ſhall require. So that, to all, to needleſſe laying out, to ſuperfluous expence, to unneceſſarie largeſſe, Vt quid perditio? may be ſaid. The reaſon whereof is well ſet downe: That, if we waſte it in needleſſe expences, we ſhall not have enough for neceſſary charges: if we laviſh out in waſting, we ſhall leave but little for well doing. Whereof, our times doe yeeld plenteous teſtimonie; In which, Nabals waſte; which being a ſubject, makes a feaſt like a King; the Aſſyrians waſte, every meane perſon, in apparell like a young Prince; Eſaus waſte, in carrying a retinue of foure hundred at his heeles; Shallums waſte, in incloſing our ſelves in cedar, and lifting up our gate on high: (Once for all, I proteſt, and deſire it may be graciouſly received, I doe not, ſo much as in thought, once ayme at the eſtate of the Higheſt, whoſe glory I wiſh to match, yea, to ſurpaſſe Salomon in all his royaltie: but) This riotous miſ-ſpending, where no need is, hath eaten up our Chriſtian Act.2.45. 1 Sam.25.36. Gen 34.1. Ier.22.15.

Christian bestowing, where need is. Lesse waste we must have, if we will have more good works. It is truly called perditio: It is the losse and destruction of all our good deeds; and I pray GOD, it be not also, of our reward for them.

Vt quid perditio, is a fault: But, ut quid perditio hæc, is a greater. For [hæc] wanteth not his emphasis; but is, as if he should say: If the summe had beene little, or the value small, it might have beene borne: if twenty or thirty pence, it might have beene winked at: But, if it come once into the hundreds; so great a summe, so much; verily, it may not, it ought not to be suffered.

Thus much for Perditio, the idle waste, the abuse. Now followeth Iudas plot, the use he wisheth it put too. For first, he maketh a perfect valuation and estimate of what it would rise to; (and it may seeme strange how he should be so skilfull an Auditor of the price of rich ointments; But, he hit it well; for, so (saith Plinie) the best Nardus was so worth:) And that is a materiall point. For, the greater the summe, the more colour of complaint; Vt quid perditio ulla; but specially, Vt quid perditio hæc unguenti, of so rich an ointment? Then, from his audit, he commeth to his Motion, Potuit vendi, &c. Sale to be made, the monie to be divided, and the poore to be relieved. This is his Supplication: and, this second is better than the former. Indeed, ut quid perditio; may be the speech of a Niggard: But this second that followeth, cannot but proceed from a liberall mind, Potuit vendi, &c. In that he speaketh not to have it spared; but to have it converted to better uses. And, this is a blessed conjunction, when honest sparing, and charitable relieving; when frugality and liberality go together. Such is this Motion: whereto no man can take exception. Naturally, our bowels yern, and we have an inward compassion, at the misery of our brethren: and, Gods Law willeth not to hide our selves from our own flesh, but, when we have served our need, to give to the poore.

The motion then, is both frugall and charitable: and besides, if we looke more narrowly into it, there appeareth great zeale in it. All waste things, he wisheth, the poore had. Yea, it seemeth, he reckoneth it waste, that the poore is not the better for: that, to be mispent, that might be better spent, and is not. And very exactly driveth to this point: That our goods may go, not, to some end; nor to some good end; but, to the very best end of all, The reliefe of the poore. Sure, when I consider the sobriety, bounty, zeale of the speech, I think, many wise heads could not in so few words, have contrived a better or more pithy motion: That that which is otherwise lavished upon one, may be imployed to the benefit of many: that these so many hundreds may be bestowed rather in nourishment, than in ointment; rather on necessary reliefe, than upon needlesse delight: rather on a continuall good, than on a transitory smell: rather, that many hungry bellies filled, than that one head annointed. Sure, howsoever it was meant, or applyed, the speech (in it selfe considered) is to very good purpose: even IUDAS speech, without IUDAS application.

2 The Persons that speak. Some of them.

We be now to enquire, of the person, by whom; and after, of the intent, wherewith it was spoken.

We are naturally carried, of a good speech to enquire the author: partly, in an honest inclination (as Salomon saith) to kisse the lippes of him that answereth upright words: Partly, because it is a matter of importance, not onely to weigh quid dicatur, but also quis dicat. Τέτῳ ἐδοκεῖ ὁ πείθων τῷ λέγοντι, ὁ λόγῳ: Many times, we be more perswaded with the minde of the speaker, than with the body of the speech; and their Positions move not so much, as do their Dispositions. It is very materiall, in all (and so, in this) to aske, quis hic loquitur? For, who can choose, but speake all good of the speech? Surely, if we had not been told otherwise, Zelotæ vocem, we must needs have thought it, to have beene Simon Zelotes. Zelotæ vocem putas, Iscariotæ est: One would imagine, it was Simon the Zealous: It is not so, it was Iudas the covetous. Some of them (saith Saint Marke:) of his Disciples (saith Saint Matthew:) and namely namely Iudas (ſaith Saint Iohn) who firſt ſtood up, and tooke this exception; and, after him, ſome others, So that, it was Iudas; and, by his perſwaſion, Some beſides: For, if he had not ſtirred, they would have taken it well enough: Such is the danger of ſiniſter ſpeaches. Let us begin with Iudas. Iohn 12. 4.

Pro. 24. 26.

Mat. 26. 8.

And here firſt, we begin ſomewhat to ſuſpect: that it commeth from Iudas. Iudas, it is well knowne what he was. At that very inſtant, that this Vt quid was in his mouth, his fingers were in CHRISTS coffers, and one might have ſaid it to him, Vt quid, &c. And, for all he ſpake againſt waſte, he waſted and made havocke of his Maſters goods: And a little after, he might have beene charged, with a worſe matter: And yet, he preferres motions. CHRIST telleth us, what he was (Iohn 17. 12.) Filius perditionis: and this terme marreth all; that the childe of perdition ſhould finde fault with perdition. The caſe is like, when they, that have waſted many pounds, complaine of that peny waſte which is done on CHRISTS body, the Church. Or, when they, that in their whole dealings (all the world ſees) are un-reformed, ſeriouſly conſult, how to reforme the Church. When they, that doe no good with their owne, deviſe what good may be done with Mary Magdalens: they, that have ſpent and ſold and conſumed themſelves, and never in their whole lives ſhewed any regard of the poore; when they talke of charitable uſes, O dolor! (ſaith Auguſtine) Quis tulerit? (ſaith the Poet.) Vt quid perditio? doth but evill fit theirs mouthes. GOD helpe us, when Iudas muſt reforme Mary Magdalen.

This, is a greife: would, this alone. But, a greater greife it is to ſee, how he is matched in this complaint: That, in this murmuring, ſome other; divers well diſpoſed and of the better ſort of CHRISTS Diſciples joyne with him, and take part againſt Mary Magdalen. Who, rather carried with the ſpeech, than heeding the Speaker, were drawen into the ſocietie of the ſame repining. And this (ſure) is Scandalum magnum, when evill counſell meeteth with eaſie beleefe, and ſubtiltie findeth credulitie. When the Phariſees can perſwade IOHNS Diſciples to muſter with them, and ſay, Why doe wee and IOHNS Diſciples faſt? whom you cannot but ſay, are good men, whatſoever you thinke of us. When Iudas can ſay: Why doe I, and CHRISTS owne Diſciples reprove this? So is it with us; Not, to ſee homines perditos queri de perditione, them ſpeake of waſte, that have waſted themſelves; (for, that might be digeſted:) but, to ſee grave and goodmen erre the ſame errour, and draw in the ſame line with them. But (no doubt) that which carried theſe here, leadeth them too, Pretences: that, which was able to deceive CHRISTS Diſciples, deceiveth them too. And, this is the difference: That the Diſciples, in a good meaning, went with him; becauſe they ſaw, hee ſaid well: But Iudas, upon a greedie covetous mind, to have his owne turne ſerved. For, cui bono? if it had come to the poore, who ſhould have had the diſtribution? It was his office: ſo that it may be, he ſpake for himſelfe. Which did plainly appeare by the iſſue. For, upon better information given by CHRIST, the Diſciples were anſwered, and remained content. But Iudas grew enraged, and fell from evill to worſe; from covetiſe, to malice; from ſacriledge, to treaſon: Even to this dangerous reſolution, Vendere nardum, or (if not) Vendere Chriſtum; and to ſubvert Him, that he might not ſpoile. For all the world, as ſome in our time, that ſought helpe of authoritie, while they had hope, that way to prevaile: but, when that came not; ſince, begin to hold, they will and may do it, without ſtay for authority; and ſeeke to ſubvert the State, they cannot forme to their phanſie. My hope is, and ſo is my prayer; That thoſe which have hitherto beene carried with their plots and pretences, now they be enformed and ſee what the truth is, may doe (as the Diſciples) leave Iudas in his murmuring, and let Marie Magdalen be quiet. Marke. 2. 18.

That which we learne of this part, is: 1. From Iudas; That a good ſpeech may droppe out of an evill mouth. As (ſure) ſetting aſide that the hands be Eſau's; the voice might become Iacob well enough. This inſtruction we have from Iudas: It was GODS will, that even hee ſhould preach, and we learne ſome good leſſons by him. And, this we may learne: That, No waſte is to be made: And if we learne it, even I Gen. 27. 22.

he ſhall co-operate to our good. And, as from him we have this ſpeech for our Oeconomie; ſo, from Caiphas (as bad as hee) wee have another full as good, for our Policie.
Ioh 11. 50. That ſpeech (which S. Bernard can never enough commend:) Melius eſt ut pereat unus quàm unitas. Both evill meant (I grant:) but, both well ſpoken, where their Mat 11.19. place is. So, it pleaſeth God, that we ſhould heare His wiſdome juſtified (not only out of the mouth of her owne children, but) even out of the mouthes of the children of folly. That he might condemne evill things, even by evill men: and evill men, Luke 19.22. non ex ore ſuo, not from His own, but from their owne mouths; and ſo their condemnation be juſt.

From the Diſciples too eaſie beliefe, we learne Credit omni verbo, not to truſt Prov.14.15. phraſes and oyled ſpeeches too faſt: Never, by the liſt, to conclude of the cloth. Seeing, not only Vaſa electionis, but filii perditionis, ſay well. But, if we heare much adoe about Vt quid perditio, to ſtay and thinke; May not this be Iudas that ſpeaketh now, as once it was? And if it bee, to ſuſpect, when he ſpeakes well. Of this aſſuring our ſelves (what S. Paul telleth us of ſadly;) that not only Mary Magdalen ſhall be reformed, and her ointment maligned, and the poore oppoſed, but Phil.1.18. even CHRIST Himſelfe preached, obtentu, under pretence. Therefore, it ſtandeth us in hand, to looke to the Diſpoſition, as well as the Poſition: and not to run head-long, to ſay ſtraight Vt quid, as faſt as they. So much for the Speaker.

3 The affection wherewith it was ſpoken. Indignè ferentes, & intraſe dicentes.

With the Perſon by whom, wee propound the affection, wherewith it is ſpoken. For, as the Perſon is a preſumption: So, if this can bee had, it maketh a full evidence. And that is in theſe words, ἀγανάκτησεν ἐν ἑαυτῷ, that hee thought much with himſelfe.

The ſpeech, for the poore (if it be kindly) doth naturally come from the compaſſion of charitie, and not from the grudging of a greedy deſire; as this is ſaid to do. And ſo ſhould we have conceived of this; that, from the care of the poore (no doubt:) but that, the Spirit of GOD maketh a window in his breſt, and lets us ſee the ſecrets of his heart; and telleth us, it was not the care of the poore; Non, quia pertinebat ad
Iohn 12.6. eum de pauperibus, but, quia fur erat, becauſe he bare the bagge, and tooke order, it ſhould never be over heavie, but that he might well beare it; and thought all too much that went beſide it.

Which, is a point of great uſe to be underſtood. It is one of the myſteries of iniquitie, that, ever there be two Quia's belonging to bad purpoſes (as S. Marke ſaith:) One, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, within, in heart: the other, λέγοντες, without, in ſpeech. Another quia, they thinke in their hearts; and another, they ſpeake in our eares, which is the non quia. [1] The one, a true cauſe inwardly intended: [2] The other, only a colour, outwardly pretended. As, in this: the true quia (ἐν ἑαυτοῖς) a wretched humour to provide for himſelfe: The pretenced quia; (λέγοντες) a charitable affection to provide for the poore. All
Iohn 12.19. ſins have ſo. Mundus ſequitur eum, the true cauſe (envie ἐν ἑαυτοῖς;) but, they told ano-Iohn 11.48. ther quia; (λέγοντες) Venient Romani, the ſafety of the State. Herod would learne where Mat.2.16,8. he might find CHRIST; the cauſe (indeed) to murther him; the cauſe (in ſhew) to worſhip him.

Intra ſe. It is no new thing but common and uſuall, in all exceptions to Religion, the true cauſe is ἀγανάκτησις, a thinking all too much; a thinking, all is perditio, all loſt that commeth not to us, that we gaine not by. We ſee, it was the true reaſon, the men of Sichem made among themſelves, why they would become of Iacobs Religi-
Gen.34.34. on, and be circumciſed: Nonne omnia quæ habent, noſtra erunt? Shall not all they have bee ours? It was the very reaſon, whereby Haman went about to perſwade Aha-
Eſter 3.9. ſuerus to ſuppreſſe the Iewes Religion: Let it be done, and I will weigh ſo many thouſands to the Kings coffers. And in the New Teſtament, it was the very reaſon, Act.19.25, Demetrius there uſeth: O, crie for Diana, Magnifie her, Quia inde nobis erit acquiſitio, we ſhall be all gainers by it. God knowes this is the true cauſe, and the Analogie of of Religion to many: It was ſo to Iudas: and, GOD grant, the like be not found in Iſrael.

Now though this be the true, yet this in no wiſe muſt come into λέγειν, and bee ſpoken. If Iudas had dealt plainly, he ſhould thus have framed his ſpeech: Vt quid perditio? potuit vendi & mitti in crumenam meam: but, that had beene too harſh; for, that had beene plaine ſacrilege: And, of Sacrilege, S. Paul ſeemes to ſay, Rom. 2.22. it is (if not worſe, yet) as bad as Idolatrie: Thou that pulleſt downe Idols, committeſt thou ſacrilege? As if he held, as good a falſe religion, as a ſpoiling religion. Therefore, that muſt be kept ἐν ἑαυτῷ and not come into λέγειν, but it muſt be ſhrowded; as indeed, the Heathen man ſaid, Μέγιστον δεῖπνῳ φροντίστης ἡ πομπεία, Bad attempts need only an handſome pretence: for, with the reſt they can diſpence: with GOD, and His Word, and feare, and conſcience and all: and, ſo a pretence had, it is all they deſire. Dicenter. Rom. 2.22.

Now, no pretence more fit (to make them perfect Maskers) than S. Pauls vizor μόρφωσις εὐσεβείας; and S, Peters cloke ἐπικάλυμμα; the vizor of godlineſſe, and the cloke of Religion. And, ſuch was Iudas here; a charitable, carefull proviſion for the reliefe of the poore. Whom though (the Holy Ghoſt ſaith expreſly) he cared not for one jot, yet maketh he them his ſtalking-horſe; and Pauperibus is the point: that, is it, he ſeeketh for, and (God knoweth) nothing elſe. 2 Tim 3.5. Ioh. 12.6.

This his ſacrilegious wicked humour he covereth under zeale of the poore: And ſo, to hide one fault, committeth two. Firſt, Sacrilege; then, hypocriſie.

And, it is no new thing under the Sun (as Salomon tels us) to gild a potſheard with gold-foile (that is) to over-lay a falſe heart, with zealous lips. Abſoloms vow was the maske for his conſpiracie againſt David. Iezabel's faſt, her vizor, for the oppreſſing of Naboth. And here, we have an invective againſt waſte, a ſupplication for the poore, in Iudas mouth, and yet ſeven abominations in his heart. Prov. 26.23. 2 Sam. 15.7. 1 King. 21.9. Prov. 26.25.

Is it not heavineſſe unto death, to conſider this? Well ſaid the Wiſeman: O wicked abomination, whence art thou come to cover the earth with deceit!

But more need had we to beware, than complaine. And indeed, all we learne from this point, is Noviſſe & Odiſſe, to know and avoid. To know, ſuch there be, as cover ſacrilege with zeale; and with good uſes, cover no good intents. To know them and to avoid them. And, the better to doe that, to marke the end of him, that here uſed it, and ſee, what became of him: How, from this ſin, by Gods juſt judgement, he fell to perditio; and from it (after) to make away himſelfe. To whom, in that caſe, truly might have beene ſaid, Vt quid perditio, indeed? But this was his end in this life, and in the other, he hath his portion with hypocrites, and they, with him, in the lake of fire and brimſtone. Mat. 24.51.

So much for the [1] Speech it ſelfe; [2] for the Speaker; and, in him, both his perſon, [3] and his intent.

Now, as Juſtice would, let us heare alteram partem. Theſe are ſhrewd preſumptions: yet let us not reſolve, but ſtay, till CHRIST have ſaid; And if he miſlike it too, Sell it and ſpare not. II CHRISTS Apologie.

But JESUS, &c. There was (ſaith Saint Gregory) no errour of the Diſciples, præſente Magiſtro, while CHRIST was preſent with them, but it was Salutaris error, quia totius Mundi ſuſtulit errorem, a wholeſome and profitable errour, for it rid the world of an errour for ever after. We may well applie it to this. We ſhould have been of Iudas mind; and, that that carried the Diſciples, have gone for currant, had not our Saviour CHRIST over-ruled the caſe, and ſtayed the ſale of Mary Magdalens ointment; and in ſtaying it, ſaid enough to ſtop their mouths for ever, that make the like motions.

Which to doe the more firmely, albeit CHRIST might well have excepted to Iudas perſon, as unfit: (what, the ſonne of perdition, talke of perdition?) Or laid open his intent, as wicked and execrable (Vt quid hoc ſacrilegium? Vt quid hæc hypocriſis?) ſis?) Yet, the more ſufficiently to doe it; Hee waves both, and joynes iſſue upon the very point it ſelfe; admitting, all had beene ſimply and honeſtly both ſaid and meant.

Wherein, He keepeth this order: Firſt, propoundeth, that, what was done, it was ſufferable, and ſhe not to be troubled for it: Sinite illam, &c. Secondly, it was a good worke: and therefore ſhe not only to be excuſed, but to be commended, for it. Thirdly, the reaſon and warrant of both, (In me) for that, it was done upon Him: On whom, nothing that is beſtowed can be ſaid to be loſt, but muſt and ought to be ſaid, to bee well beſtowed. So that, there is a full anſwer to every point of Iudas bill; Vt quid for Vt quid: Vt quid moleſtia hæc? for Vt quid perditio? Potuit vendi, is anſwered with Sinite, let alone: Perditio, with bonum opus: and pauperibus with In Me, who is of more value than many poore; after whom it may well become the poore to be ſerved.

1. It is ſufferable: Sinite illam.

To begin then, with the firſt. Sinite illam (ſaith CHRIST.) Not, as they hoped, ſiſtite illam, Stay her, indeed it is but a waſte worke ſhe is about: but Sinite illam, let her alone, the worke is good, ſuffer her to proceed. His meaning is: Such acts as this was, are to be let alone, and they, that ſo diſpoſed, not to bee troubled. Sure, He foreſaw, many would be medling; many Vt quid's would be framed, and many Potuit's deviſed, and much buſineſſe be made, about Mary Magdalens ointment, and about workes of that nature: That every other while, ſome Motions, Petitions, Plots would bee framed about the altering of it. To this day they will not let her alone, but diſquiet her ſtill. He hath therefore left in his Goſpell theſe words, as a fit anſwer, to ſtay their hands and ſtop their mouths, for ever: Sinite illam, let them bee; ſuffer them to remaine: Vt quid moleſtia hæc? a meet reply to Vt quid perditio hæc? to the worlds end.

And this requeſt (to my poore conceit) is very reaſonable: (If in this kind, any thing may be allowed for reaſonable. It is not, Imitamini illam; or, adjuvate illam: Doe ye the like, contribute to her charge; further and helpe her, what you may; (which yet, He would have us:) That, would Iudas never bee got to: If CHRIST had wiſhed him to like coſt, what adoe then would there have beene? But this: do but let her alone: If you will not further, yet hinder her not; trouble her not. That ſhe hath ſpent, of her abilitie ſhe hath done it: ſhe hath not had of you, one penny toward her three hundred; nor ſhe asketh you none. Seing you are at no coſt, why ſhould it grieve you? If you like not to follow her, yet let her alone.

And, may not the ſame in like reaſon be ſaid and entreated, at this day? That what our Fathers and Elders in the Chriſtian Faith bounteouſly imployed on CHRIST; what they (I ſay) have that way dedicate, if wee will not adde to it and imitate them, yet we will let it alone, and not trouble them; and at leaſt be not with Iudas, if we like not or liſt not to be with Mary Magdalen. (On Chriſt, it is, I dare boldly ſay; and if I ſay it, I ſhall have all the ancient Fathers on my ſide, and if I ſay it, S. Paul will warrant me; who in (1 Cor. 12. 12.) expreſly calleth the Church CHRISTS Bodie: And he might well doe it, the firſt ſpeech, CHRIST ever ſpake to him, Himſelfe calleth the Church, Me (the word he here uſeth.) On Chriſt, it is ſpent, any part of CHRIST, be His glory more then other; and, on that Office and calling of the Church, which S. Paul (who beſt knew the dignitie of it) calleth the glory of Chriſt. This (I ſay) under correction, is, as me thinketh, not unreaſonable; that ſeeing, what ſuperſtition hath defiled, is removed and gone; touching that which is remaining, it be ſaid, Sinite illam.

Acts 9. 4.

2 Cor. 8. 23.

2. It is Commendable. Bonum opus operata eſt.

From this firſt degree of Sinite, our Saviour Chriſt aſcendeth to a higher: and leſt we ſhould miſtake, as if He bare with her good mind and meaning, rather than allowed the work; he tels us, the very work it ſelf is good: and ſo pleades and juſtifies it, not as ſufferable only, but as commendable. For, that is the meaning of bonum opus operata eſt,

Wherein

Wherein, firſt, Hee anſwereth the principle reaſon, Perditio eſt. You may ſell, (ſaith Iudas) it is but waſte: You muſt let it alone, (ſaith CHRIST) it is bonum opus. So that, as His former (of Sinite) croſſed the Motion; So, this (of bonum opus) overthroweth the Reaſon, perditio.

In which our SAVIOUR CHRIST looſeth the knot, and teacheth us a point: to enquire firſt, Ecquid perditio, whether it bee a waſte? before wee come to Vt quid, to what end is it? If it bee Waſte, it is well and truly ſaid: but, this (Hee pleadeth) is not any: unleſſe (which GOD forbid) good workes be waſte, with us. And therefore joyneth iſſue upon the word hæc: that is, that is done upon Him, is no Waſte, at all, as Iudas termeth it; but (as he chriſteneth it by a new name) bonum opus. Therefore, his reproofe is nothing, tanquam cadens in materiam indebitam, as lighting upon an unmeet matter, which deſerveth no reproofe, but rather commendation.

Indeed if Iudas, ſometime before, had ſaid it to Mary Magdalen, in the dayes of her former vanitie, when ſhe waſted thus much and (peradventure) many a penny more on her ryot and wantonneſſe; then (indeed) Vt quid perditio hæc? had hit right. But, now it was not on her ſelfe, but on CHRIST's head, it is out of ſeaſon. As, if our age (now) would apply to Nabals riotous feaſts; to the Aſſyrians ſuperfluous ſuits; to Eſau's ſuperfluous retinue; to the endleſſe building, Ieremie findeth fault with; to our manifold idle exceſſes, many wayes; to every and each of theſe, an Vt quid perditio? there now, it were right: there indeed were the true place of Vt quid perditio? But, this is (among many) a ſtrong illuſion of theſe dayes: that, whereas there are abroad in the world, ſo many true waſtes; ſo much, in ointments, and perfumes, upon our ſelves; ſo many hundred denarii (indeed, noe man can tell, what) daily laviſhed; we can neither ſee (our ſelves) nor patiently heare of others, ut quid perditiones hæ? Here, all is well, all is well beſtowed. Neither Vt quid, nor potuit dari pauperibus; the poore, never comes in our head. No where, but in CHRIST ought is amiſſe. Only, in that that is meant to Him, and ſpent on him, there comes out our Vt quid, there comes the poore into our minde. No way, to provide for them, but by ſale of Chriſts ointment. That, is the Waſte: and, none but that: and, none but that is maligned. Wee are perfect auditors, wee can exactly reckon, how many hundreds CHRIST Waſteth: but who keepeth any account of his owne? To our ſelves too much is too little: To Him, too little is too much. And three hundred pence, that way beſtowed, is a greater eye-ſore than three hundred pounds (I dare be bold to ſay) to not ſo good uſes.

Thus it is: and, it is to be lamented, that thus it is. But CHRIST teacheth us better, if wee will learne of Him, and let Iudas goe, that wee may better beſtow our Vt quid any where, than upon him. And we ſhall finde it true: The day will come, when that only, that goeth to him, ſhall be found to be no perditio; and all elſe perditio indeed, whatſoever, or upon whatſoever. To be loſt indeed, and no fruit to come of it. That, which is ſowen in the fleſh, to be loſt in corruption; that, which on the belly, εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν; that, which on the backe, in ragges; that, which on building, in rubbiſh; that, which to our heires, in prodigality, ryot and exceſſe: And that, which is In Me, ſhall prove no perditio, waſte, loſſe, or laviſh, but bonum opus, a good deed; to be rewarded with a bleſſed remembrance on earth, and with a Crowne of glory, in the Kingdome everlaſting. Gal. 6. 8.

Thus (you ſee) Iudas is anſwered, and the worke quit from the name of perditio. So far from Perditio, that it is Bonum opus. A good work, indeed; as, proceeding from a good mind, poſſeſſed with the vertue of vertues, thankfulneſſe. For, mercy beſtowed on Him, who only is good, and goodneſſe it ſelfe, who here alloweth it for good; cauſeth it to be regiſtred in His Goſpels, for good; in the day of Iudgement, ſhall pronounce it, good: Rewardeth it for good, in this world, with a good name; in that to come, with all the good of his Kingdome, where no good is wanting.

The third remaineth [Vpon me] wherein (properly) is meant His naturall body of fleſh, which ſhould not alway be with us. But they, of whom we have learned to interpret the Scripture (in a manner, all) extend it to his Myſticall body too: and (as they thinke) by good conſequence. That ſeeing Hee gave His naturall body to bee bought and ſold, rent and torne, crucified and ſlaine for his body myſticall; His body myſticall is (certainly) dearer to him, and better He loveth it: And then, if he will accept that, is done to the leſſe, and make it Bonum opus; He will much more, that, which is done to the more beloved; and it ſhall never goe for leſſe: Never did I am ſure. The Scriptures record (as a good worke) that that was laid downe at the Apoſtles feet, no leſſe than this that was laid upon CHRISTS owne head: And, in them, Ananias a Church-robber, and Iudas a CHRIST-robber, both, in one caſe. Satan is ſaid to have filled both their hearts in that act: And like evill end came to both: And both are good remembrances for them, that ſeeke and ſay, as they did. Yea, which would not be content to detaine a part (Ananias and Iudas went no farther:) but would ſeaze of all gladly, if a Gracious Lady did not ſay, Sinite.

3 The reaſon: In Me.

Act. 5.

Luk. 22 3. Act. 5 3.

To conclude: It is St. Auguſtine (and, ſo ſay all the reſt:) Tu intellige & de Eccleſiâ, Quia qui aliquid de Eccleſiâ prædatur Iudæ perdito comparatur: Vnderſtand this of the Church, and ſpare not: For he that taketh any thing (I ſay, any thing) from it, is in Iudas caſe: For the ſin, certainely; for the puniſhment, as it pleaſeth God.

Now, we know what is meant by In Me: it is no waſte Word. We will conſider it (firſt) as a reaſon of the two former: and then, as a ſpeciall anſwer to that, of the poore.

It anſwereth Vt quid: To what end? Why, In Me, to me, and for my ſake.

It anſwereth Perditio: In Me, why it is ſpent on CHRIST, on Me; on whom nothing that is ſpent, is miſ-pent.

It yeeldeth a reaſon of Sinite: ſpare her; if not her, yet ſpare Me, trouble Me not. Yee cannot ſcrape off the oyntment, but with My trouble.

And a reaſon of Bonum opus eſt: For, His [In Me] is warrant ſufficient, why the worke is to be reckoned good. Yea, in ſaying, it is not only good done, but done to Him, He giveth it a dignitie, and lifteth up this worke above.

But eſpecially, it anſwereth the weight of Iudas reaſon (Pauperibus, the Poore.) Our Saviour CHRIST plainely ſheweth, that Iudas is miſtaken, and draweth a diameter, and maketh oppoſition betweene devotion toward CHRIST, and Almes to the poore. Tabitha was good to the poore: Mary Magdalen, to CHRIST. Muſt we put Mary Magdalen to death, to raiſe Tabitha againe? and is there no other way? Yes indeed: Sinite illam (ſaith CHRIST, in this verſe) let this ſtand: and yet, doe thoſe good too, Date eleemoſynam (in the next.) There be other meanes to provide for the poore, than by ſale of Chriſts oyniment: And we are not, in pretence of them, to omit this or any office or duty unto Chriſt.

Verſe 7.

Pauperibus, is not the only good worke: this, is alſo. And, of the two, if any to be preferred, it is In Me: He (certainely) to be ſerved firſt. To which work, not only thoſe of wealth (Mary Magdalen with her three hundred pence;) but, even poore and all (the poore Widow with her mites) is bound, as we ſee: Even, to adde ſomething even to the offerings of GOD: And, if not, with Nardus, yet with oyle to anoint his head, as Himſelfe requireth. This, I ſay: if both could not ſtand. But, thankes be to God, there be wayes, they may both ſtand; and not one fall, that the other may riſe. Malachi telleth us a way; and it is a ſpeciall one: to doe as this vertuous woman here, Inferte in Apothecas meas, bring into mine (that is, My Churches) treaſures, and I will breake the windowes of heaven and ſend you ſuch plentie, as you and the poore (both) ſhall eat and have enough, and yet leave in abundance. So that (we ſee) the next and kindlieſt way, to have Iudas complaint redreſſed, is, to ſpeake and labour, that Mary Magdalens example may be followed.

Marke 12.42.

Mal. 3.10.

Secondly, by In Me, it plainely appeareth, how CHRIST ſtandeth affected to workes of this kinde. For, permitting them; ſtanding for them; defending and commending mending them, He ſheweth plainly, He will be content with ſuch as it is. For albeit He were the very pattern of true frugality, and an enemy to all exceſſe, yet this ſervice (chargeable as it was) He well alloweth of. Shewing us this: that as Hee is Chriſtus Patris, anointed by GOD His Father (quem unxit Dominus, Act. 10.) ſo alſo He will bee Chriſtus noſter (and that, paſſively) anoynted by us (Quem unxit Maria, Iohn 11.) That, as here He commendeth Mary Magdalen, for the ſupply of it: So (in Luke 7.) He giveth Simon an Item (oleo caput meum non unxiſti) for being defective in this dutie. Act. 10 37. Iohn. 11. 2. Luk. 7. 46.

I would gladly aske this queſtion: If the ointment may be ſold (as Iudas ſaith) and bought lawfully; and they that buy, may lawfully uſe; if they may uſe it, why may not CHRIST? Num ſolis ſtultis apes mellificant, doe Bees make honey, and Nardus beare ointment for wicked men onely? May any that payes for it, and may not Chriſt? Is He onely, of all other, uncapable or unworthy?

If it be, becauſe it is more than needs: Let that be a reaſon of all. Let the law hold us, as well as Him. But, if no man, but allowes himſelfe a more liberall diet and proportion of port, than in ſtrict tearmes is needfull, for all the poore; why ſhould we binde CHRIST alone to that rule? Except we meane to goe further with Him; and not only except to Maries ointment, but even to Simons feaſt alſo: Vt quid unguentum hoc? then Vt quid convivium hoc, too? ſeeing, a ſmaller repaſt might ſerve, and the reſt be given to the poore. So that, His allowance ſhall be juſt as much, and no more than will ſerve to hold life and ſoule together. But, as He, without any barre to Vt quid, alloweth us, not only indumenta for nakedneſſe, but ornamenta for comelineſſe; not only alimenta for emptineſſe, but oblectamenta for daintineſſe: So, good reaſon it is, we thinke not much of his Nardus, and tye Him only to thoſe rules, from which our ſelves plead exemption.

I demand againe, if ointment might be ſpent on Aarons head, under the Law; ſeeing a greater than Aaron is here, why not on His too? I finde, that neither under the Law, He liked of their motion, what ſhould the Temple doe with Cedar? neither, under the Goſpell, of theirs, what ſhould CHRISTS head doe, with Nardus? But that, to his praiſe he is recorded in the Old Teſtament, that ſaid; Shall I dwell in my ſeeled houſe, and the Arke of GOD remaine under Goats-skinnes? And ſhe, in the New, that thought not her beſt ointment too good for CHRISTS head. Surely, they, in Ægypt, had there ſervice of GOD, it may be in a barne, or in ſome corner of an houſe. Yet when Moſes moved a coſtly Tabernacle, no man was found that once ſaid, Our Fathers ſerved GOD well enough, without one, Vt quid perditio hæc? After that, many Iudges, and Prophets, and righteous men were well, when they might worſhip before the Arke: yet, when Salomon moved a ſtately Temple, never any was found that would grudge and ſay, Why the Arke is enough; I pray GOD, wee ſerve GOD no worſe than they, that knew nothing but a Tent; Vt quid perditio hæc? Only, in the dayes of the Goſpell (which, of all other, leaſt ſhould) there ſteps up Iudas, and dareth to ſay that againſt CHRISTS Church, that no man durſt ever, either againſt Moſes Tent, or Salomons Temple. 1 Chron. 17. 1.

And, if CHRIST had taken it well, or paſſed it in ſilence, or ſaid Sinite illam, ſuffer Iudas motion to take place; we might have had ſome ſhew. But ſeeing He ſaith Moleſtus eſt, to Iudas; Sinite illam, ſuffer Marie to goe forward, and not that onely but, Bonum opus, too: why ſhould any, after Iudas, be thought worth the anſwering?

Surely, as the Goſpell (in this duty) hath, and ſo ought to exceed the Law; So, in the Goſpell, wee here and our Countrey above all other. I will but ſay with Chryſoſtome, Appende Chriſtum ô homo: doe but conſtrue theſe two words [In Me] aright: Poize and prize Who it is; Et ſufficit. It is CHRIST IESUS: Who hath not ſpared to anoint us with his owne bloud; and our ſoules, with all the comforts and graces of His Holy Spirit. If, toward us, neither bloud nor life were too deare, on His part, ſhall, on ours, any Nardus be too deare, or any coſt too much, that is on Him beſtowed?

Perhaps, our particular will more move us. It is CHRIST, that created for us Nard and all other delights whatſoever, either for uſe and neceſſitie, wee have; or, for fruition and pleaſure, wee enjoy. It is Hee, that hath enriched us, that wee bee able to beſtow it, by this long proſperitie, plentie and peace, as no other Kingdome under Heaven: Is there any good minde can thinke, that this is an indignitie? that He is not worthy, hath not deſerved, and double deſerved this, and ten times more at our hands?

An extraordinary conceit is entred into the world (by a new found gloſſe) to make whatſoever we like not, or liſt not to doe our ſelves, extraordinary: and ſo ſome deeme of this, as extraordinary, and whereof no example is to be made. (No ancient Writer is of that mind; but that, for us it was written; and that, Vade tu & fac ſimiliter, may be written upon her box) But, be it ſo. Why may not I wiſh on our parts, Let us be extraordinrry? For, GOD hath not dealt ordinarily with us of this Land: He hath not beene to us, a Wilderneſſe or a barren Land: but hath (even our enemies being Iudges) beene extraordinary in his goodneſſe toward us all. And ſure, in us, ordinary common thankfulneſſe is not enough. Shall I ſet my ſelfe to recount His benefits? An eaſie matter to finde entrance; but when then ſhould I make an end? In one, I will abridge them all. We ſpeake of ointment: Verily, Chriſt hath anointed over us, and given us a moſt Gracious Soveraigne, by whoſe happy and bleſſed reigne, we long have (and longer may we, He grant) enjoyed both the inward and outward anointing: the inward, the holy and heavenly comfort of GODS truth, and true oyle of gladneſſe; the outward, of earthly plentie and delight, which Nard or any rich confection may affoord; and (in a word) whatſoever happineſſe can fall to any Nation under heaven. From the holy oile of whoſe anointing (as the dew of Hermon on Sion, and as Aarons ointment upon the Skirts of his cloathing) there daily droppeth upon this whole Realme, pure Nard, or if any thing elſe be more precious, whether, in theſe earthly, or in thoſe heavenly bleſſings. I ſpeake no more then wee all feele. This, is that one, I ſpake of; and in this one, is all, Even the Lords anointed. Whom (I make no queſtion, but) the Lord hath, and will more and more bleſſe, for that Her Highneſſe hath ſaid, as Himſelfe ſaid, Sinite illam. And, bleſſed be God, that hath put into Her heart, ſo to ſay; to like well of Vt quid perditio; but, to have it ſo applyed. I doubt not, but this Heroicall vertue, among many others, ſhall make Her Scepter long to flouriſh; ſhall make her remembrance to be in bleſſing to all poſterity, and ſhall be (among other) Her rejoycing in the day of the Lord, and an everlaſting crowne of glory upon Her head.

Luk 11.37.

Pſal. 45 7.

Pſal. 133.2.

This is that ointment, I ſpake of; that it ſelfe alone may make us all confeſſe, we have received from CHRIST, extraordinary mercy, and are therefore to returne more than ordinary duty. Non taliter fecit omni; Nay, non taliter fecit ulli populo: He hath not dealt ſo with every; Nay, not ſo with any people, as with us: and therefore not any people, to deale ſo thankefully with Him againe.

Pſal. 147 20,

This, if it were extraordinary. Howbeit, if Antiquity may be admitted Iudge, this (as a good worke) is to be ordinary with us. Since every thing done in this kinde to CHRISTS Church, only upon a thankefull regard, is (with them) reckoned a dram of Mary Magdalens ointment.

At leaſt if we will not come ſo far as operata eſt, we doe yet thus far favour it, as to yeeld to Sinite illam: Seeing, Mary Magdalen that gave it, paid for it; and it never came out of our purſe.

And now, this queſtion being thus dilated, it is every mans duty (ſaith Theophylact) to ſet downe, cujus partis ſit, whoſe part he will take, whoſe minde he will be of. Whether, with Iudas, Perditio eſt; or, with CHRIST, Bonum opus eſt: whether Potuit vendi; or, Sinite illam.

But (I truſt) wee will ſtand to CHRISTS Iudgement; and rather take part with Him, for Mary Magdalen, than with Iudas, againſt her: that we may be with Mary Magdalen, that are of her minde; which, at the houre of death, we all ſhall deſire,

The

The entrance I make. From this unhappie conjunction of Marie's worke and Iudas evill ſpeech, this firſt conſideration offereth it ſelf (nothing pleaſant, but wholeſome and requiſite to be called to minde, of all that meane to doe well.) That, things well done ſhall be evill taken: and often, good affections have no good conſtructions; and that received with the left hand, that is reached with the right.

III. The Doctrine. 1 That Good workes are maligned.

For this her act, that was well done, (if CHRIST knew, what it was to doe well) Yet, we ſee, it is diſdained, grudged at, and ſhe moleſted for it: (all three, are in my Text.) Whence we learne: Be a thing done to never ſo good purpoſe, yet ſome Iudas will mutter, and maligne, and come forth with his Vt quid? Some Iudas will caſt his dead flie into Mary Magdalen's box of ointment.

No one creature had ſo good experience of this, as this poore woman had. Three ſpeciall vertues of hers, the Goſpells record: and, in every one of the three, ſhe was repined at. 1. When, in the bitternеſſe of her ſoule, ſhe ſhewed her repentance with teares, Simon the Phariſee did what he could to diſgrace her, (Luke 7.) 2. When in a hungry deſire to receive comfort, by the word of grace ſhe ſhewed her devotion in ſitting at CHRISTS feet, Martha (her owne ſiſter) made complaint of her. 3. And now here againe, the third time: when, in an honeſt regard of her duty, ſhe ſheweth her thankfulneſſe for comfort received, Chriſts own Diſciples both grudge and ſpeake againſt her. So that, if ſhe waſheth His feet with teares, it contents not: if ſhe annoint His head with balme, it is matter of miſlike: if ſhe ſit ſtill, and ſay nothing; it is all one: Still, Mary is found fault with; ever her doings ſtand awry.

Luk. 7. 39.

Luk. 10. 40.

This is the lot and portion of all thoſe, that will follow their ſteps. Not only we of private eſtate, but even great Perſonages, As, Nehemias by Geſhem, to bring detriment to the ſtate, by favouring the Churches caſe. Even Princes: David by Shemei, to be a bloody Perſecutor, when (if in any thing he offended) it was, in too much lenitie. Even CHRIST Himſelfe the SON of GOD; who neither could have His feet, but Simon the Phariſee; nor His head annointed, but Iudas (His Apoſtle) maligne and ſpeak againſt it.

Neh. 6. 6.

2 Sam. 16. 7.

So that, not only Regium eſt (as the Heathen ſaid) benè cum feceris, audire malè, to have evill ſpeech for good deeds; but Divinum, a heavenly thing (as CHRIST ſaith) de bono opere lapidari.

Ioh. 10. 32.

This, is their lot. And it ſerveth us to two purpoſes: 1. For judgement: to ſee this evill diſeaſe under the Sun: The evill aſpect which the world lookes with, on Mary Magdalen. Whereby many times, that which is commended in Heaven, is condemned on earth: and Iudas bagge carrieth away even from CHRISTS. Whereby many times, all good is ſaid of them, by whom little good is done; and ſome mens flagitia (which the heathen ſtorie lamenteth, in Druſus) ſhall find more favour and be better rewarded than Druſus optimè cogitata, the good counſell and courſe of many a better man.

Such is the deceitfulneſſe of the ſonnes of men upon the weights. It ſerveth us (I ſay) to ſee and to ſorrow at, and to ſay with Auguſtine: Væ tibi miſer, bonus odor occîdit te, Miſerable man that thou art, how art thou choked with ſo good a ſent? To ſorrow it and to prepare our ſelves to it, and reſolve, that though we doe well, yet we ſhall bee evill ſpoken of.

Pſal. 62. 10.

That, firſt: and ſecond, this, for practice. That though we be evill ſpoken of, yet not to be diſmayed or troubled with this hard meaſure; but to goe on and doe, as Mary Magdalen did; not once, or twiſe, but three ſeverall times one after another: Neither to hold our hand, or ſhut our box, not ſpare our ointment, if things well done be evill taken. To look, not to Iudas on earth, who diſliketh; but to CHRIST in heaven, who approveth it, and in all three caſes made anſwer for Mary Magdalen, againſt Martha, Simon and Iudas and all her accuſers. To know, that that, which in Iudas divinitie is perditio, in CHRISTS divinitie, is bonum opus. In regard therfore of our own dutie, to be reſolute with the Apoſtle, Quod facio, hoc & faciam, what I doe, that will I doe: In reſpect of miſconſtruction with them, Mihi pro minimo eſt. becauſe we may truly ſay and in the ſight of God, Sicut deceptores, & veraces,

2 Yet, to be done

2 Cor. 11. 12.

1 Cor. 4. 3.

2 Cor. 6. 8.

As

As deceivers, yet true: Or, (with Mary Magdalen) as waſters, yet well-doers. Aſſuring our ſelves, that it is well done; and ſhall be both commended on earth, and rewarded in heaven. On earth: For, poſteritie ſhall better like of the ſhedding, than of the ſale of this Ointment. In heaven: for the day will come, qui malè judicata rejudicabit, when all perverſe judgements ſhall have judgement againſt them, and Mary Magdalen ſhall looke cheerefully on him, on whom ſhe beſtowed it; and Iudas rufully behold Him, from whom he ſold it.

This is Mary Magdalens part, as CHRIST telleth: that howſoever Mary Magdalen be, in Simons houſe or in a corner, found fault with, amends ſhall be made her; and Verſ. 9. as wide as the world is, and as far as the Goſpell ſhall ſound, ſhe ſhall be well ſpoken of. Yea, when the great and glorious acts of many Monarchs ſhall be buried in ſilence, this poore box of Nardus ſhall be matter of praiſe, and never die. And contrary, howſoever Iudas motion may finde favour and applauſe in the preſent, yet Poſterity ſhall diſlike and diſcommend it: and he be no leſſe infamous and hatefull, than Mary famous and well ſpoken of, in all ages to the end of the world.

This is her portion from CHRIST: her ſoul refreſhed with the ſweet joyes of Heaven; and her name, as Nardus throughout all generations.

This is his lot from the Lord: A name odious and loth-

LUKE Chap. XVII. Verſ. XXXII.

Memores eſtote Uxoris LOT.

Remember LOTS Wife.

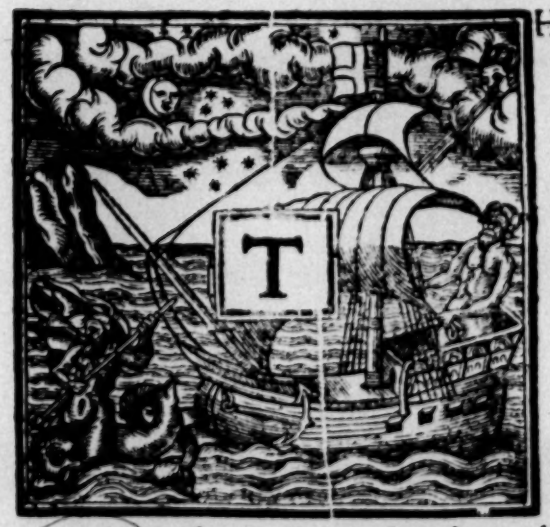
A Part of the Chapter read this Morning, by order of the Church, for II. Leſſon.



THe words are few, and the ſentence ſhort; no one in Scripture ſo ſhort. But it fareth with Sentences as with Coines: In coines, they that in ſmalleſt compaſſe containe greateſt value, are beſt eſteemed: and, in ſentences, thoſe that in feweſt words compriſe moſt matter, are moſt praiſed. Which, as of all ſentences it is true, ſo ſpecially of thoſe that are marked with Memento. In them the ſhorter, the better; the better, and the better carried away, and the better kept; and the better called for when we need it. And ſuch is this here; of rich contents, and withall exceeding compendious: So that, wee muſt needs be without all excuſe, it being but three words, and but five ſyllables, if we do not remember it.

The Sentence is our SAVIOURS, uttered by Him upon this occaſion. Before, (in Verſ. 18.) He had ſaid: that the daies of the Son of man ſhould be as the daies of LOT, in two reſpects: [1] In reſpect of the ſuddenneſſe of the deſtruction that ſhould come: [2] and in reſpect of the ſecuritie of the people, on whom it ſhould come. For, the Sodomites laughed at it; and Lots Wife (it ſhould ſeeme) but ſlightly regarded it. Being then in Lots ſtorie; very fitly, and by good conſequence, out of that ſtorie, He leaveth us a Memento, before he leaveth it.

There are in Lots ſtory, two very notable monuments of GODS Iudgement,

[1] The

1 The Lake of Sodome, 2. and Lots Wives Pillar. The one, the puniſhment of reſolute ſinne; the other, of faint vertue. For, the Sodomites are an example of impenitent wilfull Sinners: and Lots Wife of imperſeverant and relapſing righteous perſons.

Both theſe are in it: but CHRIST, of both theſe, taketh the latter onely. For, two ſorts of men there are, for which theſe two Items are to bee fitted: [1] To thoſe in ſtate of Sinne that are wrong, the Lake of Sodome: [2] To thoſe in ſtate of Grace, that Deut. 32. 32. are well (if ſo they can keepe them) Lots wives Pillar. To the firſt in ſtate of Sinn, Moſes propoundeth the Vine of Sodome and grapes of Gomorra, quæ contacta cinereſcunt, that if
Ier. 8. 4. yee but touch them, turne to aſhes. To the other in ſtate of grace, CHRIST here, Lots wives Pillar. To the one, Ieremie crieth, Qui cecidit, adjiciat ut reſurgat, To the
1. Cor. 10. 12. other, Saint Paul: Qui ſtat, videat ne cadat. Agar, that is departed from Abrahams
Gen. 21. 18. houſe, with her face toward Ægypt, the Angell calleth to returne, and not to perſevere:
Gen. 19. 17. Lots wife, that is gone out of Sodome, and in the right way to ZOAR, the Angell willeth to perſevere and not to returne. So that, to them this Memento is by CHRIST directed, that being departed from the errours of VR, are gone out from the Sinnes of Sodome, are entred into the profeſſion of the truth, or into the courſe of a vertuous life. So that, if we lay it to our ſelves, we ſhall lay it aright; that Lots Wife be our example, and that we ſprinkle onr ſelves with the Salt of her Pillar, ne putreſcamus, that we turne not again to folly, or fall away from our owne ſtedfaſtneſſe. And, if it bee meant to us, needfull it is, that wee receive it. A point (no doubt) of important conſideration and neceſſitie, as well for Religion, to call on; as for our Nature to heare of. Firſt, for Religion: her glory it is, no leſſe, to be able to ſhew antiquos Diſcipulos, old Profeſſors, as Mnaſon was, than daily to convert and make new Proſelytes.
Matth. 11. 28. John. 15. 4. And therefore, with CHRIST, we muſt not ever be dealing with Venite ad me; but ſometimes too, with Manete in me; That, hath his place: Nor ever with ſtimuli, goades to incite them to; but, other-while, with Clavi, nailes to faſten them in. For as nature hath thought requiſite as well the Breſts to bring up, as the Wombe to bring forth: And Philoſophie holdeth tueri of no leſſe regard than quærere: And with the Lawyers, Habendum is not the onely thing, but Tenendum needfull too: And the Phyſitian as carefull of the regiment, and fearefull of the recidivation, as of the diſeaſe and cure. So Divinitie is reſpective to both; both, to lay the ground-worke ſurely, Ne corruat, Eſay. 7. 9. that it ſhake not with Eſay's Niſi credideritis; and, to roofe it carefully, Ne perpluat,
Rom. 11. 22. that it raine not thorow and rot the principals, with Pauls, Si permanſeris, alioquin excideris & tu.

Needfull then for Religion, to call on this vertue: and, as for Religion, to call on; ſo, for our Nature to be called on: Wherein, as there is tenellum quid, a tender part not able to endure the croſſe, for which wee need the vertue of Patience: So is there alſo ἀψυχοῦν τι a flitting humour, not able to endure the tedioufneſſe of any thing long; for which we no leſſe need the vertue of Perſeverance. The Prophet (in Pſal. 78. 57. the 78. Pſalme) ſaith, our Nature is as a Bow, which when it is bent to his full, except it be followed hard, till it be ſure and faſt, ſtarts backe againe, and is as far off as ever it was. The Apoſtle compareth it to fleſh (as it is) which will ſine ſale putreſcere, and if it

The things are many, we have commission to put men in mind of. Some touching themselves: For, it is many times, too true, which the Philosopher saith: Nihil tam longè abest à nobis quàm ipsi nos, Nothing is so farre from our mindes, as we our selves. For, naturally (as saith the Apostle) we do παραρύειν, leake, and runne out; and when we have looked in the glasse, we straight forget our fashion againe. Therefore we have in charge to put men in minde of many things, and to call upon them with divers Memento's, Memento quia sicut lutum tu, Remember the baseneſse of our mould what it is: Memento quia vita ventus, Remember the frailneſse of our life how short it is. Memento tenebrosi temporis, Remember, the daies of darkneſse are comming, and they be many. Eccles. 11.8.

But, the storehouse, and the very life of memory, is the History of time; and a speciall charge have we, all along the Scriptures, to call upon men to looke to that. For, all our wisdome consisting either in Experience or Memory; Experience of our own, or Memory of others; Our daies are so short, that our Experience can be but slender, Tantùm hesterni sumus (saith Iob;) and our own time cannot afford us observations enough for so many cases, as we need direction in. Needs must we then (as he here adviseth) interrogare generationem pristinam, ask the former age, what they did in like case: search the Records of former times; wherein, our cases we shall be able to match, and to pattern them all. Salomon saith excellently, Quid est quod fuit? Quod futurum est; What is that that hath been? That that shall be: and back againe, What is that that shall be? That that hath beene: Et nihil novum est sub Sole, and there is nothing under the Sun of which it may be said, it is new, but it hath been already in the former generations. So that, it is but turning the wheele, and setting before us some case of Antiquity, which may sample ours, and either remembring to follow it, if it fell out well; or to eschew it, if the successe were thereafter. For example, by Abimelechs story, King David reproveth his Captaines, for pursuing the enemy too neare the wall, seeing Abimelech miscarried by like adventure; and so making use of remembring Abimelech. And by Davids example (that, in want of all other bread, refused not the Shew-bread) Christ our Saviour defendeth His Disciples in like distresse, and sheweth, that, upon such extremity, Necessitas doth even legem Legi dicere, give a Saw, even to the Law it selfe.

II. Of this of Lots wife.

Now, of and among them all, our Saviour CHRIST after a ſpeciall manner commendeth unto us, this of Lots wife. Of which thus much we may ſay, That it is the only one ſtorie, which of all the ſtories of the Old Teſtament, He maketh His choiſe of, to put in His Memento; which he would have them, which have forgotten, to remember, and thoſe that remember, never to forget. Oft to repaire to this ſtory, and to fetch ſalt from this Pillar: that they loſe not that they have done, and ſo periſh in the recidivation of Lots wife.

Then to deſcend into the particulars: I find, in ſtories, two ſorts of Memento: 1. Memento & fac, Remember to follow: 2. Memento & fuge, Remember to flie the like. Mary Magdalens ointment, an example of one; Lots wives ſalt-ſtone, an example of the other. Or (to keep us, to this ſtory) Lot looked not back, till he came ſafe to Zoar: memento & fac. Lots wife did, and dyed for it: memento & fuge.

The verſe before ſheweth, why CHRIST laid the memento upon her. Μὴ καταβάτω; Μὴ ἐπιστρεψάτω, that we ſhould not turne or returne back, as ſhe did: that we ſhould not follow her, but, when wee come at this Pillar, turne at it and take another way. That is, wee ſhould remember Lots wife, but follow Lot; remember her, but follow him.

Now in either of both memento's, to follow, or to flie, we alway enquire of two points (and ſo, here) [1] quid fecit, [2] quid paſſa eſt: what they did: whoſe ſtorie we read; and, how they ſped: The Fact and the Effect. The Fact, Vice or Vertue: The Effect, Reward or Puniſhment.

Both which, concerning this unfortunate woman, we ſet downe in one verſe (in the XIX. of Geneſis) what ſhee did; that Shee drew backe, or looked backe: this was her Sinne. The effect, that She was turned into a Salt-ſtone: this was her puniſhment. And theſe two, are the two Memorandum's concerning her, to be remembred. Firſt of her fault.

Gen. 19. 26.

I. Her fault.

The Angell had given charge to Lot and his companie (in the ſeventeenth of that Chapter) Scape for thy life: Stay not in the Plaine: Looke not once behind thee leſt thou periſh. Scape for thy life: She trifled for all that, as if no perill were. Stay not in the Plaine, yet ſtayed ſhee behind. Looke not back leſt thou die; ſhe would, and did looke backe, to die for it. So that, ſhe did all that ſhe was forbid, and regarded none of the Angels words, but deſpiſed the counſell of God againſt her owne ſoule. This was her ſinne, the ſin of diſobedience; but conſiſteth of ſundry degrees by which ſhe fell: needfull, all, to be remembred.

1 Wavering.

1. The firſt was: That ſhe did not Severè cuſtodire mandatum Dei, ſtrictly keepe her to the Angels charge, but, dallied with it, and regarded it by halves; that is, ſay what he would, ſhe might uſe the matter as ſhe would; goe, or ſtay and looke about as ſhe liſt. Such light regard is like enough to have growne of a wandring diſtruſt; leſt happily, ſhe had left Sodome in vaine, and the Angell feared them, with that which never ſhould be. The Sun roſe ſo cleare, and it was ſo goodly a morning, ſhe repented, ſhe came away. Reckoning her Sons in Law more wiſe in ſtaying ſtill, than Lot and her ſelfe, in ſo unwiſely departing. Which is the ſin of unbeliefe, the bane both of Conſtancie and Perſeverance. Conſtancie, in the purpoſe of our minde; and Perſeverance in the tenour of our life.

2 Fainting.

2 From this grew the ſecond, That ſhe began to tire, and draw behinde, and kept not pace with LOT and the Angels. An evill ſigne. For (ever) fainting is next

ſtep

ſtep to forſaking; Sequebatur à longè, a preparative to a giving cleane over: Occaſionem quærit (ſaith Salomon) qui vult diſcedere ab amico, He that hath no liſt to follow, will picke ſome quarrell or other to be caſt behinde.

3 This tiring, had it growne of weakeneſſe, or wearineſſe, or want of breath, might have beene borne with; but, it came of another cauſe, which is the third degree. It was (ſaith the Text) at leaſt to looke backe, and to caſt her eye to the place, her ſoule longed after. Which ſheweth, that the love of SODOME ſticketh in her ſtill: that though her feet were come from thence, her heart ſtayed there behinde: and that, in looke and thought ſhee returned thither, whither in body ſhee might not; but (poſſibly) would in body too, if, as NINIVE did, ſo SODOME had ſtill remained. 3 Looking backe.

4. Looking backe might proceede of divers cauſes; So might this of hers, but that CHRIST'S application directs us. The verſe before ſaith, ſomewhat in the houſe, ſomething left behinde affected her: Of which he gives us warning. She grew weary of trouble, and of ſhifting ſo oft: From Vr to Haran; thence, to Canaan; thence, to Egypt; thence, to Canaan againe; then to Sodome; and now to Zoar; and that, in her old daies, when ſhe would faineſt have beene at reſt. Therefore, in this wearieſome conceit of new trouble now to begin; and withall remembring the convenient ſeat, ſhe had in Sodome, ſhe even deſired to dye by her fleſh-pots, and to be buried in the graves of luſt: wiſhed them at Zoar, that would, and her ſelfe at Sodome againe: deſiring rather to end her life with eaſe in that Stately City, than to remove, and be ſafe, perhaps not, in the deſolate mountaines. And this was the ſin of reſtineſſe of ſoule, which affected her eyes and knees, and was the cauſe of all the former. When men weary of a good courſe, which long they have holden, for a little eaſe or wealth, or (I wote not what) other ſecular reſpect, fall away in the end: ſo looſing the praiſe and fruite of their former perſeverance, and relapſing into the danger and deſtruction, from which they had ſo neere eſcaped. 4 Preferring Sodome to Zoar.

Behold, theſe were the ſinnes of LOT'S Wife; A wavering of minde: Slow ſteps: the convulſion of her necke: all theſe cauſed her wearineſſe and feare of new trouble, ſhee preferred SODOM'S eaſe before ZOAR'S ſafety. Remember Lots Wife.

This was her ſinne: and this her ſinne, was in her, made much more heynous by a double circumſtance, well worth the remembring: as (ever) weighty circumſtances are matter of ſpeciall regard, in a ſtory ſpecially. 1 One, that ſhee fell, after ſhee had ſtood long. 2 The other, that ſhee fell, even then, when GOD, by all meanes offered her ſafety, and ſo forſooke her owne mercy. The aggravation of her fall.

Touching the firſt. Theſe [a] winter brookes, (as Iob termeth flitting deſultory Chriſtians) if they drie; theſe [b] Summer fruites (as AMOS) if they putrifie: theſe [c] morning clouds (as HOSEA) if they ſcatter; theſe [d] ſhallow rooted corne, if they wither and come to nothing, it is the leſſe griefe. No man looked for other. [e] Pharaoh with his fits, that at every plague ſent upon him, is godly on a ſudden, and, O pray for mee now; and when it is gone, as prophane as ever hee was, beginning nine times, and nine times breaking off againe; hee moves not much. To goe further: Saul, that for two yeeres; Iudas, that for three; Nero, that for five kept well, and then fell away, though it be much, yet may it be borne. But this woman had continued now thirty yeere (for, ſo they reckon from ABRAHAM'S going out of Vr, to the deſtruction of Sodome:) This, this is the griefe, that ſhee ſhould perſiſt all this time, and after all this time fall away. The rather, if wee conſider yet further, that not onely ſhee continued many yeeres, but ſuſtained many things in her continuance, as being companion of Abraham and Lot, in their exile, their travell, and all their affliction. This is the griefe, that after all theſe ſtormes in the broad Sea well paſt, ſhee ſhould in this pitifull manner, be wracked in the haven. And when ſhe had beene in Egypt, and not poiſoned with the ſuperſtitions of Egypt; when lived in Sodome, and not defiled with the ſinnes of Sodome; not fallen away for the famine of Canaan, nor taken harme by the fulneſſe of the City of the Plaine; after all this ſhee ſhould looſe the 1 After a long ſtanding.

fruit of all this, and doe and ſuffer ſo many things all in vaine: This is the firſt: Remember it.

2. Now, when beſt meanes of ſtanding,

The ſecond is no whit inferiour: That, at that inſtant ſhee wofully periſhed, when GODS ſpeciall favour was profer'd to preſerve her: and that, when, of all other times ſhe had meanes and cauſe to ſtand; then of all other times, ſhe fell away. Many were the mercies ſhe found and felt at GODS hand, by this very title, that ſhee was Lots Wife. For, by it, ſhee was incorporated into the Houſe and Family, and made partaker of the bleſſings of the faithfull Abraham. It was a mercy, to be delivered from the errors of Vr; a mercy, to be kept ſafe in Egypt; a mercy, to be preſerved from the ſinne of Sodome; a mercy, to be delivered from the Captivity of the five Kings; and this the laſt and greateſt mercy, that ſhee was ſought to be delivered from the periſhing of the five Cities. This (no doubt) doth mightily aggravate the offence, that, ſo many waies before remembred by God in trouble, ſhe ſo coldly remembred Him: and that now preſently being offered grace, ſhee knoweth not the day of her viſitation: but being brought out of Sodome, and warned of the danger that might enſue; having the Angells to goe before her, Lot to beare her company, her daughters to attend her, and being now at the entrance of Zoar, the haven of her reſt; this very time, place and preſence, ſhee maketh choyce of, to periſh in, and to caſt away that, which God would have ſaved; in reſpect of her ſelfe, deſperately; of the Angels, contemptuouſly; of her husband and daughters, ſcandalouſly; of God and His favours, unthankfully; forſaking her owne mercy, and periſhing in the ſinne of wilfull defection.

Remember Lots Wife and theſe two, 1 That ſhee looked backe, after ſo long time, and ſo many ſufferings: 2 That ſhee looked backe, after ſo many, ſo mercifull, and ſo mighty protections. And remember this withall, That ſhee looked backe onely, and went not backe: Would, it may be, but that it was all on fire. But, whether ſhe would or no, or whether we doe or no, this fore-thinking our ſelves, we be gone out, this faint proceeding, this ſtaying in the plaine, this convulſion of the necke, and writhing the eyes backe; this irreſolute wavering whether we ſhould chooſe, either bodily pleaſures in periſhing Sodome, or the ſafety of our ſoules in little Zoar, was her ſinne; And this is the ſinne of ſo many as ſtand as ſhee ſtood, and looke as ſhee looked, though they goe not backe: but, if they goe backe too, they ſhall juſtifie her, and heape upon themſelves a more heauy condemnation. So much for the ſinne, which we ſhould remember, to avoid.

2 Her Puniſhment.

Now for her puniſhment, which we muſt remember, to eſcape.

This relapſe in this manner, that the world might know it to be a ſinne highly diſpleaſing his Majeſty, God hath not onely marked it for a ſinne, but ſalted it too, that it might never be forgotten.

Death.
Rom. 6. 23.

The wages and puniſhment of this ſinne of hers, was it, which is the wages of all ſinne, that is, Death. Death, in her (ſure) worthily, that refuſed life with ſo eaſie conditions, as the holding of her head ſtill, and would needs looke backe and dye.

The ſound of Death is fearefull, what death ſoever: yet it is made more fearefull foure waies; which all be in this of hers.

1 Sudden.

1 Wee deſire to die with reſpite; and ſudden death, wee feare and pray againſt. Her death was ſudden, backe ſhe looked, and never looked forward more. It was her laſt looke.

2 In the act of ſinne.

2 Wee deſire to have remorſe of ſinne ere we bee taken away; and death in the very act of ſinne, is moſt dangerous. Her death was ſo. She died in the very convulſion; She died with her face to Sodome.

3 Unuſuall.

3 Wee would die the common death of mankinde, and be viſited after the viſitation of other men: and an un-uſuall ſtrange death is full of terrour. Hers was ſo. Gods owne hand from Heaven, by a ſtrange and fearefull viſitation.

4 Without buriall.

4 Our wiſh is, to die, and to be buried, and not to remaine a ſpectacle above ground which Nature abhorreth: She ſo died, as ſhe remained a ſpectacle of Gods wrath and and a by-word to posterity, and as many as passed by. For untill CHRISTS time, and after, this monument was still extant, and remained undefaced so many hundred yeares, Iosephus (a Writer of good account, which lived after this) saith ἱστήκει μὲν ἔτι καὶ νῦν· ἔστι γὰρ καὶ νῦν διαμένει: I my self have seen and beholden it, for it stands to be seen to this day. A reed she was, a Pillar she is; which she seemed to be, but was not. She was melting water: She is congealed to salt. Thus have we both her fault and punishment: Let us remember both: To shun the fault, that the penalty light not on us.

IH. Our Lesson from this.

Now, this Pillar was erected, and this verdure given it, for our sakes. For, among the many waies that the wisdome of God useth to dispose of the sin of man, and out of evill to draw good, this is one, and a chiefe one, that he suffereth not their evill examples to vanish as a shadow, but maketh them to stand as Pillars for Ages to come, with the Heathen mans inscription, Εἰς ἐμὲ τὶς ὀφθαλμὸν εὐσεβὴς ἔστω, Look on me, and learn by me, to serve God better.

And, an high benefit it is for us, that He not only embalmeth the memory of the Iust for our Imitation; but also powdreth and maketh brine of the Evill, for our admonition: that, as a Sent from Mary Magdalens ointment; So, a reliish from Lots wives Pillar, should remaine to all posterity.

Prophane persons, in their perishing, GOD could dash to peeces, and root out their remembrance from off the earth, He doth not, but suffereth their Quarters (as it were) to be set up in stories, Vt pœna Impii sit eruditio Iusti, that their punishment may be our advertisement. Powreth not out their blood, nor casts it away, but saves it, for a Bath, Vt lavet Iustus pedes in sanguine peccatoris, that the Righteous may wash their footsteps in the blood of the ungodly: that all (even the ruine of the wicked) may cooperate to the good of them that feare GOD. This woman, in her inconstancy, could He have sunk into the earth, or blowen up as salt-petre, that no remembrance should have remained of her: He doth not; but, for us, and for our sakes, He erecteth a Pillar: And not a Pillar only, to point and gaze at; but a Pillar or rocke of salt, whence we may and must fetch, wherewith to season whatsoever is unsavoury in our lives. And this, this, is the life and soule of memorie: this is wisdome, The art of extracting salt, out of the wicked; Triacle, out of vipers; our owne happinesse, out of aliena pericula: and to make those that were unprofitable to themselves, profitable to us. For (sure) though Lots wife were evill, her salt is good. Let us see then, how to make her evill, our good; see, if we can draw any savoury thing from this example.

Psal 58.10.

Rom. 8.28.

1 That which we should draw out, is perseverance, Muria virtutum (as Gregory calleth it) the Preserver of vertues, without which (as Summer fruits) they will perish and putrifie: The Salt of the Covenant; without which, the flesh of our Sacrifice will take wind and corrupt. But S. Augustine (better) Regina virtutum, the Queene of vertues; for that, how ever the rest run and strive, and do masteries, yet, Perseverantia sola coronatur, Perseverance is the only crowned vertue.

1 Perseverance.

2 Now Perseverance we shall attain, if we can possesse our soules with the due care, and rid them of security. Of Lots wives security, as of water, was this Salt here made. And, if security (as water) do but touch it, it melts away presently. But Care will make us fix our eye, and gather up our feet, and, forgetting that which is behind, tendere in anteriora, to follow hard toward the prize of our high calling.

2 Care.

Phil 3 13.

3 And, to avoid Securitie, and to breed in us due care, S. Bernard saith, Feare will do it: Vis in timore securus esse? securitatem time; The only way to be secure in feare, is to feare security. S. Paul had given the same counsell before; that, to preserve Si permanseris, no better advice, than Noli altum sapere, sed time.

3 Feare.

Rom 11 22.

Now, from her Story, these considerations are yeelded, each one as an handfull of salt to keep us, and to make us keep.

Considerations out of her fault

First, that we see; as of CHRISTS twelve, which He had sorted and selected from the reſt, one miſcarried; Et illum gregem non timuit lupus intrare, and that the Wolfe feared not to ſeaſe, no, not upon that Flocke: and as of NOAHS eight that were ſaved from the Flood, one fell away too; So, that of LOTS foure, here, and but foure in all, all came not to Zoar, one came ſhort. So that, of twelve, of eight, of foure; yea, a little after (ver. 35.) of two, one is refuſed: that we may remember, few there be that ſcape from Sodome in the Angels company; and of thoſe (few though they be) all are not ſafe neither: Who would not feare, if one may periſh in the company of Angels?

2 Secondly, that as one miſcarrieth; ſo, not every one, but one that had continued ſo long, and ſuffered ſo many things, and after all this continuance, and all theſe ſufferings, fales from her eſtate, and turnes all out and in; and, by the inconſtancy of one houre, maketh void the perſeverance of ſo many yeares, and (as Ezekiel ſaith) in the Ezek 18.24. day, they turne away to iniquity, all the former righteouſneſſe they have done, ſhall not be remembred.

3 Thirdly, that as ſhe periſheth; So, at the ſame time, that Sodome: Shee, by it; and it, by her. That, one end commeth to the ſinner without repentance, and to the juſt, without perſeverance. One end, to the abomination of Sodome, and to the recidivation of Lots wife; Et non egredientes, & egredientes reſpicientes: They that goe not out of her, periſh; and they that go out of her, periſh too, if they look back. Lacus Aſphaltites, is a monument of the one, Lots Wives ſalt ſtone, a memoriall of the other.

4 Laſtly, that as one periſheth, and that ſuch an one; So, that ſhe periſheth at the gates, even hard at the entry of Zoar: which of all other, is moſt fearefull; So neare her ſafety, ſo hard at the gates of her deliverance. Remember, that neare to Zoar gates, there ſtands a ſalt ſtone.

Theſe very thoughts, what her caſe was, theſe foure wayes; and what ours may be (who are no better than ſhe was) will ſearch us like ſalt, and teach us; that as, if we remember what we have been, we may (ſaith S. Bernard) erubeſcere; ſo, if we remember what we may be, we may contremiſcere: that, we ſee our beginnings, but ſee not our ending: we ſee our Stadium, not our dolichum. And that as we have great need to Pſal 71.18. pray (with the Prophet) Thou haſt taught me from my youth up, untill now, forſake me not in mine old age, now when I am gray headed; So, we had need ſtir up our care of continuing, ſeeing we ſee it is nothing to begin, except we continue; nor to continue, except we do it to the end.

Remember, we make not light account of the Angel's Serva animam tuam: bleſſing
Mat. 16.22. our ſelves in our hearts, and ſaying, Non fiet tibi hoc; we ſhall come ſafe, go we never ſo ſoft: Zoar will not run away.

Remember, wee be not weary to goe whither GOD would have us; not to Zoar, though a little one, if our ſoule may there live; and never buy the eaſe of our body, with the hazard of our ſoule, or a few dayes of vanity with the loſſe of eternity.

Remember, we ſlack not our pace, nor ſtand ſtill on the Plaine. For, if we ſtand ſtill, by ſtill ſtanding, we are meet to be made a Pillar, even to ſtand ſtill, and never to remove.

Remember, we look not back, either with her, on the vaine delights of Sodome left; or with Peter, on S. Iohn behind us, to ſay, Domine, Quid iſte? both, will make us for-
Ioh. 21.20. get our following. None that caſteth his eye th'other way, is εὐθετὸς, meet as he ſhould be,
Luk 9.62. meet for the kingdome of God.

But ſpecially remember we leave not our heart behind us, but that we take that with us, when we go out of Sodome: for if that ſtay, it will ſtay the feet, and with the eye, and neither the one nor the other will do their duty. Remember, that our heart wander not, that our heart long not. This Care, if it be fervent, will bring us Perſeverance.

Out of her puniſhment. Now, that we may the better learn ſomewhat out of her puniſhment too: Let us remember alſo, that as to her, ſo to us, God may ſend ſome unuſuall viſitation, and take us ſuddenly away, and in the act of ſin too.

Remember the danger and damage: It is no leſſe matter we are about, than perdet animam. Which if we do, we fruſtrate and forfeit all the fruit of our former well continued courſe; all we have done, is vaine. Yea, all that CHRIST hath done for us is in vaine; whoſe paines and ſufferings we ought ſpecially to tender, knowing, that Supra omnem laborem labor irritus, No labour to loſt labour; and CHRIST then hath loſt his labour for us.

Remember the folly: that beginning in the ſpirit we end in the fleſh: turning our backs to Zoar, we turne our face to Sodome: joyning to a head of fine gold, feet of clay, and to a precious foundation, a covering of thatch. Gal. 3. 3.

Remember the Diſgrace: that we ſhall looſe our credit and accompt, while we live, and ſhall heare that of CHRIST, Hic homo; and that other, Quid exiſtis in deſertum videre? A reed ſhaken with the wind. Luk. 14. 14. Mat. 11. 7.

Remember the Scandall: That, falling our ſelves, we ſhall be a block for to make others fall: a ſin no lighter; nor leſſe, nor lighter than a mil-ſtone. Mat. 18. 6.

Remember the Infamy: That we ſhall leave our memory remaining in ſtories, among Lots Wife, and Iobs Wife, Demas and Ecebolius and the number of Relapſed, there to ſtand to be pointed at, no leſſe than this heap of Salt.

Remember the Iudgement that is upon them after their relapſe, though they live, that they do even (with her here) obrigeſcere, wax hard and numme, and ſerve others for a caveat, wholly unprofitable for themſelves.

Remember the difficultie of reclaiming to good: Seven evill ſpirits entring inſtead of one, that their laſt ſtate is worſe than the firſt. Mat. 12. 45.

And laſtly, Remember that we ſhall juſtifie Sodome by ſo doing; and her frozen ſin ſhall condemne our melting vertue. For, they in the wilfulneſſe of their wickedneſſe perſiſted till fire from heaven conſumed them: And, they being thus obdurate in ſin, ought not ſhe (and we much more) to be conſtant in vertue? And, if the drunkard hold out, till he have loſt his eyes; the unclean perſon, till he have waſted his loynes; the contentious, till he have conſumed his wealth, Quis pudor quòd infelix populus Dei non habet tantam in bono perſeverantiam, quantam mali in malo! What ſhame is it, that Gods unhappy people ſhould not be as conſtant in vertue, as theſe miſcreants have beene, and be in vice!

Each of theſe by it ſelfe; all theſe put together, will make a full Memento: which if ſhe had remembred, ſhe had been a Pillar of light in heaven, not of ſalt in earth. It is too late, for her: we, in due time yet, may remember it.

And, when we have remembred theſe, Remember CHRIST too, that gave the Memento: that He calleth Himſelfe Alpha and Omega; not only Alpha for His happy beginning; but Omega, for His thriſe happy ending. For that he left us not, nor gave over the worke of our redemption, till He had brought it to Conſummatum eſt: And that, on our part, Summa Religionis eſt, imitari quem colis, The higheſt act of Religion, is, for the Chriſtian to conforme himſelfe, not to Lots Wife, but to CHRIST, whoſe Name he weareth. And though Verus amor non ſumit vires de ſpe, True love (indeed) receiveth no manner ſtrength from hope, but, though it hope for nothing, loveth nevertheleſſe; yet, to quicken our love, which oft is but faint, and, for a full Memento, Remember the reward. Remember, how CHRIST will remember us for it, which ſhall not be the wages of an hireling, or (Leaſe-wiſe) for time, and terme of yeares, but αἰῶνες αἰώνων, Eternitie it ſelfe, never to expire, end, or determine, but to laſt and endure for ever and ever. Apoc. 1. 8.

But this reward (ſaith Ezekiel) is for thoſe, whoſe foreheads are marked with Tau, which (as Omega in Greek) is the laſt letter in the Hebrew Alphabet, and the marke of conſummatum eſt, among them: They only ſhall eſcape the wrath to come. And this crowne is laid up for them, not of whom it may be ſaid, Currebatis benè, Ye did run well; but, for thoſe that can ſay (with S. Paul) Curſum conſummavi, I have finiſhed my courſe well. Ezek. 9. 4. Gal 5. 7. 1 Tim. 4. 7.

And (thanks be to God) we have not hitherto wanted this ſalt, but remembred Lots wife well. So that, this exhortation, becauſe we have prevented and done that which it calleth for, changeth his nature and becommeth a commendation, as all others doe. A commendation (I ſay:) yet not ſo much of the people (whoſe only felicity is to ſerve and be ſubject to one that is conſtant; for otherwiſe, we know how wavering a thing the multitude is) as of the Prince, whoſe conſtant ſtanding giveth ſtrength to many a weake knee otherwiſe. And Bleſſed be God and the Father of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, that we ſtand in the preſence of ſuch a Prince: who hath ever accounted of Perſeverance, not only as of Regina virtutum, the Queene of vertues; but, as of virtus Reginarum, the vertue of a Queene. Who (like Zorobabel) firſt, by Princely magnanimity, laid the Corner-ſtone, in a troubleſome time: and ſince, by Heroicall conſtancy, through many both alluring proffers and threatning dangers, hath brought forth the Head-ſtone alſo, with the Prophets acclamation, Grace, grace, unto it: Grace, for ſo happy a beginning; and Grace, for ſo thrice happy an ending. No terrours, no enticement; no care of her ſafety hath removed her from her ſtedfaſtneſſe: but, with a fixed eye, with ſtraight ſteps, with a reſolute mind, hath entred her ſelfe, and brought us into Zoar. It is a little one, but therein our ſoules ſhall live; and we are in ſafety, all the Cities of the Plaine being in combuſtion round about us, Of whom it ſhall be remembred; to her high praiſe, not only that of the Heathen Illaque virgo viri; but, that of David, that, all her dayes ſhe ſerved GOD, with a covenant of Salt, and with her Iſrael, from the firſt day untill now. And of this be we perſwaded, that He which began this good work in her, will perform it unto the day of Ieſus Chriſt, to her everlaſting praiſe, comfort and joy, and, in her, to the comfort, joy and happines of us all.

2 Cor. 13 5.

Yet it is not needleſſe, but right requiſite, that we which are the LORDS Remembrancers put you in minde, that as Perſeverance is the Queene of vertues, quia ea ſola coronatur; ſo is it alſo, quia Satanas ei ſoli inſidiatur, for that, all Satans malice, and all his practices are againſt it: The more carefull need we to be, to carry in our eye this example. Which GOD grant we may, and that our hearts may ſeriouſly regard, and our memories carefully keepe it. Vt hæc columna fulciat nos, & hic ſal condiat nos, that this Pillar may proppe our weakneſſe, and this ſalt ſeaſon our ſacrifice; that it may be remembred, and accepted, and rewarded in the day of the LORD. Which, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED IN THE COVRT AT RICHMOND, on Tuesday, being the V. of March, Anno Domini, MDXCVI.

LVKE Chap. XVI. Ver. XXV.

Fili, recordare, &c.

Sonne, remember that thou, in thy life time, receivedst thy pleasure (or, good things; ) and likewise LAZARUS paines: Now therefore is hee comforted, and thou art tormented.

HIS Scripture hath the name given it in the very first words, Recordare Fili, Sonne remember: It is a Remembrance.

There bee many Sermons of remembrance here on earth: this, is one from Heaven, from the mouth of Abraham. Not now on earth, but in heaven, and from thence beholding (not in a glasse of darke speech, but) intuitivè, that which he telleth us: and Hee that saw it bare witnesse, and his witnesse is true. 1 Cor. 13 2. Iohn 19 35.

Which may somewhat move attention: Or, if that will not, let me adde further, That it is such a remembrance, that it toucheth our estate in everlasting life; That is, the well or evill hearing of this Recordare, is as much as our eternall life is worth. For, we finde both in it. That our Comfort or Torment eternall (Comfort, in Abrahams bosome; Torment, in the fire of hell) depend upon it: and therefore, as much as wee regard them, we are to regard it.

The Remembrance is directed to a Sonne of Abrahams; not so much for him, as for the rest. For, it is to be feared, that both the sonnes of Abraham, and the daughters of Sarah forget this point overmuch; and many of them (with this party here, to whom it is ſpoken) never remember it, till it be too late.

Sara

TO ABRAHAMS ſonnes then, all and every one. But ſpecially, ſuch of his ſonnes, as preſently are in the ſtate, that this Sonne (here) ſometime was, of whom it is ſaid: Hee had received good things in his life. By vertue whereof, I finde, this Recordare will reach home to us; for that wee are within the compaſſe of this Recepiſti. For truly, the ſumme of our Receipt hath beene great; No Nation ſo great: And, our Recordare, little; I vvill not ſay, how little, but (ſure) too little for that, we have received.

Now, albeit it be all our caſe (for, we all have received) yet, not all our caſe alike; but of ſome, more than other. For, ſome have received in farre more plentifull manner, than other ſome; and they therefore more deepely intereſſed in it. And looke, who among us have received moſt, them it moſt concerneth: and they (of all other) moſt need to looke to it.

If you aske, Why they more than others? For that (beſides the duty) to whom a great Recepiſti is given, of them a great Recordare will be required. The danger alſo helpes them forward. For, ſo it oft happeneth unhappily: that, whereas Recepiſti is made (and ſo may well bee) a motive, for us to remember: ſo croſſe is our nature, none is ſo great an enemy to Recordare as it. Our great receiving is oft occaſion of our little remembring. And as a full diet in the veſſells of our body; ſo, a plenteous receipt breeds ſtoppings in the minde, and memory, and the vitall parts of our ſoule.

We have hereof a lively example before our eyes: And ſuch an one, as if it move us not, I know not what will. A receipt, for memories that ſuffer obſtructions.

OUR SAVIOUR CHRIST unlocked hell gates to let us ſee it. In diſcovering what ſighes and what ſufferings are in the other world, hee ſheweth us our lying in them, to whom Abraham objecteth, that this franke receiving had marred his memory. And as he ſheweth us his fault, ſo (withall) what came to him for it, in that ſtrange and fearefull conſequent: Now therefore thou art tormented.

This example is told by our SAVIOUR (in the XIIII. verſe) to other rich
Verſe 9. men, and troubled with the ſame lethargie. Who, when hee put them in minde, It would not be amiſſe, while they were here, to make them friends of that they had received, that, when this failed them (as faile them it muſt) that might receive them into everlaſting tabernacles: forget themſelves ſo farre, as they derided His counſell; not, in words, but per myctériſmum. Which maketh Him fall from Parables, to a plaine ſtory (for, ſo it is holden by the beſt Interpreters, both old and later:) and, from everlaſting tabernacles, to everlaſting torments: That, howſoever they regarded not His Recordare on earth, they had beſt give better eare to ABRAHAMS, from Heaven.

It is his intent, in reporting of it, that our remembring of it ſhould keepe us from it. Non vult mortem, & minatur mortem, ne mittat in mortem, (ſaith Chryſoſtome:) He would not have us in that place; yet Hee telleth us of that place, to the end wee never come in that place.

Yea, it is Abrahams deſire too, we ſhould not be overtaken, but thinke of it in time; and prevent it, before it prevent us. And therefore he lifteth up his voyce, and cryeth out of Heaven, Recordare fili.

And, not onely ABRAHAM, but hee that was in the place it ſelfe, and beſt knew the terrour, becauſe hee felt it; felt that, in it, as hee heartily wiſheth and inſtantly ſueth, that they, whom hee loveth, or any way wiſheth well to, may Verſe 27. 28. ſome way take warning, Ne & ipſi veniant, That they alſo come not into that place of torments.

This uſe, CHRIST on earth, Abraham from Heaven, and hee out of hell, wiſh we may have of it. And wee (I truſt) will wiſh our ſelves no worſe than they: and therefore looke to our Recordare, carry it in minde, and (in Recordare, there is Cor, too) take it to heart; and by both, in time take order, Ne & ipſi veniamus.

The

The verſe it ſelfe (if we mark it well) is, in figure and proportion, an exact croſſe. For, as a Croſſe, it conſiſteth of two bars or beames ſo ſituate, as the one doth quarter the other. Thou receivedſt good things, and Lazarus received evill. Theſe two lye clean contrary: But meet both, at the middle word, Now therefore: and there, by a new Antitheſis, croſſe each other: ὁ μὲν, He that received evill, is comforted: and σὺ δὲ, thou that didſt receive good, art tormented. And, to make it a perfect Croſſe, it hath a title or Inſcription too, ſet over it: and this it is, Recordare fili. And ſure, next to the Croſſe of CHRIST and the memory thereof, this croſſe of Abrahams invention and exaltation is (of all others) moſt effectuall. And I verily perſwade my ſelfe, if we often would fix it before our eyes, and well marke the inſcription, it would be a ſpeciall preparation to our Paſſeover (meaning, by our Paſſeover, our end) whereby paſſe we muſt, yer long, into another ſtate, either of miſery or bliſſe: but, whether of miſery, or bliſſe, it will lye much in the uſe of this word Recordare.

The Diviſion

Firſt then we will treat, [1] of the Croſſe: After, [2] of the Title. I.

We have in the Croſſe two Barres: But, with both, we will not meddle. For, why ſhould we deale with Lazarus? This place is not for him; nor he no roome in this Auditory. Therefore, waving his part, in this other (of the Rich mans) wo have two quarters, repreſenting unto us two eſtates: [a] The upper part, or head, Recepiſti bona in vitâ, his eſtate, in this life, [b] The nether, or foot, jam verò torqueris: his eſtate, in the other. II.

Of theſe two: [1] That, two they are: [2] which they be: [3] and how they be faſtened, or tenanted the one to the other, with the Illative, therefore.

I.

Of the Croſſe.

TO quarter out this Croſſe: Two parts it ſtands of; which two parts are two eſtates; [1] One paſt, [2] The other, preſent: The one, in Memory: The other, in experience. Now, both memory and experience (memory of things paſt, and experience of things preſent) are (both) handmaids to providence, and ſerve to provide for things to come. And, of all points of providence, for that which is the higheſt point of all, that our memory of it, keep us from experience of this place, this concluſion.

Theſe two are ſet down: [1] The one eſtate, in the words Vitâ tuâ: [2] The other, in the words Iam verò, but now. The former, paſt with him, and yet preſent with us: For, we yet receive. The later, preſent with him, but (with us) yet to come, or rather (I truſt) never to come: Iam verò torqueris.

1. The upper part of it. 2. The preſent eſtate.

In vita tua recepiſti.

1 The firſt is the life in eſſe, which we all now live: which though it be one and the ſame, yet is there in it a ſenſible difference, Pauper & dives obviaverunt, of ſome poore, and ſome rich, every day meeting each other.

2 But, Nemo dives, ſemper dives: and again, Nemo pauper, ſemper pauper. They that be rich in it, ſhall not ever be rich; nor they that are poore, poore alway. It came to paſſe (ſaith the Scripture) that the begger died (verſe 22.) Mortuus eſt etiam & dives, and the rich man (for all his riches) died alſo. There ends the firſt eſtate.

3 But, that end is no finall end. For, after Vitâ tuâ there is a Iam verò, ſtill: a ſecond ſtate in reverſion, to take place when the firſt is expired. Our hearts miſgive us of ſome ſuch eſtate: and (as the Heathen man ſaid) they, that put it off with quis ſcit? who can tell, whether ſuch eſtate be? ſhall never be able to rid their minds of quid ſi? but, what if ſuch a one be, how then? But, to put us (that be Chriſtians) out of all doubt, our Saviour Chriſt, by this ſtory, openeth us a Caſement into the other life, and ſheweth us, whither we go, when we go hence.

1. Firſt, That, as in this life (though but one, yet) there are two diverſe eſtates; ſo to death (though it be, but one neither) hath two ſeverall paſſages: And, thorow it, as thorow one and the ſame City gate, the honeſt ſubject walketh abroad for his recreation, and the lewd malefactor is carried out to his execution.

2 Two ſtates then there be, after death; and theſe two diſ-joyned in place, diſ-like in condition: both ſet down within the verſe; [1] One, of comfort: [2] The other, of torment.

3 And, that both theſe take place jam, preſently. For, immediately after his death, and, while all his five brethren yet lived, and yet any of them were dead, he was in his torments, and did not expect the generall Iudgement, nor was not deferred to the end of the world.

4 And (to make it a compleat croſſe, for ſo it is) as the poore and rich meet here, ſo do they, there, alſo, otherwhile; and go two contrary wayes, every one to his own place. Lazarus to his boſome, the rich man to his gulf: and, ones miſery endeth in reſt; the others purple and fine linnen in a flame of fire. Verè ſtupenda vices (ſaith Chryſoſtome) verily a ſtrange change, a change to be wondred at: to be wondred at and feared, of thoſe whom it may concerne any manner of way, and (at any hand) to be had in remembrance.

1 To apply theſe two, to the party, we have in hand, and to begin with the firſt eſtate, firſt. Two things are in it ſet down by him: [1] The one, in the word Fili: [2] The other, in the word Recepiſti.

1 Fili. Firſt, that he was Abrahams ſon, and ſo, of the religion only true: and one, that (as himſelfe ſaith of himſelfe) had had Moſes and the Prophets, though tanquam non habens, as though he had them not. For, little he uſed, and leſſe he regarded them; yet, a Profeſſor he was.

2 Recepiſti. Secondly: as by nature, ABRAHAMS ſonne: ſo by condition or office, one of Gods Receivers. Receivers we are, every one of us, more or leſſe: but yet, in receipts, there is a great latitude. Great, betweene her, that received two mites; and him, that received a thouſand talents. Betweene them, that receive tegumenta only, covering for their nakednes; and them, that receive ornamenta, rich attire alſo, for comlineſſe: and again, that receive alimenta, food for emptineſſe; and oblectamenta, delicious fare for daintineſſe. Now, he was not of the petie, but of the maine receipt. It is ſaid: Hee received good things, and it is told, what theſe good things were, Purple of the faireſt, and linnen of the fineſt: and quotidie ſplendidè, every day a double feaſt. Which one thing, though there were nothing elſe, asketh a great Receipt alone. Here, rich; in this life; and who would uot ſue to ſucceed him in it? One would think, this wood would make no croſſe, nor theſe premiſſes ſuch a now therfore. But, to him, that was thus and had thus, all this plenty, all this pleaſure; poſt tantas divitias, poſt tantas delicias; to him, is this ſpoken, but now thou art tormented. Which firſt eſtate, as it was rich, ſo it was ſhort: therefore, I make ſhort with it, to come to cruciaris. Which, though in ſyllables, it is ſhorter, yet it is in ſubſtance, that peece to which he is faſtened, in legnth of continuance far beyond it.

2 The nether part of the croſſe. The ſecond ſtate, Cruciaris.

Cruciaris is but one word, but much weight lyeth in it: therefore it is not ſlightly to be paſſed over, as being the ſpeciall object of our Recordare, and the principall part of the croſſe indeed. Two wayes our SAVIOUR CHRIST expreſſeth it: [1] One while under the terme βασανος, which is torture: [2] Another, under the terme ὀδύνη, which is anguiſh of the Spirit: referring this, to the inward paine; and that, to the outward paſſion. The ſoule being there ſubjected by GODS juſtice, to ſenſuall pain, for ſubjecting it ſelfe willingly to brutiſh ſenſuallity, in this life, it being a more noble and celeſtiall ſubſtance.

Of which paine, Saint CHRYSOSTOME noteth, that becauſe many of us can skill, what torment the tongue hath, in extremity of a burning ague; and what paine our hand feeleth, when from the hearth ſome ſpark lighteth on it: CHRIST choſe to expreſſe them in theſe two. Not, but that they be incomparably greater than han theſe: yea, far re above all we can ſpeake, or thinke: but that fleſh and blood conceiveth but what it feeleth, and muſt be ſpoken to, as it may underſtand. And it is a ground, that, in termes (here and elſe-where) proportioned to our conceit, torments are uttered farre beyond all conceit: which, labouring to avoid, we may; but labouring to expreſſe, we ſhall never do it.

Yet, to helpe them ſomewhat, we ſhall the more deepely apprehend them, if we doe but compare them: as we may; and never goe out of the confines of our owne verſe.

With Recepiſti, firſt. To conſider this: that his torment is in the preſent tenſe, now upon him, Cruciaris: His good, all paſt and gone, Recepiſti. Marke (ſaith S. Auguſtine) of his pleaſure, omnia dicit de præterito; Dives erat, veſtiebatur, Epulabatur, Recepiſti: He was rich, did go, did fare, had received: was, did, and had; all paſt, and vaniſhed away; all (like the counterpane of a Leaſe) expired, and our Abraham likneth it to wages, received and ſpent before-hand. 1

Secondly, if we lay together his torments, and bona tua in vitâ. For, we ſhall find, they are of a diverſe ſcantling. The one had an end with his life; and ô quàm ſubito! The other, when it beginneth once, ſhall never have an end. That life is not like this. No: if all the lives of all, (I ſay not of men, women, and children, but of all) and every of the creatures, that ever lived upon the earth, or ſhall live to the worlds end, were all added one to another, and all ſpun into one life, this one exceedeth them all. This then (I make no queſtion) will make another degree, to think, quod delectabat fuit momentaneum, quod cruciat eſt æternum. 2

Thirdly, if we match it with Lazarus autem; that is, with the ſight of others in that eſtate, whence he is excluded: and in them, with ſorrow to conſider, what himſelfe might have had and hath loſt for ever. There ſhall be (ſaith CHRIST of this point) weeping, and gnaſhing of teeth, to ſee Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdome of God, and your ſelves thruſt out of doores. Not only weeping, for griefe that themſelves have loſt it; but gnaſhing of teeth alſo, for very indignation, that others have obtained it. And, of others, not ſome other; but, that Lazarus iſte, one of theſe poore people, whom we ſhun in the way, and drive our coaches apace to eſcape from: that, of them, it may fall, we may ſee ſome in bliſſe, when they ſhall lye in hell like ſheepe (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) that walked on earth like Lions. Will not this beare a third? 3 Chap. 13. 28. Pſal. 84. 15.

But beyond all theſe, If we counterpoiſe it with the word παρακαλεῖται, is comforted, with which Abraham hath ſet it in oppoſition: Torment oppoſed to comfort; (that is) torment comfortleſſe, wherein, no manner hope of any kind of comfort. Neither of the comfort of mitigation; for (in the verſe next before) all hope of ἀναψυξις, relief is denied, even to a drop of water: Neither of the comfort of delivery at laſt; for (in the verſe next following) he is willed to know, that by reaſon of the great partition, their caſe is ſuch, ut non poſſunt that they cannot preſently, or for ever, look for any paſſage from thence, but muſt there tarry in torments everlaſtingly. So, neither comfort of reliefe, nor of delivery: nor the poore comfort, which, in all miſeries (here) doth not leave us, 4 Verſ. 24. Verſ. 26.

——dabit Deus his quoq; finem;

An end will come: Nay, no end will never come. Which [never] is never deeply enough imprinted, nor ſeriouſly enough conſidered. That this [now] ſhall bee ſtill now, and never have an end: and this cruciaris be cruciaris for ever, and never declined into the preter tenſe, as Recepiſti was. This is an exaltation of this croſſe, above all elſe: None ſhall ever come downe from it: none ſhall ever beg our body, to lay it in our ſepulcher.

Fifthly, If we lay it to Recordare. For, may I not adde to all theſe, that, being in this caſe, he heareth Recordare, and is willed to remember, when his remembring will do him no good: but though he remember it, in ſorrow, and in the bitternes of his ſoule: yea, though his ſorrow be above meaſure ſorrowfull, it will profit him nothing? I ſay, Griefe both utterly comfortleſſe, and altogether unprofitable. 5

Theſe five make him that feeles it (here) wiſh, that none of thoſe, hee wiſheth well, may ever come there to know, how hot that fire, or how terrible that torment is.

These five words are (all) within the compasse of the Verse it selfe; and may serve (every one) as a naile to fasten our memorie to this crosse: that we may ever remember it and never forget it, and, never forgetting it, never feele it.

This then is his crosse. We long (I know) to have it taken downe; our eares are daintie, and the matter melancholike, and we little love to heare it stood on so long. But, Chrysostome saith well of that fire: Nunquid, si tacuimus, extinximus? If we speak not of it, will it go out? No, no: sive loquamur, sive taceamus, ardet ille: speak we, or keep we silence, it burneth still, still it burneth. Therefore, let us speak, and think of it, and let it stand in the name of God: Et exerceamus auditum (saith the good Father) ne ita molleſcat, and keep our eares in exercise, that they grow not nice. If, to heare of it, be painefull; to feel it will be more. The invention is to keep the exaltation, to take it up. For, none so neare it as they, qui non tollunt, donec super -imponitur, that take it not up, till it be laid upon them.

3. The joyning, or Tenon. Iam vero.

Thus, we have severally seene the counter-points of this crosse: the top, which is in vitâ, in this life; and the foot, which reacheth ad noviſſima inferni, to the bottome of hell. It remaineth we tenon both these together, as antecedent and consequent: Thou diddest receive: Now therefore. [1] First, that they may be: [2] And then, how they may be joyned.

1. First then we find, that Recepiſti is, as it ends; and that, by this example, it may end in cruciaris, and prove the one end of an heavie Crosse. Which first bringeth us out of admiration of the riches of this life. When we see, that these good things, which (after the tax of the world) are counted, and (in a manner) stiled the only good things, and in the deceitfull ballance of this world, weigh downe Abrahams bosome; be not ever demonstrative signes of GOD's speciall liking: Nor they, ipso facto highest in His favour, that receive them in greatest measure: Nor peradventure (as CHRIST saith) so highly accompted of in Heaven, as they bee on earth. Therefore, they that have them, not to reflect too much on them; nor be ideò inflati (as saith Saint Auguſtine) quia obſericati; as much pride in their soule, as purple on their body. And they that have them not, not to æmulari, vex and grieve themselves at Nabals wealth, Hamans preferment, this mans table; seeing there commeth a Iam verò; and when that commeth, we shall see such an alteration in his state, as hee that wisheth him worst, shall wish, that for every good thing, hee received here, he had received a thousand; and (with S. Bernard) Vt omnes lapides converterentur in roſas, that every stone under his feet here had been turned into a rose. Such is his case, now: and such theirs, that come where he is.

Verſ. 15.

2. Is this all? No. But, as it bringeth us out of admiration; so it bringeth us into feare. For, two things it offereth, either of which is, or may be matter of feare. 1. First, in that he is Abrahams son. That Abraham hath of his seed in hell: and that all his sons shall not rest in their Fathers bosome. Which offereth us occasion to feare, for all our Profession. For, though he were a son too, and so acknowledged by Abraham, yet, there he is now.

2 In that he is of Abraham's rich sons, and one that received good things in his life. Which ministreth new matter of feare: that (as the Prophet saith) Tophet is prepared of old, and that even for great ones; for such as goe in purple, and weare fine linnen, and fare full daintily: Even for such, is it prepared. Not, as every prison, for common persons; but, as Tophet (or the Tower) for great Estates. So that it may seeme, either of both these have their danger at their heeles; For, that, they to him were; to many, they are: and to us they may be, as Antecedents to an evill Consequent.

Esay 30.33.

Men verily may flatter themselves: But sure, I can never thinke but there is more, in this Now therefore, than the World will allow. And that this Recordare of

Abraham's

Abraham's is not a matter ſo ſlightly to be ſlipped over. There is ſome danger (no doubt) and that more than will willingly be acknowledged, to ſuch as are wealthie, and well at eaſe in Sion. Saint Gregory confeſſeth by himſelfe, that never any ſentence entred ſo deepe into his ſoule as this. And that, as Surgite mortui was ever in Saint Hieroms eare: And Non in comeſſationibus, not in ſurfetting, in Saint Auguſtines, by which he was firſt converted: So, this was with him; and he could not get it out of his minde. For, he ſitting in the See of Rome, when it was growne rich and of great receipt, was (as he ſaith) ſtill in doubt of Recepiſti: whether his exalting into that Chaire might not be his recompence at GOD'S hands, and all that ever hee ſhould receive from Him, for all his ſervice. And ever he doubted this Recepiſti (which we ſo eaſily paſſe over) and whether his caſe might not be like. Thus did the good Father; and (as I thinke) not unwiſely: And, would GOD, his example herein, might make due impreſſion, and worke like feare, in ſo many as have, in the eyes of all men, received the good things in this life. For, this may daily be ſeene every where, that divers, that received them, if ever any did; and that, in a meaſure heaped up and running over; carry themſelves ſo without remembrance or regard of this point, as if no ſuch Simile were in the Scripture, as that of the Needles-eye: No ſuch example, as of this Rich-man: No ſuch Recordare as this of Abraham, which we have in hand. It ſhould ſeeme, they have learned a point of divinitie, Abraham never knew: Balaams divinitie (I feare) to love the wages of unrighteouſneſſe and a gift in the boſome, and yet to crie Moriatur anima mea, his ſoule ſhould goe ſtraight to Abraham's boſome for all that: And ſo, in effect, to deny Abraham's Conſequence.

Amos 6. 1. Rom. 13. 13. Mat. 19. 24. 2 Pet. 2. 15. Numb. 23. 10.

Wee muſt then joyne iſſue upon the maine point, we cannot avoid it: To enquire, how this Now therefore commeth in: And how farre, and to whom, this Conſequent holdeth. I demand then: Was hee therefore tormented, becauſe hee received good things? Is this the caſe of all them that weare purple and fare well in this life? Shall every one, to whom GOD, reacheth ſuch good things as theſe, bee quit for ever from Abraham's boſome? By no meanes. For, Cujus eſt ſinus, whoſe is the boſome? Is it not Abraham's? And, what was Abraham? Looke Geneſis XIII. ver. II. Abraham was rich in cattell, in ſilver and gold. There is hope then for rich men, in a rich mans boſome. Then, the boſome it ſelfe is a rich mans, though a Lazarus bee in it. Yea, though we finde here Lazarus in it: Yet elſe-where, we finde, he is not all. For, the great Lord that bare rule under Queene Candaces: The elect Lady: Ioſeph of Arimathea, and the Areopagite (grave and wiſe Counſellours:) The Purple-ſeller (and if the Purple-ſeller, why not the Purple-wearer?) Yes, the Purple-wearer too, were in earth, Saints (as we read) and are (we doubt not) in Abraham's boſome alſo.

Act. 8. 27. 2 Iohn 1. Act. 17. 34. 16. 14. Dan. 5. 29.

It was not therfore, becauſe he was rich: for then muſt Abraham himſelfe have beene ſubject to the ſame ſentence. Nay, one may ſo be rich, and ſo uſe his riches together, as they ſhall conclude in the other figure and end in ſolaris; and no wayes hinder, but help forward his accompt; and bring him a ſecond recipies of the good things of that eternall life. And (if you mark it well) we have here, in this Scripture, two rich men: [1] One, that giveth the Recordare: [2] The other, to whom it is given. The example of a rich man, which rich men to avoid. The ſentence of a rich man, which rich men to remember.

It is evident: It was not, for that he had received good things in this life: Seeing, as truly as Abraham ſaid to him, Son remember, thou didſt receive good things: So truly might hee have rejoyned, Father remember, thou didſt receive, &c. It was not that. 1

Neither was it, becauſe he came by them unduely, by ſuch wayes and meanes, as the ſoule of GOD abhorreth: For, it is (ſaith Bernard) Recordare quia recepiſti; not quia rapuiſti, or quia decepiſti, by ravin or deceipt. 2

Neither was it, becauſe he received them, and wrapped them up. For, as his receipts 3 are in this verſe: So his expences, in the XIX. So much in purple, and linnen; So much in feaſting.

4. Neither was it, becauſe receiving plenty, he tooke his portion of that, he received, in apparell or diet. For, Num ſolis ſtultis apes mellificant (ſaith the Philoſopher) doe Bees make honey, or Wormes ſpinne ſilk for the wicked or reprobate only? (Howbeit, it cannot be extuſed, that being but Homo quidam, he went like a Prince: for, purple was Princes weare.) Or, that he feaſted, and that not meanely, but λαμπρῶς, in all ſumptuous manner: and that, not at ſome ſet times, but καθ' ἡμέραν, day by day: (for, this portion was beyond all proportion.)

None of theſe it was. Yet we hold ſtill, ſome danger there is; there is ſome: and this Recordare is not idle or needleſſe.

What was it then, that brought him thither, or (as S. Bernard calleth it) what was his Scala inferni, the ladder by which he went down to hell? that we may know, what is the difference between Abrahams receipt and his: and when Recepiſti ſhall conclude with Cruciaris.

Saint Chryſoſtome doth lay the weight on the word Recepiſti, in his naturall or proper ſenſe. For, it is one thing (ſaith he) λάβειν (that is, accipere) to receive or take; another, ἀπολαβεῖν (that is, recipere) to receive it, as it were in full diſcharge and finall ſatisfaction. (And the ſame diſtinction doth CHRIST Himſelfe obſerve in ἔχειν and ἀπέχειν, in the VI. Chapter of Saint Matthew.) Both have, and both receive: But, they
Mat. 6. 16. that doe λάβειν, receive them, as a pledge of GOD's further favour: But they that doe ἀπολαβεῖν, receive them, as a full and compleat reward, and have no more to receive, but muſt thereupon releaſe, and quit claime all demands, in whatſoever elſe. Tanquam arrham, and tanquam mercedem is the diſtinction in Schooles.

1. With GOD verily it is a righteous thing, to let every man receive, for any kind of good, he hath done here. Yea, even the Heathen for their morall vertues (as S. Auguſtine holdeth of the Romans, and the victories they received.)

2 But, righteous it is alſo, that the Reubenites, which chooſe their lot in Gilead on this ſide of Iordan, and there ſeat themſelves, ſhould not after claime their part too, in the Land of Promiſe. Even ſo that they that will have, and have their receiving time, here, ſhould not have it here, and elſewhere alſo.

3. Then, all is in the choice, where we will lay our Recepiſti: whether here or there, in this or that life: In Purple, and Silke, and the delights of the world: or, in the reſt and comfort of Abrahams boſome. Whether we will ſay: LORD, if I may ſo receive, that I may be received: If I may receive ſo the good of this life, that I be not barred the other to come; tanquam arrham, as the earneſt of a better inheritance, Ecce me. But if my receiving here, ſhall be my laſt receipt: If I ſhall receive them tanquam mercedem, as my portion for ever; I renounce them, Put me out of this receipt, and reſerve my part in ſtore for the Land of the living. And of evill: If it muſt come here, or there (with S. Auguſtine) Domine, hîc ure, hîc ſeca; Ibi parce: Let my ſeering and ſmart be here; there let me be ſpared: And from Cruciaris, the torment to come, Libera me Dimine.

To very good purpoſe ſaith the Ancient Father: Quiſq; dives, quiſq; pauper, nemo dives, nemo pauper: Animus omnia facit. It is ſomewhat, to be rich, or poore; it is nothing, to be rich, or poore; it is, as the mind is: The mind maketh all. Now (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) what mind he carried, is gathered out of Abrahams doubling, and trebling, Tu tua and tuâ: Recepiſti tu, bona tua, in vita tua: which words are working words (as he taketh them) and contain in them great Emphaſis. Vnderſtanding (by tua) not ſo much that, he had in poſſeſſion; as that he made ſpeciall reckoning of: For, that, is moſt properly termed ours: Animus omnia facit.

1. This life is called his life; not becauſe he lived in it, but becauſe he ſo lived in it, as if there had beene no other life but it. And in his accompt, there was no other;
Joh. 8. 56. Δὸς μοι τὸ σήμερον λαβὲ σὺ τὸ αὔριον, Give him this life; let this day be his day; take to morrow who will. This did not Abraham: For, he ſaw a day, and that after this life, that rejoyced him more than all the dayes of his life.

This

This life as it was His life; So the good of it, His good, Bona tua. This, His life, these the portion of His life: these He chose for His good: they, His; and He, theirs. They that make such a choise, their Recepisti may well end in Cruciaris.

This way, S. Chrysostome: by the mind. S. Augustine taketh another, by the memorie, more proper to the Patriarch's meaning: and that foure wayes:

1 For (saith he) Abraham willing him to remember, he had received such things; implyeth (in effect) that he had cleane forgotten, that any such things he had ever received. Look how Esau speaketh, Habeo bona plurima, I have enough, my Brother: And, as his pew-fellow here, Luke 12. Anima habes, Soule, thou hast goods enough: Even so for all the world, it seemeth, this partie here, he had them: Sure he was, he had them: but that he received them, he never remembred. Now he is put in mind, quia recepisti: Now therefore thou art tormented. Gen. 33. 9. Luk. 12. 19.

2 Now, not remembring he had received them, no marvell if he forgate, why hee received them, or with what condition: Forgetting God in heaven, no marvell if he remembred not Lazarus on earth. Verily, neither he nor any man receive them, as Proprietaries; but as Stewards, and as Accomptants, as Christ telleth us, above in this Chapter. Not, for our selves only, or for our owne use; but for others, too; And among others, for Lazarus by name. If Lazarus receive not, it was his fault, and not God's, who gave him enough to supply his owne uses, and Lazarus want too. For both which too, he, and all receive, that receive at God's hands: But he (it seemeth) received them to and for himself alone, and no body else: that Abraham saith truly, Recepisti tu; tu & nemo alius: You, and yours, and no body besides. For, his Recepisti ended in himselfe, and he made himselfe Summam omnium receptorum. For, if you call him to accompt by the writ of Redde rationem, this must be his Audit: In purple and linnen, so much; and in bellie-cheere, so much: So much on his backe, and so much on his board, and in them endeth the totall of his Receipt: Except you will put in his hounds too, which received of him, more than Lazarus might. This is indeed Recepisti tu solus. This did not Abraham: For, his receipt reacheth to strangers, and others besides himselfe; and, Lazarus he received in his bosome on earth, or else he had never beene in heaven, to have him there.

Will you see [now therefore] the Consequent in kinde? Therefore is this partie now in the Gulfe, because (living) himselfe was a gulfe: It is now Gurges in gurgite, but one Gulfe in another. While he lived, he was a Gulfe swallowing all: Now therefore, the gulfe hath swallowed him. Remember this, for it is a speciall point. For, if our purple and fine linnen swallow up our almes: If our too much lashing on, to doe good to our selves, make us in state to doe good, to none but our selves: If our riotous wasting on expences of vanitie, bee a gulf and devoure our Christian imploying in works of charity, There is danger in Recepisti, even the danger of [Now therefore] Gurges eras & in gurgitem projicieris, a Gulfe thou wert, and into the gulfe shalt thou goe. Ever, for the most part, you shall finde these two coupled. In Sodome; Pride, and fulnesse of bread, with not stretching the hand to the poore. In Iuda: Great boules of wine, and rich beds of ivorie, with little compassion on the misery of Ioseph. And here: Going richly, and faring daintily, with Lazarus bosome and bellie, both empty. The saying of S. Basil is highly commended, that ἀκόνη τῆς ἀπωτίας ἡ φιλοτιμία. Pride is Prodigalities whetstone. And so it is (sure;) and sets such an edge upon it in our expences, that it cuts so deepe into our receipt, and shares so much for purple and linnen, as it leaves but a little for Lazarus portion. Sure, so it is: lesse purple must content us; and somewhat must be cut off from quotidie splendidè, if we will have Lazarus better provided for. Ezek. 16. 49: Amos 6. 4.

This, I have stood a little on, that it may be remembred. It is Christ's speciall drift, both in the Parable before, and in this Story here: and remember it we must, if either (as, in that) we will be received into everlasting Tabernacles; or (as, in this) we will be delivered from everlasting torments.

3 Now I adde, that in thus forgetting Lazarus, to remember himselfe, hee remembred not himselfe neither, but failed in that too. For, whereas he consisted of two parts, [1] a body, and [2] a ſoule, he remembred the one ſo much, as he quite left the other out of his memento. For, his Recepiſti tu was his body, and nothing elſe. Now reaſon would, the body ſhould not take up the whole receipt; but that the poore ſoule ſhould be thought upon too. Purple and ſilke, and Ede, bibe, they are but the bodies part: But almes and workes of mercy, they, they be the ſoules. May not our ſoules be admitted ſuitors, that we would remember them (that is) remember Lazarus? for, that is the ſoules portion: For, the other part, he and we all remember faſt enough.

4 Thus, remembring neither GOD nor Lazarus, nay, nor his owne ſoule, his memorie thus failing him, GOD provided and ſent ſome, to put him in minde. Sure as he had received thoſe former good things, ſo alſo had he received Moſes and the Prophets, by his owne confeſſion: And in receiviug them, he had received a great benefit, and (peradventure) greater in this than the other: And Moſes had told him as much as Abraham tels him now: Vtinam noviſſima proviaerent, Would God (ſaith Moſes) men would remember the foure Noviſſima; 1. That there is a death; 2. There is a Iudgement: 3. There is a Heaven: 4. There is a Hell: But of all the foure, Noviſſima inferni (in the ſame Chapter) the nethermoſt; Nunc igitur cruciaris, the place of torments. The Prophets ſaid as much: Ieremie, Ever thinke, that an end there will be, Et quid fiet in noviſſimo, what ſhall become of us in that end? Who amongſt us (ſaith Eſay) can endure devouring fire? Who can dwell with ardores ſempiterni, everlaſting burnings? theſe he had: and if he had heard theſe, it is plainly affirmed, Audiant ipſos would have done it; they would have kept him, for ever comming in that place. But, theſe alſo living he ſtrove to forget, and (as ingenderers of melancholly) to remove them farre away. And, that he might the more eaſily doe it, it was thought not amiſſe, to call their authority in queſtion, whether they were worth the hearing or no. It is (in effect) confeſſed by him: that his five brethren and he were of one opinion; that the hearing of Moſes and the Prophets was a motive farre unworthy to carry ſuch men as they. An Angell from heaven, or one from the dead might (perhaps:) but, the Bookes of Moſes ſhould never move them. It was not, for nothing, he complaineth of his tongue: Illâ linguâ, with that tongue, he had ſcorned the Holy Oracles: peradventure, that place, wherein he now lay, with that tongue which, in that place, feeleth the greateſt torment; and, from that place, the ſmalleſt comfort: both which it had before prophanely derided.

Deut. 32. 29.

Deut. 32. 22.

Ier. 5. 31.

Eſay 33. 14.

Thus then you ſee his Scalam inferni, the briefe of his faults, for which his Receipt endeth in this bitter receipt of torments without end. [1] Epicuriſme: no life but this: No good but theſe here, Good attire, good cheere. [2] This was his reward: Amen, dico vobis, recepiſtis. (Saint Chryſoſtome two.) [1] Remembring neither GOD in heaven, nor Lazarus on earth; [2] but being a Gurges, a Gulfe of all that he received, himſelfe: [3] No not his owne ſoule; [4] nor (laſt of all) this place of torments, before he was in it; and ſcorning at Moſes for remembring him of it. This you ſee, And, in him, you ſee who they be, over whom Abraham ſhall reade the like ſentence, Qui habet aures, &c.

Mat. 6. 2.

II.

The title. Recordare fili.

Now then, wee have ſet up both ſides of this Croſſe, and faſtened each part to other with Now therefore: Let us affix the Inſcription, and ſo an end. That, is Recordare fili: The want of which brought him thither; The ſupply of it ſhall keepe us thence.

Fili recordare: Optimè dictum, ſed ſerò, Excellently well ſaid, but too late (ſaith Saint Bernard.) For, alas! commeth Abraham in now, with Recordare? Doth hee now affix the title? why, it is too late. True, it is ſo; But, till now, he would not ſuffer any to ſet it up. Before, while it was time, and when it might have done him good, then he would not endure it: Now he is faine (when it is out of time) to know, what in time might have done him good: and may doe others, if (in time) they look, to it. Indeed, to him now, it is of no uſe in the world; but only to let him ſee, by what Juſtice he is where he is; and what he ſuffereth, he ſuffereth deſervedly. The beſt beſt is, Abraham had more ſonnes than this ſon; and they may take good by it, and have uſe of that, whereof he had none. With this ſon it is too late; with ſome other, it is not. Not with us: we are yet upon the ſtage: Our Iam verò is not yet come. And for us, is this inſcription ſet up, and for our ſakes, both CHRIST reported, and S. Luke recorded this Recordare.

If you aske, What good is that? What is the good of exemplary Juſtice? What good is it to ſee a malefactor puniſhed, or to read in a paper the crime wherefore? What, but only that by reading what brought him thither, we may remember what will keep us from thence. The neglect of Recordare is the cauſe, he is there: why then, Recordare fili, and keep thee from thence. So, with one view of this inſcription, we read both his ruine and our owne remedie.

This is the right uſe of this title: GOD forbid we ſhould have no uſe of it, till we come where he is. But, it is therefore ſet over his head in that life, that wee may reade it in this: read it, and remember it: remember it and never have title ſet over ours,

It will be good then, ſometimes to keepe ſome day holy to the exaltation of this Croſſe, and to ſet this title before our eyes: to approach it and read it over: Yea, not once, but often to record this Recordare. Indeed, it is that S. Gregory ſaith: Recordatione magis eget verſus iſte quàm expoſitione: Indeed, it more needs a diſpoſition to remember it, than an expoſition to underſtand it.

We are yet: how long we ſhall, we know not, nor how ſoone vita tua will bee gone, nor, how quickly this Iam verò will come in place. This we know: betweene his ſtate and ours, there is only a puffe of breath in our noſthrils. That this life (ſhort though it be, and in a manner, a moment, yet) hoc eſt momentum, unde pendet æternitas: On it, no leſſe matter dependeth than our eternitie: or bliſſe or bane, comfort or torment. That in that place, without all hope either of releefe, eſcape or end: and that from thence, neither our profeßion of truth, nor the greatneſſe of our receiving ſhall deliver, but only this Recordare. It ſtandeth us then in hand, to take perfect impreſſion of this Recordare: and (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) Obliviſci quid ſimus, attendere quid futuri ſimus, to forget, what we now be; to conſider, what we ſhall be without all queſtion yer long, but we know not how ſoone: but, oft it falleth, the ſhorter and ſooner, the leſſe we think of it.

Three things then I wiſh, for concluſion: [1] that we may remember: [2] remember in time: [3] remember effectually. That we may remember the fire, the thirſt, and the torments; and know what they meane, by memory rather than by ſenſe. Abraham, from heaven cals to us to that end: The party in hell crieth, Ne veniant & ipſi. 1.

That we do it in time: that we be not in this caſe, never lift up our eyes, till we be in hell; nor remember that may do us good, till it be too late. 2

That we do it effectually from the heart: For, there is a heart in Recordare: And that, this being our greateſt buſineſſe, we make it not our leaſt care. 3

Our Remembring will be effectuall, if we pray to GOD daily, we may ſo receive, as we may be received. And our remembring ſhall be effectuall, if it have the effect, that is, make us remember Lazarus. Quotidiè Lazarus: You may find Lazarus, if you ſeek him, every day: Nay, you ſhall find him, though you ſeek him not. Our preſent eſtate, by preſent occaſion of the dearth now upon us, makes the memorie more freſh, than at other times it would be. Remember then our being remembred there, lyeth on this their remembrance here; and, upon their receiving, our recipies, or rather recipieris. And remember that day, wherein what wee have received ſhall bee forgotten; and what He hath received of us ſhall be remembred; and nothing elſe ſhall be remembred, but quod uni ex minimis. The attaining everlaſting tabernacles, the avoiding everlaſting torments lye upon it. That which we remember now in Lazarus boſome, ſhall be remembred to us againe in Abrahams boſome. To which, &c. Mat. 10. 42.

A SERMON PREACHED IN THE COURT AT GREENWICH,

On Sunday, being the IV of Aprill,

An. Dom. MDXCVI.

II Cor. Chap. XII. Verſ. XV.

Ego autem libentiſsime impendam, & ſuper-impendar ipſe pro animabus veſtris: etſi licet plus vos diligens, minus diligar.

And I will moſt gladly beſtow, and will bee beſtowed for your ſoules; though, the more I love you, the leſſe I am loved.

THE words be S. Pauls; and to the Corinthians. And, if we neither knew whoſe they were, nor to whom; yet this we might know by the words themſelves, that it is Love that ſpeaks, and unkindneſſe, that is ſpoken to. Impendam; ſuperimpendar; libentiſsimè: this muſt needs bee love, and that unkindneſſe, that requireth ſuch love, with ſuch an Etſi, Etſi minus diligar, Though the more I love, the leſſe I be loved.

I.

Many wayes it may be manifeſt, that S. Paul loved the Church of Corinth more than many other (loved them, for he laboured more for them.) By the time he ſpent with them, a yeare and a halfe full: Scarce with any ſo much. By his viſiting them three ſeverall times: Not any ſo oft. By two of his largeſt Epiſtles ſent to them: Not, to any the like. And in the one of them we ſee here, how frank and how kind a profeſſion he maketh, in quâ omne verbum charitatis igne vaporatur, wherein, every word carrieth a ſweet ſent of Loves perfume: (it is S. Gregory.) Theſe, each of theſe; but all theſe together, may prove his magis diligam, the abundance of His love to Corinth.

1 Cor 5.10. Acts 18.11. Verſ 14.

Now there ſhould be, in love, the vertue of the Load-ſtone, the vertue attractive, to draw draw like love to it againe. There ſhould be: but was not. For, their little love appeared by their many unloving exceptions which they took to him. To his offiee: That, he was but an Apoſtle of the ſecond head, and no wayes to be matched with the chiefe Apoſtles, verſ. 11. To his Perſon: That he was one of no preſence: Somewhat good Chap. 11. 6. at an Epiſtle, but his Perſon (or preſence) nothing worth (Chap. 10. 10.) To his preaching: that he was but ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, not ſo eloquent by much, as divers of them were; nor his Sermons ex opere Corinthiaco, of the Corinthian faſhion. Indeed, I know not how, but he could not hit on their veine.

This cold infuſion of ſo faint regard on their parts, might have quenched his 3 love. It did, Apollo's, for Apollo was once at Corinth, but found them ſo diverſe to pleaſe, as he waxed wearie and got him away; and when he was moved to returne to them πάντως οὐκ ἦν θέλημα, his mind was not at all to come there again as yet, ſaith S. Paul
1 Cor. 16. 12. (1 Cor. 16.) It made Apollos give over. So might it S. Paul too. But him, it did not: Charitas quæ ædificabat, the love wherewith he built, was like lime, ſlaked not, but rather kindled with water. For, notwithſtanding all theſe, ſuch was his zeale, and he Tantus zelator animarum, that we ſee his affection, that we heare his reſolution what it is: unkinde they might be, but no unkindneſſe of theirs, or verdict never ſo hard, or cenſure never ſo ſharpe; no minus diligar ſhould move him, or make him love their ſoules a whit the leſſe.

Wherein, leſt they might be jealous, he ſought to Corinth ſo oft, for the ore of it,
4 becauſe the ſoile was rich, there was good to bee done (as men are ever that way quick-eyed:) he appealed to all his former courſe with them, that he had ſought nothing hitherto. Nothing he had ſought, nor nothing he would ſeeke: And (to come Chap. 11. 8. 9. to this our verſe) not only ſeeke nothing; [1] But he would beſtow, [2] Beſtow, and be beſtowed himſelfe; [3] and that, moſt willingly (indeed it is higher, ἥδιστα, moſt gladly) [4] and all this (to uſe Chryſoſtomes words) not ἐπὶ τῶν οὐδὲ φιλούντων, for thoſe that had not begun to love him firſt, but ἐπὶ τῶν οὐδ' ἀντιφιλούντων, for thoſe that being loved firſt did not love him againe. [5] And that not κατ' ἴσα in equall meaſure (that, is not his complaint) but ſuch, as the more (it is fuller, in the Greeke, περισσοτέρως, the more abundantly) they were loved loved him the leſſe for it. The degrees are many: and looke how many degrees, ſo many ſeverall points of elevation.

All which when I conſider, I cannot chooſe but marvell at his love; which truly
5 is right admirable: And more at their minùs, than his magis: But, at his heroicall ſpirit, moſt of all, whom ſuch and ſo great unkindneſſe could not over-come. The rather, when I lay it to, and compare it with ours in theſe times: in which, a kind of love we have (ſuch as it is) but ſuch as will not endure Saint Pauls aſſay; Or, if in ſome degrees it doe, if it be not reſpected ſtraight (not as it deſerveth, for ſo haply it is, but as it ſuppoſeth it ſelfe to deſerve) if it be croſſed with any unkindneſſe, it groweth abrupt. Every minus diligar makes it abate; and farre wee are from this Chri-
Chap. 11. 12. ſtian magnanimitie, to reſolve with him (in the 11. Chap.) quod facio, hoc & faciam, what I doe, that I will doe ſtill: Or, here. Love I will ſtill, though, the more I love, the leſſe I be loved.

The thing loved, is the Corinthians ſoules. And (as Corinth it ſelfe was ſituate in a narrow land, betweene two Seas) ſo are they, in the verſe: having, on the one ſide, the Sea of ſelfe-love (in the former part:) and, on the other, the Gulfe of unkindneſſe (in the latter.) Through either of which, S. Paul maketh a firſt and ſecond navigation, if happily he may ſo adire Corinthum, gain their ſoules to CHRIST, more precious to him, than Corinth it ſelfe and all the wealth in it.

In the Love two things are offered. For, in the former moitie of the verſe, hee is
The Diviſion encountred with ſelfe-love, [1] which beſtoweth nothing; [2] but, leaſt of all, his life:
I. [3] Or if it doe, it is not moſt gladly; nay, not gladly at all. Theſe three hee beateth downe: the firſt, with Impendam; the ſecond, with Impendar: the third, with libentiſſimè. Thus having vanquiſhed the love of himſelfe in the former; in the latter moity, Vnkindneſſe riſeth up. Unkindneſſe, in them, for whom he had done all the former.

former. Over which ſecond enemie having a ſecond conqueſt alſo, and triumphing over it, with his Etſi; he ſheweth his love to be a love of proofe, to have all the perfections and ſignatures of Love: all which are within compaſſe of this verſe. Amor (as in Schooles we reckon them) [1] Impenſivus; [2] Expenſivus; [3] Intenſivus; and [4] Extenſivus. The two former, in the two verbs; [1] Active, Impendam; and [2] Paſſive, Impendar; Beſtowing, or ſpending; Beſtowed, or ſpent it ſelf. The two latter, in the Adverb and the Conjunction: [3] Intenſive, ſtraining it ſelfe to the higheſt degree, moſt gladly: and [4] Extenſive, ſtretching it ſelfe to thoſe that are fartheſt from love, and leaſt deſerve it Etſi minus diligar. [1] To ſpend; [2] To ſpend and be ſpent; [3] To ſpend and be ſpent moſt willingly. If the full point were there, it were enough. [4] But, not only Libentiſſimè; But, Libentiſſimè, Etſi; moſt gladly, yea, though the more he, the leſſe they, that is all in all.

But then, leſt we miſtake our terme of love (as, eaſily we may, and confound it with luſt) wee muſt looke to our pro in the ſecond part. It is, Pro animabus; ſoule-love, he meaneth all the while. Love, the fruit of the Spirit; Not luſt, the weed of the fleſh. Not, of this fleſh ſiſter to wormes, and daughter to rottenneſſe; but, of the Spirit allied to the Angels, and partaker, in hope, of the Divine nature it ſelfe. And, not of one only; but animabus, of ſoules: more than love of one ſoule; many ſoules, many thouſands of ſoules, of a whole State or Countrey. Them to love, and to them thus to prove our loue, is it, which S. Paul would teach; and it, which wee need to learne. Theſe be the two parts. Whereof, &c.

II.

Gal. 5. 22. Iob 17. 14. 2 Pet. 1. 4.

TO enter the treatie of the firſt part. We begin at the foure points, [1] Impendam, [2] Impendar, [3] Libentiſſimè, and [4] Etſi. If Love be an Enſigne (as, Can. 6.) the Colours; if it be a Band (as Hoſ. 11.) the twiſts; if a Scale (as, Chryſoſtome) the aſcents; if an Art, (as Bernard) the Rules of it. Indeed, they talke much of an Art of Love, and Bookes of verſes have beene written of it: but, above all verſes, is Carmen hoc amoris. This verſe hath more art than they all: and of this it may be ſaid, Me legat, & lecto carmine doctus erit: Learne it, and ſay you learned Love. To take them as they lye, and with the firſt, firſt. Ego verò impendam.

I.

The Love. Cant. 6. 3. Hoſ. 11. 4.

1 There was a world when one ſaid, da mihi cor tuum, & ſufficit: Beſtow your heart on me, and I require no further beſtowing; and the beſtowing of love, though nothing but love, was ſomething worth.

I. Amor impenſivus: Impendã.

2 Such a world there was: But, that world is worne out. All goeth now by Impendam: Love and all is put out to intereſt. The other empty-handed love, is long ſince baniſhed the Court, the Citie and the Countrey. For, long ſince it is, that King Saul ſaw it, and ſaid it to his Courtiers, that he was not regarded, but becauſe he gave them fields, and vineyards, and offices over hundreds and thouſands. Nor yet Diana in the Citie of Epheſus, magnified there by the Crafts-men, but, becauſe by her Silver Shrines, they had their advantage. Nay, nor CHRIST Himſelfe neither, in the Countrey, but becauſe they ate of the loaves and were filled. For, many miracles had they ſeene much greater than that, yet never profeſſed they ſo much, Sicut tunc exaturati, as when he beſtowed a good meale on them.

1 Sam. 22. 7. Act. 19. 24. Ioh. 6. 16.

3 Such is now the worlds love, but ſpecially at Corinth, where they doe caponari amorem indeed; ſet love to hire, and love to ſale; and at ſo high a rate, as ſome were forced to give over, leſt paying for love, they might buy repentance too; and both too deare.

4 There is no remedy then: Saint Paul muſt apply himſelfe to time and place, wherein (as all things elſe, ſo) love depends upon impendam, Yeelding and Paying.

5 Now,

5 Now, there is nothing so pliant as Love; ever ready to transforme it selfe, to whatsoever may have likelyhood to prevaile; and if it be Liberality, into that too. For, that love is liberall (nay prodigall) the Greeke Proverbe noteth it, that saith, The Purse-strings of love are made of a Leeke-blade; easily in sunder, and wide open with no great adoe.

6 Saint Paul therefore commeth to it; and as he maketh his case a Father's case towards them (in the verse next before:) So hee saith with the kinde Father, (Luke 15.) Ecce omnia mea tua sunt. Fathers love, and all must bee prooved by Bestowing.

Verse 14.
Luk. 15. 31.

7 Yea, I will bestow: Now alas, what can Paul bestow? Especially upon so wealthie Citizens? What hath he to part with, but his bookes and his Parchments? Ware, at Athens perhaps somewhat; but at Corinth, little used and lesse regarded. Indeed if silver and gold be all, and nothing else worth the bestowing, nothing will come under Imdendam, but it: his bestowing is stalled. But, by the grace of God, there is something else. There bee talents (so, the world will call them when they list, howsoever they esteeme them scarce worth pence a peece.) And there be treasures of wisdome and knowledge, in Christo Jesu (saith Saint Paul) Indeed, so had Saint Paul need to say; he had best magnifie his owne Impendam, for he hath nothing else to make of. Nay, it shall not stand upon his valuation. They that had both; both the wealth of Corinth and the wisdome of Paul, and both in aboundance, as being both of them Prophets: The one of them (King David) preferreth this Impendam of Paul's before gold, fine gold, much fine gold; and that we may know how much that much is, before thousands of gold and silver. This, was no poore Apostle. The other (King Salomon) saith directly: There is gold, and a multitude of rich stones; but the lips of knowledge, that, is the precious Iewell. And, not Policie; but Scientia Sacrorum, prudentia: the knowledge of holy things, is the wisdome he meaneth. And, it was no flourish: he was in earnest: For, it is well knowne he himselfe chose them before the other, when he was put to his choice; and, that his liking in that choice, was highly approved, by God's owne liking. The truth is, Men have no sense of their soules, till they be ready to part with them; and then is S. Pauls impendam called for (and never seriously before;) when their case is such as they can little feele, what the bestowing is worth.

And, because they would not seeke to feele it before, it is God's just punishment they feele it not then. But, if men will labour to have sense of that part in due time, they should finde and feele such an estate of minde, as none know, but such as have felt: surely such, as they would acknowledge to bee worth an Impendam. Indeed, this it is, Saint Paul can bestow; and this it is, Corinth needs; and the more wealthie it is, the more. The other, as he hath it not, so they need it not, that is, Aurum & Argentum: Quod autem habet, but that he hath, he is readie to bestow. What would we have more? Fecit quod potuit, saith our Saviour in Mary Magdalens case; and dedit quod habuit, in the case of the poor Widow's mites; and, that is as much as God doth, or man can require. But, be it little, or be it much, he that giveth all, leaveth nothing ungiven, and therefore his impendam is at the highest.

Act. 3. 6.
Mark 14. 8. 12. 44.
Luk. 21. 4.

2 Amor expensivus, Impendar.

But, when it is at the highest, the Passive Impendar, is higher than it. Much more, to be bestowed, than to bestow. And therefore it hath a Super-impendar bestowed on it. 1 For first, they that bestow, give but of their fruits; but, he that is bestowed, giveth fruit, tree, and all. In that, the bestower remained unbestowed: here, hee himselfe is in the deed of gift too. 2 Secondly, before there was but one act (of bestowing only;) here, in one, are both bestowing and being bestowed; and there being both must needs be better than one. 3 Thirdly, before, that which was bestowed, what was it? our good, not our blood; our living, not our life: Nondum ad sanguinem, nor yet so farre as to the shedding of blood: Then, there is somewhat behind: But, if to the shedding of that, then is it love at the farthest: if it bee

as

as Salomon ſaith, Fortis ſicut mors ; dare throw death his gauntlet. Majorem hoc nemo (ſaith CHRIST) greater love hath no man, than this, to beſtow his life. 4. And indeed, we ſee, many can be content to beſtow frankly ; but at no hand, to be beſtowed themſelvs: Yea, that they may not be beſtowed, care not what they beſtow. For, Self-love crieth to us, ſpare our living ; but in any wiſe, Propitius eſto tibi, to ſpare our life. Skin for skin is nothing but impendere ne impendamur ; to ſpend all we have to ſpare our ſelves. But hither alſo will S. Paul come from δαπανᾶν, to ἐκδαπανᾶσθαι, without any reſervation at all of himſelfe: To do or ſuffer ; to ſpend or to be ſpent.

Cant. 8. 6. Ioh. 15. 13. Mat. 16. 25. Iob 2. 4.

How to be ſpent? will he die? Yea indeed: What preſently here at Corinth? No; for at this time, and long after he was ſtill alive: and yet he ſaid truly impendar for all that. For, as before we ſaid, ſo ſay we in this: If there be no way to be beſtowed, but by dying out of hand: they that, in field, receive the bullet ; or they that, at the ſtake, have the fire ſet to them ; they and they only may be ſaid to be beſtowed. That, is a way indeed, but not the only way: but other wayes there bee beſide them too. As that is ſaid to bee beſtowed, not only that, is defrayed at one entire paiment ; but, that, which by ſeverall ſummes, is paid in ; eſpecially, if it bee, when it was not due ; nor could not be called for. This I meane: The Patriarch Lot, or the Prophet Ieremie, that dwelling where ſinne abounded, and ſeeing and hearing vexed their righteous ſoules with the daily tranſgreſſions of the People, and for their unkindneſſe too ; and therby prevented their term and paid Natures debt, yer their day came, beſtowed themſelves (ſay I) though, not at once. (For, hearts griefe and heavineſſe do more than beſtow, for they even conſume and waſte a mans life.) And Timothie, that he giving attendance to reading, meditation, and ſtudie, grew into an ἀσθένεια and often infirmities, and thereby ſhortned his time by much, beſtowed himſelfe (ſay I) though not at one inſtant. He that knew it bare witneſſe, that that courſe of life is a wearying, yea, and a wearing of it too ; and ſpends another manner ſubſtance than the ſweat of the browes. This then, for the preſent, was S. Paul's impendar: By intentive meditation (for his books and parchment tooke ſomewhat from his Summe ;) By ſorrow and griefe of heart ; for Quis ſcandalizatur, & ego non uror? and that he ſaid (and ſaid truly) Quotidiè morior, he beſtowed himſelfe by inch-meale ; and might avow his impendar before God or man. And ſo far, it is the caſe of all them that be in this caſe: Sal terræ, as CHRIST termeth them ; which Salt, by giving ſeaſon, melteth it ſelfe away, and ceaſeth in ſhort time to be that it was. Lux mundi, the light of the world. Aliis miniſtrando, ſeipſos conſumendo, Lightning others, and waſting themſelves: that is, abridging their naturall courſe, and drawing on their untimely diſeaſes and death, before their race be half run.

1 Tim. 4. 13. 5. 23. Eccleſ. 12. 12. 2 Cor. 11. 29. 1 Cor. 15. 31. Mat. 5. 13. 14.

But, to make it a perfect impendar and to give it his Super ; after all this, hee came to that other too. For ſo he did: in that point, like the poore labouring Oxe (to which, in the IX. Chapter of the former Epiſtle, he reſembleth his ſtate) ſpending his time, in earing the ground for corne, in inning the corne, in treading out the corne ; his Neck yoked, and his mouth muzzled ; and in the end when all is done, offered on the Altar too, and made a Sacrifice of. It was his caſe, and thither hee came at laſt: and therefore in both caſes, he might truly ſay impendar, and Super-impendar both.

1 Cor. 9. 9.

But to elevate it yet a point higher, wee ſay, that as either of theſe are much ; and both exceeding much: yet above both theſe is that, which (though we handle third, it) ſtandeth firſt, the adverbe Libentiſſimè. True it is, which in Divinitie wee ſay: With God, the Adverbe is above the Verbe ; and the inward affection (wherewith) above the outward action or Paſſion of Impendam or Impendar, either. With men, it is ſo too: When a diſpleaſure is done us, Say we not, we weigh not ſo much the injury it ſelfe, as the malicious minde of him that did offer it? And, if in evill it hold, why not in good much more? Not ſo much Impendar, the thing which ; as

3 Amor intenſivus: Libentiſſimè.

Libentiſſimè, the good heart, wherewith it is beſtowed. And, will you ſee the minde wherewith S. Paul will do both theſe? By this adverb ἥδιστα, you may looke into his very heart. Beſtow he will, and be beſtowed too; and that, not Vtcunque, in any ſort, be contented to come to it; but willingly: willingly, Nay, readily; Readily, nay gladly (and the degree is ſomewhat, ἥδιστα) moſt gladly, in the very higheſt of all, in the ſuperlative degree. To ſpend, and ſpending to make no more reckoning of it, than of chaff: Nay (it is more) to be glad of our loſſe; more glad, than others would be of their gain. To be ſpent, and in being ſpent, not to hold our life precious: Nor ſo, but to rejoyce in it, and as if death were advantage; In hoc eſt charitas, certainly. Death (of it ſelfe) is bitter, and loſſe is not ſweet: Then, ſo, to alter their natures, as to find ſweetneſſe in loſſe, whereat all repine; and gladneſſe in death, which maketh all to mourne; verily, herein is love: Or, if not here, where? Nay, here it is indeed; and before now, we had it not. For, in flat termes, he avoweth (in the XIII. Chapter before, of his former Epiſtle) if we ſever this from the other two: One may part with all his goods to feed the poore, and yet have no love: One may give his body to be burnt, and yet have no love: And then, though he doe impendere, beſtow all he hath; and though hee doe impendi, be beſtowed himſelfe, nihil eſt, he is nothing, if he want this affection, which is love indeed, the very ſoule of love, and the other but σκελετὸς, but the skin and bones, and indeed nought elſe but the carcaſſe, without it. Therefore it was, that S. Paul ſet this in the firſt place before the other two, becauſe the other two be but ciphers, and after this (the figure) ſet, they be tens and hundreds, and have their valuation: but without it of themſelves they be but ciphers, juſt nothing. Thus much S. Paul hath ſaid, in ſaying theſe three words, [1] Impendam, [2] Impendar, [3] Libentiſſimè. Thus much they amount to.

And now muſt we pauſe a little, to ſee, what will become of all this, and what theſe three will worke in the Corinthians.

We marvell at the Love: we ſhall more marvell, when we ſee, what manner of men, on whom it is beſtowed. What his proofes are, we have heard; how large and how loving; and thus farre is he come, only to win favour and like mutuall love at their hands, without eye to any other thing in the world. No Veſtra: (no) but Vos only. This is all. And, not this; not ſo much; Nay not ſo little, as this, will come. Which if it did come, what ſingular thing were it? ſince the very Publicans doe the like; love him, that loveth them. Which we gather by his Etſi. Wherein (as he may) in no lowd and bitter manner he complaineth, but complaineth though; that, ſeeking their love, and nothing elſe, ſo hard was his hap, he found it not: Not, in a greater, or as great a meaſure, as his; but, minùs for magis, and ſo he a great loſer by it. The more, the higher, the neerer, his; the leſſe, the lower, the further off, theirs: ſo that, little likelihood of ever meeting.

Ver. 14.

Mat 5.46.

This is S. Pauls caſe, to meet with unkindneſſe: and not only his, but CHRIST met with nine for one, too. Indeed, it is common, and not to be noted, but for commonneſſe. De ingratis etiam ingrati queruntur, They that are unkinde themſelves inveigh againſt the unkindneſſe of others. And, as it was ſaid of them that made Cæſar away; Oderunt tyrannum, non tyrannidem, ſo may it truly here: The Perſons (that are unkind) they hate, rather than the vice it ſelfe. Yet, even to know this, doth no hurt, what Saint Paul met with in the Corinthians; and this too, that all unkinde perſons dwell not at Corinth. And, as he to be pitied, ſo they to be blamed. All other commodities returne well from Corinth; only love is no trafficke. Saint Paul cannot make his owne againe, but muſt bee a great loſer, withall. We cannot but pitie the Apoſtle in this Minùs of his. Saint Auguſtine ſaith well: Nulla eſt major ad amorem provocatio, quàm prævenire amando: Nimis enim durus eſt animus, qui amorem etſi nolebat impendere, nolit tamen rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, exceeding ſtony is that heart, which, though it like not to Love firſt, will not Love againe neither; neither firſt, nor ſecond. Yet ſo hard were theirs that neither one way nor other, rectè, nor reflectè, would either either begin, or follow. No not, provoked by all those so many forcible meanes, that S. Chrysostome maketh a wonder at it, Quomodo non converterentur in amorem, that they were not melted and resolved into love it selfe.

Luk. 17.14, 15. &c.

Which cold successe openeth a way to the last point, the point indeed of highest admiration, and of hardest imitation of all the rest, in the conjunction Etsi: Which Conjunction is situated (much like Corinth it selfe) in a narrow land (as it were) betweene two Seas; beaten, upon the one with selfe-love, upon th'other with unkindnesse. Hitherto we had to doe, but with selfe-love, and his assaults: but now, unkindnesse also is up. These Corinthians (saith Saint Paul) my affection standeth toward them in all love; Love them and spare not (saith Selfe-love) but tene quod habes. Nay sure, Impendam, I will bestow it. Well; if there be no remedie: But (heare you?) Propitius esto tibi, for all that. Nay, not that neither: Impendar, I will be bestowed my selfe too. Potésne bibere calicem hunc (saith Selfe-love?) and can you get it downe, thinke you? Yea: Libentissimè exceeding gladly. There is the Conquest of Selfe-love.

Mark 10. 46

But, all this while, he lived still under hope, hope of winning their love, for whose sakes, he had trod underfoot the love of himselfe: Hope, that it had beene but Impendam, all the while; he should have had returned his owne againe at least. But; at this Etsi, all is turned out and in. For, this is as much to say, as, All is to little purpose: for (to his griefe) he must take notice, they care for none of them: nor for him ever a whit the more: yea, rather the lesse by a great deale. So that, all three be in vaine: Et supra omnem laborem labor irritus, No labour to lost labour; Nor expence of life or goods, to that is spent in vaine. For, that is not Impendam, but perdam, not spent, but cast away. Therefore the former, though it were funiculus triplex, a threefold cord, and not easily broken, would not hold, but flie in peeces, but for this Etsi. To have then an Etsi in our love: this Etsi, this εἰ καὶ οὐ, though in vaine, though our Impendam, prove a perdam: That is it. To bee able to turne the sentence and say, Though the more I love, the lesse I be loved, Yet will I bestow; yea, be bestowed, and that most gladly, for all that. It is hard, I confesse: but Solus amor erubescit nomen difficultatis, Love endureth not the name of difficultie, but shameth to confesse any thing too hard, or too dangerous for it. For verily, unkindnesse is a mightie enemie, and the wounds of it, deep. Nay there be, that of themselves are most kinde, in all the three degrees before remembred, as was King David, and as all noble natures are: why Selfe-love is nothing in their hands. But let them bee encountred with unkindnesse (as David was in Nabal) they cannot stand the stroke; it woundeth deep: and the festor of Discontentment more dangerous than it. Indeed (saith David) this fellow, I see, I have done all in vaine for him, for he rewardeth me evill for good: So and so do God to me, if he be alive to morrow by this time. Mark it in him; and in others infinite; and you shall see, whom Selfe-love could not, unkindnesse hath overcome: and who passed well along the other three, at minùs diligar their Love hath wracked, and from kind love, beene turned to deadly hate.

1 Sam. 25. 15. 21. 22.

But neither can this appall the Apostle, or dislogd his love: but thorow all the rest, and thorow this too, he breaketh with his Etsi, and sheweth he will hold his resolution, maugre all unkindnesse. Minus diligar shall not do it; Vnkindnesse must yeeld, Love will not.

And now we are come to the highest, and never till now: but, now we are; that further we cannot go. The very highest pitch of well-doing, the Heathen man saw in part: for, he could say, Beneficium dare & perdere, to bestow love, and lose it, is well done: but, that is not it. This is it; Beneficium perdere & dare, to lose the first, and yet bestow the second; Etsi, yea, though the first were lost.

Seneca.

Yea, the Love of Loues, CHRISTS owne love, what was it? Majorem hâc charitatem nemo habet, quàm ut vitam quis ponat pro amicis. Whereto Saint Bernard rejoyneth well, Tu majorem habuisti Domine, quia tu vitam posuisti etiam pro inimicis: Greater love than this hath no man, to bestow his life for his friends: Yet LORD

Ioh. 15. 13.

(saith S. Bernard) Thou hadst greater, for thou bestowedst thy life for thy very enemies. And, to this love it is, that S. Paul aspireth; and neere it he commeth; that in some sort we may likewise say to him, Tu majorem habuisti Paule, yes, thy love (Paul) was greater: for, thou art readie to doe the like; not for thine enemies, but for thy unkind friends, the next degree to professed enemies. [1]To spend, [2]To spend, and be spent: [3]To spend, and be spent, and that most gladly: [4]Not only most gladly, but most gladly, Tea though.

Thus you have now his double conquest: Over the Love of himselfe first; and now, over Minùs diligar, an unkind repulse too. And, in signe of victorie, he setteth up his colours, even these foure: [1]Impendam, [2]Impendar, [3]Libentissimè, and [4]Etsi, But Etsi is the chiefe; it is CHRISTS colour; and, that no perfect Love, that wanteth Etsi.

II.
The object of his Love.

Thus we have seene Love in his highest ascendent, and heard Love in his Magisterium, the hardest and highest, and indeed the Master-point of this Art. Which setteth us new on worke, to passe over into the second part, and to enquire, what this object may be, so amiable, whereon Saint Paul hath set his affection so, that for it, he will doe and suffer all this; and that, so willingly without any exception, so constantly, without any giving over. All this is nothing but the zeale of soules, Zelus animarum faciet hoc: It is, for their soules, all this. For their soules; and let their bodies goe.

I
Pro animabus, for your soules,

Which (first) draweth the diameter that maketh the partition betweene the two Loves: The love which S. Paul found; and the love which S. Paul left at Corinth. For, he found that which is Scelus corporum, the bodies unruly Affection, and infection too otherwhile; (if ever in any place, there, it abounded) but, he left Zelus animarum, the Soules perfection. Indeed, it falleth out sometimes, that, in carnall love (or rather lust, than love) we may patterne all the former; and find (as the Wiseman speaketh) some one destitute of understanding, wasting his whole substance, hazarding his life (and that, more willingly than wisely) perhaps to gaine nothing but a scorne for his labour; and yet persisting in his folly still: and all this in the passion of concupiscence, to a vaine creature; pleasing his phansie to the displeasing of God, and to the piercing of his soule one day with deepe remorse for it: and except it doe, to the utter ruine both of body and soule. We, have here at Corinth, a strange example of it, Of* one, ---At cujus jacuit Græcia tota fores, at whose doores, sundry of all sorts waited, suing and seeking and (as one of them said) buying repentance at too deare a rate. But, what need we saile to Corinth? Even in our own age, we have enow fond examples of it: of Love set awry and sorted amisse; diverted from the soule, where it should be bestowed, and lavished on the body, where a great deale lesse would serve. It is Saint Augustines wish: O si excitare possemus homines & cum iis pariter excitari, ut tales amatores, &c! O that we could in this kinde stir up others, and our selves (with them) be stirred up, but even to bestow such love on the immortall soule, as we see daily cast away on the corruptible body! What, but so much? and no more? Absit ut sic: sed utinam vel sic: Till it might be more, would GOD, it were but as much in the meane time. Yet, more, and much more it should be. Sed infelix Populus Dei non habet tantum fervorem in bono, quantum mali in malo, is S. Hierom's complaint. But the People of GOD (unhappie in that point) hath not that courage or constancie in the love of the Spirit, that the wicked world hath, in the lust of the flesh. That courage? Nay, nothing like: Ad erubescentiam nostram dico, to our shame it must be spoken. Looke but to the first point, Impendam: doth not the body take it wholly up? And, if we faile in the lowest, what shall become of the rest? Well: S. Pauls love is; and ours must be, if it be right, pro animabus, Soul-love, which may serve for the first point of the sequestration.

* LAIS. Demosthenes.

1 Cor. 6. 5.

2
The Reason.

But, why Pro animabus, what is there in the soule so lovely, that all this should be said ſaid or done for it? Why for Soules? 1 Why, take the ſoule out of the body which ſo much we dote on; but even halfe an houre, and the body will grow ſo out of our love, ſo deformed, ſo ugly, ſo every way lothſome, as they that now admire it, will then abhorre it; and they that now cannot behold it enough, will not then, indure once to come neare it; not within the ſight of it. This a naturall man would anſwer: The ſoule is to be regarded of the body, for it maketh the body to bee regarded. 2. But, a Chriſtian man will ſay more for it. That the Love of CHRIST muſt be the rule of the Love of Chriſtians, and ours ſuitable to His. And CHRIST hath valued the ſoule, above the world it ſelfe; in direct affirming, that he, that to win the world, hazards his ſoule, makes but an unwiſe bargaine: which bargaine were wiſe enough, if the world were more worth. Appende animam homo (ſaith Chryſoſtome) & Impende in animam: If you would prize your ſoules better, you would beſtow more on them. This is nothing: CHRIST hath valued your ſoules; valued and loved them above Himſelfe; Himſelfe, more worth than many worlds, yea, if they were ten thouſand. I come now to the point. Is CHRIST to be loved? Why, all that S. Paul hitherto hath profeſſed, all and every part of it, it was but to the Soules at ſecond hand. His eye was upon CHRIST, all the time of his profeſſion. But, becauſe CHRIST hath, by Deed enrolled, ſet over His love to mens ſoules, and willed us, toward them to ſhew, whatſoever to Him we profeſſe; therefore, and for no other cauſe, it is, that hee ſtandeth thus affected. For that, thoſe ſoules CHRIST ſo loved, that He loved not Himſelfe, to love them. Dilexiſti me Domine plus quàm te, quando mori voluiſti pro me (It is Auguſtine:) Dying for my ſoule (LORD) thou ſhewdſt, that my ſoule was dearer to thee, than thine owne ſelfe. In love then to CHRIST, we are to love them that CHRIST loved; not ſicut ſeipſum, as Himſelfe, but pluſquam ſeipſum, more than Himſelfe: and therefore, hath changed the Sicut of the Law, Sicut teipſum, as thy ſelfe, into a new Sicut, Sicut ego vos, as I have loved you. And, how did He love us? Even that He was the firſt that ever profeſſed theſe foure to us, 1 Did beſtow, 2 was beſtowed, 3 moſt gladly, 4 yea though the more He loved, the leſſe we loved Him. Or (to give Him His right) a degree higher than Paul: Not, when we loved Him little, as faint friends; but hated Him greatly, as ſworne enemies. For, He it was, that profeſſed this art, firſt. The words are indeed CHRISTS owne: The primitive and moſt proper uttering them, belongeth to Him. None ever ſo fully or ſo fitly ſpake or can ſpeake them, as the SONNE of GOD, on the Croſſe, from the chaire of his profeſſion. And, of Him there, Saint Paul learned Hoc carmen amoris. Himſelfe confeſſeth as much (in the V. Chapter of this Epiſtle) that it was love; Not, his owne love, but CHRISTS love (Charitas CHRISTI extorſit) that brought theſe words from him. His, they be not, but ore tenus: the tongue his, but CHRIST the ſpeaker, His they were; His they are, out of whoſe mouth, or from whoſe pen ſoever they come.

Mat. 16. 26;

Mat. 19. 26. Ioh. 13. 34.

Ioh. 15. 1 4.

Luke 23. 34.

We are come then now, where we may read Love in the very Originall: even in the moſt complete perfection, that ever it was: Profitente CHRISTO, CHRIST Himſelfe, the Profeſſour ſaith, 1 Impendam firſt: Beſtow he will. If you will make port-ſale of your love, none ſhall out-bid Him. Even whatſoever Himſelfe is worth, He will beſtow; His Kingdome, and the fulneſſe of joy and glory in it for ever.

2 Impendar. That? Why Conſummatum eſt; it is done already: all, hands and feet, head and heart opened wide; and all, even to the laſt drop of bloud beſtowed for us, on His Croſſe: where; the love of ſoules triumphed over the love of His owne life.

Ioh. 19. 30.

3 Libentiſſimè, moſt gladly. Witneſſe that ſpeech: A Baptiſme I have to be baptized with, and quomodo coarctor, how am I pained, till I be at it! And, that too, That, to him that moved Him, not to beſtow, but favour himſelfe, he uſed no other termes than to the devill himſelfe, Avoyd Satan. Proofe enough (ſay I) how willingly He went, and how unwillingly He would be kept from it.

Luke 12. 50.

Mat. 16. 23.

4 And for His Etsi: would GOD, it were not too plaine: Both at his Crosse; where the lowder their Crucifige, with the more strong crying and teares He prayed Pater Ignosce: And ever since, usque hodiè, till now, when (all may see) our regard is as little, as His love great; and he respected, as if he had done nothing for us. Every part of His Love, and the profession of his Love, but especially the Etsi of his love passeth all. For, Christ, by deed enrolled, hath set over his love to them. Which is that setteth such a price upon them, and maketh them so amiable, if not in their own kindnesse and lovelines, yet in the love of CHRIST himself. And it is the answer, that David, when he loseth his sleep, to thinke upon the people of God; that Moses, when hee wearieth himselfe in hearing causes from morning to night; that Iosua, when he fighteth the Lords battels, and jeopards his life in the high places of the field; that any, that weares and spends himselfe in the common cause, may make, as well as S. Paul: Why it is pro animabus, it is for soules; for safeguard of Soules, those soules, which Christ hath so dearely loved, and so dearely bought, and to our love so carefully commended: Sicut egò vos, as he did or ever shall doe for us, that we doe for them. Whereto, if not the soules themselvs (for the most part unthankfull) yet this motive of love, of CHRIST'S love, doth in a manner violently constraine us. For, though nothing is lesse violent in the manner, yet, in the worke, nothing worketh more violent than it.

Luk. 23. 34.

Psal. 132. 4. Exod. 18. 14. 18. &c.

I conclude then with S. Bernards demand: Quæ vero utilitas in sermone hoc? What use have we of all that hath beene said? For, he that wrote it is dead; and they to whom it was written, are gone: But the Scripture still remaineth, and we are to take good by it.

The Application.

It serveth first, to possesse our soules of that excellent vertue, Major horum, the greatest of the three; Nay, the vertue, without which, the rest be but Ciphers; the vertue that shineth brightest in Christs example, and standeth highest in his commendation, love.

1 Cor. 13. 31.

2 But, Love, the action of vertue; not the passion of vice. Love, not of the body, the vile body (So the HOLY GHOST termeth it, Phil. 3.) but of the soule, the precious soule of man, Pro. 6. Love of souls; the more, the more acceptable: If of a City, well; If of a Countrey, better; if of a Countrey or Kingdome, best of all.

Phil. 3. 21. Prov. 6. 26.

3 And for them and for their love to be ready to prove it by S. Pauls triall; to open our Impendam, to vow our Impendar, and as neere as may be, to aspire to the same degree of Libentissimè. Verily, they that neither (as the Apostle) for the winning of soules; or for the defence and safety of soules, many thousands of soules, the soules, of an whole Estate, in high and heroicall courage, have already past their Impendam, and are ready to offer themselves every day to Impendar, and with that resolute forwardnesse, which we all see (for, it is a case presently in all our eyes:) They that doe thus, no good can be spoken of their love answerable to the desert of it. Heavenly it is, and in heaven to receive the reward.

4 But, when all is done, wee must take notice of the worlds nature. For, as Saint Paul left it, so wee shall finde it (that is) wee shall not perhaps meet with that regard, wee promise ourselves. Saint Pauls Magis diligam met with a Minus diligar.

Therefore above all remember his Etsi. For to be kinde, and that to the unkind: to know, such we shall meet with; yea, to meet with them, and yet hold our Etsi, and love nevertheless. This certainly is that love, Majorem quâ nemo; And, there is on earth no greater signe of a soul throughly setled in the love of CHRIST, than to stand thus minded: Come what will come, Magis or Minus, Si or Etsi; frown or favour; Respect or neglect; Quod facio, hoc & faciam, What I doe, I will doe, with eye to CHRIST, with hope of reward from Him, let the world be as it is, and as it ever hath beene.

Chap. 11. 12.

Samuel (this day in the first Lesson) when he had spent his life in a well ordered Govern-

Government, that his very enemies could no way except to, in his old dayes was required with Fac nobis Regem; only upon a humour of innovation. What then? Grew he diſcontent? No: Non obſtante, for all their ingratitude (Good man) this he profeſſeth: God forbid (ſaith he) I ſhould ſin in ceaſing to pray for you; yea, I will ſhew you the good and right way of the Lord, for all that. That may ſerve to match this, out of the Old Teſtament. For, here in like ſort, we have Paul's Minùs diligar, before our eyes; and we ſee, he is at his Libentiſſimè, Etſi, for all that. You learne then; as, that Minùs diligar may come; ſo, in caſe it do come, what to doe; even to conſummate your Love with a triumph over unkindneſſe. Learne this, and all is learned: Learn this, and the whole Art is had. 1 Sam. 8. 5. 12. 23.

And we have, in this verſe, and in the very firſt word of it, that, will enter us into this leſſon.

Firſt, from Ego verò: from his and from our owne perſons, we may begin to raiſe this duty. When wee were deepe in our Minùs diligar, and ſmally regarded CHRIST; Nay, Cum inimici eſſemus (to take as we ſhould) when we were his enemies, of His over-abundant kindneſſe it pleaſed him to call us from the blindneſſe of errour, to the knowledge of his truth: and from a deepe conſumption of our ſoules by ſin, to the ſtate of health and grace. And, if S. Paul were loved, when he raged, and breathed blaſphemy againſt CHRIST and his Name, is it much, if for CHRISTS ſake, he ſwallow ſome unkindneſſe at the Corinthians hands? Is it much, if we let fall a duty upon them, upon whom GOD the Father droppeth His rain, and GOD the Son drops, yea ſheds His blood, ὑπὲρ ἀχαρίστους καὶ πονηροὺς, upon evill and unthankefull men? Rom. 5. 10. Act. 9. 1. Luk. 6. 35.

Surely, if Love, or well doing (or any good muſt periſh (which is the ſecond Motive) and be loſt through ſome bodies default (where it lighteth) much better it is, that it periſh in the Corinthians hands, than in Pauls; by them, in their evill receiving, than by him, in his not beſtowing; through their unkindnes, than through our abruptnes. For, ſo, the ſin ſhall be theirs, and we and our ſoules innocent before GOD. Impendatur per nos: Pereat per illos.

But, periſh it ſhall not (which is the third point) though for them it may. For howſoever of them it may be truly ſaid; The more we love, the leſſe, they: Of Chriſt, it never can, nor ever ſhall be ſaid. For, S. Paul, for the little love at their hands, found the greater at His. Though the more he loved, the leſſe they loved him; yet the leſſe they loved, the more Chriſt loved him. Of whom to be loved, even in the leaſt degree, is worth all the love of Corinth and all Achaia too. So that, here wee find (that we miſſed all this while) a tamen for our Etſi: Though not they, yet Chriſt. Which tamen maketh amends for all. Et vigilanti verbo uſus eſt Apoſtolus; that S. Paul ſpoke not at adventure, but was well adviſed when he uſed the word Impendam. For, it is Impendam indeed, not Perdam; Not loſt, but layed out; Not caſt away, but imployed, on Him, for whoſe love, none ever hath or ſhall beſtow ought, but he ſhall receive a ſuper-impendar of an hundred-fold. And indeed, all other loves, of the fleſh, or world, or whatſoever elſe, ſhall periſh and come to nothing; and of this, and this only, we may ſay Impendam, truly.

So that (to make an end) though true it be, that S. Bernard ſaith, Perfectus amor vires non ſumit de ſpe, Perfect love receives no manner ſtrength from hope; yet, for that our love is not without his imperfections, all under one view, we may with one eye behold Chriſts magis diligam, when we were ſcarce in our minùs, nay ſcarce loved him at all: and with the other, look upon Impendam; that, what we do herein, though at mens hands we find no returne, at Chriſts we ſhall, and it ſhall be the beſt beſtowed ſervice, that ever we beſtowed, that we beſtow in this kind.

Now, would God the ſame Spirit, which here wrote this verſe, would write it in our hearts, that thoſe things are thus; That ſuch a Rependam there ſhall be, and we well aſſured of it, ut & nos converteremur in amorem, that wee might bee transformed into this Love. Which bleſſing, Almighty GOD beſtow on that which hath beene ſaid, for Chriſts, &c.

SERMONS PREACHED
VPON
Good-Friday.

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE COVRT ON THE XXV. of March, A. D. MDXCVII being GOOD-FRIDAY.

ZACH. Chap. XII. Ver. X.

Reſpicient in Me, quem transfixerunt.

And they ſhall looke upon Mee, whom they have peirced.

THat great and honourable Perſon the Eunuch ſitting in his Chariot, and reading a like place of the Prophet Eſay, asketh. St. Philip. I pray thee, of whom ſpeaketh the Prophet this? of himſelfe, or ſome other? A queſtion verie materiall, and to great good purpoſe; and to be asked by us, in al Prophecies. For, knowing who the Party is, wee ſhall not wander in the Prophets meaning. Acts. 8. 34.

Now, if the Eunuch had beene reading this of Zacharie (as then he was, that of Eſay) and had asked the ſame queſtion of Saint Philip, hee would have made the ſame anſwere. And as he, out of thoſe words tooke occaſion; ſo may we, out of theſe, take the like, to preach Ieſus, unto them. For neither of himſelfe, nor of any other, but of Ieſus, ſpeaketh the Prophet this: and the teſtimonie of Ieſus is the ſpirit of this Prophecie. Apoc. 19. 10.

That ſo it is, the Holy Ghoſt is our warrant; who, in S. Iohn's Goſpell reporting the paſsion, and the laſt act of the paſsion (the opening of the ſide, and piercing the heart of our Saviour Chriſt) ſaith plainly, that in piercing, the very words of the prophecie were fulfilled, Reſpicient in Me quem

*Ioh.*19.37. tranſfixerunt.

Which terme of piercing we ſhall the more clearely conceive, if with the ancient Writers, wee ſort it with the beginning of Pſalme 22. the Pſalme of the Paſsion. For, in the very Front or Inſcription of this Pſalme, our Saviour CHRIST is compared Cervo matutino, to the morning Hart: that is, a Hart rouſed early in the morning, (as from his very birth he was by Herod) hunted and chaſed all his life long, and this day brought to his end, and (as the poore Deere) ſtricken and pierced thorow ſide, and heart and all: which is it, we are here willed to behold.

There is no part of the whole courſe of our Saviour Chriſt's life or death, but it is well worthy our looking on; and from each part in it, there goeth vertue to doe us good: But, of all other parts, and above them all, this laſt part of his piercing, is here commended unto our view. Indeed how could the Prophet commend it more, than in avowing it to be an act of grace, as in the fore-part of this verſe, he doth: Effundam ſuper eos ſpiritum Gratiæ, & reſpicient, &c. as if he ſhould ſay: If there be any grace in us, we will thinke it worth the looking on.

Neither doth the prophet only, but the Apoſtle alſo, call us unto it, and Heb 12.2. willeth us ἀφορᾶν to looke unto, and regard Ieſus the Author and Finiſher of our faith. Then ſpecially, and in that act, when for the Ioy of our Salvation ſet before Him, He endured the Croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame; that is, in this ſpectacle, when he was pierced.

Which (ſurely) is continually, all our life long, to be done by us; and at all times, ſome time to be ſpared unto it: But, if at other times, moſt requiſite at this time; this very day, which we hold holy to the memory of His Paſsion, and the pie rcing of his precious ſide. That, though on other dayes, we imploy our eyes otherwiſe, this day at leaſt, we fix them on this Object, Reſpicientes in Eum. This day (I ſay) which is dedicated *Joh.*3.14. to none other end, but even to lift up the Son of Man, as Moſes did the ſerpent in the wilderneſſe, that we may looke upon Him and live: When every Scripture that is read ſoundeth nothing but this unto us: when by the office of preaching Ieſus Chriſt is lively deſcribed in our ſight, and (as the *Gal.*3.1. Apoſtle ſpeaketh) is viſibly crucified among us? when in the memoriall of 1 *Cor.*11.26. the holy Sacrament, His death is ſhewed forth till Hee come, and the myſterie of this His piercing, ſo many wayes, ſo effectually repreſented before us. This Prophecie therfore, if at any time, at this time to take place. Riſpicient in Me, &c.

The Diviſion. The principall words are but two, and ſet downe unto us, in two points: 1 The ſight it ſelfe, that is, the thing to be ſeene: 2 and the ſight of it; that is, the act of ſeeing or looking. Quem tranſfixerunt is the Object, or ſpectacle propounded. Reſpicient in Eum, is the Act, or duty enjoyned.

Of

Of which, the Object though in place latter, in nature is the former, and first to be handled: for that there must be a thing first set up, before we can set our eyes to looke upon it.

OF the Object, generally first. Certaine it is, that Christ is here meant: Saint Iohn hath put us out of doubt for that point. And Zacharie (here) could have set downe His name, and said, Respice in Christum: for, Daniel (before) had named his name, Occiditur Messias; and Zacharie being after him in time, might have easily repeated it. But, it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to him, rather to use a circumlocution; and suppressing his name of Christ, to expresse Him by the stile or term, quem transfixerunt. Which being done by choice, must needs have a reason of the doing, and so it hath.

1 The sight or Object generally. 1 CHRIST. Dan.9.26.

First, the better to specifie and particularize the Person of Christ, by the kinde, and most peculiar circumstance of His death. Esay had sayd, Morietur, Dye He shall, and lay downe His soule an offering for sin, [2] Dye, but what Death? naturall, or a violent? Daniel tells us. Occidetur: He shall dye, not a naturall, but a violent death. [3] But many are slaine after many sorts; and divers kinds there bee of violent deaths: the Psalmist the more particularly to set it down, describeth it thus: They pierced my hands and my feet: which is only proper to the death of the Crosse. [4] Dye, and be slaine, and be crucified: But, sundry else were crucified; & therefore, the Prophet (here) to make up all, addeth, that He should not only be crucifixus, but transfixus; not only have his hands and His feet, but even his heart pierced, too. Which very note severs Him from all the rest, with as great particularity as may be. For that, though many besides at other times, and some at the same time (with him) were crucified; yet, the side and the heart of none was opened, but His, and His only.

Esay.53.10. Dan.9.26. Psal.22.16.

2 Secondly, as to specifie CHRIST Himselfe in Person, and to sever Him from the rest, so in Christ Himselfe and in His Person to sever from the rest of His doings and sufferings, what that is, that chiefly concerneth us, and we specially are to looke to: and that, this dayes worke, CHRIST Pierced. Saint Paul doth best expresse this: I esteemed (saith he) to know nothing among you, save IESUS CHRIST, and Himselfe crucified: That is, the perfection of our knowledge, is CHRIST. The perfection of our knowledge in, or touching CHRIST, is the knowledge of Christ's piercing. This, the chiefe Sight; Nay (as it shall after appeare) in this sight, are all sights: So that, know this and know all. This generally.

2 CHRIST pierced. 1 Cor.2.2.

2 The Object ſpecially. 1. The Paſsion it ſelfe Quid.

Now, ſpecially: In the Object, two things offer themſelves: 1 The Paſsion, or ſuffering it ſelfe; which was, to be pierced, 2 And the Perſons, by whom. For, if the Prophet had not intended, the Perſons ſhould have had their reſpect too: he might have ſaid Reſpicient in Eum qui transfixus eſt, (which paſsive would have carried the Paſsion it ſelfe full enough:) but, ſo, he would not, but rather chooſe to ſay, quem transfixerunt; which doth neceſſarily imply the Piercers themſelvs too. So, that we muſt needs have an eye in the handling, both to the fact, and to the Perſons, 1 quid, and 2 quibus, both what, and of whom.

1 The Degree therof: Tranſfixerunt.

In the Paſsion, we muſt conſider the degree: for, transfixerunt, is a Word of gradation: more than fixerunt, or ſuffixerunt, or confixerunt; either. Expreſsing unto us the piercing, not with whip and ſcourges; nor of the nailes and thornes, but, of the ſpeare-point. Not, the whips and ſcourges, wherewith his skin and fleſh were piered; nor the nailes and thornes, wherewith His feet, hands and head were pierced; but, the Speare-point, which pierced and went through his very heart it ſelfe: for, of that wound, of the wound in his beart, is this ſpoken (*Io.*19.34.) Therefore trans, is here a tranſcendum; through and through: through skinne and fleſh; through hands and feet, through ſide and heart and all: the deadlieſt and deepeſt wound, and of higheſt gradation.

2 The Extent Me.

Secondly, as the Prepoſition (Trans) hath his gradation of diverſe degrees; ſo, the Pronoune (Me) hath his generality of divers parts, beſt expreſſed in the Originall. Vpon Me: not, upon my body and ſoule: Vpon Me, whoſe Perſon, not whoſe parts, either body without, or ſoule within; but Vpon Me, whom wholly, body, and ſoule, quicke and dead, they have pierced.

1 His Body.

Of the bodies piercing, there can be no queſtion, ſince, no part of it was left unpierced. Our ſenſes certifie us of that, what need we further witneſſe?

2 His Soule.

Of the Soules too, it is as certaine; and there can be no doubt of it neither: that we truly may affirme, CHRIST, not in part, but wholly was pierced. For, we ſhould do injury to the ſufferings of our Saviour, if we ſhould conceive by this piercing, none other but that of the Speare.

And may a ſoule then be pierced? Can any Speare-point goe through it? Truly Simeon ſaith to the Bleſsed Virgin, by way of prophecie, that the ſword ſhould goe through her ſoule, at the time of His Paſsion. And as the ſword through her's, ſo, I make no queſtion, but the ſpeare through His. And, if through her's, which was but anima compatientis; through His, much more, which was anima patientis; ſince Compaſsion, is but Paſsion at rebound. Howbeit, it is not a ſword of ſteele, or a ſpeare-head of iron, that entreth the ſoule, but the metall of another temper: the dint whereof no leſſe goreth and woundeth the ſoule in proportion, than thoſe doe the body.

*Luk.*2.35.

body. So that, we extend this piercing of CHRIST further, than to the visible gash in his side, even to a piercing of another nature, whereby, not his heart onely was stabbed, but his very spirit wounded too.

The Scripture recounteth two: and of them both, expresly saith, that they both pierce the soule. The Apostle sayth it, by Sorrow: And pierced themselves through with many sorrowes: The Prophet, of Reproach: There are, whose words are like the pricking of a sword: and that, to the Soule, both: for, the bodie feeles neither. With these, even with both these, was the Soule of CHRIST IESUS wounded. 1 Tim. 6. 10. Psa. 64. 34.

For sorrow: it is plaine through all foure Evangelists; * undiq; tristis est anima mea usq; ad mortem; My soule is invironed on every side with sorrow, even to the death: [a] Cœpit IESUS tædere & pavere, IESUS began to be distressed and in great anguish. [b] Factus in agonia, being cast into an agonie, [c] Iam turbata est anima mea; Now is my soule troubled: Avowed by them all; Confest by Himselfe. Yea, that His strange and never else heard of sweat; drops of bloud plenteously issuing from Him all over His body, what time, no manner of violence was offered to his body, no man then touching him, none being neere him; that bloud came certainly from some great sorrow, wherwith his soule was pierced. And, that his most dreadfull crie, which at once moved all the powers of heaven and earth, My God, My God, &c. was the voice of some mighty Anguish, wherewith his soule was smitten; and that in other sort, than with any materiall speare. For, Derelinqui à Deo, the body cannot feele it, or tell what it meaneth. It is the Soules complaint; and therefore without all doubt, his soule within him was pierced, and suffered, though not that, which (except charity be allowed to expound it) cannot be spoken without blasphemy; Not so much (GOD forbid:) yet much, and very much; and much more than others seeme to allow; or how much, it is dangerous to define.

With sorrow. *Mat. 26. 38. Mar. 14. 34. a Mar. 14. 33. b Luc. 24. 44. c Ioh. 12. 27. Mat. 27. 46.

To this edge of sorrow, if the other of piercing despight, be added as a point (as, added it was) it will strike deepe into any heart; especially, being wounded with so many sorrowes before. But, the more noble the heart, the deeper; who beareth any grief more easily than this griefe, the griefe of a contumelious reproach. To persecute a poore distressed soule, and to seeke to vexe Him that is already wounded at the heart, why, it is the very pitch of all wickednesse; the very extremity that malice can doe, or affliction can suffer. And to this pitch were they come, when after all their wretched villanies and spitting, and all their savage indignities in reviling Him most opprobriously, He being in the depth of all his distresse, and for very anguish of soule crying, Eli, Eli, &c. they staied those that would have relieved him; and (void of all humanity) then scorned, saying: Stay, let alone, let us see, if ELIAS will now come and take Him downe. This barbarous and brutish inhumanity of theirs, must needes pierce deeper into His Soule, than ever did the iron into this side.

With reproach. Psal. 69. 26. Mat. 27. 49.

To

To all which if we it add, not only that horrible ingratitude of theirs, there by Him ſeene; but ours alſo no leſſe than theirs by Him foreſeene at the ſame time; (Who make ſo ſlender reckoning of theſe His piercings, & (as they were a matter not worth the looking on) vouchſafe not ſo much as to ſpend an houre in the due regard & meditation of them: Nay, not that only, but further, by vnceſſant ſinning, and that without remorſe, doe moſt unkindly requite thoſe His bitter Paines, and as much as in us lies, even crucifix afreſh the SON of GOD, making a mocke of Him and His piercings.) Theſe, I ſay (for, theſe all and every of them in that conſtant were before His eyes) muſt of force enter into, and goe thorow & thorow His Soule and Spirit; that, what with thoſe former ſorrowes, and what with theſe after indignities, the Prophet might truly ſay of Him, and He of himſelfe, In Me, Vpon Me; not whoſe body, or whoſe ſoule, but, whom entirely and wholly, but in body and ſoule, alive and dead, they have pierced and paſsioned this day on the Croſſe.

Heb. 6. 6.

2 The Perſons, à quibus.

Of the Perſons: which as it is neceſſarily implied in the word, is very properly incident to the matter it ſelfe. For, it is uſuall, when one is found ſlaine (as here) to make inquiry, by whom he came by his death. Which ſo much the rather is to be done by us, becauſe there is commonly an error in the Word, touching the Parties that were the cauſes of CHRIST'S Death. Our manner is, either to lay it on the Souldiers, that were the Inſtruments; Or if not upon them, upon Pilate the Iudge that gave ſentence; Or if not upon him, upon the people that importuned the Iudge; Or laſtly, if not upon them, upon the Elders of the Iewes that animated the people: And this is all to be found by our Queſt of Inquiry.

But the Prophet here inditeth others. For, by ſaying, They ſhall looke &c. Whom They have pierced, he intendeth by very conſtruction, that the firſt and ſecond (They,) are not two, but one and the ſame parties: And that they that are here willed to looke upon Him, are they, and none other, that were the authors of this fact, even of the murther of IESUS CHRIST. And (to ſay truth) the Prophet's entent is no other but to bring the malefactors themſelves that pierced Him to view the body and the wounded heart of Him, whom they have ſo pierced.

In the courſe of Iuſtice, we ſay and ſay truly; when a party is put to death, that the Executioner cannot bee ſaid to be the cauſe of his death; nor the Sheriffe, by whoſe commandement he doth it; neither yet the Iudge by whoſe ſentence; nor the Twelvemen, by whoſe verdict, nor the Law it ſelfe, by whoſe authority it is proceeded in. (For, GOD forbid we ſhould indite theſe, or any of theſe, of murther:) Solum peccatum homicida: Sin, and Sin only is the murtherer. Sin (I ſay) either of the Party that ſuffereth: or of ſome other, by whoſe meanes, or for whoſe cauſe, he is put to death.

Now

Now, CHRIST's owne ſin it was not, that he died for. That is moſt evident. Not ſo much by His owne challenge, Quis ex vobis arguit me de peccato? as by the report of his Iudge, who openly profeſſed, that he had examined Him, and found no fault in Him: No nor yet Herod; for, being ſent to Him, and examined by Him alſo, nothing worthy death was found in Him: And therefore, calling for water, and waſhing his hands, hee proteſteth his owne innocency of the bloud of this IUST MAN: thereby pronouncing him Iuſt, and void of any cauſe, in himſelfe, of his owne death. Ioh. 8.46. Luk. 23.14. 15. Mat. 27.24.

It muſt then neceſſarily be the ſin of ſome others, for whoſe ſake CHRIST IESUS was thus pierced. And if we aske, who thoſe others be? or whoſe ſins they were? the Prophet Eſay tells us, Poſuit ſuper Eum iniquitates omnium noſtrûm, He laid upon Him the trangreſsions of us all: who ſhould (even for thoſe our many, great, and grievous transgreſsions) have eternally heene pierced, in body, and ſoule: with torment and ſorrowes of a never dying death, had not he ſtept betweene us and the blow, and receiv'd it in his owne body; even the dint of the wrath of GOD to come upon us. So that it was the ſinne of our polluted hands, that pierced his hands: the ſwiftneſſe of our feet to doe evill, that neiled His feet: the wicked deviſes of our Heads, that goared His head: and the wretched deſires of our hearts, that pierced his heart. We that looke upon, it is we that pierced Him: and it is we that pierced him, that are willed to looke upon Him. Which bringeth it home to us; to me my ſelfe that ſpeake, and to you your ſelves that heare; and applieth it moſt effectually to every one of us, who evidently ſeeing, that we were the cauſe of this his piercing, if our hearts be not too too hard, ought to have remorſe, to be pierced with it. Eſay. 53.3. 4.

When for delivering to David a few loaves, Ahimelech and the Prieſts were by Saul put to the ſword, if David did then acknowledge with griefe of heart, and ſay, I, even I am the cauſe of the death of thy Father and all his houſe, (when hee was but onely the occaſion of it, and not that direct neither:) may not we (nay, ought not we) much more juſtly and deſervedly ſay of this piercing of CHRIST our Saviour, that we, verily, even we, are the cauſe thereof: as verily we are, even the principals in this murther; and the Iewes and others, on whom we ſeeke to derive it, but onely acceſſaries and inſtrumentall cauſes thereof. Which point, we ought, as continually, ſo, ſeriouſly to thinke of; and that no leſſe than the former. The former, to ſtirre up compaſsion in our ſelves, over him that thus was pierced: the latter to work deepe remorſe in our hearts, for being authors of it. That hee was pierced; will make our bowells, melt with compaſsion, over CHRIST. That he was pierced by us, that looke on Him, if our hearts bee not flint (as Iob ſaith) or as the nether Mil-ſtone, will breed remorſe over our ſelves, wretched ſinners as wee are. 1 Sam. 22. 22. Iob. 41.15.

II.

The Act. To looke upon Him.

The Act followeth in these words: Respicient in Eum. A request most reasonable, to looke upon Him; but to looke upon Him; to bestow but a looke and nothing else; which even of common humanity we cannot denie, Quia non aspicere, despicere est. It argueth great contempt, not to vouchsafe it the cast of our eye; as if it were an Object utterly unworthy the looking toward. Truly, if we marke it well, nature it selfe, of it selfe enclineth to this act. When Amasa treacherously was slaine by Ioab, and lay weltering in his bloud by the wayes side, the storie saith, that not one of the whole Army, then marching by, but when he came at him, stood still

2 Sam. 22. 12. and looked on him.

In the Gospell, the party that going from Ierusalem to Iericho was spoiled and wounded and lay drawing on, though the Priest and Levite that

Luk. 31. 32. passed neere the place relieved him not, as the Samaritan after did: yet it is said of them, they went neere and looked on, and then passed on their way. Which desire is even naturall in us: so that even Nature it selfe enclineth us to satisfie the Prophet.

Nature doth; and so doth Grace too. For, generally we are bound to Psal. 28. 5. regard the worke of the LORD, and to consider the operation of His hands: and specially this worke; in comparison whereof GOD Himselfe saith, Esa. 43. 18. the former workes of His, shall not be remembred, nor the things done of old once regarded.

Yea CHRIST himselfe, pierced as he is, inviteth us to it. For in the Prophet here, it is not In eum; but In me: not, on Him; but, on Mee, whom they have pierced. But more fully in Ieremy: for, to CHRIST himselfe doe all the ancient Writers apply (& that, most properly) those words of Lam. 1. 12. the Lamentation: Have ye no regard all yee that passe by this way? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me, in the day of His fierce wrath.

Our owne profit (which is wont to perswade well) inviteth us: for that, as from the brazen Serpent no vertue issued to heale, but unto them

Num. 21. 8. 9. that steddily beheld it; so neither doth there, from CHRIST, but upon those, that with the eye of faith have their contemplation on this object who thereby draw life from him; and without it may and doe perish, for all CHRIST and his passion.

And, if nothing else move us, this last may: even our danger. For, the time will come, when we our selves shall desire, that GOD looking with an angry countenance upon our sinnes, would turne his face from them and us, and looke upon the face of his CHRIST, that is, respicere In eum: which shall justly be then denied us, if we our selves could never be gotten to doe this duty, respicere in Eum, when it was called for of us. GOD shall not looke upon him, at ours whom we would not looke upon, at his request.

In the Act it selfe are enjoyned three things. 1. That we doe it with attention : for, it is not Me, but in Mee : Not onely Vpon Him, but Into Him. 2. That we doe it oft, againe and againe; with iteration : for, Reſpicient, is re-aſpicient. Not a ſingle act, but an act iterated. 3. That we cauſe our nature to doe it, as it were, by vertue of an Injunction, per actum elicitum, as the Schoolmen call it. For in the Originall, it is in the commanding Conjunction, that ſignifieth, facient ſe reſpicere, rather than Reſpicient.

Firſt then, not ſlightly, ſuperficially or perfunctorily, but ſtedfaſtly, and with due attention, to looke upon him. And, not to looke upon the out-ſide alone; but, to looke into the very entrailes; and with our eye to pierce him that was thus pierced. In Eum beareth both. 1 With Attention. Reſpicient In Eum.

1. Vpon him, if we look, we ſhall ſee ſo much, as Pilate ſhewed of him, Ecce Homo, that He is a Man. And, if he were not a man, but ſome other unreaſonable creature, it were great ruth to ſee him ſo handled.

2. Among men we leſſe pitie Malefactors, and have moſt compaſsion on them that be innocent. And, he was innocent, and deſerved it not (as you have heard) his enemies themſelves being his Iudges.

3. Among thoſe that be innocent, the more noble the perſon, the greater the griefe, and the more heavy ever is the ſpectacle. Now, if we conſider the Verſe of this Text well, wee ſhall ſee, it is GOD himſelfe, and no man that here ſpeaketh (for, to GOD only it belongeth, to poure out the Spirit of grace; it paſſeth mans reach, to doe it:) ſo that, if we looke better upon him, wee ſhall ſee as much as the Centurion ſaw, that this party thus pierced is the SON of GOD. The SON of GOD ſlaine! Surely, he that hath done this deed is the Child of death, would every one of us ſay: Et tu es homo, Thou art the man, would the Prophet anſwere us: You are they, for whoſe ſins the SON of GOD hath his very heart-bloud ſhed forth. Which muſt needs ſtrike into us remorſe of a deeper degree than before: That, not only, it is wee that have pierced the Partie thus found ſlaine; but, that this Party, whom we have thus pierced, is not a principall perſon among the children of men, but even the Only begotten SON of the moſt High GOD: Which will make us crie out (with St. Auguſtine) O amaritudo peccati mei, ad quam tollenda neceſſaria fuit amaritudo tanta! Now ſure, deadly was the bitterneſſe of our ſins, that might not be cured, but by the bitter death and bloud ſhedding paſsion of the SON of GOD. And this may we ſee looking upon Him. Mat. 27.54. 2 Sam. 12.5. 7.

But now then, if we looke in Eum, into Him, we ſhall yet ſee a greater thing, which may raiſe us in comfort, as farre as the other caſt us downe. Even the bowels of compaſsion and tender love, whereby hee would and was content to ſuffer all this for our ſakes. For that, whereas [a] no man had power to take His life from Him, (for hee had power to have commanded [b] twelve Legions of Angels, in his juſt defence: and, without any Angell at all, power enough of himſelfe, with his [c] Ego ſum, to ſtrike [a] Ioh. 10.18. [b] Mat. 26.53. [c] Ioh. 18.6.

them all to the ground.) He was content notwithstanding all this, to lay downe his life for us ſinners. The greatneſſe of which love paſſeth the greateſt love that man hath: for [d] greater love than this, hath no man, but to beſtow his life for his friends; whereas, He condeſcended to lay it downe for His enemies, Even for them that ſought His death, to lay down His life, and to have His bloud ſhed for them that did ſhed it; to be pierced for His Piercers. Looke how the former In Eum worketh griefe, conſidering the great injuries offered to ſo great a Perſonage; So, to temper the griefe of it, this latter In Eum giveth ſome comfort, that ſo great a Perſon, ſhould ſo greatly love us, as, for our ſakes, to endure all thoſe ſo many injuries, even to the piercing of His very heart.

2 With Iteration reſpicient.

Secondly, Reſpicient (that is) Reaſpicient: Not, once or twice, but oftentimes to looke upon it: that is (as the Prophet ſaith here) iteratis vicibus, to looke againe and againe: or (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Recogitare, to thinke upon it, over and over againe, as it were to dwell in it for a time. In a ſort, with the frequentneſſe of this our beholding it, to ſupply the weakeneſſe and want of our former attention. Surely, the more ſteadily and more often we ſhall fix our eye upon it, the more we ſhall be enured: and being enured, the more deſire to doe it. For, at every looking, ſome new ſight will offer it ſelfe, which will offer unto us occaſion, either of godly ſorrow, true repentance, ſound comfort, or ſome other reflection, iſſuing from the beams of this heavenly mirror. Which point, becauſe it is the chiefe point, the Prophet here calleth us to; even, how to looke upon CHRIST often, and to be the better for our looking. It ſhall be very agreeable to the Text, and to the HOLY GHOSTS chiefe entent, if we prove how, and in how diverſe ſorts, we may with profit behold and looke upon Him, whom thus we have pierced.

Heb. 12. 3.

1 Reſpice et transfigere.

Firſt, then, looking upon Him, we may bring forth for the firſt effect, that which immediately followeth this Text it ſelfe, in this Text, Et plangent Eum: Reſpice & plange. Firſt, looke and lament, or mourne: which is indeed the moſt kindly and naturall effect of ſuch a ſpectacle. Looke upon Him that is pierced; and with looking upon Him, be pierced thy ſelfe: Reſpice et transfigere. A good effect of our firſt looke, if we could bring it forth. At leaſt-wiſe, if we cannot Reſpice et transfigere, looke and be pierced; yet that it might be Reſpice et compungere, that with looking on Him, wee might be pricked in our hearts; and have it enter paſt the skin, though it go not cleane through: Which difference in this Verſe, the Prophet ſeemeth to inſinuate, when, firſt he willeth us to mourne, as for ones only ſon, with whom all is loſt. Or, if that cannot be had, to mourne, as for a firſt begotten ſonne; which is, though not ſo great, yet a great mourning: even for the firſt begotten, though other ſonnes be left.

Acts. 2. 37.

Verſe 11.

And, in the next Verſe, if we cannot reach to naturall griefe; yet hee wiſheth us to mourn with a Civil; even with ſuch a lamentation, as was made made for Iosias. And Behold a greater than IOSIAS is here. Comming not (as hee) to an honoured death in battell; but to a moſt vile death, the death of a Maleſactor : And not (as Iosias) dying without any fault of theirs; but mangled and maſſacred in this ſhamefull ſort, for us; even for us and our tranſgreſsions. Verily, the dumbe and ſenſeleſſe creatures had this effect wrought in them (of mourning) at the ſight of His death; in their kind ſorrowing for the murther of the SONNE of GOD. And wee truly ſhall be much more ſenſeleſſe than they, If it have in us no worke to the like effect. Eſpecially, conſidering it was not for them; He ſuffered all this; nor they no profit by it : but, for us it was; and wee by it ſaved : And yet, they had compaſsion, and we none. Be this then the firſt.

Now, as the firſt is Reſpice & transfigere, Looke upon Him, and be pierced : ſo, the ſecond may be (and that fitly) Reſpice & transfige; Looke upon Him, and pierce, and peirce that in thee, that was the cauſe of CHRISTS piercing : (that is) ſinne and the luſts thereof. For, as men that are pierced indeed with griefe of an indignity offered, withall are pricked to take revenge on him that offers it : ſuch a like affection ought our ſecond looking to kindle in us; even to take a wreake, or revenge upon ſinne, quia fecit hoc, becauſe he hath beene the cauſe of all this. I meane (as the HOLY GHOST termeth it) a mortifying or crucifying; a thruſting thorow of our wicked paſsions and concupiſcences, in ſome kind of repaying thoſe manifold villanies, which the SONNE of GOD ſuffered by meanes of them. At leaſtwiſe (as before) if it kindle not our zeale ſo farre againſt ſinne; yet, that it may ſlake our zeale and affection to ſinne : that is, Reſpice, ne reſpicias : Reſpice CHRISTUM, ne reſpicias peccatum. That we have leſſe mind, leſſe liking, leſſe acquaintance with ſin, for the Paſsion-ſake. For that, by this meanes we do in ſome ſort, ſpare CHRIST; and (at leaſt) make His wounds no wider : Whereas by affecting ſinne anew, we doe, what in us lieth, to crucifie Him afreſh, and both increaſe the number, and enlarge the wideneſſe of His wounds. 2 Reſpice & transfige.

It is no unreaſonable requeſt, That, if we liſt not wound ſinne: yet, ſeing CHRIST hath wounds enough, & they wide and deep enough, we ſhould forbeare to pierce Him further, and have (at leaſt) this ſecond fruit of our looking upon Him : either to looke and to pierce ſinne; or to looke, and ſpare to pierce Him any more.

Now, as it were ſinne that gave Him theſe wounds : ſo, it was love to us that made Him receive them, being otherwiſe able enough to have avoided them all. So that, He was pierced with love, no leſſe then with griefe : and it was that wound of love, made Him ſo conſtantly to endure all the other. Which love we may read in the palmes of His hands (as the Fathers expreſſe it, out of Eſay. 49,16) For, in the Palmes of His hands, He 3 Reſpice & dilige.

hath given us, that he might not forget us. And the print of the neiles in them, are as Capitall letters to record his love toward us. For, CHRIST pierced on the Crosse is liber charitatis, the very booke of love laid open before us. And againe, this love of His wee may read in the cleft of His heart, quia clavus penetrans factus est nobis Clavis reserans (saith Bernard) ut pateant nobis viscera per vulnera. The point of the Speare serves us instead of a key, letting us, through his wounds, see his very bowels, the bowels of tender love and most kind compassion, that would for us endure to be so entreated. That, if the Iewes (that stood by) said truly of him, at Lazarus grave, Ecce quomodo dilexit Eum! when Hee shed a few teares out of his eyes; much more truly may we say of him, Ecce quomodo dilexit nos! seeing him shed, both Water and Bloud, and that in great plenty; and that, out of his heart.

Ioh. 11. 36.

Which sight ought to pierce us with love too, no lesse than before it did with sorrow. With one, or with both: for, both have power to pierce; but specially Love: Which except it had entred first and pierced him, no neile or speare could ever have entred. Then let this bee the third, Respice & dilige: Looke, and be pierced with love of him, that so loved thee, that he gave himselfe in this sort to be pierced for thee.

4 Respice & crede.

And forasmuch as it is CHRIST his own selfe, that, resembling his passion on the Crosse to the Brazen Serpent lift up in the Wilderneſſe, maketh a correspondence betweene their beholding and our beleeving (for, so it is Ioh. 3 14.) wee cannot avoid, but must needs make that an effect too: Even Respice & crede: And, well may wee beleeve and trust him, whom looking a little before, we have seene so constantly loving us. For, the sight of that love maketh credible unto us, whatsoever in the whole Scripture, is affirmed unto us of CHRIST, or promised in his name: So that, beleeve it, and beleeve all. Neither is there any time, wherein with such cheerefullnesse or fullnesse of faith we cry unto him, MY LORD and MY GOD, as when our eye is fixed upon the print of the neiles, and on the hole in the side of him that was pierced for us. So that, this fourth duty CHRIST Himselfe layeth upon us, and willeth from his own mouth, Respice & Crede.

Ioh. 20. 28.

5 Respice & spera.

And, beleeving this of him, what is there, the eye of our hope shall not look for from him? What would not he do for us, that for us would suffer all this? It is Saint Pauls argument, If GOD gave His Sonne for us, how shall he deny us any thing with Him? That is, Respice et Spera. Looke upon him, and his heart opened, and from the gate of hope promise thy selfe, and looke for all manner of things that good are. Which our expectation is reduced to these two: 1 The deliverance from the evill of our present miserie: 2 and the restoring to the good of our primitive felicitie. By the death of this undefiled Lambe, as by the yearely Passeover, looke

Rom. 8. 32.

for

for, and hope for a paſſage out of Egypt: which ſpiritually is our redemption from the ſervitude of the power of darkneſſe. And, as by the death of the Sacrifice, we look to be freed from whatſoever evill: So, by the death of the High Prieſt, looke we for, and hope for reſtitution to all that is good; even, to our forfeited eſtate in the land of Promiſe, which is Heaven it ſelfe, where is all joy and happineſſe for evermore. Reſpice et Spera, Looke, and Looke for: by the Lambe that is pierced, to be freed from all miſery; by the High Prieſt that is pierced, fruition of all felicity.

Now, inaſmuch as His heart is pierced, and His ſide opened; the opening of the one, and the piercing of the other, is, to the end, ſomewhat may flow forth. To which end (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) Vigilanti verbo uſus eſt Apoſtolus, the Apoſtle was well adviſed, when he uſed the word opening; for, there iſſued out water and bloud which make the ſixt effects, Reſpice, & Recipe. Marke it running out, and ſuffer it not to runne waſte, but receive it. Of the former (the water) the Prophet ſpeaketh in the firſt words of the next Chapter, that out of his pierced ſide [a] GOD opened a fountaine of water to the houſe of Iſrael for ſinne and for uncleanneſſe: Of the fullneſſe whereof we all have received, in the Sacrament of our Baptiſme. Of the later (the bloud) which the Prophet (in [b] IX. Chapter before) called the bloud of the New Teſtament, we may receive this day: for, it will runne in the high and holy Myſteries of the Body and Bloud of CHRIST. There may we be partakers of the fleſh of the [c] Morning-Hart, as upon this day killed. There may wee bee partakers of the [d] Cup of ſalvation, the precious Bloud [e] which was ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſinnes. Our part it ſhall be, not to accompt the [f] bloud of the Teſtament an unholy thing, and to ſuffer it to runne in vaine for all us; but with all due regard to receive it ſo running: for, even therefore was it ſhed. And ſo to the former, to adde this ſixt, Reſpice & Recipe.

[f] Heb. 10. 29.

And ſhall we alway receive grace, even ſtreames of grace iſſuing from Him that is pierced, and ſhall there not from us iſſue ſomething backe againe, that he may looke for and receive from us, that from him have and doe daily receive ſo many good things? No doubt there ſhall; if love which pierced Him, have pierced us aright. And that is (no longer to hold you with theſe effects) Reſpice & Retribue. For, it will even behove us no leſſe then the Pſalmiſt, to enter into the conſideration of Quid retribuam: Eſpecially, ſince we, by this day, both ſee and receive that, which hee and many others deſired to ſee, and receive, and could not. Or, if wee have nothing to render, yet (our ſelves) to returne with the Samaritan, and falling downe at his feet, with a loud voice, to glorifie His goodneſſe, who finding us in the eſtate, that other Samaritane found the forlorne and wounded man, healed us, by being wounded himſelfe, and by his owne death reſtored us to life. For all which his kindneſſe, if nothing will come come from us, not ſo much as a kind and thankfull acknowledgement, we are certainly worthy, He ſhould reſtreine the fountaine of his benefits, (which hitherto hath flowen moſt plenteouſly) aud neither let us ſee, nor feele him any more.

Pſa. 119. 12.

But, I hope for better things: that love, ſuch and ſo great love will pierce us, and cauſe both other fruicts, and eſpecially thoughts of thankefulneſſe to iſſue from us. Thus many; and more, if the time would ſerve: But, thus many ſeverall uſes may we have of thus many ſeverall reſpects, or reflexed lookings upon HIM whom we have pierced.

5 With enforcement of themſelvs. Reſpicere ſe facient.

Thirdly, facient ſe reſpicere. For, the HOLY GHOST did eaſily foreſee, we would not readily be brought to the ſight, or to uſe our eyes to ſo good an end. Indeed, to fleſh and bloud it is but a dull and heavy ſpectacle; And, neither willingly they begin to look upon it; and having begun, are never well, till they have done, and looke off of it againe. Therefore is the Verbe (by the Prophet) put into this Conjugation of purpoſe: which to turne in ſtrict propriety, is Reſpicere ſe facient, rather than Reſpicient: They ſhall procure or cauſe, or even enjoyne or enforce themſelves to looke upon it; or (as one would ſay) look, that they looke upon it.

For ſome new and ſtrang ſpectacle (though vain and idle, and which ſhall not profit us how ſtrange ſoever) we cauſe our ſelves ſometimes to take a journey, and beſides our paines, are at expenſes too, to behold them: we will not only looke upon, but even cauſe our ſelves to looke upon vanities; and in them, we have the right uſe of facient ſe reſpicere. And why ſhould we not take ſome paines, and even enjoyne our ſelves to looke upon this? Being neither farre off, nor chargeable to come to; and ſince the looking on it may ſo many wayes, ſo mainly profit us; Verily it falleth
Mat. 11.12. out oft, that of CHRIST's: violenti rapiunt illud. Nature is not inclined; and where it is not inclined, force muſt be offered; which We call in Schooles, Actum elicitum. Which very act by us undertaken, for GOD, and (as here) at His word, is unto Him a Sacrifice right acceptable. Therefore, facias, or fac facias; doe it willingly, or doe it by force: Doe it, I ſay; for, done it muſt be. Set it before you and looke on it: or, if you liſt not remove it, and ſet it full before you, though it bee not with your eaſe, Reſpice, Looke backe upon it with ſome paine: for, one way or other, looke upon it we muſt. The neceſsity whereof (that we may the better apprehend it) it wil not be amiſſe, we know, that theſe words are in two ſun-
Ioh. 19.37. dry places, two ſundry wayes applied: [1] Once, by St. Iohn in the Goſpell, [2] and the ſecond time againe, by CHRIST himſelfe in the Revelation. By St. Iohn to CHRIST, as his firſt comming, ſuffering (as, our Saviour) upon the Croſſe. By CHRIST to himſelfe, at his ſecond comming, ſit-Apoc. 1.7. ting (as our Iudge) upon His throne, in the end of the world. Behold Hee commeth in the Clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee Him, yea even they that pierced Him, Et plangent ſe ſuper Eum omnes Gentes terræ. The meaning whereof is,

Him: Et plangent ſe ſuper Eum omnes Gentes terræ. The meaning whereof is, 'Looke upon Him, here, if you will : Enjoyne your ſelves if you thinke good : Either here, or ſomewhere elſe; either now or then, looke upon Him you ſhall. And, they which put this ſpectacle farre from them heere, and cannot endure to looke upon Him whom they have pierced, & plangere Eum, and be grived for Him, while it is time : a place and time ſhall be, when they ſhall be enforced to looke upon Him, whether they will or no, Et plangent ſe ſuper Eum, and be grieved for themſelves, that they had no grace to doe it ſooner. Better, compoſe themſelves to a little mourning here, with ſome benefit to be made by their beholding; than to be drawne to it there, when it is too late, and when all their looking and grieving will not availe awhit. For, there Reſpicientes reſpiciet, & deſpicientes deſpiciet : His looke ſhall be amiable to them that have reſpected His piercing here: and dreadfull on the other ſide, to them that have neglected it. And, as they that have enured themſelvs to this looking on (here) ſhall in that day, Looke up, and lift up their heads with joy, the day of their Redemption being at hand. So, they that cannot bring themſelves, to looke upon Him here, after they once have looked upon Him there, ſhall not dare to doe it the ſecond time; but crie to the mountaines, Fall upon us, and to the Hills, Hide us from the face of HIM that ſits upon the Throne. Therefore, Reſpicient is no evill counſell. No, though it be facient ſe reſpicere. Luc. 21. 28. Apoc. 6. 16.

In a word; if thus cauſing our ſelves to fix our eyes on him, we aske, how long we ſhal continue ſo doing, and when we may give over? Let this be the anſwere, Donec totus fixus in Corde, qui totus fixus in Cruce. Or if that be too much or too hard, yet ſaltem at the leaſt, Reſpice in Illum, donec Ille te reſpexerit. Looke upon him, till hee looke upon you againe. For, ſo he will. He did, upon PETER; and with his looke, melted him into teares. He that once and twice before denied Him, and never wept, becauſe CHRIST looked not on him; then denied, and CHRIST looked on him, and he went out and wept bitterly. And, if to Peter thus he did, and vouchſafed him ſo gracious a regard, when Peter not once looked toward HIM, how much more ſhall he not deny us like favour, if, by looking on Him, firſt we provoke him in a ſort to a ſecond looking on us againe, with the Prophet, ſaying; Propoſui Dominum coram me, I have ſet thee, O LORD, before me: and againe, Reſpice in me. &c. O looke thou upon mee; and be mercifull unto me, as thou uſeſt to doe to thoſe that love thy Name. That love thy Name, which is, IESUS a SAVIOUR; and which love that ſight, wherein (moſt properly) thy Name appeareth, and wherin thou chiefly ſheweſt thy ſelfe to be IESUS a SAVIOUR. Luc. 22. 61. Pſal. 16 8. Pſ. 119. 132.

And (to conclude) if we aske, how we ſhall know when CHRIST doth thus reſpect us? Then truely, when fixing both the eyes of our meditation upon Him that was pierced (as it were) one eye, upon the griefe, the other, upon the love wherewith He was pierced, we find by both, or one of theſe, ſome motion of grace ariſe in our hearts: the conſideration of His griefe, piercing our hearts with ſorrow; the conſideration of His love, piercing our hearts with mutuall love againe. The one is the motion of compunction, which they felt, who when they heard ſuch things were

Act.2.37. pricked in their hearts. The other, the motion of comfort, which they felt, who when CHRIST ſpake unto them of the neceſsity of His piercing,
Luc.24.32. ſaid; Did wee not feele our hearts warme within us? That, from the ſhame and paine Hee ſuffered for us: This, from the comforts and benefits, He thereby procured for us.

Theſe have beene felt at this Looking on; and theſe will be felt. It may be, at the firſt, unperfectly; but after, with deeper impreſsion: and that, of ſome, with ſuch as Nemo ſcit, Noe man knoweth, but He that hath felt them, Which that we may endeavour to feele, and endevouring may feele, and ſo grow into delight of this looking, GOD, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED

before the KINGS MAIESTY at White-hall, on the VI. of Aprill, A. D. MDCIIII, being GOOD-FRIDAY.

LAMENT. Chap. I. Ver. XII.

Have yee no regard, ô all yee that paſſe by the way? Conſider, and behold, If ever there were ſorrow, like my Sorrow, which was done unto me, wherewith the Lord did afflict me in the day of the fierceneſſe of His wrath.

AT the very reading or hearing of which Verſe, there is none but will preſently conceive, it is the voice of a party in great extremity. In great extremity two waies: A complaint, [1] Firſt, in ſuch diſtreſſe, as never was any, If ever there were ſorrow like my ſorrow: [2] And then in that diſtreſſe, having none to regard Him: Have yee no Regard all yee?

To bee afflicted, and ſo afflicted, as none ever was, is very much: In that affliction, to find none to reſpect him or care for him, what can be more? In all our ſufferings, it is a comfort to us that we have a ſicut: that nothing hath befallen us, but ſuch as others have felt the like: But here, Si fuerit ſicut, If ever the like were, (that is) never the like was. 1Cor. 10. 13.

Againe, in our greateſt paines, it is a kind of eaſe, even to find ſome regard. Naturally we deſire it, if we cannot be delivered, if we cannot be relieved, yet to be pitied: It ſheweth, there be yet ſome, that are touched with the ſenſe of our miſery; that wiſh us wel, and would give us eaſe if they could: But this afflicted, here, findeth not ſo much, neither Iob. 19. 21.

the one nor the other: but is even as he were an outcaſt both of Heaven and Earth. Now verily an heavy caſe, and worthy to be put in this booke of Lamentations.

CHRISTS Complaint.

I demand then, Of whom ſpeaketh the Prophet this? of himſelfe, or of ſome other? This I finde; there is not any of the ancient Writers, but doe apply, yea, in a manner appropriate this ſpeech to our Saviour CHRIST: And that this very day, the day of his Paſsion, (truly termed here the day of GODS wrath:) And whereſoever they treat of the Paſsion, ever this verſe commeth in. And (to ſay the truth) to take the words ſtrictly as they lie, they cannot agree, or be verified of any but of him, and him onely. For, though ſome other, not unfitly, may be allowed to ſay the ſame words: it muſt be in a qualified ſenſe: for, in full and perfect propriety of ſpeech, he, and none but he: None can ſay, (neither Ieremie, nor any other) Si fuerit dolor ſicut dolor meus, as CHRIST can: No day of wrath, like to his day: no ſorrow to be compared to his (all are ſhort of it;) nor his to any, it exceedeth them all.

And yet, according to the letter, it cannot be denied, but they be ſet downe by Ieremy, in the perſon of his owne people, being then come to great miſery; and of the holy Citie, then laid waſte, and deſolate by the Chaldees. What then? Ex Ægypto vocavi Filium meum, Out of Ægypt have I called my Sonne, was litterally ſpoken of this people too: yet is by the Evangeliſt applied to our Saviour CHRIST. My GOD, my GOD why haſt thou forſaken me? at the firſt uttered by David; yet the ſame words our SAVIOUR taketh himſelfe, and that more truly and properly, than ever David could: and of thoſe of Davids, and of theſe of Ieremie's, there is one and the ſame reaſon.

Matt. 2 15. Pſal. 22. 1. Matt. 27. 46.

Of all which the ground is, that correſpondence which is betweene CHRIST and the Patriarchs, Prophets, and People before CHRIST, of whom the Apoſtles rule is, Omnia in figurâ contingebant illis: That they were themſelves Types, and their ſufferings, forerunning figures of the great ſuffering of the SONNE OF GOD. which maketh Iſaacs offering, and Ioſephs ſelling, and Iſraels calling from Ægypt, and that complaint of Davids, and this of Ieremies, appliable to him; That he may take them to himſelf, and the Church aſcribe them to him, and that in more fitneſſe of termes, and more fulneſſe of truth, than they were at the firſt ſpoken by David, or Ieremy, or any of them all.

1 Cor. 10. 11.

And this rule, and the ſtepps of the Fathers proceeding by this rule, are to me a warrant to expound and apply this Verſe (as they have done before) to the preſent occaſion of this time; which requireth ſome ſuch Scripture to be conſidered by us, as doth belong to his Paſsion, who, this Day, powred out his moſt precious Bloud, as the onely ſufficient Price, of the deare purchaſe of our Redemptions.

Be it then to us, (as to them it was, and as moſt properly it is) The ſpeech of the SONNE of GOD, as this day hanging on the Croſſe, to a

ſort of careleſſe people, that goe up and downe without any manner of regard of theſe his ſorrowes and ſufferings, ſo worthy of all regard. Have yee no regard? ô all yee that paſſe by the way, Conſider and behold, if ever there were ſorrow like to my ſorrow, which was done unto me, wherewith the LORD afflicted me in the day of the fierceneſſe of his wrath.

Here is a Complaint, and here is a Requeſt. A complaint, that we have not: A Requeſt, that we would have the Paines and Paſsions of our Saviour CHRIST in ſome Regard. For firſt he complaineth (and not without cauſe) Have yee no regard? And then (as willing to forget their former neglect, ſo they will yet do it) he falleth to intreat, O conſider and behold. The parts;

And what is that we ſhould conſider? The Sorrow which he ſuffereth: and in it two things: The Quality, and the cauſe. 1. The quality, Si fuerit ſicut; If ever the like were: and that either in reſpect of Dolor, or Dolor meus, The Sorrow ſuffered, or the Perſon ſuffering. 2. The Cauſe: that is GOD, that in His wrath, in his fierce wrath, doth all this to him. Which cauſe will not leave us, till it have led us to another cauſe in our ſelves, and to another yet in him: All which ſerve to ripen us to Regard.

Theſe two then ſpecially we are moved to regard. 1. Regard is the maine point. But becauſe therefore we regard but faintly, becauſe either we conſider not, or not aright; wee are called to conſider ſeriouſly of them. As if he ſhould ſay, Regard you not? If you did conſider, you would: if you conſidered as you ſhould, you would regard as you ought. Certainly the Paſsion, if it were throughly conſidered, would be duly regarded. Conſider then.

So the Points are two: [1] The Quality, and the [2] Cauſe of his ſuffering. And the Duties two: [1] To Conſider, and Regard, [2] So to conſider, that we regard them, and him for them.

I.
II.
III.
IV.

Have you no regard, &c.

TO eaſe this Complaint, and to grant this Requeſt, we are to regard: and that we may regard, we are to conſider the paines of his Paſſion. Which, that we may reckon no eaſie common matter of light moment, to doe or not to doe, as we liſt: Firſt, a generall ſtay is made of all paſſengers this day. For, (as if it were from his Croſſe) doth our SAVIOUR addreſſe this his ſpeech to them that goe to and fro, the day of his Paſsion, without ſo much as entertaining a thought, or vouchſafing to looke that way. O vos qui tranſitis! O you that paſſe by the way, ſtay and Conſider. To them frameth he his ſpeech, that paſſe by: To them, & to them all, O vos omnes, qui tranſitis, O all ye that paſſe by the way, ſtay and Conſider. The Parties to whom. O all ye that paſſe by the way conſider;

Which very ſtay of His, ſheweth it to be ſome important matter, in that it is, of all. For as for ſome to be ſtaied, and thoſe the greater ſome, there may be reaſon; the moſt part of thoſe that go thus to and fro, may well intend it, they have little elſe to doe. But to except none, not ſome ſpecial Perſon, is hard. What know we their haſte? Their occaſions may be ſuch, and ſo urgent, as they cannot ſtay. Well, what haſte, what buſineſſe ſo ever, paſſe not by, ſtay though. As much to ſay, as, Be they never ſo great, your occaſions; they are not, they cannot bee ſo great as this: How urgent ſoever, this is more, and more to be intended. The regard of this, is worthy the ſtaying of a journey. It is worth the conſidering of thoſe, that have never ſo great affaires in hand. So materiall in His ſight in His account. Which ſerveth to ſhew the exigence of this duty. But as for this point, it needeth not to be ſtood upon to us here at this time: we are not going by, wee need not be ſtaied; we have ſtaied all other our affaires, to come hither, and here we are all preſent before GOD, to have it ſet before us, that we may conſider it. Thither then let us come.

That which we are called to behold and conſider, is His Sorrow: And Sorrow. Sorrow is a thing which of it ſelfe Nature inclineth us to behold, as being
Heb. 13.3. our ſelves in the body, which may be one day in the like ſorrowfull caſe. Therefore will every good eye turne it ſelfe, and looke upon them that
1. Behold Luc. 10.32. are in diſtreſſe. Thoſe two in the Goſpell, that paſſed by the wounded man, before they paſſed by him, (though they helped him not, as the Samaritane did) yet they looked upon him as he lay. But, this party (here)
Ioh. 3.14. lieth not, he is lift up, as the Serpent in the wilderneſſe, that unleſſe we turne our eyes away purpoſly, we can neither will nor chooſe, but behold Him.

But becauſe, to Behold, and not to conſider, is but to gaze; and gazing Acts. 1.11. the Angel blameth in the Apoſtles themſelves, we muſt do both: both Be-
2. Conſider. hold and conſider: look upon, with the eye of the body, that is, behold, and looke into, with the eye of the mind, that is, Conſider. So ſaith the Prophet here. And the very ſame doth the Apoſtle adviſe us to do. Firſt, ἀφορᾶν,
Heb. 12.2,3. to looke upon him (that is, to Behold) and then ἀναλογίζεσθε, to thinke upon Him, that is to Conſider His Sorrow: Sorrow (ſure) would be conſidered.

The quality, If ever the like. Now then, becauſe, as the quality of the Sorrow is, accordingly it would be conſidered, (for if it be but a common ſorrow, the leſſe will ſerve, but if it be ſome ſpecial, ſome very heavy caſe, the more would be allowed it: for, proportionably with the ſuffering, the conſideration is to ariſe:) To raiſe our conſideration to the full, and to elevate it to the higheſt point, there is upon His Sorrow ſet a Si fuerit ſicut, a note of higheſt eminency: for, Si fuerit ſicut, are words that have life in them, and are able to quicken our conſideration, if it be not quite dead. For by them we are provoked (as it were) to Conſider, and conſidering, to ſee whether ever any Sicut may be found, to ſet by it, whether ever any like it.

For if never any, Our nature is, to regard things exceeding rare and ſtrange; and ſuch as the like whereof is not elſe to be ſeene. Vpon this point then, there is a Caſe made, as if He ſhould ſay, If ever the like, Regard not this; but if never any, be like your ſelves in other things, and vouchſafe this (if not your chiefeſt, yet) ſome Regard.

point

To enter this Compariſon, and to ſhew it for ſuch. That, are we to do, three ſundry wayes: For, three ſundry wayes, in three ſundry words, are theſe Sufferings of his here expreſsed: all three within the compaſſe of the Verſe. In the three parts of His Sorrow.

The firſt is, מכ אב Mac-ob (which wee read Sorrow,) taken from a wound or ſtripe, as all do agree. 1

The ſecond is, עלל Gholel; we read Done to me, taken from a word that ſignifieth Melting in a fornace; as S. Hierome noteth out of the Chaldee (who ſo tranſlateth it.) 2

The third is, חוגר Hoga; where we read afflicted, from a word which importeth Renting off, or Bereaving. The old Latine turneth it Vindemiavit me; as a Vine whoſe fruit is all plucked off. The Greeke (with Theodoret) ἀπεψίλωσε με, as a Vine or Tree, whoſe leaves are all beaten off, and is left naked and bare. 3

In theſe three, are comprized his Sufferings, Wounded, Melted, and Bereft, leaſe and fruit, (that is) all manner of comfort.

Of all that is penall, or can be ſuffered, the common diviſion is, Senſus & damni, Griefe for that we feele, or for that we forgoe. For that we feele, in the two former, Wounded in body, Melted in ſoule: for that we forgoe, in the laſt; Bereft all, left neither fruit, nor ſo much as a leaſe to hang on him. 1. Of the quality. Firſt, of His Paſſion.

According to theſe three, To conſider his Sufferings, and to begin firſt with the firſt. The paines of his Body, his wounds and his ſtripes. 1. Pœna ſenſus in the body.

Our very eye will ſoone tell us, no place was left in his Body, where he might be ſmitten, and was not. His skin and fleſh rent with the whips and ſcourges, his hands and feet wounded with the nailes, his head with the thornes, his very heart with the ſpeare-point; all his ſenſes, all his parts loden with whatſoever wit or malice could invent. His bleſsed Body given as an Anvile to be beaten upon, with the violent hands of thoſe barbarous miſcreants, till they brought him into this caſe, of Si fuerit ſicut. For, Pilates (Ecce Homo!) his ſhewing him with an Ecce, as if he ſhould ſay, Behold, look if ever you ſaw the like ruefull ſpectacle: This very ſhewing of his ſheweth plainly, hee was then come into wofull plight: So wofull, as Pilate verily believed, his very ſight ſo pitifull, as, it would have moved the hardeſt heart of them all to have relented. and ſaid, This is enough, we deſire no more. And this for the wounds of his body, (for on this we ſtand not.) Ioh. 19. 5.

In this one peradventure ſome Sicut may be found, in the paines of the body: but, in the ſecond, the Sorrow of the Soule, I am ſure, none. And indeed the paine of the Body is but the Body of paine: the verie 2. Pœna ſenſus in the Soule.

Soule

Syra. 15 57. Pro. 18.14. ſoule of ſorrow and paine in the ſoules ſorrow and paine, Give me any griefe, ſave the griefe of the mind, ſaith the Wiſe man: For (ſaith Salomon) The ſpirit of man will ſuſtaine all his other infirmities, but a wounded ſpirit, who can beare? And of this, this of His Soule, I dare make a Caſe, Si fuerit ſicut.

Ioh 12.27. Luc.22.44. Mar. 14.35. Mat. 26.38. He began to be troubled in Soule, (ſaith S. Iohn:) To be in an agony, (ſaith S. Luke:) To be in anguiſh of mind and deepe diſtreſſe, (ſaith S. Marke.) To have His Soule round about on every ſide invironed with ſorrow, and that ſorrow to the death. Here is trouble, anguiſh, agony, ſorrow and deadly ſorrow: But, it muſt be ſuch, as never the like: So it was too.

Luc.22.44. The eſtimate wherof we may take from the ſecond word of Melting, that is, from His ſweat in the Garden; ſtrange, and the like wherof was never heard or ſeene.

No manner violence offered Him in body; no man touching him, or being nere him; in a cold night (for they were faine to have a fire within doores) lying abroad in the aire, and upon the cold earth, to be all of a ſweat, and that ſweat to be Bloud; and not as they call it, Diaphoreticus, a thin faint ſweat, but Grumoſus, of great Drops; and thoſe, ſo many, ſo plenteous, as they went through His apparell and all; and through all, ſtreamed to the ground, and that in great abundance: Read, enquire, and Conſider, Si fuerit ſudor, ſicut ſudor iſte; If ever there were ſweat like this ſweat of His? Never the like ſweat certainly, and therefore never the like Sorrow. Our tranſlation is, Done unto me: but we ſaid, the word properly ſignifieth (and ſo S. Hierome and the Chaldee Paraphraſt read it) Melted Me. And truly it ſhould ſeeme by this fearfull ſweat of his, he was neere ſome fornace, the feeling whereof, was able to caſt him into that ſweat, and to turne his ſweat into drops of bloud. And ſure it was ſo: For ſee, even in the very next words of all to this verſe, he complaineth of Verſe. 13. it, Ignem miſit in oſsibus meis, That a fire was ſent into His bones which melted him, & made that bloudy ſweat to diſtil from him. That houre, what his feelings were, it is dangerous to define: wee know them not, we may be too bold to determine of them. To very good purpoſe it was, that the ancient Fathers of the Greek Church in their Liturgy, after they have recounted al the particular Paines, as they are ſet downe in his Paſsion, and by all, and by every one of them, called for mercie, doe, after all, ſhut up all with this, Διὰ τῶν ἀγνώστων κοπῶν καὶ βασάνων ἐλέησον καὶ σῶσον ἡμᾶς, By thine unknowne Sorrowes, and Sufferings, felt by Thee, but not diſtinctly knowne by us, Have mercy upon us, and ſave us.

Now, though this ſuffice not, nothing neere; yet let it ſuffice (the time being ſhort) for his paines of body and Soule. For thoſe of the Body, it may be, ſome may have endured the like: but the ſorrowes of his Soule are unknowne ſorrowes: and for them, none ever have; ever have, or ever ſhall ſuffer the like; the like, or neere the like in any degree.

And

And now to the third. It was ſaid before, To be in diſtreſſe, ſuch diſtreſſe as this was, and to finde none to comfort, nay not ſo much as to regard Him, is all that can be ſaid, to make his ſorrow a Non ſicut. Comfort is it, by which, in the midſt of all our ſorrowes, we are Confortati, that is ſtrengthned and made the better able to beare them all out. And who is there, even the pooreſt creature among us, but in ſome degree findeth ſome comfort, or ſome regard at ſome bodies hands? For, if that be not left, the ſtate of that party is (here) in the third word ſaid to bee like the tree, whoſe leaves and whoſe fruit are all beaten off quite, and it ſelfe left bare and naked both of the one and of the other. 3 Pœna damni.

And ſuch was our SAVIOURS caſe in theſe his Sorrowes this day; and that ſo, as what is left the meaneſt of the ſonnes of men, was not left him: Not a leafe. Not a leafe! Leaves I may well call all humane comforts and regards, whereof he was then left cleane deſolate. 1. His owne, they among whom hee had gone about all his life long, healing them, reaching them, feeding them, doing them all good he could, it is they that cry, Not Him, no, but Barabbas rather; away with Him, His bloud bee upon us and our children. It is they, that in the midſt of his ſorrowes, ſhake their head at him, and cry, Ah thou wretch: they, that in his moſt diſconſolate eſtate, crie Eli, Eli; in moſt barbarous manner; deride him, and ſay, Stay, and you ſhall ſee Elias come preſently and take Him downe. And this was their regard. 1 Leaves. 1 Withered leaves. Iohn 18.40. and 19 15. Mat. 27. 25. Mar. 15. 29. 36.

But theſe were but withered leaves. They then that on earth were neareſt him of all, the greeneſt leaves and likeſt to hang on, and to give him ſome ſhade: even of them, ſome bought and ſould him; others denied and forſwore him, but all fell away, and forſooke him Ἀπῆλλοτ μι (ſaith Theodoret) not a leafe left. 2 Greene leaves.

But leaves are but leaves, and ſo are all earthly ſtayes. The fruit then, the true fruit of the Vine indeed, the true comfort in all heavineſſe, is Deſuper, from above, is divine conſolation. But Vindemiavit me, (ſaith the Latine Text) even that was, in this his ſorrow; this day bereft him too. And that was his moſt ſorrowfull complaint of all others: not that His friends upon earth, but that His Father from Heaven had forſaken Him; that neither heaven nor earth yeelded Him any regard; but that betweene the paſsioned powers of His ſoule, and whatſoever might any wayes refreſh him, there was a Traverſe drawne; and he left in the ſtate of a weather-beaten tree, all deſolate and forlorne. Evident, too evident, by that his moſt dreadfull cry, which at once moved all the powers in heaven and earth, My God, My God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Weigh well that crie; conſider it well, and tell me, Si fuerit clamor ſicut clamor iſte, if ever there were crie, like that of his: Never the like crie, and therefore never the like ſorrow. Fruit. Mat. 27.46.

It is ſtrange, very ſtrange, that, of none of the Martyrs, the like can bee read; who yet endured moſt exquiſite paines in their Martyrdomes:

yet we ſee, with what courage, with what cheerefulnes, how even ſinging they are reported to have paſſed through their torments. Will yee know the reaſon? St. Auguſtine ſetteth it down, Martyres non eripuit, ſed nunquid deſeruit? He delivered not His Martyrs; but, did He forſake them? He delivered not their bodies, but He forſooke not their ſoules, but diſtilled into them the dew of His heavenly comfort; an abundant ſupply for all they could endure. Not ſo here: Vindemiavit me (ſaith the Prophet) Dereliquiſti me (ſaith He himſelfe:) No comfort, no ſupply at all.

Leo it is, that firſt ſaid it, (and all Antiquity allow of it,) Non ſolvit unionem, ſed ſubtraxit viſionem. The union was not diſſolved; True, but the beames, the influence was reſtrained; and, for any comfort from thence, His ſoule was, even as a ſcorched heath-ground, without ſo much as any drop of dew of divine comfort: as a naked tree, no fruit to refreſh Him within, no leafe to give him ſhadow without: The power of darkneſſe let looſe to afflict Him: The influence of comfott, reſtrained to relieve Him. It is a Non ſicut, this: it cannot be expreſſed as it ſhould, and as other things may: in ſilence we may admire it, but all our words will not reach it. And though to draw it ſo farre, as ſome doe, is little better than blaſphemy; yet on the other ſide, to ſhrinke it ſo ſhort, as other ſome doe, cannot be but with derogation to his love, Who, to kindle our love and loving Regard, would come to a Non ſicut, in his ſuffering. For, ſo it was, and ſo we muſt allow it to be. This, in reſpect of his paſsion, Dolor.

Secondly, of the quality of his Perſon.

Now, in reſpect of his perſon, Dolor meus. Whereof, if it pleaſe you to take a view, even of the perſon thus wounded, thus afflicted and forſaken, you ſhall then have a perfect Non ſicut. And indeed, the Perſon is here a weighty circumſtance: It is thrice repeated, Meus, Mihi, Me, and we may not leave it out. For, as is the Perſon, ſo is the Paſsion; and any one, even the very leaſt degree of wrong or diſgrace, offered to a Perſon of excellency, is more than a hundred times more, to one of meane condition: So weighty is the circumſtance of the Perſon. Conſider then, how great the Perſon was; And I reſt fully aſſured, here we boldly challenge, and ſay, Si fuerit ſicut.

1 Iohn. 19.5.

Ecce homo, ſaith Pilate firſt, A man he is, as we are: And were he but a man; nay, were he not a man, but ſome poore dumbe creature, it were great ruth to ſee him ſo handled, as he was.

2 Mat. 17.19.

A man, ſaith Pilate; and a Iuſt man, ſaith Pilates wife. Have thou nothing to doe with that Iuſt man. And that is one degree further. For, though we pity the puniſhment even of Malefactors themſelves: yet ever, moſt compaſsion we have of them that ſuffer and be innocent. And he was innocent: Pilate and Herod, and the Prince of this world (his very enemies) being his Iudges.

Luk. 23.14. & 15. Iohn. 14.30.

3

Now among the innocent, the more Noble the Perſon, the more heavy the ſpectacle. And never doe our bowels yerne ſo much as over

ſuch

ſuch. Alas, Alas for that noble Prince, ſaith this Prophet (the ſtile of mourning for the death of a great Perſonage.) And, He that ſuffered here, is ſuch; even, a principall Perſon among the ſonnes of men, of the race royall deſcended from Kings: Pilate ſtiled Him ſo, in his Title, and he would not alter it. Ier. 22.18. Iohn. 19.22.

Three de grees. But, yet we are not at our true Quantus. For He is yet more: More than the higheſt of the ſonnes of men: for He is THE SONNE OF THE MOST HIGH GOD. Pilate ſaw no further, but Ecce homo; The Centurion did, Vere, Filius Dei erat hic, Now truly, this was the Sonne of GOD. And here, all words forſake us, and every tongue becommeth ſpeechleſſe. 4 Iohn. 19.5, Mar. 15.39.

We have no way to expreſſe it, but a minore ad majus; (Thus.) Of this booke, the booke of Lamentations, one ſpeciall occaſion was, the death of King Ioſias: But behold a greater than Ioſias is here.

Of King Ioſias (as a ſpeciall reaſon of mourning,) the Prophet ſaith, Spiritus oris noſtri, Chriſtus Domini, The very breath of our noſtrils, The LORDS Annointed (for ſo are all good Kings, in their Subjects accounts) he is gone. But behold, here is not Chriſtus Domini, but Chriſtus Dominus, the Lord's CHRIST, but the LORD CHRIST Himſelfe: And that not comming to an honourable death in battell, as Ioſias did; but to a moſt vile reproachfull death, the death of Malefactors in the higheſt degree. And not ſlaine outright as Ioſias was: but mangled and maſſacred in moſt pitifull ſtrange manner; wounded in body, wounded in Spirit, left utterly deſolate. O conſider this well, and confeſſe, the Caſe is truly put, Si fuerit dolor ſicut Dolor meus. Never, never the like Perſon: And if, as the Perſon is, the Paſsion bee; never the like Paſsion to His. Chap. 4.10.

It is truly affirmed, that any one, even the leaſt drop of bloud, even the leaſt paine, yea, of the body onely, of this ſo great a Perſon, any Dolor with this Meus, had beene enough to make a Non ſicut of it. That is enough; but that is not all: for adde now the three other degrees; adde to this Perſon, thoſe Wounds, that Sweat, and that Crie, and put all together: And, I make no manner queſtion, the like was not, ſhall not, cannot ever be. It is far above all that ever was, or can be, Abyſſus eſt: men may drowſily heare it, and coldly affect it: But Principalities & Powers ſtand abaſhed at it. And for the Quality, both of the Paſsion and of the Perſon, That Never the like; thus much.

Now to proceed to the Cauſe, and to Conſider it: for, without it, we ſhall have but halfe a regard, and ſcarce that. Indeed, ſet the Cauſe aſide, and the Paſsion (as rare as it is,) is yet but a dull and heavy ſight: we liſt not much looke upon ſpectacles of that kinde, though never ſo ſtrange: they fill us full of penſive thoughts, and make us Melancholike. And ſo doth this, till upon examination of the cauſe, we find it toucheth 2 Of the cauſe.

I us neere; and ſo neere, ſo many wayes, as we cannot chooſe, but have ſome regard of it.

1 GOD. Luk. 22.53. What was done to Him, we ſee. Let there now be a queſt of Inquiry to finde, who was doer of it. Who? who, but the Power of darkeneſſe, wicked Pilate, bloudy Caiaphas, the envious Prieſts, the barbarous Souldiers? None of theſe are returned here. We are too low, by a great deale, if we thinke to finde it among men. Quæ fecit mihi Deus, It was GOD that did it. An houre of that day was the houre of the power of darkeneſſe: but, the whole day it ſelfe, is ſaid here plainely, was the day of the wrath of GOD. GOD was a doer in it; wherewith GOD hath afflicted me.

GOD's Wrath. GOD afflicteth ſome in Mercie: and others in Wrath. This was in His wrath. In His wrath GOD is not alike to all; ſome Hee afflicteth in His more gentle and milde; others, in his fierce wrath. This was in the very fierceneſſe of His wrath. His Sufferings, His Sweat and Crie, ſhew as much: They could not come, but from a wrath, Si fuerit ſicut: (For, we are not paſt Non ſicut, no not here in this part it followeth us ſtill, and will not leave us in any point, not to the end.)

2 Sinne. Not His. Ioh. 18.22. Gen. 18.25. The Cauſe then in GOD, was wrath. What cauſed this wrath? GOD is not wroth, but with ſinne; Nor grievouſly wroth, but with grievous ſinne. And in CHRIST there was no grievous ſinne: Nay, no ſin at all. GOD did it, (the Text is plaine.) And in His fierce wrath, he did it. For what cauſe? For, GOD forbid, GOD ſhould doe, as did Annas the high Prieſt, cauſe Him to be ſmitten without cauſe. GOD forbid (ſaith Abraham) the Iudge of the World ſhould doe wrong to any. To any, but ſpecially, to his owne Sonne: That his Sonne, of whom, with thundring voice from Heaven, hee teſtifieth, all his joy and delight were in Him, in Him onely, He was well pleaſed. And how then could his wrath wax hot, to doe all this unto him?

There is no way to preſerve GODS Iuſtice, and Chriſts Innocencie both, but to ſay as the Angell ſaid of him to the Prophet Daniel, The Meſſias ſhall be ſlaine, וְאֵינוֹ ve-en-lo, ſhall be ſlaine, but not for Himſelfe. Not for himſelfe? for whom then? For ſome others. He tooke upon him the perſon of others; and ſo doing, Iuſtice may have her courſe and proceed.

Dan. 9.26. But other mens. Pitie it is, to ſee a man pay that, he never tooke: but if he will become a Surety, if he will take on him the perſon of the Debtor, ſo he muſt. Pitie to ſee a ſilly poore Lambe lie bleeding to death; but, if it muſt be a ſacrifice (ſuch is the nature of a ſacrifice) ſo it muſt. And ſo CHRIST, though without ſin in himſelfe; yet as a Surety, as a Sacrifice, may juſtly ſuffer for others, if he will take upon him their perſons; and ſo, GOD may juſtly give way to his wrath againſt him.

Ours. Eſay. 53.4. 5,6. And who be thoſe others? The Prophet Eſay telleth us, and telleth it us ſeven times over for failing, He tooke upon Him our infirmities, and bare our maladies: He was wounded for our iniquities, and broken for our tranſgreſſi-

ons. The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon Him, and with His ſtripes were we healed. All we as ſheepe were gone aſtray, and turned every man to his owne way: and the Lord hath layd upon Him, the iniquity of us all. All, all: even thoſe that paſſe to and fro, and for all this, regard neither Him nor His Paſsion.

The ſhort is: It was we, that for our ſinnes, our many great and grievous ſinnes, (Si fuerit ſicut, the like whereof never were) ſhould have ſwet this Sweat, and have cried this Cry; ſhould have beene ſmitten with theſe ſorrowes by the fierce wrath of GOD, had he not ſtept between the blow and us, and latched it in His own body and ſoule, even the dint of the fierceneſſe of the wrath of GOD. O the Non ſicut of our ſinnes, that could not otherwiſe be anſwered!

To return then a true verdict. It is we, (we, wretched ſinners that we are) that are to be found the principals in this act; and thoſe, on whom we ſeeke to ſhift it, to derive it from our ſelves, Pilate and Caiaphas and the reſt, but inſtrumentall cauſes only. And it is not the executioner that killeth the man properly, (that is, They:) No, nor the Iudge, (which is GOD, in this caſe:) Only ſin, Solum peccatum homicida eſt, Sin only is the murtherer, to ſay the truth; and our ſinnes, the murthoters of the SONNE of GOD: and the Non ſicut of them, the true cauſe, of the Non ſicut both of GODS wrath, and of His ſorrowfull ſufferings.

Which bringeth home this our Text to us, even into our owne boſomes; and applieth it moſt effectually, to me that ſpeake, and to you that heare, to every one of us: and that with the Prophet Nathan's application; Tu es homo; Thou art the Man, even thou, for whom GOD in His fierce wrath thus afflicted Him. Sinne (then) was the cauſe on our part, Why we, or ſome other for us. 2 Sam. 12. 7.

3 Love of us.

But yet, what was the cauſe, why he, on his part: what was that, that moved him thus to become our Surety, and to take upon Him our debt and danger? that moved Him thus to lay upon his Soule, a ſacrifice for our ſinne? Sure, Oblatus eſt quia voluit (ſaith Eſay againe;) Offered He was for no other cauſe, but becauſe He would. For, unleſſe he would, hee needed not. Needed not, for any neceſsity of Iuſtice. For, no Lambe was ever more innocent: Nor for any neceſsity of Conſtraint; For, twelve Legions of Angels were ready at his command: But, becauſe He would. Eſay. 53. 7.

And why would he? No reaſon can be given, but becauſe he regarded us? (Marke that reaſon) And what were wee? Verily, utterly unworthy even his leaſt regard; not worth the taking up, not worth the looking after. Cum inimici eſſemus (ſaith the Apoſtle) we were His enemies, when he did it; without all deſert before, & without all regard, after he had done and ſuffered all this for us: and yet he would regard us, that ſo little regard him. For when he ſaw us (a ſort of forlorne ſinners) Non priùs natos, quàm damnatos, Damned as faſt as borne; as being by nature children of wrath, and yet ſtill heaping up wrath againſt the day of wrath, by the errors of our life, till the time of our paſsing hence; and then the Rom. 5. 8. Epheſ. 2. 3. Rom. 2. 5.

fierce wrath of God, ready to overwhelme us; and to make us endure the terror and torments of a ever-dying death, (another Non ſicut yet:) When (I ſay) He was in this caſe, He was moved with compaſsion over us, and undertooke all this for us. Even then, in His love, He regarded us, and ſo regarded us, that He regarded not Himſelfe, to regard us.

Bernard ſaith moſt truly, Dilexiſti me Domine magis quàm te, quando mori voluiſti pro me: In ſuffering all this for us, thou ſhewest (LORD) that we were more deer to thee, that thou regardeſt us more, than thine own ſelfe: and ſhall this Regard finde no regard at our hands?

It was ſinne then, and the hainouſneſſe of ſinne in us, that provoked wrath, and the fierceneſſe of His wrath in God: It was love, and the greatneſſe of His love, in CHRIST, that cauſed Him to ſuffer the Sorrowes, and the greivouſneſſe of theſe ſorrowes, and all for our ſakes.

And indeed, but only to teſtifie the Non ſicut of this His Love, all this needed not, that was done to Him. One, any one, even the very leaſt of all the paines He endured, had beene enough; enough, in reſpect of the Meus; enough, in reſpect of the Non ſicut of His Perſon. For, that which ſetteth the high price on this ſacrifice, is this; That He, which offereth it unto GOD, is GOD. But, if little had beene ſuffered, little would the love have beene thought, that ſuffered ſo little; and as little Regard would have beene had of it. To awake our regard then, or to leave us excuſeleſſe, if we continue regardles, all this He bare for us: that He might as truly make a Caſe of Si fuerit amor, ſicut amor meus, as He did before, of Si fuerit dolor, ſicut dolor meus. We ſay, we will regard Love; if we will, here it is to regard.

So have we the Cauſes all three: 1 Wrath in GOD: 2 Sinne in our ſelves: 3 Love in Him.

Our Benefit by it Pertaines it not to us?

Yet have we not all we ſhould. For, what of all this? What good? Cui bono? That, that is it (indeed) that we will regard, if any thing: as being matter of Benefit, the onely thing (in a manner) the world regardeth: which bringeth us about to the very firſt words againe. For, the very firſt words which we read, Have yee no regard? are in the Originall, לֹא אֲלֵיכֶם lo alechem, which the Seventy turne (word for word) οὐχὶ ὑμῖν; and the Latine likewiſe, Nonne ad vos pertinet? Pertaines it not to you, that you regard it no better? For theſe two, (Pertaining, and Regarding) are folded one in another, and goe together ſo commonly, as one is taken often for the other. Then to bee ſure to bring us to Regard, Hee urgeth this: Pertaines not all this to you? Is it not for your good? Is not the benefit yours? Matters of benefit they pertaine to you, and without them, LOVE, and all the reſt may pertaine to whom they will.

Conſider then, the ineſtimable benefit that groweth unto you from from this incomparable Love. It is not impertinent this; Even this; That to us hereby, all is turned about cleane contrary : That by His ſtripes we are healed : by His ſweat, we refreſhed : By his forſaking, wee received to Grace. That, this day (to Him, the day of the fiercenesſe of GODS wrath) is to us the day of the fullneſſe of GODS favour, (as the Apoſtle called it) A day of ſalvation In reſpect of that he ſuffered, (I deny not) an evill day; a day of heavineſſe : But, in reſpect of that, which he, by it hath obtained for us, It is, (as we truly call it,) A good day, a day of joy and Iubilee. For it doth not onely rid us of that wrath, which pertaineth to us for our ſinnes: but further, it maketh that pertaine to us, whereto wee had no manner of right at all. 2 Cor. 6. 2.

For, not onely by his death, as by the death of our ſacrifice, by the bloud of his Croſſe, as by the bloud of the Paſchall Lambe, the Deſtroyer paſſeth over us, and we ſhall not periſh : But alſo by his death, as by the death of our High Prieſt (for he is Prieſt and Sacrifice both) wee are reſtored from our exile, even to our former forfeited eſtate in the Land of Promiſe, Or rather (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Non ſicut delictum ſic donum : Not to the ſame eſtate, but to one nothing like it : (that, is) one farre better, than the eſtate, our ſinnes bereft us. For they deprived us of Paradiſe, a place on earth : but by the purchace of his bloud, we are intitled to a farre higher, even the Kingdome of heaven : And his bloud; not onely the bloud of Remiſsion, to acquit us of our ſinnes; but the bloud of the Teſtament too, to bequeath us and give us eſtate, in that Heavenly inheritance, Exo 12. 13. Num. 15. 28. Rom. 8. 15. Mat. 26. 28.

Now whatſoever elſe, this (I am ſure) is a Non ſicut : as that, which the eye, by all it can ſee; the eare, by all it can heare; the heart, by all it can conceive, cannot patterne it; or ſet the like by it. Pertaines not this unto us neither? Is not this worth the Regard? Sure, if any thing bee worthy the Regard, this is moſt worthy of our very worthieſt and beſt Regard.

The recapitulation of all.

Thus have we conſidered and ſeene, not ſo much as in this ſight we might or ſhould, but as much as the time will give us leave. And now, lay all theſe before you, (every one of them a Non ſicut of it ſelfe) the paines of his body, eſteemed by Pilate's Ecce; the ſorrowes of His Soule, by his ſweat in the Garden; the comfortleſſe eſtate of his Sorrowes, by his crie on the Croſſe : And with theſe, his Perſon, as being the SONNE of the great and ETERNALL GOD. Then joyne to theſe, the cauſe : In GOD: his fierce wrath : In us, our heinous ſinnes deſerving it: In Him, His exceeding great Love, both ſuffering that for us, which wee had deſerved; and procuring for us, that we could never deſerve : Making that to appertaine to himſelfe, which of right pertained to us; and making that pertaine to us, which pertained to him onely, and not to us at all, but by his meanes alone. And after their view in ſeverall, lay them all together, together, ſo many Non ſicut's into one, and tell me, if His Complaint be not juſt, and His requeſt moſt reaſonable.

The Complaint. The matter juſt.

Yes ſure, His Complaint is juſt, Have yee no regard? None? and yet never the like? None, and it pertaines unto you? Noe regard? As if it were ſome common ordinary matter, and the like never was? No regard? As if it concern'd you not a whit, and it toucheth you ſo neere? As if He ſhould ſay: Rare things you regard, yea, though they no wayes pertaine to you: this is exceeding rare, and will you not regard it? Againe, things, that neerely touch you, you regard, though they be not rare at all; this toucheth you exceeding neere, even as neere as your ſoule toucheth you, and will you not regard it? Will neither of theſe by it ſelfe move you? Will not both theſe together move you? What will move you? Will Pity? Here is Diſtreſſe, never the like? Will Dutie? Here is a Perſon, never the like: Will Feare? Here is Wrath, never the like: Will Remorſe? Here are ſinnes, never the like: Will Kindneſſe? Here is Love, never the like: Will Bounty? Here are Benefits, never the like: Will all theſe? Here they be all, all above any Sicut, all in the higheſt degree.

The manner earneſt.

Truely the complaint is juſt, it may move us: it wanteth no reaſon, it may move: and it wanteth no affection in the delivery of it to us, on His part to move us. Sure it moved Him exceeding much: For among all the deadly ſorrowes of His moſt bitter Paſsion; this, even this ſeemeth to be His greateſt of all, and that which did moſt affect Him, even the grief of the ſlender reckoning moſt men have it in, as little reſpecting Him, as if he had done, or ſuffered nothing at all for them. For lo, of all the ſharpe paines he endureth, he complaineth not, but of this he complaineth, of No regard: That which grieveth him moſt, that which moſt he moaneth is this. It is ſtrange, hee ſhould bee in paines, ſuch paines as never any was, and not complaine himſelfe of them; But of want of regard onely. Strange, he ſhould not make requeſt, O deliver me, or relieve me: But only, O conſider and regard me. In effect, as if hee ſaid; None, no deliverance, no reliefe doe I ſeeke: Regard I ſeeke. And all that I ſuffer, I am content with it: I regard it not: I ſuffer moſt willingly, if this I may finde at your hands, Regard.

The regard of the Creatures of it.

Truly, This ſo paſsionate a Complaint may move us; it moved all but us: For moſt ſtrange of all it is, that all the Creatures in Heaven and Earth, ſeemed to heare this his mournfull Complaint, and in their kind, to ſhew their regard of it: The Sunne in heaven ſhrinking in his light; the earth trembling under it; the very ſtones cleaving in ſunder, as if they had ſenſe and Sympathy of it: and ſinfull men only, not moved with it. And yet, it was not for the Creatures, this was done to him; to them it pertaineth not: But for us, it was, and to us it doth; and ſhall we not yet regard it? Shall the Creature, and not we? Shall we not?

If

If we doe not, it may appertaine to us, but we pertaine not to it: It pertaines to all, but all pertaine not to it. None pertaine to it, but they that take Benefit by it; and none take benefit by it, no more than by the brazen Serpent, but they that fix their eye on it. Behold, Conſider, and Regard it: the profit, the benefit is loſt without Regard. The benefit if it.

If we doe not, as this was a day of GODS fierce Wrath againſt Him, onely for regarding us; ſo there is another day comming, and it will quickly be here, a day of like fierce wrath againſt us, for not regarding him. And who regardeth the power of his Wrath? He that doth, will ſurely Regard this. The perill if not. Pſal. 90 11.

In that day, there is not the moſt careleſſe of us all, but ſhall cry as they did in the Goſpel; Domine, non ad Te pertinet, ſi perimus? Pertaines it not to Thee, Careſt thou not that we periſh? Then would we be glad to pertaine to him, and his Paſſion. Pertaines it to us then, and pertaines it not now? Sure, now it muſt, if then it ſhall. Mar. 4. 38.

Then, to give end to this Complaint, let us grant him his requeſt, and Regard his Paſſion. Let the Rareneſſe of it: The Neereneſſe to us: Let Pitie, or Dutie: Feare, or Remorſe: Love, or Bounty: Any of them, or all of them: Let the juſtneſſe of his Complaint: Let his affectionate manner of Complaining of this, and onely this: Let the ſhame of the Creatures regard: Let our Profit, or our Perill: Let ſomething prevaile with us, to have it in ſome regard. The Requeſt. Have ſome regard.

1 Our beſt Regard.

Some regard! Verily, as his ſufferings, his Love, our good by them are; ſo ſhould our regard be, a Non ſicut too: That is, a regard of theſe, and of nothing in compariſon of theſe. It ſhould be ſo: For, with the benefit, ever the regard ſhould ariſe.

But GOD helpe us poore ſinners, and be mercifull unto us. Our regard is a Non ſicut, indeed: but it is backward, and in a contrary ſenſe: That is, no where ſo ſhallow, ſo ſhort, or ſo ſoone done. It ſhould be otherwiſe, it ſhould have our deepeſt conſideration, this; and our higheſt regard.

2 At leaſt ſome Regard.

But if that cannot be had, (our nature is ſo heavy, and fleſh and bloud ſo dull of apprehenſion in Spirituall things) yet at leaſt wiſe, ſome regard. Some, I ſay: The more the better; But in any wiſe, ſome. And not as here, No regard, None at all. Some waies to ſhew, We make accompt of it, to with-draw our ſelves, to void our minds of other matters, to ſet this before us, to thinke upon it, to thanke him for it, to regard him, and ſtay and ſee, whether he will regard us or no. Sure he will, and we ſhall feele our hearts pricked with ſorrow, by conſideration of the cauſe in us, our Sinne: And againe, warme within us, by conſideration of the cauſe in him, his Love; till by ſome motion of Grace He anſwer us, and ſhew that our regard is accepted of Him. Act. 2. 37. Luc. 24. 32.

3 This day ſpecially.

And this, as at all other times, (for, no day is amiſſe, but at all times, ſome time to be taken for this duty) ſo ſpecially on this Day; this this Day, vvhich we hold holy to the memorie of His Paſsion, this Day to doe it: to make this Day, the Day of GOD'S wrath and CHRIST'S ſuffering, a Day to us of ſerious conſideration and regard of them both.

It is kindly to conſider Opus diei in die ſuo, The worke of the Day, in the Day it was wrought: and this Day it was wrought. This Day therfore, vvhatſoever buſineſſe be, to lay them aſide alittle; whatſoever our haſte, yet to ſtay a little, and to ſpend a few thoughts in calling to minde and taking to regard, what this Day the SONNE of GOD did and ſuffered for us: and all for this end, that what He was then, we might not be; and what He is now, we might be for ever.

Which Almightie GOD grant we may doe, more or leſſe, even every one of us, according to the ſeverall meaſures of His Grace in us.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAjeſtie, at Greenwich on the XXIX. of March, A.D. MDCV.

being GOOD-FRYDAY.

HEBR. Chap. XII. Ver. II.

Aſpicientes in Authorem fidei, & Conſummatorem Jeſum; qui propoſito Sibi gaudio, ſuſtinuit Crucem, confuſione contempta: atque in dextera Sedis Dei ſedet.

Looking unto Iesus the Author and finiſher of our Faith; who for the joy that was ſet before Him, endured the Croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame; and is ſet at the right hand of the Throne of GOD.

SAINT Luke, though hee recount at large our SAVIOUR CHRIST'S whole ſtorie, yet in plaine and expreſſe termes hee calleth the Paſsion θεωρίαν, a Theorie or Sight, which Sight is it, the Apoſtle here calleth us to looke unto. Luc. 23.48.

Of our bleſſed SAVIOUR'S whole life or death, there is no part but is a Theorie of it ſelfe, well worthie our looking on; for from each part thereof, there goeth vertue to do us good. From each part: but of all, from the laſt part, or act of His Paſſion. Therefore hath the HOLY GHOST honoured this laſt part only, with this name; and none but this. This, is the Theorie ever moſt commended to our view. To be looked on He is, at all times, and in all acts: But, then, and in that act, ſpecially, When for the joy ſet before Him,

He endured the Crosse, and despised the shame. Then, saith the Apostle, looke unto Him. Saint Paul being elsewhere carefull to shew the Corinthians (and with them, us) CHRIST; and as to shew them CHRIST, So to shew them, in CHRIST, what that is, that specially concerneth them to know, or looke unto, thus he saith: That, though he knew many, very 1 Cor. 2. 2. many things besides; yet he esteemed not to know any thing, but IESUS CHRIST, & Hunc crucifixum, Him, and Him crucified. Meaning respectivè (as they terme it) that the perfection of our knowledge, is CHRIST: and the perfection of our knowledge, in, or touching CHRIST, is the knowledge of His Crosse, and Passion. That, the chiefe Theorie: Nay in this, all; so that, see this, and see all.

The view whereof, though it bee not restrained to any one time; but, all the yeare long, yea, all our life long, ought to be frequent with us; (and blessed are the houres, that are so spent:) yet, if at any time more than other, certainely, this time, this day may most justly challenge it. For, this day was this Scripture fulfilled, and this day, are our eares filled full with Scriptures about it. So that, though, on other daies, we imploy our eyes otherwise; yet, that this day at least, we would (as exceeding fitly the Apostle wisheth us) ἀφορᾶν cast our eyes from other sights, and fix
Ioh. 12. 32. them on this object, it being the day dedicate to the lifting up of the SONNE of MAN on high, that He may draw every eye unto Him.

The Occasion of the speaking, is (ever) the best key to every speech. The Occasion then, of this speech was this. The Apostle was to encourage the Hebrewes (and, in them, us all) to hold on the well begun profession of CHRIST and His faith. This our profession he expresseth, in the former verse, in the termes of a Race, or Game; borrowing his similitude from the Games of Olympus. For, from those Games (famous then, over all the world) and by termes from them taken, it was common to all Writers of that Age, both Holy and Humane, to set forth, as, in the running, the laborious course; so, in the price of it, the glorious reward of a vertuous life.

Which race, truely Olympique (becausе they and we (the most of us) either stand still, or if we move, doe it but slowly, and are ready to faint upon every occasion) that we may run the sooner, and attaine the better, two sights he sets before us, to comfort us and keepe us from fainting. One, a Cloud of Witnesses, in the first Verse, that is, the Saints in Heaven: Witnesses, as able to depose, this race may be runne, and this prize may be wonne, for they have runne the one, and wonne the other long agoe. These looke on us now, how well we carrie our selves; and we to looke to them, that we may carrie our selves well in the course we have undertaken.

On which Cloud when we have staid our eyes a while, and made them fit for a cleerer Object, he scattereth the cloud quite, and sets us up a second, even our blessed SAVIOUR His owne selfe. And here he willeth us ἀφορᾶν to turne our eyes from them, and to turne them hither and to fasten them here, on IESUS CHRIST, the Author and finisher of our faith.

As

be the better, every time we ſaw him. O that it might be ſo here! O that we would meet this Love with the like meaſure! Certainly, in his Paſſion, the Love of us triumphed, over the love of his life, and honour both.

One view more of both theſe under one, and we ſhall by theſe two diſcover two other things in our ſelves, for which, very agreable it was he ſhould ſuffer theſe two, that by theſe two of His, for thoſe two of ours, he might make full ſatisfaction. It will ſhew a good congruity betweene our ſickneſſe and his ſalve, betweene our debt and his diſcharge.

The Mother-ſinne then, the ſinne of Adam and Eve, and their motives to it, are the lively image of all the after-births of ſinne, and the baits of ſinne for ever. Now, that which moved them to diſobey, was partly pleaſure, and partly pride. Pleaſure; O the fruit was delightfull to ſee and to take. Pride: Eritis ſicut Dii, it promiſed an eſtate equall to the Higheſt. Behold then (in His Paſſion) for our pleaſure, His paine; and for our pride, His ſhame, and reproach. Behold Him in His patience, enduring paine, for our wicked luſt; in His humanity, having ſhame powred on Him, for our wretched pride. [a] The LORD of Life ſuffering death; [b] The LORD of glory, vile and ignominious diſgrace. [c] Tanquam Agnus, (ſaith the Prophet of Him) as a Lambe, pitifully ſlaughtered: [d] Tanquam vermis (ſaith He of Himſelfe) as a worme, ſpitefully trod upon. So, by His enduring paines and painfull death, expiating our unlawfull pleaſure: and, by His ſuſtaining ſhame, ſatisfying for our ſhamefull pride. Thus may we, under one, behold our ſelves, and our wretched demerits, in the mirrour of His Paſſion. Gregory ſaith well: Dicendum erat, quantum nos dilexit, ne diffidere; Dicendum erat & quales, ne ſuperbire & ingrati eſſe: How greatly He loved us, muſt be told us, to keepe us from diſtruſt: And what we were when He ſo loved us, muſt be told us, to hold us in humility, to make us everlaſtingly thankfull. Thus farre both under one view.

Gen. 3.6.5.

a Act. 3.15
b 1 Cor. 2.8.
c Ier. 11.19.
d Pſal. 22.6.

Now are we to part them, to ſee them apart. We ſhall have much adoe to do it, they are ſo folded and twiſted together. In the Croſſe, there is ſhame; and in ſhame, there is a Croſſe, and that a heavy one.

2 The Croſſe and ſhame ſeverally.

The Croſſe, the Heathen termed, Cruciabile lignum, a tree of torture: but they called it alſo, arborem infælicem, & ſtipitem infamem, a wretched infamous tree withall. So it was in His Crowne, the thorns pricked Him; there was paine: the Crowne it ſelfe was a meere mockery, and matter of ſcorne. So, in His Robe; His purple body underneath in great paine certainely: His purple Robe over it, a garment of ſhame and diſgrace. All along the Paſſion, thus they meet ſtill together. In a word: the prints of His Paſſion, the Apoſtle well calleth Stigmata CHRISTI: Both, are in that word: not onely wounds and ſo greivous; but baſe and ſervile markes, and ſo ſhameſull; for, ſo are ſtigmata. Thus, ſhame and Croſſe, and Croſſe and ſhame runne interchangeably.

Gal. 6.17.

Yet, ſince the HOLY GHOST doth ſhew us them ſeverally, ſo to ſee them them, as He ſhewes them. Enduring is the act of patience; and patience hath paine for her object. Deſpiſing ſhame is the property of humility, even

The Croſſe. of the higheſt humility; Not onely ſpernere ſe, but ſpernere ſe ſperni. Firſt then wee muſt ſee the paine, His patience endured; that is meant by the Croſſe: and then ſee the deſpiſing, His humility deſpiſed; that is meant by the ſhame. Firſt then of His Croſſe.

It is vvell knovvne, that CHRIST and His Croſſe vvere never parted; but that, all His life long was a continuall croſſe. At the very Cratch; His Croſſe firſt began. There, Herod ſought to doe that which Pilate did, even to end His life before it began. All His life after (ſaith the Apoſtle in Verſe 3. the next Verſe) was nothing but a perpetuall gain-ſaying of ſinners: which we call croſsing; and profeſſe, we cannot abide, in any of our ſpeeches or purpoſes to be croſſed, He was. In the Pſalme of the Paſſion (the XXII.) in the very front or inſcription of it, Hee is ſet forth unto us under the terme of a Hart, Cervus matutinus, a morning Hart (that is) a Hart roußed early in the morning: As, from His birth He was by Herod, and hunted and chaſed all His life long; and this day brought to His end, and as a poore Deere, ſtricken and wounded to the heart. This was His laſt; laſt and worſt. And, this we properly call his Croſſe, even this dayes ſuffering. To keep us then to our day, and the Croſſe of the day. He endured the Croſſe.

He endured. Very enduring it ſelfe, is durum: Durum pati. Eſpecially, for Perſons of high power or place, as the SONNE of GOD was. For great Perſons to doe great things, is no great wonder: Their very Genius naturally inclineth to it. But, to ſuffer any ſmall thing, for them, is more than to doe many great. Therefore, the Prophet placeth his morall fortitude, and the Divine, his Chriſtian obedience, rather in ſuffering, than in doing. Suffering is (ſure) the more hard of the twaine. He endured.

If it be hard to endure, it muſt be more hard to endure hard things: And of all things hard to be endured, the hardeſt is death. Of the Philoſophers πάντα φοβερά five fearefull things, it is the moſt fearefull: And what will not a man? Nay, what will not a woman weake and tender, in Phyſicke, in Chirurgerie endure, not to endure Death? He endured death.

And, that, if He endured, and no more but that, it might ſuffice; it is worth all we have; for, all we have, we will give for our life. But not Phil. 2. 8. death onely, but the kind of death is it. Mortem, mortem autem Crucis (ſaith the Apoſtle, doubling the point:) Death He endured, even the death of the Croſſe.

The Croſſe is but a little word; but of great contents: but few letters; but in thoſe few letters, are contained, multa dictu gravia, perpeſſu aſpera, heavy to be named, more heavy to be endured. I take but the foure things aſcribed by the HOLY GHOST to the Croſſe, anſwerable to the foure ends or quarters of it. [1] Sanguis Crucis (Coloſſ. 1.20.) [2] Dolores Crucis (Acts 1.2.) [3] Scandalum Crucis (Gal. 5.11.) [4] Maledictum Crucis (Gal. 3. 13.)

that is, The death of the Croſſe is all theſe foure, a[1] bloudy, [2] doleſull, [3] ſcandalous, [4] accurſed death.

1. Though it be but a cold comfort, yet a kind of comfort it is (if dye we muſt) that our death is mors ſicca, a drie; not ſanguis Crucis, not a bloudie death. 2. We would dye, when we dye, an eaſie, (not αἱματηρὸν) not a tormenting death. 3. Wee deſire to dye, with credit, if it might be; if not, without ſcandall, (ſcandalum Crucis.) 4. At leaſt wiſe to goe to our graves, and to dye by an honeſt, ordinary, and by no meanes, by an accurſed death, (maledictum Crucis.) In the Croſſe, are all theſe; all foure. The two firſt are in the Croſſe: The two latter, in the ſhame. For, the Croſſe and the ſhame are (in very deed) two Croſſes: the ſhame, a ſecond Croſſe of it ſelfe.

To ſee then, as in a ſhort time, ſhortly. That of the Poet (nec ſiccâ morte Tyranni) ſheweth plainly, it is no poore priviledge, to dye without effuſion of bloud. And ſo it is. 1. For, a bleſsing it is, and our wiſh it is, we may live out our time, and not dye an untimely death. Where there is effuſion of bloud, there is ever an untimely death. 1

2. Yet every untimely death is not violent: but a bloudy death is violent and againſt nature; and wee deſire to pay Nature her debt by the way of Nature. 2

3 A violent death one may come to, as in warre (ſanguis belli, beſt ſhewveth it) yet by valour, not by way of puniſhment. This death is penall: not (as all death) ſtipendium peccati; but (as evil mens death) vindicta ſceleris; an execution for ſome Capitall offence. 3

4. And not every crime neither: Fundetur ſanguis is the puniſhment of Treaſon and other more heynous crimes, to dye embrued in their owne bloud. And even they that dye ſo, dye not yet ſo evill a death, as doe they that dye on the Croſſe. It is another caſe, where it is ſanguis mortis, the bloud and life goe away together at once; another, when it is ſanguis Crucis, when the bloud is ſhed, and the party ſtill in full life and ſenſe, as on the Croſſe it was: the blood firſt and the life a good while after. This is Sanguis Crucis, an [1] untimely, [2] violent, [3] penall, [4] penall in the higheſt degree: there, bleeding out His bloud before He dye, and then dye.

When blood is ſhed, it would be no more than needs: ſhed it would be, not powred out. Or if ſo, at one part (the neck or throat:) not at all parts at once. But, here was fundetur, havock made at all parts, His paſſion (as He termeth it) a ſecond Baptiſme, a River of bloud; and He even able to have bin baptized in it, as He was in Iordan. And where it would be Summa parcimonia etiam viliſſimi ſanguinis, no waſte, no not of the baſeſt bloud that is; waſte was made here. And of what bloud? Sanguis IESV, the bloud of IESUS: and who was He? Sure, by vertue of the union Perſonall, GOD; and ſo, this bloud, bloud of GODS owne bleeding; every dropp whereof was precious, more precious than (that, whereof it was the price) the world it ſelfe: Nay, more worth than many Worlds; yea, if Mar. 10. 38.

they vvere ten thouſand. Yet vvas this blood vaſtfully ſpilt, as water upon the ground. The fundetur and the qui here, vvill come into conſideration, both. This is ſanguis Crucis: and yet, this is not all neither; there is more yet.

For, the blood of the Croſſe, vvas not onely the blood of Golgotha, but the blood of Gabbatha too. For, of all deaths, this vvas peculiar to this death, the Death of the Croſſe; that they that vvere to be crucified, vvere not to be crucified alone (which is the bloud of Golgotha:) but they muſt bee whipped too, before they were crucified, which is the bloud of Gabbatha; a ſecond death, yea worſe than death it ſelfe. And in both theſe places Hee bled, and in either place twice. They rent His body with the [1] whips, they goard His head with the [2] thornes: both theſe in Gabbatha. And againe, twice in Golgotha; when they [1] nailed His hands & His feet; when He was [2] thruſt to the heart with the ſpeare. This is ſanguis Crucis. It was to bee ſtood on a little: we might not paſſe it: It is that, whereon our faith depends, Per fidem in ſanguinem Ipſius: by it, he is Author of our faith. Faith Rom.3.25. in GOD, and Peace with GOD, both: Pacificans in ſanguine Crucis, Paciſying all with the bloud of the Croſſe. Col.1.20.

Novv this bloudy whipping and nayling of His, is it vvhich bringeth in the ſecond point of paine: that it vvas not bloud alone vvithout paine, as in the opening of a veine; but it was bloud and paine both. The tearing and mangling of his fleſh, with the whippes, thornes and nailes, could not chooſe but be exceeding painfull to Him. Paines (we know) are increaſed much by cruell, and made more eaſie by gentle handling, and even the worſt that ſuffer, we wiſh their execution as gentle, and with as little rigour as may be. All rigour, all cruelty was ſhewed to Him; to make His paines the more painefull. In Gabbatha, they did not whip Him (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) they ploughed His back, and made (not ſtripes, but) long furrowes upon it. They did not put on His wreath of thornes, and preſſe it downe with their hands, Pſal.129.3. but beat it on with batts, to make it enter through skinne, fleſh, skull, and all. They did not (in Golgotha) pierce his hands and feet, but made wide holes (like that of a ſpade) as if they had beene digging in ſome ditch. Pſal.22.16.

Theſe were paines, and cruell paines: But yet theſe, are not ὠδῖνες (the Holy Ghoſts word in the Text) Thoſe are properly ſtraining paines, paines of torture. The Rack is deviſed as a moſt exquiſite paine, even for terror. And the Croſſe is a rack, whereon He was ſtreched, til (ſaith the Pſalme) all Pſal.22.14. his bones were out of joynt. But even to ſtand (as He hung) three long houres together, holding up but the armes at length, I have heard it avowed of ſome that have felt it to be a paine ſcarce credible. But, the hands and the feet being ſo cruelly nailed (parts, of all other, moſt ſenſible, by reaſon of the texture of ſinewes, there, in them moſt) it could not but make His paine out of meaſure painefull. It was not for nothing, that dolores acerrimi dicuntur cruciatus (ſaith the Heathen man) that the moſt ſharpe and bitter paines of all other, have their name from hence, and are called Cruciatus, paines like thoſe of the Croſſe. It had a meaning, that they gave Him, that He had (for his welcome to the Croſſe) a cup mixt with gall or myrrhe; and (for His farewell) a ſpoonge of vinegar: to ſhew by the one, the bitterneſſe; by the other, the ſharpneſſe of the paines of this painfull death.

Now, in paine (we know) the only comfort of gravis, is brevis; if we be in it, to be quickly out of it. This, the Croſſe hath not; but is mors prolixa, a death of dimenſions, a death long in dying. And it was therefore purpoſely choſen by them. Blaſphemie they condemned Him of; then was He to be ſtoned: That death would have diſpatched him too ſoone. They indited him a new of Sedition; not, as of worſe fault, but only becauſe crucifying belonged to it: For, then He muſt be whipped firſt, and that liked them well: and then, he muſt dye by inch-meale; not ſwallow his death at once, but taſte it (as Chap. 2. 9.) and take it downe by little and little. And then he muſt have his legges and armes broken; and ſo was their meaning, he ſhould have beene: Els (I would gladly know) to what purpoſe provided they to have a Veſſel of vinegar ready in the place (Ioh. 19. 29.) but onely, that he might not faint with loſſe of blood, but be kept alive till they might heare his bones craſh under the breaking, and ſo feed their eyes with that ſpectacle alſo. The providence of GOD (indeede) prevented this laſt act of cruelty: Their will was good though. All theſe paines are in the Croſſe: but, to this laſt ſpecially, the word in the Text hath reference ὑπίμενε, which is, He muſt μένειν ὑπὸ, tarrie, ſtay, abide under it: So dye, that he might feele himſelfe dye, and endure the paines of an enduring death. Chap. 2. 9.

And yet, all this is but halfe, and the leſſer halfe by farre, of Cruciatus crucis. All this, His body endured: was his ſoule free the while? No; but ſuffered as much: As much? nay more, infinitely much more, on the ſpirituall; then his body did, on the materiall Croſſe. For, a ſpirituall Croſſe there was too: all grant a Croſſe, beſides that which Simeon of Cyren did helpe him to beare. Great were thoſe paines, and this time too little to ſhew, how great; but, ſo great, that in all the former, he never ſhrunk, nor once complained, but was, as if he ſcarce felt them. But when theſe came they made him complaine and crie aloud, κραυγὴ ἰσχυρὰ, a ſtrong crying. In all thoſe, no blood came, but where paſſages were made for it to come out by: but in this, it ſtrained out all over, even at all places at once. This was the paine of the Preſſe (ſo the Prophet calleth it, Torcular:) wherewith, as if he had been in the wine-preſſe, all his garments were ſtained and goared with blood. Certainly, the blood of Gethſemane was another manner of blood than that of Gabbatha; or that of Golgotha either; and that was the blood of his internall Croſſe. Of the three Paſsions, that was the hardeſt to endure: yet that did he endure too. It is that, which beleife it ſelfe doth wonder, how it doth beleeve; ſave that it knoweth; as well the Love as the Power af GOD to be without bounds; and his wiſedome as able to find, Heb 5. 7. Eſay 33. 2. 1.

how through Love it might be humbled, as exalted through power, beyond the uttermoſt that mans witt can comprehend.

6 The Shame And this is the Croſſe He endured. And if all this might have been endured, ſalvo honore, without ſhame or diſgrace, it had been ſo much the leſſe. But now, there is a further matter yet to be added, and that is ſhame. It is hard to ſay, of theſe two, which is the harder to beare; which is the greater Croſſe, the croſſe or ſhame. Or rather, it is not hard. There is no meane party in miſerie, but, if he be inſulted on, his being inſulted on more greives him, then doth the miſery it ſelfe: But, to the noble generous nature, to whom Intereſſe honoris eſt majus omni alio intereſſe, the value of his honour is above all value; to him, the Croſſe is not the Croſſe: ſhame, is the Croſſe. And any high and heroical Spirit beareth any griefe more eaſily, then the griefe of contemptuous and contumelious uſage. King Saul ſhewed it plainely, who choſe rather, to runne upon his owne ſword, then to fall into the hands of the Philiſtines, who (he knew) would uſe him with skorne, as they had done Sampſon before him. And even he (Sampſon too) rather then ſit down between the Pillars & endure this, pulled down houſe and all, as well upon his owne head, as theirs that ſo abuſed him. Shame then, is certainely the worſe of the twaine. Now in his death, it is not eaſie to define, whether paine or ſhame had the upper hand: whether greater, Cruciatus or ſcandalum Crucis.

Iud.16.25. 30.

1 Was it not a foule diſgrace and ſcandall to offer him the ſhame of that ſervile baſe puniſhment of the whip; not to be offered to any but to ſlaves and bond-men? Loris? liber ſum (ſaith he in the Comædie, in great diſdeigne: as if being free-borne, he held it great skorne to have that once naimed to him.) Yet, ſhame of being put out of the number of free-borne men, he deſpiſed, even the ſhame of being in formâ ſervi.

Phil.2.7.

2 That, that is ſervile, may yet be honeſt: Then, was it not yet a more foule diſgrace and ſcandall indeed, to appoint him, for his death, that diſhoneſt, that foule death, the death of Malefactors, and of the worſt ſort of them? Morte turpiſsimâ (as themſelves termed it) the moſt ſhamefull opprobrious death of all other, that the perſons are ſcandalous that ſuffer it? To take Him as a theiſe, to hang Him betweene two thieves: nay, to count him worſe then the worſt thiefe in the Gaole; to ſay and to crie, Vivat Barabbas, pereat CHRISTUS, Save Barabbas and hang CHRIST? Yet this ſhame He deſpiſed too, of being in formâ malefici.

3 If baſe, if diſhoneſt, let theſe two ſerve: uſe him not diſgracefully, make him not a ridiculum caput, poure not contempt upon him. That did they too: and a ſhame it is to ſee the ſhamefull cariage of themſelvs all along the whole Tragædy of His Paſsion. Was it a Tragædy, or a Paſsion trow? A Paſsion it was: yet by their behaviour it might ſeeme a may-game. Their ſhouting and out cries; their harrying of him about, from Annas to Caiaphas; from him to Pilate; from Pilate to Herod; and from him to Pilate again:

One

One while in purple, Pilate's ſuit; another-while in white; Herod's livery: Nipping him by the cheekes, and pulling off his haire; blindfolding Him and buffeting Him; bowing to Him in deriſion, and then ſpitting in his face, was, as if they had not the LORD of glorie, but ſome idiot or dizard in hand. Died Abner, as a foole dieth? (ſaith David of Abner in great regrett) ô no. Sure, our bleſſed SAVIOUR ſo died; and, that he ſo died, doth æquall, nay ſurpaſſe even the worſt of his torments. Yet this ſhame alſo He deſpiſed, of being in formâ ludibrij. 2. Sam. 3 33.

Is there any worſe yet? There is. For, though contempt be bad, yet deſpight is beyond it, as farre as earneſt is beyond ſport: that, was ſport; this, was malice. Deſpight, I call it, when in the middſt of his miſery, in the very depth of all his diſtreſſe, they vouchſafed him not the leaſt compaſſion: but, as if he had been the moſt odious wretched Caitive and abject of men, the very out-caſt of Heaven and Earth; ſtood ſtaring and gaping upon him, wagging their heads, writhing their mouthes, yea blearing out their tongues; rayling on him, and reviling him, ſcoffing at him and ſcorning him: yea, in the very time of his Prayers deriding Him, even in his moſt mournfull Complaint and crie, for the verie Anguiſh of His Spirit. Theſe vile indignities, theſe ſhamefull villanies, ſo void of all humanitie, ſo full of all deſpight; (I make no queſtion) entred into his ſoule deeper, than either naile or ſpeare did into His Body. Yet all this He deſpiſed: to be in formâ reprobi. Men hid their faces at this; nay, to ſee this ſight, the Sunne was darkened, drew back his light: the earth trembled, ran one part from the other; the powers of Heaven were moved.

Is this all? No, all this is but Scandalum: there is a greater yet remaining, then ſcandalum; and that is maledictum Crucis: That the death he died, was not only ſervile, ſcandalous, opprobrious, odious, but even execrable and accurſed. For men held ſo. For, as if he had been a very reprobate, in his extreame drought, they denied him a drop of water (never denied to any but to the damned in hell) and inſtead of it, offered him vinegar in a ſponge: and that in the very pangs of death, as one for whom nothing was evill enough.

All this is but man, and man is but man; his glory is ſhame oftentimes, and his ſhame glory: But, what GOD curſeth, that is curſed indeed. And this death was curſed by GOD Himſelfe, His owne mouth, as the Apoſtle deduceth, Galath. 3. 13. When all is ſayd we can ſay, this, this, is the hardeſt point of his ſhame, and the higheſt point of his love in bearing it. CHRISTUS factus eſt maledictum. The ſhame of a curſed death, curſed by GOD, is a ſhame beyond all ſhames; and he that can deſpiſe it, may well ſay conſummatum eſt: there is no greater left for him to deſpiſe. O what contempt was powred upon him, O how was he in all theſe deſpiſed! Yet he deſpiſed them all, and deſpiſed to be deſpiſed in them all. The higheſt humility, Spernere Se ſperni: theſe ſo many wayes, ſpernere Se ſperni.

So have we now the Croſſe ξύλον δίδυμον, the two maine barres of it: [1] Paine and [2] Shame: and either of theſe againe, a Croſſe of it ſelfe; and that double, [1] outward, and [2] inward. Paine; bloudy, cruell, dolorous and enduring: Paine Hee endured. ſhame; ſervile, ſcandalous, opprobrious, odious: Shame He deſpiſed. And beſide theſe, an internall Croſſe: the Paſsion of Gethſemane, and an internall ſhame; the Curſe it ſelfe of the Croſſe: Maledictum Crucis. Of theſe, He endured the one; the other He deſpiſed.

3. Quo animo.

Theſe, all theſe: and yet there remaineth a greater than all theſe, even quo animo, with what mind, what having in His mind, or ſetting before His eyes, He did and ſuffered all this. That he did it not, utcunq; but propoſito ſibi, with an eye to ſomewhat He aymed at.

We handle this point laſt, it ſtandeth firſt in the Verſe. And ſure, if this, as a figure, ſtand not firſt, the other two are but Ciphers: with it, of value; nothing without it.

To endure all this is very much, howſoever it were. So, to endure it, as to make no reckoning of it, to deſpiſe it, is more ſtrange than all the reſt. Sure, the ſhame was great, how could Hee make ſo ſmall account of it? and the Croſſe heavie; how could He ſet it ſo light? They could not chooſe but pinch Him, and that extremely: and how then could Hee indure, and ſo indure, that Hee deſpiſed them? It is the third point; and in it, is adeps arietis, the fat of Rammes, the marrow of the Sacrifice; even the good heart, the free forward minde, the chearefull affection, wherewith Hee did all this.

There bee but two ſenſes, to take this ἀντὶ in: Neither amiſſe; both very good, take whether you will. Love is in both, and Love is a high meaſure. Ἀντὶ even either Pro or Præ: Pro, in ſtead; or Præ, in compariſon.

Ἀντὶ Pro, in ſtead of the joy ſet before Him. What joy was that? Ἐξὸν γὰρ αὐτὸς ἐν ἐκείνοις (ſaith St. Chryſoſtome) for He was in the joyes of Heaven: there Hee was, and there He might have held Him. Nothing did or could force Him to come thence, and to come hither thus to be intreated. Nothing but Sic dilexit, or Propter nimiam charitatem quâ dilexit nos; but for it. Yet was He content, being in the forme of GOD, ἀντὶ in ſtead of it, thus to transforme, yea, to deforme Himſelfe into the ſhape of a ſervant, a felon, a foole; nay, of a Caitive accurſed: Content to lay downe His crowne of glory, ἀντὶ in ſtead of it, to weare a crowne of thornes: Content, what we ſhun by all meanes, that to endure (loſſe of life;) and what we make ſo great a matter of, that to deſpiſe (loſſe of honour.) All this, with the loſſe of that joy and that honour, Hee enjoyed in Heaven (another manner joy, and Honour, than any we have here) ἀντὶ for this, or in ſtead of this.

Eph. 2. 4.

Phil. 2. 6.

But, the other ſenſe is more praiſed, ἀντὶ Præ, in compariſon. For indeed, the joy He left in Heaven, was rather προκειμένην than ἀπεκειμένην, joy wher-

in

in Hee did already ſit, than joy ſet before Him. Vpon which ground, ἀντί, they turne Præ; and that better; as they ſuppoſe. For, that is, in Compariſon of a certaine Ioy: which he comparing with the Croſſe and ſhame and all, chooſe rather to goe through them all, than to goe without it. And can there bee any Ioy compared, with thoſe He did forgoe? or, can any joy countervaile thoſe barbarous uſages, Hee willingly went through? It ſeemeth, there can. What joy might that bee? Sure none other, but the Ioy He had to ſave us, the joy of our ſalvation. For, what was His glory, or joy, or crown of rejoycing, was it not we? Yes truly, we were His crown and His Ioy. In compariſon of this joy he exchanged thoſe joyes, and endured theſe paines: this was the honey that ſweetned His gall: And, no joy at all in it, but this, to be IESUS, the SAVIOUR of a ſort of poore ſinners. None but this: and therefore pitie He ſhould loſe it.

And it is to bee marked, that though to be IESUS, a SAVIOUR; in proprietie of ſpeech, be rather a title, an outward honour, than an inward joy, and ſo ſhould have beene præ honore, rather than præ gaudio; yet Hee expreſſeth it in the terme of joy, rather than that of honour, to ſhew, it ioyed Him at the heart to ſave us; and ſo, as a ſpeciall joy, he accounted it.

Sure, ſome ſuch thing there was, that made him ſo cheerefully ſay to His Father in the Pſalme, Ecce venio, Loe I come: And to his Diſciples in earth, This, this is the Paſſeover, that[b] deſiderio deſideravi, I have ſo longed for (as it were imbracing and even wellcomming His death:) And which is more, [c] quomodo coarctor! how am I pinched, or ſtreightned, till I be at it! as if he were in paine, till he were in paine to deliver us. Which ioy if ever He ſhewed, in this hee did, that He went to His Paſſion with Palmes and with ſuch triumph and ſolemnity, as Hee never admitted all his life before. And that this His loweſt eſtate (one would thinke it) he calleth his Exaltation, Cum exaltatus fuero. And, when any would thinke, he was moſt imperfect, he eſteemeth (and ſo termeth) it his higheſt perfection, Tertio die perficior. In hoc eſt charitas, here is love: if not here, where? But here it is and that in the higheſt elevation. That the ioyes of Heaven ſet on the one ſide; and this poore ioy of ſaving us on the other; He quit them, to chooſe this That thoſe paines and ſhames ſet before him, and with them this ioy, He choſe them rather than forgoe this.

c Luk. 12. 50.

Ioh. 12. 32.

Luk. 13. 32.

1 Ioh. 4. 10.

Thoſe joyes He forſooke, and this He tooke up; and to take it, tooke upon Him ſo many, ſo ſtrange indignities of both ſorts; tooke them and bare them with ſuch a mind, as He not only endured, but deſpiſed; Nor that neither, but even ioyed in the bearing of them, and all to doe us good. So to alter the nature of things, as to finde ioy in death, whereat all doe mourne; and ioy in ſhame, which all doe abhorre, is a wonder like that of the buſh.

Exod. 3.

This is the very life and ſoule of the Paſſion; and all beſides, but the περίτρωμα only, the anatomie, the carkaſſe without it.

II. The Act, or Duty.

So have we now the whole Object; both what; and with what minde. And, what is now to be done? Shall we not pause a while, and stay, and looke upon this Theorie yer we goe any further? Yes, let us. Proper to this day is this sight of the Crosse. The other (of the throne) may stay yet His time a day or two hence.

We are injoyned to looke upon Him. How can we, seeing He is now higher than the Heavens, farre out of our sight, or from the kenning of any mortall eye? Yes, we may for all that. As (in the 27. of the Chapter next before) Moses is said to have seene Him that is invisible: Not with the eyes of flesh; so, neither he did, or we can: But (as there it is) by faith. So, he did, and we may. And, what is more kindly to behold the Author of faith, than faith? or more kindly for faith to behold, than her Author here at first; and her Finisher there at last? Him to behold first and last; and never to be satisfied with looking on Him, who was content to buy us and our eye at so deare a rate.

Our eye then is the eye of our minde, which is faith: And our aspicientes in this, and the recogitantes (in the next Verse) all one; our looking to Him here, is our thinking on Him there: On Him and His Passion over and over againe, Donec totus fixus in corde, qui totus fixus in Cruce, till He be as fast fixed in our hearts, as ever He was to His Crosse; and some impression made in us of Him, as there was in Him for us.

In this our looking then, two acts be rising from the two prepositions: One before, ἀπὸ in ἀφορῶντες, looking from: the other after, εἰς looking upon, or into.

1 Looking from Acts.

There is ἀπὸ, from, abstracting our eye from other Objects, to looke hither some time. The Preposition is not idle, nor the note, but very needfull: For, naturally we put this spectacle farre from us, and indure not either oft or long to behold it. Other things there be, please our eyes better, and which we looke on with greater delight. And we must ἀφορᾶν looke off them, or we shall never βλέπειν looke upon this aright. Wee must (in a sort) worke force to our nature, and per actum felicitum (as they terme it in Schooles) inhibite our eyes, and ever weine them from other more pleasing spectacles that bettet like them, or we shall doe no good here; never make a true theorie of it. I meane, though our prospect into the world bee good, and we have both occasion and inclination to looke thither oft; yet ever and anon to have an eye this way; to looke from them to Him, who, when all these shall come to an end, must be He that shall finish and consummate our faith and us, and make perfect both. Yea, though the Saints be faire marks (as at first I said) yet even to looke off from them hither, and turne our eye to Him, from all; even from Saints and all. But chiefly, from the baits of Sinne; the concupiscence of our eyes, the shadowes and shewes of vanity round about, by which death entreth at our windowes: which unlesse wee can be got to looke from, this sight will doe us no good; wee cannot looke on both together.

Now

Now our theorie, as it beginneth with εἰς, ſo it endeth with, εἰς. Therefore looke from it: that looke to Him: or (as the word giveth it rather) into Him, than to Him, εἰς is into, rather than to. Which proveth plainely, that the Paſſion is a peece of Perſpective, and, that we muſt ſet our ſelves to ſee it, if we will ſee it well, and not looke ſuperficially on it; Not on the outſide alone, but διὰ εἰς, pierce into it, and enter even into the inward workemanſhip of it; even of His internall Croſſe which he ſuffered, and of His intire affection wherewith He ſuffered it. 2 Looking unto: Eis into.

And we may well looke into Him; Cancellis planum eſt corpus; His body is full of ſtripes, and they are as lattices: Patent viſcera, per vulnera, His wounds they are as windowes, through which we may well ſee all that is within Him. Clavus penetrans factus eſt mihi clavis reſerans (ſaith St. Bernard:) The nailes and ſpeare-head ſerve as keyes to let us in. We may looke into the Palmes of His hands, wherein (ſaith the Prophet) He hath graven us, that He might never forget us. We may look into his ſide (S. Iohn uſeth the word) opened. Vigilanti verbo (ſaith Auguſtine) a word well choſen, upon good advice; we may through the opening, look into His very bowels, the bowels of kindneſſe and compaſſion, that would endure to be ſo entreated. Yea, that very heart of his, wherein we may behold, the love of our ſalvation to be the very hearts joy of our SAVIOUR. Eſa. 49.16. Ioh. 19.34.

Thus looking from, from all els, to look into Him, what then? then followeth the participle, We ſhall ſee. What ſhall we ſee? Nay, what ſhall we not ſee? What theorie is there worth the ſeeing, but is there to be ſeene? To recount all, were too long: Two there are in eſpeciall. 2 To ſee: ἐσόμεθα ἰδεῖν.

There is a theorie medicinall, like that of the brazen Serpent; and it ſerveth for comfort to the conſcience; ſtung and wounded with the remorſe of ſinne. For, what ſinne is there or can there be ſo execrable or accurſed, but the curſe of the Croſſe; what ſo ignominious or full of confuſion, but the ſhame of it; what ſo corroſive to the conſcience, but the pains of it; what of ſo deepe or of ſo crimſin a dye, but the bloud of it, the bloud of the Croſſe will doe it away? What ſting ſo deadly, but the ſight of this Serpent will cure it? This a principle theorie; and elſewhere to be ſtood on, but not here. For this ſerveth to quiet the mind; and the Apoſtle (here) ſeeketh to move it, and make it ſtirre.

There is then another theorie beſides, and that is exemplarie for imitation. There Hee died (ſaith Saint Paul) to lay downe for us ἀντίλυτρον, our ranſome: that is the former. There He died (ſaith St. Peter) to leave unto us ὑπογραμμὸν, reliquens nobis exemplum, a paterne an example to follow, and this is it; to this hee calleth us; to have a directory uſe of it, to make it our patterne; to view it as our idea. And ſure, as the Church under the Law needed not; ſo neither doth the Church under the Goſpell neede any other precept than this one, Inſpice & fac, See and doe according to the theorie 1 Tim. 2.6. 1 Pet. 2.21. Exo. 25.4.

ſhewed thee in the Mount: To them in Mount Sinai; to us in Mount Calvarie.

Were all Philoſophie loſt, the theorie of it might be found there. Were all chaires burnt (Moſes chaire and all) the chaire of the Croſſe is abſolutely able to teach all vertue new againe. All vertues are there viſible: All, if time would ſerve: Now, I name only thoſe five, which are directly in the Text.

1 Faith is named there: It is, it was moſt conſpicuous there to bee ſeene: when being forſaken of GOD, yet Hee claſpeth (as it were) His armes, faſt about Him, with Eli, Eli, My GOD, My GOD, for all that. Mat. 27.46. [2] Patience, in induring the Croſſe. [3] Humility, in deſpiſing the ſhame. [4] Perſeverance in that it was nothing for Him to be Author, unleſſe He were Finiſher too. Theſe foure. But above theſe and all, that which is the [5] ratio idealis of all, the band and perfection of al, Love, in the ſignature of love, in the joy, which he found in all this, Love, Majorem quâ nemo, to lay down His life: nay, parem cui nemo, in ſuch ſort to lay it down. Majorem quâ nemo, Ioh. 15.13. to do this for his friends: Parem cui nemo, to do it for his enemies. Notwithſtanding their unworthineſſe antecedent, to do it; & notwithſtanding their unkindneſſe conſequent, yet to doe it. This is the chiefe theorie of all, but of Love (chiefly) the moſt perfect of all. For ſure, if ever ought were truly ſaid of our SAVIOUR, this was; that being ſpread and laid wide open on the Croſſe, He is [a] Liber charitatis: Wherein, he that runneth by may read [b] Sic dilexit, and [c] Propter nimiam charitatem, [d] and Ecce quantam charitatem! Love all over, from one end to the other. Every ſtripe as a letter, every naile as a Capitall letter. His [e] livories, as blacke letters. His bleeding wounds, as ſo many rubrikes, to ſhew upon record His Love towards us.

[a] Hab. 2.2. [b] Ioh. 3.16. [c] Eph. 2.4. [d] 1 Ioh 3.1. [e] Eſay 53.5.

Of which Love the Apoſtle when he ſpeaketh, he ſetteth it out with height and depth, length and bredth (the foure dimenſions of the Croſſe) to Eph. 3.18. put us in minde (ſay the ancient VVriters) that, upon the extent of the tree, was the moſt exact Love, with all the dimenſions in this kind, repreſented that ever was.

2 That we may runne.

Having ſeene all theſe, what is the end and uſe of this Sight? Having had the theorie, what is the Praxis of this theorie? what the concluſion of our contemplation? Looking into, is a participle; it maketh no ſentence, but ſuſpendeth it only, till we come to a verbe, to which it relateth. That verbe muſt be either the verbe in the verſe before, Vt curramus; or the verbe in the verſe following, Vt ne fatigemur: that, thus looking, we runne; or that thus looking, we tire not. This is the practice of our theorie.

We ſaid, the uſe was (and ſo, we ſee, it is) to move us, or to make us move: to work in our feet, to work in them a motion: not any ſlow but a ſwift motion, the motion of running; to runne the race that is ſet before us. The operation it hath (this ſight) is in our facultie motive; if we ſtand ſtill, to cauſe us ſtirre; if we move but ſlowly, to make us run apace: if we runne already, never to tire, or give over, till we do attaine. And by this we may know, whether our theorie be a true one: if this praxis follow of it, it is: if not, a gaze it may be; a true Christian theorie, it is not.

And here first our ἀποβλέπειν (that is) our looking from, is to worke a turning from ſinne. Sure, this ſpectacle, if it be well looked into, will make ſinne ſhall not looke ſo well favoured in our eyes, as it did, it will make us, while we live, have a leſſe liking to looke toward it, as being the onely procurer and cauſe of this Croſſe and this ſhame, Nay, not onely, ἀποστρέφειν to turne our eye from it, but ἐκκλίνειν to turne our feet from it too; and to runne from, yea to flie from it, quaſi à facie Colubri, as from the face of a Serpent.

At leaſt-wiſe, if not to runne from it, not to runne to it, as we have: to naile downe our feet from running to ſinne, and our hands from committing ſinne, and (in a word) have Saint Peters practice of the Paſſion, to Ceaſe from ſinn. This abſtractive force we ſhall find and feele: it will draw us from the delights of ſinne. And nor only draw us from that, but draw from us too, ſomething; make ſome teares to runne from us, or (if we be dry-eyed, that not them, yet) make ſome ſighs of devotion, ſome thoughts of grace, ſome kind of thankfull acknowledgments to iſſue from our ſoules. Either by way of compaſsion, as feeling that, He then felt; or by way of compunction, as finding our ſelves in the number of the parties, for whom He felt them. It is a proper effect of our view of the Paſsion, this (as S. Luke ſets it downe, at the very place where he termes it θεωρίαν) that they returned from it ſmiting their breaſts as having ſeene a doleſull Spectacle, themſelves the cauſe of it. 1 Pet. 4. 1. Luk. 23. 48.

Now, as the looking from, worketh a moving from; ſo doth the looking to, a mooving to.

For, firſt, who is there that can looke unto thoſe hands and feet, that head and that heart of His, that endured all this, but muſt primâ facie at the firſt ſight ſee and ſay, Ecce quomodò dilexit nos? If the Iewes (that ſtood by) ſayd truly of Him at Lazarus grave, Ecce quomodo dilexit eum! when He ſhed but a few tears out of His eyes; how much more truly may it be ſaid of us, Ecce quomodò dilexit eos! for whom he hath ſhed both water and bloud; yea, even from His heart, and that in ſuch plenty? And He loving us ſo, if our hearts be not iron; yea, if they be iron, they cannot chuſe but feele the magneticall force of this load ſtone. For, to a load-ſtone doth Hee reſemble Himſelfe, when He ſaith of Himſelfe, Were I once lift up, Omnia trahan ad me. This vertue attractive is in this ſight, to draw our love to it. Ioh. 11. 36. Ioh. 12. 32.

With which (as it were the needle) our faith being but touched will ſtir ſtraight. We cannot but turne to Him, and truſt in him, that ſo many waies hath ſhewed Himſelfe ſo true unto us. Quando amor confirmatur, fides inchoatur (ſaith S. Ambroſe:) Prove to us, of any, that he loves us indeed, and we ſhall truſt him ſtraight, without any more adoe: wee ſhall beleeve any good affirm'd of him. And what is there (tell me) any where affirm'd of

CHRIST

CHRIST to-us-ward, but this love of his, being believed, will make it credible,

Iam. 2. 22. Now, our faith is made perfect by workes, or well-doing (ſaith S. Iames:) it will therefore ſet us in a courſe of them. Of which, every vertue is a ſtadium, and every act, a ſtepp toward the end of our race. Beginning at humility, Phil. 2. 5. the vertue of the firſt ſetting out. Let the ſame mind be in you, that was in CHRIST IESUS, who humbled himſelfe: and ſo proceeding from vertue to vertue, till we come to patience and perſeverance, that keepe the gole end. 1 Pet. 5. 10. So ſaith S. Peter, Modicũ paſſos perficiet, ſuffering ſomewhat more or leſſe, ſome croſſing, if not the Croſſe; ſome evill report, though not ſhame; So, and no otherwiſe we ſhall come to our race end; our finall perfection.

And, as the reſt move us, if we ſtand ſtill, to runne: So, if we runne already, theſe two (Patience and Perſeverance) Patience will make us, for all our encounters Ver. 3. μὴ κάμνειν (ſaith the Apoſtle in the next verſe) not to be weary; Not in our minds; though in our bodies we be: And Perſeverance will make us μὴ ἐκλύεσθαι, not to faint or tire, though the time ſeeme long and never ſo tedious: (Both theſe, in the Verſe following) But, hold on our courſe till we finiſh it, even till we come to Him, who was not onely Author but Finiſher, who held out, till he came to Conſummatum eſt. And Gal. 5. 7. ſo muſt we finiſh, not ſtadium, but dolichum: not like thoſe, of whom it was ſaid, Currebatis benè, ye did well for a ſtart; but like our Apoſtle, that 2. Tim. 4. 7. ſaid (and ſaid truely) of himſelfe, Curſum conſummavi, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have held out to the very end.

3 That we faint not.

And in this, in the Praxis of our firſt theorie or ſight of our love. But our love without hope is but faint: That then, with better heart we may thus doe, and beſtirre our ſelves, it will not be amiſſe, once more to lift up our eyes, and the ſecond time to looke on Him. We have not ſeene the end: the Croſſe is not the end: There is a better end then ſo, And is ſet downe in the Throne. As the Prophet ſaw him, we have ſeen him: in ſuch caſe, as we were ready to hide our faces, at him, and his ſight. Heer is a new ſight: as the Evangeliſt ſaw him, ſo we now may: even his glory as the [a] glory of the onely begotten SONNE of GOD. [b] Ecce homo, Pilat's ſight we have ſeene: [c] Ecce Dominus & Deus meus, S. Thomas's ſight, we now ſhall. The former in his hanging on the Croſſe, the beginning of our faith. This latter, ſitting on the throne, the conſummation of it.

[a] Ioh. 1. 14. [b] Ioh. 16. 5. [c] Ioh. 20. 28.

Wherein, there is an ample manner of hope, as before of love; all being turned in and out. He ſits now at eaſe, that before hung in paine. Now, on a throne, that before on the Croſſe, Now, at GOD's right hand, that before at Zac. 3. 1. Satan's left. (So Zachary ſaw him: Satan on his right hand, & then muſt he be on Satan's left.) All changed: His Croſſe, into eaſe; his ſhame, into glory.

Glory and reſt, reſt and glory, are two things that meet not heere in our world. The glorious life hath not the moſt quiet; and the quiet life is (for the moſt part) inglorious. He that will have glory muſt make accompt compt to be deſpiſed oft, and broken of his reſt: and he that loveth his eaſe better; muſt be content with a meane condition farre ſhort of glory. Here then, theſe meet not; there (our hope is) they ſhall: even both meet together, and glorie and reſt kiſſe each the other: So the Prophet calleth it a glorious reſt. Eſay. 11.10.

And the right hand addeth yet a degree further. For, dextera eſt pars potior. So that, if there be any reſt more eaſie, or any glorie more glorious, then other, there, it is, on that hand, on that ſide; and He placed in it, in the beſt, in the chiefeſt, the fulneſſe of them both. At GOD's right hand is not only power; power, while we be here to protect us with His might outward, and to ſupport us with His grace inward: but at His right hand alſo is the fullneſſe of joy, for ever (ſaith the Pſalme:) Ioy, and the fullneſſe of joy, and the fullneſſe of it for evermore. Pſal. 16.11.

This is meant by his Seat at the right hand on the Throne. And the ſame is our bleſsed hope alſo, that it is not His place only and none but His; but, even ours in expectation alſo. The love of His Croſſe, is to us a pledge of the hope of His throne, or whatſoever els, He hath or is worth. For if GOD have given us CHRIST, and CHRIST thus given Himſelfe, what hath GOD, or CHRIST, they will denie us? It is the Apoſtle's owne deduction. Rom. 8.32.

To put it out of all doubt: heare we His owne promiſe, that never brake his word. To him that overcommeth, will I give to ſit with me in my Throne. Where to ſit, is the fulneſſe of our deſire, the end of our race, omnia in omnibus: and further we cannot goe. Of a joy ſett before Him, we ſpoke yer-while: here is now a joy ſett before us; another manner joy then was before Him: The worſe was ſet before Him; the better, before us: and this we are to runne to. Apoc. 3.21.

Thus do theſe two theories (or ſights) th'one worke to love, th'other to hope; both to the well performing of our courſe, that in this Theater, between the Saints joyfully beholding us in our race, and CHRIST at our end ready to receive us, we may fulfill our courſe with joy, and be partakers of the bleſsed reſt of His moſt glorious Throne.

Let us now turne to Him, and beſeech Him by the ſight of this day, by himſelfe (firſt) and by his Croſſe and Throne both (both which He hath ſet before us, th'one to awake our love, the other to quicken our hope) that we may this day and ever, lift up your eyes and heads; that we may, this day and ever, carie them in our eyes and hearts, look up to them both: ſo looke that we may love the one, and wait and hope for the other: ſo love and ſo hope, that by them both we may move, and that ſwiftly, even runne to Him; and running not faint, but ſo conſtantly runn, that we faile not finally to attaine the happy fruition of Himſelfe, and of the joy and glory of His bleſſed Throne: that ſo we may find & feele Him as this day here, the Author; ſo, in that day, there, the Finiſher of our Faith, by the ſame our LORD, IESVS CHRIST. Amen.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL,

On the VI. of Aprill, A. D. MDCVI.
being EASTER-DAY.

ROM. Chap. VI. Verſ. IX, X, XI.

Scientes, quod CHRISTUS, &c.

Knowing that CHRIST, being raiſed from the dead, dyeth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

For, in that He dyed, He dyed once to ſin: but in that He liveth, He liveth to GOD.

Likewiſe thinke (or account) yee alſo, that yee are dead to ſin, but are alive to GOD, in IESVS CHRIST our LORD.

THE Scripture is as the Feaſt is; both of them of the Reſurrection: And this we may ſafely ſay of it, it is thought by the Church, ſo pertinent to the feaſt; as it hath ever beene and is appointed to be the very entry of this dayes Service; to be ſounded forth and ſung, firſt of all, and before all, upon this day, as if there were ſome ſpecial correſpondence between the day and it.

Two principall points are ſet downe to us, out of the two principall words in it: One Scientes (in the firſt verſe) Knowing: the other, Reputate (in the laſt verſe) Compt your ſelves: Knowing, and Compting: Knowledge, and calling our ſelves to accompt for our Knowledge.

Two points very needfull to be ever joyntly called upon: and more than needfull for our times, being, that much we know, and little we compt: oft we heare and when we have heard, small reckoning we make of it. What CHRIST did on Easter-Day we know well; what we are then to do, we give no great regard: our Scientes is without a Reputantes.

Now this Scripture, ex totâ Substantia, out of the whole frame of it teacheth us otherwise, that Christian knowledge is not a knowledge without all manner of accompt; but that we are accomptants for it: that we are to keepe an Audite of what we heare, and take accompt of our selves of what we have learned. Λογίζεσθε, is an Auditors terme: thence the HOLY GHOST hath taken it; and would have us to bee Auditors in both Senses.

And this to be generall, in whatsoever we know: But specially, in our knowledge touching this Feast of CHRISTS Resurrection; where there are speciall words for it in the Text, where in expresse termes an accompt is called for at our hands as an essentiall duty of the Day. The benefit, wee remember, is so great; the Feast, wee hold so high; as, though at other times we might be forborne, yet on this day, we may not.

Now the Summe of our accompt is set down in these words [Similiter & vos:] that we fashion our selves like to CHRIST, dying and rising: cast our selves in the same moulds; expresse Him, in both, as neere as we can. Verse. 11.

To accompt of the se, first: that is to accompt our selves bound, so to do.

To accompt for these, second: that is, to accompt with our selves, whether wee doe so.

First, to accompt our selves bound, thus to doe: resolving thus within our selves; that to heare a Sermon of the Resurrection, is nothing; to keepe a feast of the Resurrection is as much, except it end in Similiter & vos. Nisi (saith S. Gregory) quod de more celebratur, etiam quoad mores exprimatur, Vnlesse we expresse the matter of the Feast in the forme of our lives; Vnlesse, as He from the grave, So we from sin: and live to godlinesse, as He unto GOD.

Then to accompt with our selves, whether we doe thus: that is, to sit downe and reflect upon the Sermons wee heare, and the feasts we keepe; how, by knowing CHRISTS death we die to sin; how, by knowing His Resurrection, we live to GOD; how our estate in soule is bettered: how the fruit of the words we heare, and the feasts we keepe, do abound daily toward our accompt against the great Audite. And this to be our accompt, every Easter-day.

The Division Of these two points, the former is in the two first verses, what we must know: the latter, is in the last, what we must accompt for. And they bee joyned with Similiter: to shew us, they be and must be, of equall and like regard: and we, as know; So accompt.

But because, our knowing is the ground of our accompt, the Apostle beginneth with knowledge. And so must we.

I Knowledge, in all learning, is of two sorts: [1] Rerum, or [2] Causarum, ὅτι, or διότι, That, or, in that. The former is in the first Verse: Knowing that CHRIST, &c. The latter in the Second: For in that, &c. And because we cannot cast up a Summe, except we have a particular; the Apostle giveth us a Particular of either: A particu-
1 lar of our Knowledge, Quoad res; which consisteth of these three: 1. That Christ is
2 risen from the dead. 2. That now, He dieth not. 3. That from hence-forth death hath no dominion over Him. All, in the first Verse. Then a particular of our Knowledge, Quoad causas. The cause [1] of His death, sin, He dyed to sin: [2] Of His life, God, He liveth to God. [3] And both these, but once for all. All in the second Verse.

II Then followeth our Accompt (in the third Verse.) Wherein we consider first;
1 [1] The Charge; [2] And then the Discharge. 1. The charge first, Similiter & vos: That we be like to CHRIST. And then, wherein: [1] Like, in dying to sin; [2] Like in living to GOD. Which are the two moulds, wherin we are to be cast, that we may come forth
2 like Him. This is the Charge: 2. And last of all, the meanes we have to helpe us to discharge it, in the last words: in CHRIST JESU our LORD.

Before

BEfore we take view of the two Particulars, it will not bee amiſſe to make a little ſtay at Scientes, the firſt word: becauſe it is the ground of all the reſt. Knowing that Chriſt is riſen. This, the Apoſtle ſaith, the Romans did: knowing. Did know himſelfe (indeed) that Chriſt was riſen, for he ſaw Him. But how knew the Romans, or how know we? No other way than by relation, either they or we: but yet we, much better, than they: I ſay, by relation, in the nature of a verdict, of them that had ſeene Him, even Cephas and the twelve; which is a full Jurie, able to find any matter of fact, and to give up a verdict in it. And that CHRIST is riſen is matter of fact. But, if twelve will not ſerve in this matter of fact (which in all other matters with us, will) if a greater Enqueſt far, if five hundred will ſerve, you may have ſo many; for, of more than five hundred at once, was He ſeene; many of them then living ready to give up the ſame verdict, and to ſay the ſame upon their oathes. 1 Cor 15. 6.

I
Our Knowing: The Meanes of it.

But to ſettle a knowledge, the number moveth not ſo much, as the qualitie of the Parties. If they were perſons credulous, light of beliefe, they may well be challenged; if they took not the way to ground their knowledge aright. That is (ever) beſt knowne, that is moſt doubted of: And never was matter carried with more ſcruple, and ſlowneſſe of beliefe, with more doubts and difficulties, than was this of Chriſts riſing. Mary Magdalen ſaw it firſt, and reported it: They believed her not. The two that went to Emaus, they alſo reported it: They believed them not. Divers women together ſaw him, and came and told them: their words ſeemed to them ἀῤῥᾳ, an idle fained fond tale. They all ſaw Him; and even ſeeing Him, yet they doubted. When they were put out of doubt, and told it but to one that hapned to bee abſent (it was S. Thomas;) you know, how peremptorie he was: Not bee, unleſſe he might not only ſee with his eyes, but feele with his fingers, and put in his hand into His ſide. And all this he did. S. Auguſtine ſaith well, Profectò valde dubitatum eſt ab illis, ne dubitaretur à nobis: All this doubting was by them made, that we might be out of doubt, and know, that Chriſt is riſen. Mark. 16. 11. Luk. 24. 13. 16. 11. 36. Ioh. 20. 25. 27. 28.

Sure they tooke the right courſe to know it certainly: and certainly they did know it, as appeareth. For never was thing knowne in this world, ſo confidently, conſtantly, certainely teſtified, as was this, that CHRIST is riſen. By teſtifying it, they got nothing in the earth. Got nothing? Nay, they loſt by it: their living, their life, all they had to loſe. They might have ſaved all, and but ſaid nothing. So certaine they were; ſo certainly they did accompt of their knowing; they could not be got from it: but to their very laſt breath, to the very laſt drop of their blood, bare witneſſe to the truth of this Article: and choſe rather to lay downe their lives, and to take their death, than to deny; nay, than not to affirme His riſing from death. And thus did they know, and knowing, teſtifie; and by their teſtimonie came the Romans to their knowing: and ſo doe we. But (as I ſaid before) we, to a much ſurer knowing than they, For, when this was written, the whole world ſtopt their eares, at this report; would not endure, to heare them; ſtood out mainly againſt them. The Reſurrection! why, it was with the Grecians at Athens, χλεύασμα a very skorne. The Reſurrection! why, it was with Feſtus the great Roman, μανία, a ſickneſſe of the braine, a plaine phrenſie. That world that then was, and long after, in ſuch oppoſition, is ſince come in: and (upon better examination of the matter, ſo ſtrangely teſtified, with ſo many thouſand lives of men (to ſay the leaſt of them) ſad, and ſober) hath taken notice of it, and both knowne and acknowledged the truth of it. It was well fore-told by S. Iohn, hæc eſt victoria, quæ vincit mundum, fides veſtra. It is proved true ſince: That this faith of Chriſts riſing hath made a conqueſt of the whole world. So that after all the world hath taken knowledg of it, we come to know it. And ſo more full to us, than to them, is this Scientes knowing. Now to our particulars: what we know. Act. 17. 32. 26. 24. 1 Ioh. 5. 4.

1 That Christ is risen from the dead.

Our first particular is: That CHRIST is risen from the dead. Properly, we are said to rise from a fall: and from death, rather to revive. Yet the Apostle rather useth the terme of rising than reviving, as serving better to set forth his purpose. That death is a fall wee doubt not: that it came with a fall, the fall of Adam. But, what manner of fall? for it hath beene holden a fall, from whence is no rising. But, by CHRISTS rising it falls out to be a fall, that wee may fall, and yet get up againe. For, if CHRIST be risen from it, then is there a rising; if a rising of one, then may there be of another: If He be risen in our nature, then is our nature risen; and if our nature be, our persons may be. Especially seeing (as the Apostle, in the fourth Verse before hath told us) He, and we, are σύμφυτοι, that is, so grafted, one into the other, that He is part of us, and we of Him: So that (as S. Bernard well observeth,) Christus etsi solus resurrexit, tamen non totus, That CHRIST, though he be risen only, yet he is not risen wholly, or all, till we be risen too. He is but risen in part: and that He may rise all, we must rise from death also.

This then we know first; That death is not a fall like that of Pharaoh, into the Sea, that sunke downe like a lumpe of leade into the bottome, and never came up more: but a fall like that of Ionas, into the Sea, who was received by a Fish, and after cast up againe. It is our Saviour CHRISTS own Simile. A fall, not like that of the Angels into the bottomlesse pit, there to stay for ever: but like to that of men into their beds, when they make accompt to stand up againe. A fall, not as of a logg or stone, to the ground, which where it falleth, there it lyeth still; but, as of a Wheat corn, into the ground, which is quickned and springeth up againe.

Esay 26,19.
1 Cor. 15. 36.

The very word which the Apostle useth (ἐγερθεί,) implyeth the two latter; 1 either of a fall into a bed in our chamber; where though we lye (to see to) little better than dead for a time; yet in the morning we awake and stand up notwithstanding. 2 Or of a fall into a bed in our garden: where though the seed putrifie and come to nothing, yet we looke to see it shoot forth anew in the Spring. Which Spring is (as Tertullian well calleth it) the very resurrection of the yeare: and CHRISTS resurrection falleth well with it: And it is saith he no way consonant to reason, that man, for whom all things spring and rise againe, should not have his spring and rising too. But, he shall have them, we doubt not, by this daies worke. He that this day did rise, and rising was seene of Mary Magdalen in the likenesse of a Gardiner: this Gardiner will looke to it, that man shall have his spring. He will (saith the Prophet) drop upon us a dew like the dew of herbs, and the earth shall yeeld forth her dead: And so, as CHRIST is risen from the dead, even so shall we,

Joh. 20. 15.
Esay 26. 19.

1 That Christ now dieth not.

Our second Particular is: that as He is risen; so, now He dyeth not. Which is no idle addition, but hath his force and Emphasis. For, one thing it is, to rise from the dead; and another, not to dye any more. The Widdowes sonne of Naim; the Rulers daughter of the Synagogue; Lazarus; all these rose againe from death, yet they died afterward; But, CHRIST rising from the dead, dieth no more. These two are sensibly different, Lazarus resurrection, and CHRISTS: and this second is (sure) a higher degree than the former. If we rise, as they did, that wee returne to this same mortall life of ours, againe; this very mortalitie of ours, will be to us as the prisoners chaine he escapes away withall, by it we shall be pulled backe againe, though we should rise a thousand times. Wee must therefore so rise, as CHRIST, that our resurrection be not reditus, but transitus; not a returning backe to the same life, but a passing over to a new. Transivit de morte ad vitam (saith he.) The very Feast it selfe puts us in minde of as much: It is Pascha (that is) the Passeover, not a comming backe to the same Land of Egypt: but a passing over to a better, the land of Promise; whither CHRIST our Passeover is passed before us, and shall in His good time, give us passage after him. the Apostle expresseth it best, where he saith, that CHRIST by His rising hath abolished death, and brought to light life and immortalitie: not life alone, but life and immortalitie: which is this our second particular. Risen, and risen to dye no more, because risen to life, to life immortall.

But

But, the third is yet beyond both theſe: more worth the knowing, more worthy our accompt: death hath no more dominion over Him. Where, as we before ſaid, one thing it was to riſe againe, another to die no more: ſo ſay we now; it is one thing not to die: another not to be under the dominion of death: For death, and deaths dominion are two different things. Death it ſelfe is nothing elſe, but the very ſeparation of the life from the body: deaths dominion, a thing of a farre larger extent. By which word (of dominion) the Apoſtle would have us to conceive of death, as of ſome great LORD, having ſome large Signiorie: Even as three ſeverall times (in the Chapter before he ſaith) Regnavit mors, death reigned; as if death were ſome mightie Monarch, having ſome great dominions under him. And ſo it is: For looke how many dangers, how many diſeaſes, ſorrowes, calamities, miſeries there be of this mortall life: how many paines, perils, ſnares of death; ſo many ſeverall provinces are there of this dominion. In all which, or ſome of them, while we live we ſtill are under the juriſdiction and arreſt of death, all the daies of our life. And ſay that wee ſcape them all, and none of them happen to us, yet live we ſtill under feare of them, and that is deaths dominion too. For he is (as Iob calleth him) Rex pavoris, King of feare. And, when wee are out of this life too; unleſſe wee pertaine to CHRIST and His Reſurrection, we are not out of his dominion neither. For Hell it ſelfe is ſecunda mors (ſo termed by S. Iohn) the ſecond death, or ſecond part of deaths dominion.

3 That from henceforth death hath no more dominion over him

Veſ. 14. 17. 21.

Iob. 18. 14.

Apoc. 20. 14. 21. 8.

Now, who is there that would deſire to riſe againe to this life, yea, though it were immortall, to be ſtill under this dominion of death here; ſtill ſubject, ſtill liable to the aches and paines, to the griefes and gripings, to the manifold miſeries of this vale of the ſhadow of death? But then, the other, the ſecond region of death, the ſecond part of his dominion who can endure once to be there? There they ſeek and wiſh for death, and death flyeth from them.

Verily, riſing is not enough; riſing, not to dye againe is not enough, except wee may be quit of this dominion, and rid of that, which we either feele or feare, all our life long. Therefore doth the Apoſtle adde (and ſo it was needfull, hee ſhould) death hath no dominion over Him. No dominion over Him? No; for Hee, dominion over it. For, leſt any might ſurmiſe, He might breake through ſome Wall, or get out at ſome window, and ſo ſteale a reſurrection, or caſually come to it; Hee tels them, no: it is not ſo.: Ecce claves mortis & inferni: ſee here the keyes both of the firſt and ſecond death. Which is a plaine proofe, He hath maſtered, and got the dominion over both death, and him that hath the power of death, that is the divell. Both are ſwallowed up in victorie, and neither death any more ſting, nor hell any more dominion. Sed ad Dominum Deum noſtrum ſpectant exitus mortis: But now unto GOD our LORD belong the iſſues of death: the keyes are at His girdle; Hee can let out as many as He liſt.

Apoc. 1. 18.

1 Cor. 15. 55.

Pſal. 68. 20.

This eſtate is it, which he calleth Coronam vitæ; not life alone, but the Crowne of life, or a life crowned with immunitie of feare of any evill, ever to befall us. This is it which (in the next verſe) he calleth living unto GOD, the eſtate of the children of the reſurrection, to be the ſons of GOD, equall to the Angels, ſubject to no part of deaths dominion, but living in ſecurity, joy and bliſſe for ever.

Apoc. 2. 10.

Verſ. 12.

And now is our particular full. [1] Riſing to life firſt; [2] and life freed from death, and ſo immortall; [3] and then exempt from the dominion of death, and every part of it; and ſo happy and bleſſed. Riſe again; ſo may Lazarus, or any mortall man do; that is not it. Riſe againe to life immortall: ſo ſhall all doe in the end, as well the unjuſt, as the juſt; that is not it. But; riſe againe to life immortall, with freedome from all miſerie, to live to, and with GOD in all joy and glorie evermore, that is it; that is CHRIST'S Reſurrection. Et tu (ſaith St. Auguſtine) ſpera talem reſurrectionem, & propter hoc eſto Chriſtianus, Live in hope of ſuch a reſurrection, and for this hopes ſake, carrie thy ſelfe as a Chriſtian. Thus have we our particular, of that we are to know touching CHRIST riſen.

And now we know all theſe, yet doe we not accompt our ſelves to know them per-

2 fectly, untill we alſo know the reaſon of them. And the Romans were a people, that loved to ſee the ground of that they received, and not the bare Articles alone. Indeed, it might trouble them, why CHRIST ſhould need thus to riſe againe, becauſe they ſaw no reaſon, why He ſhould need dye. The truth is, we cannot ſpeake of riſing well, without mention of the terminus à quo, from whence He roſe. By meanes whereof, theſe two, 1 CHRIRTS dying, and 2 His riſing are ſo linked together, and their Audites ſo intangled one with another, as it is very hard to ſever them. And this you ſhall obſerve, the Apoſtle never goeth about to do it, but ſtill (as it were of purpoſe) ſuffers one to draw in the other continually. It is not here alone, but all over his Epiſtles; ever they run together, as if he were loth to mention one without the other.

1 And it cannot be denyed, but that their joyning ſerveth to many great good purpoſes. Theſe two, 1 His Death, and 2 His riſing, they ſhew His two natures, Humane and Divine: 1 His Humane nature and weakneſſe, in dying, 2 His Divine nature and
2 power, in riſing againe. 2. Theſe ſhew his two Offices; His Prieſthood and His Kingdome. 1 His Prieſthood, in the ſacrifice of His Death: 2 His Kingdome, in the
3 glorie of His reſurrection. 3. They ſet before us, His two maine Benefits, 1 Interitum mortis, and 2 Principium vitæ. 1 His death, the death of death; 2 His riſing, the reviving of life againe: the one, what He had ranſomed us from, the other, what He had
4 purchaſed for us. 4. They ſerve as two Moulds, wherein our lives are to be caſt, that the daies of our vanitie may be faſhioned to the likeneſſe of the SONNE of GOD: which are our two duties, that we are to render, for thoſe two benefits proceeding from the two offices of His two natures conjoyned. In a word: they are not well to be ſundred; for when they are thus joyned, they are the abridgement of the whole Goſpell.

1 The cauſe of His dying. 1 His dying once.

Of them both then briefly. Of His dying firſt: in that He dyed, He died once to ſin: Why dyed he once, and why but once? Once he dyed to ſinne, that is, ſin was the cauſe, He was to dye once. As in ſaying, He liveth to God, we ſay, GOD is the cauſe of His life: ſo in ſaying, He dyed to ſin, we ſay, ſin was the cauſe of His death. GOD, of His riſing: ſin, of His fall. And look how the Reſurrection leadeth us to death; even as naturally doth death, unto ſin, the ſting of death.

To ſin then He died: Not ſimply to ſin; but with reference to us. For, a death leadeth us to ſin; ſo doth ſin to ſinners, that is, to our ſelves: And ſo will the oppoſition be more cleere and full: He liveth unto God; He died unto men. With reference Eſay 9.6. (I ſay) to us. For firſt, He dyed unto us: and if it be true, that Puer natus eſt nobis, it is as true, that Vir mortuus eſt nobis: If being a child, He was borne to us; becomming a man, he dyed to us. Both are true.

To us then firſt, He dyed, becauſe He would ſave us. To ſin, ſecondly; becauſe elſe He could not ſave us. Yes, He could have ſaved us, and never dyed for us, ex plenitudine poteſtatis, by his abſolute power, if He would have taken that way. That way, He would not; but proceed by way of Iuſtice; doe all, by way of Iuſtice. And, by Iuſtice, Sin muſt have death; death, our death; for the ſin was ours. It was we, that were to die to ſinne. But, if wee had dyed to ſinne, we had periſhed in ſin; periſhed here, and periſhed everlaſtingly. That, His love to us could not endure: that wee ſhould ſo periſh. Therefore, as in Iuſtice He juſtly might, He tooke upon Him our debt of ſinne, and ſaid (as the Fathers apply that ſpeech of His) Sinite abire hos, let theſe Ioh. 18.8. goe their wayes. And ſo, that wee might not dye to ſinne, He did. We ſee, Why He died once.

2 And but once Ioh. 1.29. Act. 3.19. Heb. 9.28.

Why but once? becauſe once was enough, ad auferenda (ſaith S. Iohn;) ad abolenda (ſaith S. Peter;) ad exhaurienda (ſaith S. Paul) To take away: To aboliſh: To drink dry, and utterly to exhauſt all the ſins, of all the ſinners, of all the world. The excellency of His Perſon that performed it, was ſuch; The excellencie of the obedience, that he performed, ſuch; the excellencie both of His humilitie and charitie wherewith He performed it, ſuch; and of ſuch value every of them; (and all of them much more;) as made, that His once dying, was ſatis ſuperque, enough, and enough again:

which

which made the Prophet call it, copioſam Redemptionem, a plenteous Redemption. But the Apoſtle he goeth beyond all, in expreſſing this: in one place terming it ὑπερβάλλων, in another περισσεύων, in another περισσεύων: mercy, rich, exceeding, grace overabounding, nay grace ſuperfluous (for ſo is περισσεύων:) and ſuperfluous is enough and to ſpare; ſuperfluous is (cleerely) enough and more than enough. Once dying then, being more than enough, no reaſon He ſhould die more than once. That, of His death. Eph. 2. 7. Eph. 1. 8. 1 Tim. 1. 14.

Now of His life: He liveth unto GOD. The Rigour of the law being fully ſatisfied by His death: then was He no longer juſtly, but wrongfully detained by death: As therefore, by the power He had, He laid downe His life, ſo He tooke it againe, and roſe againe from the dead. And not only roſe Himſelfe; But, in one concurrent action, GOD, who had by His death, received full ſatisfaction, reached Him (as it were) His hand, and raiſed Him to life. The Apoſtles word ἐγερθείς, in the native force doth more properly ſignifie, rayſed by another, than riſen by Himſelfe. And is ſo uſed, to ſhew, it was done, not only by the power of the Sonne, but by the will, conſent, and co-operation of the Father; and He the cauſe of it, who for the over-abundant merit of His death, and His humbling Himſelf, and becomming obedient to death, even the death of the Croſſe, not only rayſed Him, but propter hoc, even for that cauſe, exalted Him alſo, to live with Him, in joy and glory for ever. For, as when He lived to man, He lived to much miſery; ſo, now He liveth to GOD, He liveth in all felicity. This part being oppoſitely ſet downe to the former: living, to exclude dying againe; living to God, to exclude deaths dominion, and all things pertaining to it. For, as with GOD is life, and the fountaine of life, againſt death; (even the fountaine of life ever failing, but ever renewing to all eternity:) ſo with Him alſo, is torrens delictarum, a maine river of pleaſures, even pleaſures for evermore; never ebbing, but ever flowing, to all contentment; againſt the miſeries belonging to deaths dominion. And there He liveth thus: not now, as the Sonne of GOD, as He lived before all worlds, but as the Sonne of man, in the right of our nature: to eſtate us, in this life, in the hope of a reverſion; and in the life to come, in perfect and full poſſeſſion of His owne, and His Fathers bliſſe and happineſſe: when we ſhall alſo live to GOD, and GOD be all in all; which is the higheſt pitch of all our hope. We ſee then, His dying and riſing, and the grounds of both: And thus have we the totall of our Scientes. 2 The cauſe of His living. Phil. 2. 8, 9. Phil. 3. 6. 10

II.

Now followeth our accompt. An accompt is either of what is comming to us, and that we like well: or what is going from us, and that is not ſo pleaſing. Comming to us, I call matter of benefit: Going from us, matter of duty: where (I doubt) many an expectation will be deceived, making accompt to heare from the reſurrection matter of benefit, onely to come in, where the Apoſtle calleth us to accompt for matter of duty which is to goe from us.

Our Accompt. 1 Of our commings in; the benefit.

An accompt there is growing to us by Chriſts riſing, of matter of benefit and comfort: ſuch an one there is, and we have touched it before. The hope of gaining a better life, which groweth from Chriſts riſing, is our comfort againſt the feare of loſing this. Thus doe we comfort our ſelves againſt our deaths: Now bleſſed be GOD that hath regenerated us to a lively hope, by the reſurrection of Ieſus Chriſt: Thus doe we comfort our ſelves againſt our friends death; Comfort your ſelves one another (ſaith the Apoſtle,) with theſe words: what words be they? Even thoſe of our SAVIOUR in the Goſpell, Reſurget frater tuus, Thy brother (or thy Father, or thy friend) ſhall riſe againe. And not onely againſt death, but even againſt all the miſeries of this life: It was Iobs comfort on the dung-hill: well yet, videbo Deum in carne mea: I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. And not in our miſeries alone, but when we do well, and no man reſpecteth us for it: It is the Apoſtles concluſion of the Chapter of the reſurrection: Be of good cheere yet, labor veſter non erit inanis in Domino: your labour is not in vaine in the Lord: you ſhall have your reward at the reſurrection of the juſt. All theſe wayes, comfort commeth unto us, by it, 2 Pet. 1. 3. 1 Theſ. 4. 18. Ioh. 11. 23. Iob 19. 25. 1 Cor. 15. 58.

But

2 Of our going out.
1 The duty of charge.

But this of ours is another manner of accompt, of duty to go from us, and to be answered by us. And such an one there is too, and we must reckon of it. I adde, that this here is our first accompt; you see it here called for, in the Epistle to the Romanes; the other commeth after, in the Epistle to the Corinthians.

In very deed, this of ours is the key to the other, and we shall never finde sound comfort of that, unlesse wee doe first well passe this accompt here. It is (I say) first, because it is present, and concerneth our soules, even here in this life. The other is future, and toucheth but our bodies, and that in the life to come. It is an errour certainly, which runneth in mens heads, when they heare of the resurrection to conceive of it, Colos. 3. 1. as of a matter meerely future, and not to take place till the later day. Not onely Christ is risen, but if all be, as it should be, We are alreadie risen with him, (saith the Apoc. 20. 6. Apostle, in the Epistle this day, the very first words of it:) and even here now (saith S. Iohn,) is there a first resurrection, and happie is he that hath his part in it. A like errour it is to conceit the Resurrection as a thing meerely corporall, and no ways to be incident into the Spirit or Soule, at all. The Apostle hath alreadie given us an Item to the Chap. 4. 25. contrary, in the end of the fourth Chapter before: Where he saith; He rose againe for our justification: and, Iustification is a matter spirituall: Iustificatus est spiritu, (saith the 1 Tim. 3. 16. Apostle) of Christ Himselfe. Verily, here must the spirit rise to grace, or else neither the body nor it shall there rise to glory. This then is our first accompt; that accompt of ours, which presently is to be passed, and out of hand; this is it, which first we must take order for.

I
To be like CHRIST.

The Summe or charge of which accompt, is set downe in these words, Similiter & vos: That wee bee like Christ, carrie His Image who is heavenly, as we have carried the Image of the earthly. Be conformed to His likenesse; That what Christ hath wrought for us, the like be wrought in us: What, wrought for us, by His flesh; the like wrought in us, by His Spirit. It is a Maxime or maine ground, in all the Fathers, that such an accompt must be: The former, what Christ hath wrought for us, Deus reputat nobis, God accompteth to us: For the latter, what Christ hath wrought in us; Reputate vos, we must accompt to God. And, that is, Similiter & vos, that we fashion our selves like Him.

1 In dying to sin Eph. 5. 1. 1 Pet. 2. 21. 1 Pet. 1. 3.

Like Him, in as many points, as we may: but namely, and expresly, in these two here set downe, [1] In dying to sinne, [2] In living unto God, in these two first: and then secondly, in doing both these, ἐφάπαξ, but once, for all.

Like Him in these two: [1] In His dying. For He died not only to offer a sacrifice for us (saith S. Paul) but also to leave an example to us (saith S. Peter.) That example are we to be like. [2] In his rising. For he arose, not only that we might be regenerated to a lively hope, saith Saint Peter: but also, that wee might bee grafted into the similitude of His Resurrection; saith S. Paul, a little before, in the fifth verse of this very Chapter: That Similitude are we to resemble. So have we the exemplary part of both these, whereunto we are to frame our Similiter & vos.

Verse 2. He dyed to sin, there is our patterne: Our first accompt, must be Compt your selves dead to sin. And that we do, when, there is neither action, nor affection, nor any signe of life, in us, toward sin; no more than in a dead body: when, as men crucified (which is not only His death, but the kinde of His death too) we neither move hand, nor stir foot, toward it: both, are nayled downe, fast. In a word, to dye to sin (with S. Paul here) is to cease from sin (with S. Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 1.)

To cease from sin (I say) understanding by sin, not from sin altogether (that is a higher perfection, than this life will beare) but as the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, in the very next words, Ne regnet peccatum, that is, from the dominion of sin, to cease. For till we be free from death it selfe (which in this life we are not) wee shall not bee free from sinne altogether: onely wee may come thus farre, ne regnet, that sinne reigne not; weare not a crowne, sit not in a throne, hold no Parliaments within us, give us no lawes; in a word (as in the fourth verse before) that we serve it not. To dye, to the dominion of sin; that, by the grace of God wee may: and that we must accompt for.

Hee

He liveth to GOD. There is our similitude of His resurrection: our second accompt must be, Compt your selves living unto God. Now, how that is, he hath alreadie told us (in the fourth verse) even, to walke in newnesse of life. To walke, is to move; moving is a vitall action, and argueth life. But, it must not be any life; our old will not serve; it must be a new life; we must not returne backe to our former course, but passe over to another new conversation. And in a word (as before) to live to God (with Saint Paul here) is to live secundum Deum, according to God, in the Spirit (with Saint Peter, 1 Pet. 4.6.) And, then live we according to Him, when His will is our law, His Word our rule, His Sons life our example, His Spirit, rather than our own soul, the guide of our actions. Thus shall we be grafted into the similitude of His Resurrection. 2 In living to God.

Now, this similitude of the Resurrection, calleth to my minde, another similitude of the Resurrection, in this life too, which I finde in Scripture mentioned; it fitteth us well: it will not be amisse, to remember you of it, by the way, it will make us the better willing, to enter into this accompt.

At the time that Isaac should have beene offered by his Father, Isaac was not slain: very neere it he was; there was fire, and there was a knife, and he was appointed ready to bee a Sacrifice. Of which case of his, The Apostle in the mention of his Father Abrahams faith (Heb. 11.) Abraham (saith he) by Faith λογίζεσθαι, made full accompt, if Isaac had beene slaine, GOD was able to raise Him from the dead: And even from the dead GOD raised him, and his Father received him, ἐν παραβολῇ, in a certaine similitude, or after a sort. Marke that well: Raising Isaac, from eminent danger of present death is (with the Apostle) a kinde of Resurrection. And if it be so, and if the HOLY GHOST warrant us to call that, a kinde of Resurrection; how can we, but on this Day, the Day of the Resurrection, call to minde, and withall render unto GOD our unfained thankes and praise, for our late Resurrection ἐν παραβολῇ, for our kinde of Resurrection; He not long since vouchsafed us. Our case, was Isaac's case, without doubt: there was fire; and instead of a knife, there was powder enough, and we were designed all of us, and even readie to be sacrificed, even Abraham, Isaac, and all. Certainly if Isaac's were, ours was a kinde of Resurrection: and we so to acknowledge it. We were as neere as he; we were not only within the Dominion, but within the Verge, nay even within the very gates of death. From thence hath GOD raised us, and given us, this yeare, this similitude of the resurrection, that we might, this day of the Resurrection of His Son, present him, with this (in the Text) of rising to a new course of life. Gen. 22. 7. Heb. 11, 19.

And now (to returne to our fashioning our selves, like to Him, in these:) As there is a death naturall, and a death Civill; so is there a death morall, both in Philosophie, and in Divinitie: and, if a death, then consequently a resurrection too. Every great and notable change, of our course of life, whereby we are not now any longer, the same men, that before we were, be it from the worse to better, or from better to worse, is a morall death: A morall death, to that, we change from; and a morall resurrection, to that we change to. If we change to the better, that is sins death: if we alter to the worse, that is sins Resurrection: when we commit sin, we die, we are dead in sin; when we repent, we revive againe: when we repent our selves of our repenting, and relapse backe, then sin riseth againe, from the dead: and so toties quoties. And even upon these two, as two hinges, turneth our whole life. All our life is spent in one of them.

Now then, that we be not, all our life long, thus off and on, fast or loose, in docke out nettle, and in nettle out docke: it will behove us once more yet, to looke backe upon our similiter & vos; even upon the word ἐφάπαξ, semel, once. That is, that wee not only dye to sin, and live to GOD; but die and live, as He did, (that is) once for all: which is an other abandoning, once, of sinnes dominion: and a coutinuall constant persisting, in a good course once begun. Sinnes dominion, it languisheth sometimes in us, and falleth haply into a swoune: but it dieth not quite, once for all. Grace, lifteth up the eye, and looketh up a little, and giveth some signe of life; but never 3 And that once for all.

never perfectly receiveth. O, that once, we might come to this; no more deaths, no more resurrections, but one! that, we might once, make an end of our daily continuall recidivations, to which we are so subject: and, once, get past these pangs and qualms of godlinesse, this righteousnesse, like the morning cloud, which is all we performe: that we might grow habituate, in grace; radicati & fundati, rooted and founded in it: ἐρριζωμένοι steddie, and ἑδραῖοι never to be removed! that so we might enter into, and passe a good accompt, of this our Similiter & vos.

Eph. 3. 17.
1 Cor. 15. vlt.

2 The discharge and means of it.
In Jesus Christ our Lord.
2 Cor. 3. 5.

And thus are we come to the foot of our accompt, which is our Onus or Charge, Now we must thinke of our discharge, to goe about it: which maketh the last words no lesse necessarie for us to consider, than all the rest. For what? is it in us, or can we, by our owne power and vertue make up this accompt? We cannot (saith the Apostle:) nay, we cannot (saith he) λογίζασθαι, make accompt of any thing, no not so much as of a good thought towards it, as of our selves. If any thinke otherwise, let him but prove his owne strength a little, what he can do, he shall be so confounded in it, as he shal change his minde (saith Saint Augustine) and see plainly, the Apostle had reason, to shut up all, with In Christo Iesu Domino nostro: otherwise our accompt will sticke in our hands. Verily to raise a soule from the death of sinne, is harder, farre harder, than to raise a dead body, out of the dust of death. S. Augustine hath long since defined it: that Mary Magdalens resurrection in soule, from her long lying dead in sin, was a greater miracle, than her brother Lazarus resurrection, that had lyen foure dayes in his grave. If Lazarus lay dead before us, we would never aslay to raise him our selvs; we know we cannot doe it. If we cannot raise Lazarus (that is the easier of the twaine) we shall never Mary Magdalen (which is the harder by farre) out of Him, or without Him, that raised them both.

But, as out of CHRIST, or without CHRIST, wee can doe nothing toward this accompt: Not, accomplish or bring to perfection; but not doe: not any great or notable summe of it; but nothing at all; (as saith S. Augustine, upon Sine me nihil potestis facere.) So, in Him, and with Him enabling us to it, we can think good thoughts speak good words, and do good workes, and die to sin, and live to God, and all: Omnia possum (saith the Apostle.) And inable us He will, and can, as not only having passed the resurrection, but being the resurrection it selfe; not only had the effect of it in Himself; but, being the cause of it, to us. So He saith Himself: I am the resurrection, and the life: the resurrection, to them that are dead in sin, to raise them from it; and the life, to them that live unto GOD, to preserve them, in it.

Phil. 4. 13.
Ioh. 11. 25.

Where beside the two former (1 the Article of the resurrection, which we are to know: 2 and the Example of the Resurrection, which we are to be like:) we come to the notice of a third thing; even a vertue or power flowing from Christs resurrection, whereby we are made able to expresse our similiter & vos, and to passe this our accompt, of dying to sin, and living to God. It is, in plaine words, called (by the Apostle himselfe) virtus resurrectionis; the vertue of CHRISTS resurrection, issuing from it, to us: and he prayeth that as he had a faith of the former, so he may have a feeling of this: and as, of them hee had a contemplative; so hee may of this have an experimentall knowledge. This enabling vertue proceedeth from Christs resurrection. For, never let us thinke, if in the dayes of His flesh, there went vertue out, from even the very edge of His garment, to do great cures (as in the case of the woman with the bloodie issue, we read.) but that from his owne selfe, and from those two most principall and powerfull actions of His owne selfe (His 1 death and 2 resurrection) there issueth a divine power: from His death, a power working on the old man (or flesh) to mortifie it; from His resurrection, a power working on the new man (the Spirit) to quicken it. A power able to roll backe any stone of an evill custome, lye it never so heavie on us: a power able to dry up any issue, though it have runne upon us twelve yeare long.

Phil. 3. 10.
Luke 8. 46.

And this power is nothing else, but that divine qualitie of grace, which we receive from Him. Receive it from Him we doe certainly; (only let us pray and endevour devoure our ſelves, that we receive it not in vaine:) the Holy Ghoſt, by waies to fleſh and blood unknowne, inſpiring it, as a breath, diſtilling it, as a dew; deriving it, as a ſecret influence, into the ſoule. For, if Philoſophie grant an inviſible operation in us, to the celeſtiall bodies; much better may we yeeld it, to His eternall Spirit: whereby ſuch a vertue, or breath, may proceed from it, and be received of us.

Which breath or Spirit, is drawn in by Prayer, and ſuch other exerciſes of devotion on our parts: and on GODS part, breathed in, by and with the Word: (well therefore termed by the Apoſtle, the word of grace.) And (I may ſafely ſay it, with good warrant) from thoſe words eſpecially and chiefly; which (as He Himſelfe ſaith of them) are Spirit and Life: even thoſe words, which joyned to the element, make the bleſſed Sacrament. Act. 20.32. Ioh. 6.63.

There was good proof made of it, this day. All the way, did He preach to them, even till they came to Emaus, and their hearts, were hot within them (which was a good ſigne) but their eyes were not opened, but at the breaking of bread; and then they were: That, is the beſt and ſureſt ſenſe (we know) and therefore moſt to be accompted of. There we taſt, and there we ſee, Taſt and ſee, how gracious the Lord is. There wee are made to drink of the Spirit: There our hearts are ſtrengthened and eſtabliſhed with grace. There is the blood which ſhall purge our conſciences from dead workes, whereby we may die to ſin. There the bread of God, which ſhall endue our ſoules with much ſtrength; yea, multiply ſtrength in them, to live unto God, yea, to live to him continually; for he that eateth His fleſh, and drinketh His blood, dwelleth in Chriſt, and Chriſt in Him: not inneth, or ſojourneth for a time; but dwelleth continually. And, never can we more truly, or properly ſay, In Chriſto Ieſu Domino noſtro, as when we come new from that holy Action, for then He is in us, and we in Him, indeed. And ſo we to make full accompt, of this ſervice as a ſpeciall meanes, to further us to make up our Eaſter-dayes accompt, and to ſet off a good part of our Charge. In CHRIST, dropping upon us the annointing of His grace. In Ieſus, who will be ready, as our SAVIOUR, to ſuccour and ſupport us, with his Auxilium ſpeciale, His ſpeciall help. Without which aſſiſting us even grace it ſelfe, is many times, faint and feeble in us: And both theſe, becauſe He is our Lord, who having come, to ſave that which was loſt, will not ſuffer that to be loſt, which he hath ſaved. Thus, uſing His owne ordinance of Prayer, of the Word, and Sacrament, for our better enabling to diſcharge this dayes duty, we ſhall (I truſt) yeeld up a good accompt, and cele,brate a good feaſt of his Reſurrection. Which Almighty God grant, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL,

On the V. of Aprill, A. D. MDCVII.
being EASTER-DAY.

I COR. Chap. XV. Vers. XX.

Nunc autem CHRISTUS resurrexit a mortuis primitiæ dormientium.

But, now is CHRIST risen from the dead, and was made the first fruits of them that sleepe.

THE same Apostle that out of CHRISTS Resurrection taught the Romans matter of duty; the same here, out of the same resurrection, teacheth the Corinthians matter of hope. There, similiter & vos, by way of pattern to conform our selvs to Him in newnesse of life: And here similiter & vos, in another sense, by way of promise; that so doing He shall hereafter conform us to Himself; change our vile bodies, and make them like His glorious body. That former is our first resurrection, from sin: This later, our second resurrection, from the grave: This, the reward of that. In that, the worke, what to do: In this, our reward, what to hope for. These two, Labour and Hope, the Church joyneth in one Antheme to day, her first Antheme. They sort well; and being sung together, make a good harmony. But, that without this; labour without hope, is no good musicke.

Rom. 6 4. Phil. 3. 21.

To rise and to reclaime our selves, from a sinfull course of life, we have long lived in, is labour (sure) and great labour. Now, labour, of it selfe, is a harsh unpleasant thing; unlesse it bee seasoned with hope. Debet, qui arat, in spe arare (saith the Apostle) above, at the IX. Chap. in the matter of the Clergies maintenance)

Chap 9.10.

He

He that plowes muſt plow in hope: his plough will not goe deepe elſe; his furrowes will be but ſhallow. Men may frame to themſelvs what ſpeculations they pleaſe; but the Apoſtles ſaying will prove true: ſever hope from labour, and you muſt looke for labour and labourers accordingly; ſlight and ſhallow (GOD knoweth) Labour then, leads us to hope.

The Apoſtle ſaw this; and therefore is carefull, whom he thus preſſeth to newneſſe of life, and the labour therefore, to raiſe for them, and to ſet before them matter of hope. Hope, here in this life, he could ſet them none. They were, as he was himſelfe, at quotidiè morior (Verſ. 31.) every houre in danger to bee drawn to the blocke. It muſt therefore be from another; or at leaſt, as the Text is, by a hope of being reſtored to life again. It was their caſe at Corinth, here in this Chapter, plainly; If wee muſt die to morrow; if there be all, that ſhall become of us, then let us eat and drink while we may. If we be not ſure of another life, let us make ſure of this. But when in the ſequele of the Chapter, he had ſhewed there was reſtoring; and that, ſo ſure he was of it, that he fals to inſult over them in theſe termes, they gird up their loynes again, and fall to their labours afreſh, as knowing, their labour ſhould not be in vaine in the LORD. This hope leades us to our reſtoring. 2 Verſe 32. Verſe 32.

Our reſtoring is but a promiſe, ſhall bee reſtored: that, neceſſarily referres to a Partie that is to make it good. Who is that? CHRIST: CHRIST is our hope. Why, hope is joyned to the living (ſaith the Wiſe-man:) CHRIST is dead; buried, laſt Friday. If He bee our hope, and He bee dead; our hope is dead too: And, if our hope be dead, our labour will not live long: nay, both are buried with CHRIST in His grave. It was their caſe this day that went to Emaus: ſay they (ſuppoſing CHRIST to be dead) nos autem ſperabamus, we were once in good hope, by Him, that is, while He lived: as much to ſay, as now He is in His grave, our hope is gone; we are even going to Emaus. But then after, as ſoone as they ſaw, He was alive again, their hope revived; and with their hope, their labour: and preſently backe againe to Ieruſalem, to the Lords worke, and bad Emaus farewell. So Hee leades us to labour; labour, to hope; hope, to our reſtoring; our reſtoring, to Chriſts, who, as He hath reſtored Himſelfe, will reſtore us alſo to life. And this keepes us from going to Emaus. It is uſed proverbially; Emaus ſignifieth a people forlorne: all that are at ſperabamus, have loſt their hopes; are ſaid to goe thither: and thither we ſhould all go, even to Emaus, but for the hope that breaths from this verſe: without which, it were a cold occupation to be a Chriſtian. 3 Eccleſ. 9. 4. Luk. 24. 21.

This then is the hope of this Text, ſpes viva, ſpes beata; worth all hopes elſe whatſoever. All hopes elſe, are but ſpes ſpirantium, hopes while we breath: This is ſpes expirantium, the hope, when we can fetch our breath no longer. The carnall man, all he can ſay, is, dum ſpiro, ſpero: his hope is as long as his breath. The Chriſtian aſpireth higher; goeth further (by vertue of this verſe) and ſaith, dum expiro, ſpero: his hope failes him not, when his breath failes him. Even then (ſaith Iob) repoſita eſt mihi ſpes in ſinu meo; this hope, and only this is laid up in our boſome: that though our life be taken from us; yet (in CHRIST) we, to doe it; and it, to us, ſhall be reſtored againe. Iob 19. 17.

Our caſe is not, as theirs then was: No perſecution; nor we at quotidiè morior; and therefore, not ſo ſenſible of this doctrine. But yet to them that are daily falling toward death, riſing to life is a good Text; Peradventure, not when we are well and in good health; but the houre is comming, when we ſhall leave catching at all other hopes, and muſt hold only by this: in horâ mortis, when all hope ſave the hope of this verſe, ſhall forſake us. Sure it is, under theſe very words, are we laid into our graves, and theſe the laſt words that are ſaid over us, as the very laſt hold, we have: and we therefore to regard them with Iob, and lay them up in our boſome.

There is in this Text. [1] a Text, and an [2] Expoſition. 1. The Text, we may well call the Angels Text: for from them it came firſt. 2. The Expoſition is Saint Pauls. The Diviſion.

These words Christ is risen, were first uttered by an angell, this day, in the Sepulcher; All the Evangelists* so testifie.

* Mat. 28 6. Mark. 16. 6. Luk. 24 6.

This Text is a good Text, but reacheth not to us, unlesse it be helped with the Apostles exposition: and then it will. The Exposition is it, that giveth us our hope, and the ground of our hope. Christ is risen, saith the Angell: Christ, the first fruits, saith the Apostle. And, mark well that word first fruits: For, in that word, is our hope. For, if Hee bee as the first fruits in His rising, His rising must reach to all, that are of the heape, whereof He is the first fruits. This is our hope.

II

III. But our hope must have a reason, (saith S. [a] Peter) and we be readie with it. [b] The hope that hath a ground (saith S. Paul) that is [c] spes quæ non confundit. Having then shewed us this hope, he sheweth us the ground of it. This: That, in very equitie, we are to be allowed to be restored to life, the same way we lost it. But, we lost it, by man: or, to speake in particular, By Adam, we came by our attainder. Meet therefore, that by man (and to speake in particular) that, by Christ, we come to our restoring. This is the ground or substance of our hope.

[a] 1 Pet. 3. 15. [b] Heb. 11. 1. [c] Rom. 5. 5.

IV. And thus he hath set before us this day, life and death, in themselves and their causes; two things, that, of all other do most concerne us. Our last point shall be to apply it to the meanes, this day, offered unto us toward the restoring us to life.

I. The Text, Christ is risen.

THe doctrine of the Resurrection, is one of the Foundations, so called by the Apostle, Heb. 6:1. It behoved him therefore (as a skilfull workman) to see it surely laid. That is surely laid, that is laid on the rock: and the rock is Christ. Therefore he laid it on Christ, by saying first, Christ is risen.

Chap. 10. 4.

Of all that be Christians, Christ is the hope: but, not Christ every way considered; but as risen. Even in Christ unrisen, there is no hope. Well doth the Apostle begin here: and, when he would open to us a gate of hope, carry us to Christs Sepulcher empty; to shew us, and to heare the Angell say, He is risen. Thence after to deduce; If He were able to do thus much for Himself, He hath promised us as much, and will do as much for us We shall be restored to life.

Hosea 2. 15.

Ver. 19. 18. 17. Thus had he proceeded, in the foure Verses before, destructivè. [1] Miserable is that man, that either laboureth, or suffereth in vaine. [2] Christian men may seeme to do so, and doe so, if there be no other life but this. [3] There is no other life but this, if there be no Resurrection. [4] There is no resurrection, if Christ be not risen; for, ours dependeth, on His. And now he turneth all about againe. But now (saith hee) [1] CHRIST is risen. [2] If He bee, we shall: [3] If we shall, we have (as Saint Paul calleth it) a blessed hope, and so a life yet behinde. [4] If such hope we have, we of all men, labour not in vaine. So, there are foure things: [1] Christs rising, [2] our restoring, [3] our hope, and [4] our labour. All the doubt is, of the two first: The two other will follow of themselves. If a restoring; we have good hope: if good hope, our labour is not lost. The two first are in the first: the other, in the last words. The first are; Christ is risen; the last, we shall be restored to life. Our endeavour is to bring these two together: But first, to lay the corner-stone.

Tit. 2. 13.

1 Tim. 3. 16.

Christ is risen, is the Angels text: A part of the great mysterie of godlines; which as the Apostle saith, was seen of Angels, by them delivered, and believed on by the world. Quod credibile primum fecit illis videntium certitudo, post morientium fortitudo, jam credibile mihi facit credentium multitudo. It became credible at first by the certainty of them that saw it; then, by the constancie of them that died for confession of it; and to us now, the huge multitude of them, that have and doe believe it; maketh it credible. For if it be not

For if it be not credible, how is it credible, that the world could believe it? the world (I ſay) being neither enjoyned by authority, nor forced by feare, nor inveigled by allurements; but brought about by perſons, by meanes leſſe credible, than the thing it ſelfe. Gamaliel ſaid, If it be of GOD, it will prevaile. And, though we cannot argue, all that hath prevailed, is of GOD: yet, thus we can: That which hath been mightily impugned, and weakely purſued, and yet prevailed, that was of GOD certainly. That which all the Powers of the earth ſought, but could not prevaile againſt, was from Heaven certainly. Certainly, CHRIST is riſen: for, many have riſen, and lift up themſelves againſt it, but all are fallen. But the Apoſtle ſaith, it is a foundation; that he will not lay it againe; No more will we, but goe forward, and raiſe upon it: And ſo let us doe. Acts 5 37.

CHRIST is riſen: Suppoſe, He be: what then? Though CHRISTS riſing did no way concerne us, or we that; yet [1] firſt, in that a Man, one of our owne fleſh and blood hath gotten ſuch a victory, even for humanities ſake: [2] Then, in that, one that is innocent, hath quit Himſelfe ſo well, for innocencies ſake: [3] Thirdly, in that He hath foiled a common enemy, for amities ſake: [4] Laſtly, in that He hath wiped away the ignominie of His fall, with the glory of His riſing againe, for vertue and valours ſake: for all theſe, wee have cauſe to rejoyce with Him. All are matter of gratulation.

II. The Apoſtles expoſition. CHRI as the firſt ST, fruits.

But, the Apoſtle is about a farther matter: that Text (the Angels Text) he ſaw, would not ſerve our turne, farther than I have ſaid. Well may we congratulate Him, if that be all: but, otherwiſe it pertaines to us, CHRIST is riſen. The Apoſtle therefore enters farther, telling us, That CHRIST did thus riſe, not as CHRIST onely, but, as CHRIST the firſt fruits. CHRIST is riſen, and in riſing become the firſt fruits: riſen, and ſo riſen; that is (to ſpeak after the manner of men) that there is in CHRIST a double capacity. [1] One, as a body naturall, conſidered by Himſelfe, without any relative reſpect unto us, or to any: (In which regard, well may we be glad, as one ſtranger is for another, but otherwiſe His riſing concernes us not at all.) [2] Then, that He hath a ſecond, as a body Politike, or chiefe part of a Company, or Corporation, that have to Him, and He to them, a mutuall and reciprocall reference: In which reſpect, His reſurrection may concerne us, no leſſe than Himſelfe: It is that, He giveth us the firſt Item of, in the word Primitiæ; that CHRIST in His riſing, commeth not to be conſidered as a Totum integrale, or body naturall alone; as CHRIST, onely: but (that which maketh for us) He hath beſides another capacity, that He is a part of a corporation, or body, of which body we are the members. This being wonne; look what He hath ſuffered or done, it pertaineth to us, and we have our part in it.

As a part of the whole.
b Apoc. 22. 16.

You ſhall finde (and, ever when you finde ſuch words, make much of them) CHRIST called a [a] Head; a Head is a part: CHRIST called a [b] Root, a Root is a part: and here CHRIST called firſt fruits, which (we all know) is but a part of the fruits, but a handfull of a heap, or a ſheaf; and referreth to the reſt of the fruits, as a part, to the whole. So that, there is (in the Apoſtles conceipt) one maſſe or heape of all mankind: of which, CHRIST is the firſt fruits; we, the remainder. So as, by the law of the body, all His concerne us no leſſe, than they doe Him: whatſoever He did, He did to our behoofe. Die He, or riſe; we have our part, in His Death, and in His Reſurrection, and all: why? becauſe He is but the firſt fruits.

And, if He were but Primus, and not Primitiæ dormientium, there were hope. For, Primus is an ordinall number, and draweth after, a ſecond, a third, and GOD knoweth how many. But, if in that word, there be any ſcruple (as, ſometime it is, Ante quem non eſt, rather, than poſt quem eſt alius) if no more come but one: all the world knowes, the firſt fruits is but a part of the fruits: there are fruits beſide them, no man knoweth how many.

As a part for the whole.

But, that which is more; The firſt fruits is not every part; but ſuch a part, as repreſenteth the whole, and hath an operative force over the whole. For the better underſtanding whereof, we are to have recourſe to the Law, to the very inſtitution or firſt beginning of them, Levit. 23. 10. (Ever, the Legall ceremony is a good key to the Evangelicall myſtery.) Thereby we ſhall ſee, why S. Paul made choice of the word firſt fruits, to expreſſe himſelfe by: that he uſeth verbum vigilans, a word that is awake
Prov. 25. 11. (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) or (as Salomon) a word upon his owne wheele. The Head, or the root would have ſerved: for, if the head be above the water, there is hope for the whole body: and if the Root have life, the branches ſhall not long be without: yet, he refuſeth theſe, and others that offered themſelves, and chooſeth rather the terme of firſt fruits. And why ſo?

This very day (Eaſter day) the day of CHRISTS riſing, according to the Law, is the day or feaſt of the firſt fruits: the very Feaſt carrieth him to the word; nothing could be more fit or ſeaſonable for the time. The day of the Paſſion, is the day of the Chap. 5. 7. Paſſeover; and CHRIST is our Paſſeover: the day of the Reſurrection, is the day of the firſt fruits; and CHRIST is our firſt fruits.

And this terme thus choſen, you ſhall ſee, there is a very apt and proper reſemblance between the reſurrection and it. The rite and manner of the firſt fruits, thus it was. Under the Law, they might not eat of the fruits of the earth, ſo long as they were prophane. Prophane they were, untill they were ſacred: And, on this wiſe were they ſacred. All the ſheaves in a field (for examples ſake) were unholy. One ſheafe Levit. 23. 10. is taken out of all the reſt, which ſheafe we call the firſt fruits. That, in the name of
11. the reſt, is lift up aloft, and ſhaken to and fro, before the LORD, and ſo conſecrated. That
14. done, not onely the ſheafe ſo lifted up, was holy (though, that alone was lift up) but all the ſheaves in the field were holy, no leſſe than it: The rule is, Rom. 11. 16. If the firſt fruits be holy, all the lump is ſo too.

2 Cor. 5. 14. And thus (for all the world) fareth it in the Reſurrection. We were all dead (ſaith the Apoſtle;) dead ſheaves, all. One, (and that is CHRIST) this day, the day of firſt fruits, was (in manner of a ſheafe) taken out of the number of the dead, and in the name of the reſt, lift up from the grave (and in His riſing, He ſhooke; for there was a great Matth. 28. 2. Earth-quake:) By vertue whereof, the firſt fruits being reſtored to life, all the reſt of the dead, are in Him entitled to the ſame hope; in that, He was not ſo lift up for Himſelfe alone, but, for us, and in our names: And ſo the ſubſtance of this Feaſt fulfilled in CHRISTS Reſurrection.

Not, of the dead, but, of them that ſleep: Our Hope.

Now, upon this lifting up, there enſueth a very great alteration, if you pleaſe to mark it. It was even now, CHRIST is riſen from the dead, the firſt fruits (it ſhould be, of the dead, too; for, from thence He roſe; it is not ſo, but, the firſt fruits) of them that ſleepe: that, you may ſee, the conſecration hath wrought a change. A change, and a great change (certainly) to change νεκροὶ into κεκοιμημένοι, a buriall place, into a cœmetery, that is, a great Dortor: Graves, into beds; Death, into ſleepe; Dead men, into men laid Iohn 11. 12. downe to take their reſt; a reſt, of hope; of hope, to riſe againe. If they ſleepe, they ſhall doe well.

And, (that, which lieth open in the word) Dormientium, the very ſame is infolded, in the word firſt fruits: Either word affordeth comfort. For, firſt fruits imply fruits: And ſo we, as the fruits of the earth, falling, as doe the graines or kernels into the ground, and there lying, to all mens ſeeming, putrified, and paſt hope, yet on a ſudden, againſt the great Feaſt of firſt fruits, ſhooting forth of the ground againe. The other of Dormientium, the Apoſtle letteth goe, and faſtens on this of fruits, and followeth it hard, thorow the reſt of the Chapter: ſhewing, that the riſing againe of the Verſe 36. fruits ſowen, would be no leſſe incredible, than the Reſurrection, but that, we ſee it ſo, every yeare.

These two words of [1] ſleeping, and [2] ſowing, would be laid up well. That, which is ſowen, riſeth up, in the ſpring: that, which ſleepeth, in the morning. So conceive, of the change wrought in our nature; that feaſt of firſt fruits, by Chriſt our firſt fruits. Neither periſh; neither that, which is ſowen, though it rot: nor they, that ſleepe, though they lye as dead, for the time. Both, that ſhall ſpring, and theſe wake, well againe. Therefore, as men ſow not grudgingly: nor lye down at the night unwillingly; no more muſt we: ſeeing, by vertue of this Feaſt, we are now Dormientes, not mortui: now, not as ſtones, but as fruits of the earth: whereof, one hath an annuall, the other, a diurnall reſurrection. This, for the firſt fruits, and the change by them wrought.

of

III. The ground of our hope.

There is a good analogie or correſpondence, betweene theſe, it cannot be denied. To this queſtion, Can one mans reſurrection worke upon all the reſt? it is a good anſwer, Why not as well as one ſheafe, upon the whole harveſt? This Simile ſerves well to ſhew it: To ſhew, but not prove. Symbolicall Divinitie is good: but might we ſee it in the rationall, too? We may ſee it in the cauſe, no leſſe: in the ſubſtance, and let the ceremonie goe. This, I call the ground of our hope.

Why (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſhould this of the firſt fruits ſeem ſtrange to you? that by one mans reſurrection, we ſhould riſe all, ſeeing by one mans death, we die all? By one man (ſaith he, Rom 5.12.) ſin entered into the world, and, by ſinne, death: to which ſin we were no parties, and yet we all die, becauſe we are of the ſame nature, whereof hee, the firſt perſon: Death came ſo certainly; and it is good reaſon, life ſhould doe ſo likewiſe. To this queſtion, Can the reſurrection of one, a thouſand ſix hundred yeares agoe, be the cauſe of our riſing? it is a good anſwer, Why not, as well as the death of one, five thouſand ſix hundred yeares agoe, be the cauſe of our dying? The ground and reaſon is, that there is like ground and reaſon of both, The wiſeſt way it is (if Wiſdome can contrive it) that a perſon be cured by Mithridate made of the very fleſh of the Viper bruiſed, whence the poiſon came, that ſo, that which brought the miſchief, might miniſter alſo the remedy: The moſt powerfull way it is (if Power can effect it) to make ſtrength appeare in weakneſſe; and that He that overcame, ſhould by the nature which He overcame, be ſwallowed up in victory. The beſt way it is (if Goodneſſe will admit of it) that as next to Satan, man to man oweth his deſtruction; ſo, next to GOD, man to man might be debtor of his recoverie. So agreeable it is to the Power, Wiſdome, and Goodneſſe, of GOD, this; the three Attributes of the Bleſſed and Glorious Trinitie.

And, let Iuſtice weigh it in her ballance, no juſt acception can be taken to it, no not by Juſtice it ſelfe; that, as death came, ſo ſhould life too: the ſame way at leaſt. More favour for life, if it may be; but, in very rigour, the ſame at the leaſt. According then to the very exact rule of Iuſtice, both are to be alike: If by man one: by man the other.

We dwell too long in generalities: let us draw neere to the perſons themſelves, in whom we ſhall ſee this better. In them, all anſwer exactly; word, for word. Adam is fallen, and become the firſt fruits of them that die: CHRIST is riſen, and became the firſt fruits of them that live (for, they that ſleep, live.) Or you may (if you pleaſe) keepe the ſame terme, in both, thus: Adam is riſen (as we uſe to call rebellions, riſings:) He did riſe againſt GOD, by Eritis ſicut Dii: He had never fallen, if he had not thus riſen: His riſing, was his fall. Gen. 3. 5.

We are now come to the two great Perſons, that are the two great Authors, of the two great matters in this world, life and death. Not, either to themſelves, and none elſe: but, as two Heads, too Roots, two firſt fruits; either of them in reference to his company, whom they ſtand for. And of theſe two, hold the two great Corporations: [1] Of them that die; they are Adams: [2] of them, that ſleepe and ſhall riſe; that is CHRISTS.

To come then to the particular: no reaſon in the world, that Adams tranſgreſſion ſhould draw vs all downe to death, only for that we were of the ſame lumpe; and, that CHRISTS righteouſneſſe ſhould not bee availeable to raiſe us up againe to life, being of the ſame ſheaves, whereof He the firſt fruits, no leſſe than before of Adam.

a Cor. 13.4. Looke to the things, Death and life: Weakeneſſe is the cauſe of death: Raiſing to life commeth of Power. Shall there be in Weakeneſſe more ſtrength to hurt, than in Power to doe us good? Look to the Perſons, Adam and CHRIST: ſhall Adam, being

Verſ. 45. but a living ſoule, infect us more ſtrongly, than Chriſt (a quickening ſpirit) can heale us

47. againe? Nay then, Adam was but from the earth earthly; CHRIST the Lord from heaven: Shall earth doe that, which heaven cannot undoe? Never: it cannot be, Sicut, Sic: As, and So: ſo run the termes.

But the Apoſtle (in Rom. 5. where he handleth this very point) tels us plaine-

Rom. 5.15. ly, Non ſicut delictum, ita & donum; Not, as the fault, ſo the Grace: Nor, as the fall, ſo the Riſing: but, the Grace and the Riſing, much more abundant. It ſeemeth to be, A pari; it is not, indeed: It is under value. Great odds betweene the Perſons, the Things, the powers, and the meanes of them. Thus then, meet it ſhould be: Let us ſee, how it was.

Here againe, the very termes give us great light. We are (ſaith he) reſtored: Reſtoring doth alwayes preſuppoſe an attainder going before; and ſo, the terme, ſignificant: For the nature of attainder is, One perſon maketh the fault, but it taints his bloud, and all his poſterity. [a] The Apoſtle ſaith, that a Statute there is, All men ſhould die:

a Heb. 9.27. b Gen. 3. 19. But, when we goe to ſearch for it, we can finde none, but [b] Pulvis es, wherein onely Adam is mentioned, and ſo none die, but he. But, even by that Statute, death goeth over all men; even thoſe (ſaith Saint Paul) that have not ſinned after the like manner of tranſgreſſion of Adam. By what Law? by the law of Attainders.

The Reſtoring then likewiſe was to come, and did come after the ſame manner, as did the attainders: That, by the firſt; this, by the ſecond Adam (ſo he is called Verſ.

Lev. 18.5. 45.) There was a Statute concerning GODS commandements, qui fecerit ea, vivet in eis: He that obſerved the commandements, ſhould live by that his obedience, Death ſhould not ſeize on him. CHRIST did obſerve them exactly; therefore ſhould not have beene ſeized on by death: ſhould not, but was: and that ſeiſure of his, was deaths forfeiture. The laying of the former Statute on CHRIST, was the utter making it void. So, Iudgement was entred, and an Act made, CHRIST ſhould be reſtored to life. And becauſe, He came not for Himſelfe, but for us, and in our name and ſtead; did repreſent us, and ſo, we, vertually in Him, by His reſtoring

Rom. 11.16. we alſo were reſtored: By the rule, ſi Primitiæ, & tota conſperſio ſic: as the Firſt fruits goe, ſo goeth the whole lump: as the Root, the branches. And thus we have gotten life againe of mankinde, by paſſing this Act of Reſtitution, whereby we have hope to be reſtored to life.

But, life is a terme of latitude, and admitteth a broad difference, which it behooveth us much that we know. Two lives there be: In the holy Tongue, the word which ſignifieth life, is of the duall number; to ſhew us, there is a duality of lives: that, two there be, and, that we have an eye to both. It will helpe us to underſtand our Text. For, all reſtored to life: All, to one: not, all to both. The Apoſtle doth after (at the 44. Verſe) expreſly name them both. [1] One, a Naturall life, or life by the living ſoule: The other, [2] a Spirituall life, or life by the quickening Spirit. Of theſe two, Adam (at the time of his fall) had the firſt, of a living ſoule; was ſeized of it: and, of him, all mankinde, Chriſt and we all receive that life. But, the other, the Spirituall (which is the life chiefly to be accompted of) that, he then had not, not actually; Only, a poſſibility he had (if he had held him in obedience, and walked with GOD) to have been tranſlated to that other life. For, cleare it is, the life which Angels now live with GOD, and which we have hope and promiſe to live with Him, after our re-

Luke 20. 36. ſtoring (when we ſhall be equall to the Angels:) that life, Adam at the time of his fall, was not poſſeſſed of.

Now Adam, by his fall, fell from both, forfeited both eſtates. Not onely, that, hee had in reverſion, by not fulfilling the conditions: but, even that, hee had in eſſe too. For, even on that alſo did Death ſeize after, Et mortuus eſt.

CHRIST

CHRIST in his reſtitution, to all the ſonnes of Adam, to all our whole nature, reſtoreth the former: therefore, all have intereſt, all ſhall partake that life. What Adam actually had, wee ſhall actually have, we ſhall all be reſtored. To repaire our nature, Hee came; and repaire it Hee did: all is given againe really, that in Adam really we loſt, touching nature. So that, by his fall, no detriment at all, that way.

The other, the ſecond, that, he reſtored too; but, not promiſcuè (as the former) to all. Why? for, Adam was never ſeazed of it; performed not that, whereunto the poſſibilitie was annexed; and ſo had in it but a defeaſible eſtate. But then, by His ſpeciall grace, by a ſecond peculiar act, He hath enabled us to attaine the ſecond eſtate alſo, which Adam had only a reverſion of, and loſt, by breaking of the condition whereto it was limited. And ſo, to this ſecond, reſtored ſo many, as (to uſe the Apoſtles words in the next verſe) are in Him: that is, ſo many, as are not only of that maſſe or lumpe, whereof Adam was the firſt fruits (for, they are intereſſed in the former only) but, that are beſides, of the nova conſperſio, whereof CHRIST is the Primitiæ.

[a] They that believe in Him (ſaith Saint Iohn) them He hath enabled, [b] to them Hee hath given power to become the ſonnes of God: to whom therefore, He ſaith, this day riſing, Vado ad Patrem veſtrum: In which reſpect, the Apoſtle calleth him [c] Primogenitum inter multos fratres. Or (to make the compariſon even) to thoſe that are (to ſpeake but as [d] Eſay ſpeaketh of them) His Children; Behold, I and the children God hath given me. The terme, He uſeth (Himſelfe) to them, after His reſurrection, and calleth them Children: And they, as His family, take denomination of Him, Chriſtians, of Chriſt.

a Ioh. 1. 12.
b Ioh. 20. 17.
c Rom. 8. 29.
d Eſay 8. 18.

Of theſe two lives, the firſt we need take no thought for. It ſhall be, of all; the unjuſt as well as the juſt. The life of the living ſoule, ſhall be to all reſtored. All our thought is to bee for the latter; how to have our part in the ſupernaturall life: for that is indeed to be reſtored to life. For the former though it carry the name of life, yet it may well be diſputed, and is, Whether it be rather a death, than a life; or a life, than a death? A life it is; and not a life: for it hath no living thing in it. A death it is; and not a death: it is an immortall death. But moſt certaine it is (call it life if you will) they that ſhall live that life, ſhall wiſh for death, rather than it, and (this is the miſerie) not have their wiſh: for, death ſhall flie from them.

Out of this double life, and double reſtoring, there grow two Reſurrections, in the world to come, ſet downe by our SAVIOUR in expreſſe termes (Ioh. 19.) Though both be to life, yet, [1] that is called condemnation to judgement: and [2] this only, to life. Of theſe; the Apoſtle calleth one, the better reſurrection: the better, beyond all compariſon. To attaine this then, we bend all our endeavours; that, ſeeing the other will come of it ſelfe, without taking any thought for it at all, wee may make ſure of this.

Heb. 11. 35.

1 To compaſſe that then, we muſt be in CHRIST, So it is in the next verſe: To all, but to every one in order; CHRIST firſt, the firſt fruits, and then, they that be in Him.

2 Now, He is in us, by our fleſh; and we in Him, by His Spirit: and it ſtandeth with good reaſon, they that be reſtored to life, ſhould be reſtored to the Spirit: For, the Spirit is the cauſe of all life; but ſpecially, of the Spirituall life, which we ſeeke for.

3 His Spirit then we muſt poſſeſſe our ſelves of: and we muſt do that here: for, it is but one and the ſame Sprit, that raiſeth our ſoules here, from the death of ſinne, and the ſame that ſhall raiſe our bodies there, from the duſt of death.

Rom. 8. 11.

4 Of which Spirit there is firſt fruits (to retaine the words of the Text) and a fulneſſe: But, the fulneſſe, in this life, we ſhall never attain: Our higheſt degree (here) is but to be of the number, whereof he was, that ſaid, Et nos habentes primitias Spiritus.

Rom. 8. 23.

5 Theſe firſt fruits wee firſt receive in our Baptiſme, which is to us, our Laver of

Tit. 3. 5.

of regeneration, and of our renewing by the holy Spirit; where we are made and conſecrate Primitiæ.

6 Heb. 12. 1. But, as we need be reſtored to life, ſo (I doubt) had we need to be reſtored to the Spirit, too. We are at many loſſes of it, by this ſinne that cleaveth ſo faſt to us. I doubt, it is with us, as with the fields, that we need a feaſt of firſt fruits, a day of conſecration, every yeare. By ſomething or other, we grow un-hallowed, and need to be conſecrate anew, to re-ſeize us of the firſt fruits of the Spirit againe. At leaſt to awake it in us, as Primitiæ dormientium, at leaſt. That which was given us, and by the fraud of our enemy, or our owne negligence, or both taken from us, and loſt, we need to have reſtored; that which we have quenched, to be light anew: that which we have caſt into a dead ſleep, awaked up from it.

1 Theſ. 5. 19. Epheſ. 5. 14.

If ſuch a new conſecrating we need, what better time than the feaſt of firſt fruits? the ſacring time under the law; and in the Goſpell, the day of CHRIST's riſing, our firſt fruits, by whom we are thus conſecrate. The day wherein He was Himſelfe reſtored to the perfection of His Spirituall life (the life of glory) is the beſt for us, to be reſtored in, to the firſt fruits of that ſpirituall life, the life of grace.

IV. The Application of the Sacrament.

And if we aske, what ſhall be our meanes of this conſecrating? The Apoſtle telleth us (Heb. 10. 10.) we are ſanctified, by the Oblation of the body of JESUS: That is the beſt meanes to reſtore us to that life. He hath ſaid it, and ſhewed it Himſelfe; Hee that eateth Me, ſhall live by Me. The words ſpoken concerning that, are both Spirit and life; whether we ſeeke for the Spirit, or ſeeke for Life. Such was the meanes of our death, by eating the forbidden fruit; the firſt fruits of death: and ſuch is the meanes of our life, by eating the fleſh of Chriſt, the firſt fruits of life.

Ioh. 6. 57. 63.

And herein, we ſhall very fully fit, not the time only and the meanes, but alſo the manner. For, as by partaking the fleſh and blood, the ſubſtance of the firſt Adam, we came to our death; ſo to life we cannot come, unleſſe we do participate with the fleſh and blood of the ſecond Adam, that is CHRIST. We drew death from the firſt, by partaking the ſubſtance: and ſo muſt wee draw life from the ſecond by the ſame. This is the way; become branches of the Vine, and partakers of His nature, and ſo of His life and verdure both.

So, the time, the meanes, the manner agree. What letteth then, but that we, at this time, by this meanes, and in this manner, make our ſelves of that conſperſion, whereof Chriſt is our firſt fruits: by theſe means, obtaining the firſt fruits of His Spirit, of that quickning Spirit, which being obtained, and ſtill kept, or in default thereof, ſtill recovered, ſhall here begin to initiate in us, the firſt fruits of our reſtitution in this life, whereof the fulneſſe we ſhall alſo be reſtored unto, in the life to come: As Saint Peter calleth that time, the time of the reſtoring of all things. Then ſhall the fulneſſe be reſtored us too, when GOD ſhall be all in all; not ſome in one, and ſome in another, but all in all. Atq; hic eſt vitæ finis, pervenire ad vitam cujus non eſt finis: This is the end of the Text, and of our life, to come to a life, whereof there is no end. To which, &c.

Et cum transiſſet Sabbatum, &c.

VER. 1. And, when the Sabbath day was paſt, Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of Iames, and Salome bought ſweet ointments, that they might come, and embalme Him.

2. Therefore, early in the morning, the firſt day of the weeke, they came unto the Sepulcher, when the Sunne was yet riſing.

3. And they ſaid one to another, Who ſhall role us away this ſtone from the doore of the Sepulcher?

4. And when they looked, they ſaw, that the ſtone was rolled away (for, it was a very great one.)

5. So they went into the Sepulcher, and ſaw a young man ſitting at the right ſide; clothed in a long white robe: And they were afraid.

6. But, he ſaid unto them, Be not afraid: Yee ſeeke IESUS of NAZARETH, which hath beene crucified, He is riſen, He is not here: Behold the place, where they put Him.

7. But, goe your way and tell His Diſciples, and Peter, that He will goe before you into Galilee: there ſhall yee ſee Him, as He ſaid unto you.

THE Summe of this Goſpell is, a Goſpell: that is, a meſſage of good tydings. In a meſſage, theſe three points fall in naturally: 1 The Parties, to whom it is brought. 2 The Partie by whom: 3 And the Meſſage it ſelf. Theſe three: 1 The Parties to whom; Three women, the three Maries. 2 The Partie, by whom, an Angell. 3 The Meſſage it ſelf, the firſt newes of CHRISTS riſing againe. Theſe three make the three parts in the Text. 1 The Women, 2 The Angell. 3 The Meſſage. The Summe:

The Diviſion.

Seven verſes I have read ye. The firſt foure concern the Women. The fifth, the Angell. The two laſt, the Angels meſſage. In the Women, we have to to consider: [1] Themselves, in the first: [2] Their journey, in the second and third: and [3] Their successe, in the fourth.

In the Angell, [1] The manner of his appearing, [2] and of their affecting with it.

In the Message, The newes it selfe: 1. That CHRIST is risen: 2. That He is gone before them to Galilee: 3. That there they shall see Him: 4. Peter and all: 5. Then the Ite & dicite, the Commission ad Evangelizandum; not to conceale these good newes, but publish it: these, to His Disciples: they, to others, and so to us: we to day, and so to the worlds end.

I

The Parties to whom: Three Women.

AS the Text lyeth, the part that first offereth it selfe, is the parties, to whom this message came. Which were three Women. Where, finding that Women were the first, that had notice of Christs resurrection, we stay. For it may seem strange that passing by all men, yea, the Apostles themselves, Christ would have His Resurrection first of all made knowne to that sex. Reasons are rendred, of divers diversly. We may be bold to alleage that, the Angell doth, in the Text (Vers. 5.) Vos enim quæritis, for they sought CHRIST. And CHRIST is not unrighteous to forget the worke and labour of their love, that seeke Him. Verily there will appeare more Love, and Labour in these Women, than in Men; even the Apostles themselves. At this time (I know not how) Men were then become Women, and did animos gerere muliebres; and Women were Men: Sure the more manly, of the twaine. The Apostles, they sate mured up, all the doores fast about them; sought not, went not to the Sepulcher. Neither Peter that loved Him, nor Iohn whom He loved; till these Women brought them word. But these Women (we see) were last at His Passion, and first at His Resurrection: staied longest at that, came sooneſt to this: Even in this respect to be respected. Sure as it is said of the Law, Vigilantibus & non dormientibus succurret lex; so may it no lesse truly be said of the Gospell. We see it here, it commeth not to sleepers; but, to them that are awake, and up and about their businesse, as these Women were. So that, there was a capacitie in them to receive this prerogative.

Heb. 6 10.

Ioh. 20. 19.

Ioh. 21. 15. 20.

Mary Magdalen first.

Before I leave this part; of the parties, I may not omit to observe Mary Magdalens place and precedence among the three. All the Fathers are carefull to note it. That she standeth first of them: For it seemeth no good order. She had had seven Divels in her, (as we finde Vers. 9.) She had had the blemish to be called Peccatrix, as one famous and notorious in that kind: The other were of honest report, and never so stained: Yet, is she named with them. With them, were much: but, not only with them; but before them. With them: And that is to shew, CHRISTS Resurrection (as well as His death) reacheth to sinners of both sexes: And that to sinners of note, no lesse than those that seeme not to have greatly gone astray. But before them, too; And that is (indeed) to bee noted; that, shee is the first, in the list of Women: and Saint Peter, in that of Men. These two: the two chiefe Sinners, either of their sex. Yet they, the two, whose lots came first forth in sorte Sanctorum, in partaking this newes. And this, to shew, that chiefe Sinners (as these were) if they carry themselves, as they did, shall be at no losse by their fall: shall not only be pardoned, but honoured (even as he was) like these, with stolâ primâ, the first robe in all the Wardrobe; and stand formost of all. And it is not without a toueh of the former reason; In that, the sinner, after his recoverie, for the most part seeketh GOD more fervently: Whereas they, that have not greatly gone astray, are but even so so; if warme, it is all. And with GOD, it is a Rule, Plus valet hora fervens quàm mensis tepens. An hower of fervor, more worth then a moneth of tepor. Now, such was Mary Magdalen; here, and else-where, vouchsafed therefore this degree of exaltation, to be of the first first three: nay, to be the first of the three, that heard first of His rising: Yea (as in the ninth Verse) that first saw Him risen from the dead. This of the Persons. 2 Sam. 23. 18.

And now, because their endeavours were so well liked, as they were (for them) counted worthy this so great honour, it falleth next to consider, what those were: that we being like prepared may partake the like good hap. So, seeking as they, we may finde as they did. They were foure in number: The first and third in the II. the second, in the I. and the last, in the III. Verse. All reduced (as CHRIST reduced them, in Mary Magdalen) to Dilexit multùm, their great Love; Of which these foure be foure Demonstrations: Or (if love be an Ensigne, as it is termed, Cant. 2.) the foure Colours of it. 1. That they went to the Sepulcher: Love, to one dead. 2. That they bought precious odours; Love, that is at charges. 3. That out they went early, before breake of day: Love, that will take paines. 4. That for all the stone, still they went on: Love, that will wrestle with impediments. The first is constant, as to the dead. The second bounteous, as at expence. The third diligent, as up betimes. The last resolute, be the stone never so great. According to which foure, are the foure denominations of Love: 1 Amor, à morte, when it surviveth death: 2 When it buyeth dearely, it is Charitas: 3 When it sheweth all Diligence, it is Dilectio: 4 When it goeth per Saxa, when stones cannot stay it, it is Zelus, which is specially seene, in encountring difficulties. It shall not be amisse to touch them severally: it will serve to touch our Love, whether ours be of the same assay. 2 Their journey, and therein, their love. Cant. 2. 4.

The first riseth out of these words [They went to the Sepulcher:] And (indeed) ex tota substantia, out of the whole Text. For, for whom is all this adoe; is it not for CHRIST? But, CHRIST is dead, and buried three dayes since, and this is now the third day. What then, though He be dead; to their love, He liveth still: Death may take His body from their eyes, but shall never take His remembrance, from their hearts. Herein is Love, this is the first Colour (saith a great Master in that facultie) Fortis sicut Mors, Love, that death cannot foile: but continueth to the dead, as if they still were alive. And, when I say the dead, I meane not such, as the dead have left behinde them (though that be a vertue, and Booz worthily blessed for it, that shewed mercy to the living for the deads sake:) But I meane performing offices of love to the dead himselfe: To see, he have a Sepulcher to go to: Not, so to burie his friend, as he would burie his Asse being dead. To see, he have one: and not thither to bring him, and there to leave him, and burie him and his memory both in a grave. Such is the worlds love. Salomon sheweth it, by the Lion and the Dog. All, after CHRIST living: But, goe to His Sepulcher who will, not we. The love that goeth thither, that burieth not the memory of Him that is buried, is Love indeed. 1 Love to the dead: Amor. Cant. 8. 6. Ruth 2. 20. Eccles. 9. 4.

The journey to the Sepulcher is Iter amoris: had it been but to lament, as Mary Magdalen to Lazarus (Iohn 11.) But then, here is a farther matter: They went to annoint Him. That, is set for another signe: that they spared for no cost, but bought precious odours wherewith to embalme Him. 2 Love that was at charges: Charitas. Iohn 11. 31.

1 To goe to annoint CHRIST, is kindly: It is to make Him CHRIST, that is, Annointed. That terme referreth principally, to His Fathers annointing (I grant:) but, what if we also annoint Him, will He take it, in evill part? Clearely, not: Neither quicke, nor dead. Not quicke, Luke 7. Marke 14. Not dead; this place is pregnant; it is the end of their journey, to do this. He is well content to be their, and our Annointed; Not His Fathers onely: yea, it is a way to make Him Christum nostrum, Our CHRIST, if we breake our boxes, and bestow our odours upon Him. Luke 7. 46. Marke 14. 3.

2 To annoint Him; And, not with some odde cast ointment, lying by them, kept a little too long; to throw away upon Him: But to buy, to be at cost, to doe it, Emptis odoribus, with bought odours.

3 This to do, to Him alive; that would they with all their hearts: But, if that cannot be, to doe it to Him dead, rather, than not at all. To do it, to whatsoever is left us, of CHRIST, to that to do it.

4 To embalme CHRIST, CHRIST dead, yea, though others had done it before: for, so is the case. Ioseph and Nichodemus had bestowed Myrrh and Aloes to that end already: What then? though they had done it, it is not enough: nay, it is nothing: Nay, if all the world should have done it, unlesse they might come with their odours and doe it too, all were nothing. In hoc est charitas, herein is love, and this a signe of it. A signe of it every where else; and, to CHRIST, a signe it was. Indeed, such a signe there was; but it is beaten downe, now. We can love CHRIST, absque hoc, and shew it some other way well enough. It sheweth, our love is not Charitas, no deare love; but Vilitas, love, that loves to be at as little charges with CHRIST, as may be: faint love. You shall know it thus: Ad hoc signum se contrahit, At this signe it shrinkes; at every word of it. 1. They bought; that is charge: we like it not; wee had rather heare potuit vendi. 2. Odours: what need odours? An unnecessarie charge: We like no odour, but Odor Lucri. 3. To Christ: Nay, seeing it is unnecessary, we trust, Christ will not require it. 4. Not, alive; but especially, not dead: there was much adoe, while He lived, to get allowance for it; there was one of His owne Apostles (a good charitable man, Pater pauperum) held it to be plaine perditio. Yet, to annoint the living; that, many doe: they can annoint us againe: But, to the dead, it is quite cast away. But then, if it had been told us, He is embalmed already; why then, take away their odours; that, at no hand would have been endured. This sheweth, our love is not Charitas. But, so long as this is a Gospell, it shall sound every Easter-day in our eare, that the buying of odours, the embalming of whatsoever is left us of Christ, is (and will be still) a signe of our loving and seeking Him, as we should: though, not heretofore, yet now: Now especially, when that objection ceaseth; He is embalmed enough already. Hee was (indeed) then; but most of the Myrrh and Aloes is now gone. That, there is good occasion left, if any be disposed in hoc signo signari, with this signe to seale his love to Christ, anew againe.

Ioh. 19. 39.

Mark. 14. 5.

Mark. 14. 2.

3 Love, that takes paines: Dilectio.

From this of their expence [Charitas] we passe to the third, of their Diligence [Dilectio:] set downe (in verse 2.) in these words Very early, &c. And but marke, how diligent the Holy GHOST is in describing their diligence. The very first day of the weeke: the very first part of that first day, In the morning: the very first houre of that first part, Very early, before the Sunne was up, they were up. Why good Lord, what need all this haste? CHRIST is fast enough under His stone. He will not runne away (yee may be sure:) ye need never breake your sleepe, and yet come to the Sepulcher time enough. No; if they doe it not, as soone as it may bee done, it is nothing worth. Herein is love, Dilectio: whose proper signe is Diligentia, in not slipping the first opportunitie of shewing it. They did it not at their leasure: they could not rest, they were not well till they were about it. Which very speed of theirs doubleth all the former. For Citò (we know) is esteemed as much, as Bis. To do it at once, is to do it more than once, is to do it twice over.

Yet, this we must take with us [Διαγινωσκέ σαββάτα.] Where falleth a very strange thing: that, as we have commended them for their quickneſse, so must we now also for their slowneſse (out of the very first words of all:) When the Sabbath was past, then, and not till then, they did it. This diligence of theirs, as great haste as it made, stayed yet, till the Sabbath were past: and, by this meanes, hath two contrary commendations: [a] One, for the speed; [b] another for the stay of it. Though they faine would have beene embalming Him, as soone as might be, yet not with breach of the Sabbath: their diligence leapt over none of GOD's Commandements for haste. No, not this Commandement, which (of all other) the world is boldest with; and, if they have haste, somewhat else may; but sure, the Sabbath shall never stay them. The Sabbath, they stayed: for then, GOD stayed them. But that was no sooner over, but their diligence appeared straight. No other thing could stay them.

Nor

Nor their owne Sabbath (Sleepe,) but, before day-light, they were well onward on their way.

The laſt is in the third verſe, in theſe words, As they went, they ſaid, &c. There was a ſtone (a very great one) to be rolled away yer they could come at Him. They were ſo rapt with love, in a kind of extaſie, they never thought of the ſtone; they were well on their way, before they remembred it. And then, when it came to their minds, they went not backe though; but on ſtill, the ſtone non obſtante. And herein is love; the very fervour of it, Zeale: that word hath fire in it. Not onely diligence (as lightneſſe) to carry it upward, but zeale (as fire) to burne a hole, and eat it ſelfe away, thorow whatſoever ſhall oppoſe to it. No ſtone ſo heavie as to ſtay them, or turne them backe. And this is S. Iohns ſigne: Foras pellit timorem, Love (if it be perfect) caſts out feare; Et erubeſcit nomen difficultatis, ſhames to confeſſe any thing too hard for it. Ours is not ſo: we muſt have (not great ſtones (GOD wot) but) every ſcruple removed out of our way, or we will not ſtirre. But as; if you ſee one Qui laborem fingit in præcepto, that makes a great deale more labour in a precept, than needs; that is afraid where no feare is; Of Leo in via, a Lion, or (I wot not what) perillous beaſt in the way, and no ſuch matter: It is a certaine ſigne, his love is ſmall; his affection cold to the buſineſſe in hand. So, on the other ſide, when we ſee (as in theſe here) ſuch zeal to that, they went about, as (firſt) they forgot there was any ſtone at all; and, when they bethought them of it, they brake not off, but went on though: ye may be bold to ſay of them, dilexerunt multùm, their love was great, that per ſaxa, thorow ſtones and all, yet goeth forward: that neither coſt, nor paines, nor perill can divert. Tell them, the Party is dead, they goe to: It skils not, their love is not dead; that will goe on. Tell them, He is embalmed already, they may ſave their coſt: It is not enough, for them, except they doe it too; they will doe it nevertheleſſe, for all that. Tell them, they may take time then, and doe it: Nay, unleſſe it be done, the firſt day, houre, and minute, it contents them not. Tell them, there is a ſtone, more than they remember, and more than they can remove: No matter, they will trie their ſtrength, and lift at it, though they take the foile. Of theſe thus qualified, we may truly ſay: they that are at all this coſt, labour, paines, to annoint Him dead, ſhew plainly, if it lay in them, to raiſe Him againe, they would not faile, but do it: Conſequently, would be glad to heare, He were riſen: And ſo, are fit hearers of this Goſpell; Hearers well diſpoſed, and every way meet to receive this Meſſenger, and this Meſſage. Now to the ſucceſſe.

4 Love that wreſtles with impediments: Zelus.

1 Iohn 4. 18.

Prov. 26. 13.

3 Their Succeſſe.

We ſee what they ſought; we long to ſee what they found. Such Love, and ſuch labour would not be loſt. This we may be ſure of, there is none ſhall annoint Him alive, or dead, without ſome recompence or conſideration; which is ſet downe, of two ſorts: 1. They found the ſtone rolled away, as great as it was: That which troubled them moſt, how it might be removed, that found they removed, yer they came. They need never take pains with it; the Angell had done it to their hands. 2. They found not (indeed) whom they ſought, CHRIST: but, His Angell they found, and heard ſuch a Goſpell of Him, ſo good newes, as pleaſed them better, than if they had found His body to embalme it. That newes, which of all other they moſt longed to heare; that, He (they came to annoint) needed no ſuch office to be done to Him, as being alive againe. This was the Succeſſe.

And, from this ſucceſſe of theirs our leſſon is. 1. That, as there is no vertue, no good worke, but hath ſome impediment, as it were ſome great ſtone, to be lifted at, Quis revolvet? So, that it is (oft-times) the lot of them, that ſeeke to doe good, to finde many imaginary ſtones removed to their hands: GOD ſo providing, Vt quod admovit Satanas, amoveat Angelus, what Satan layes in the way, a good Angell takes out of the way: That it may, in the like caſe be a good anſwer to Quis revolvet? to ſay, Angelus DOMINI, the Angell of the LORD, he ſhall do it; done it ſhall be: ſo did theſe here: and, as they did, others ſhall finde it.

2 Again, it is the hope, that all may have, that ſet themſelves to doe CHRIST any ſervice; to find His Angell at leaſt, though not Himſelfe: to heare ſome good newes, of Him, though not ſee Him at the firſt. Certain it is, with Vngentes, ungentur; None ſhall ſeeke ever to annoint Him, but they ſhall be annointed by Him again, one way or other: and find, though not alwayes what they ſeek, yet ſome ſupply, that ſhall be worth the while. And this we may reckon of; it ſhall never faile us.

II. The Party by whom: the Angell.

To follow this further. Leave we theſe good Women, and come firſt to the Angell the Meſſenger, and after to his Meſſage. An Angell was the meſſenger: for, none other meſſenger was meet for this Meſſage. For, if His Birth were tydings of ſo great joy, as none but an Angell was meet to report it; His Reſurrection is as much: As much? nay, much more. As much: for, His Reſurrection is (it ſelfe) a birth too. To it doth the Apoſtle apply the verſe in the Pſalme, This day have I begotten thee (Acts 13.33.) Even this day, when He was borne anew Tanquam ex utero Sepulchri, from the the wombe of the grave. As much, then; yea, much more. For the newes of His Birth might well have beene brought by a mortall; it was but his entrey into a mortall life: But this, here, not properly, but by an Angell: for that, in the Reſurrection, we ſhall be like the Angels, and ſhall die no more: and therefore an immortall Meſſenger was meeteſt for it.

Luke 2.10.

Mat. 22.30

I The Viſion.

We firſt begin with what they ſaw, the Viſion. They Saw an Angell in the Sepulcher. An Angell, in a Sepulcher, is a very ſtrange ſight. A Sepulcher is but an homely place; neither ſavourie, nor ſightly, for an Angell to come in. The place of dead-mens bones, of ſtench, of wormes, and of rottenneſſe: What doth an Angel there? Indeed, no Angell ever came there, till this morning. Not till Chriſt had beene there: but, ſince His body was there, a great change hath enſued. He hath left there Odorem vitæ, and changed the grave into a place of reſt. That, not only this Angell here now: but, after this, * two more, yea, divers Angels, upon divers occaſions, this day did viſit, and frequent this place. Which very finding of the Angels, thus, in the place of dead bodies, may be, and is to us a pledge, that there is a poſſibility and hope, that the dead bodies may come alſo into the place of Angels. Why not the bodies in the grave to be in heaven, one day; as well as the Angels of heaven to be in the grave this day?

* John. 20.12.

The manner of his appearing.

This for the Viſion, The next for the manner of his appearing; in what forme he ſhewed himſelfe. A matter worth our ſtay a little, as a good introduction to us, in him, as in a mirrour, to ſee, what ſhall be the ſtate of us and our bodies in the Reſurrection: In as much as it is expreſly promiſed, we ſhall then be ἰσάγγελοι, like and equall to the Angels themſelves.

Matth. 22 30.

1 As a young man.

1. They ſaw a young man, one in the vigour and ſtrength of his yeares: And ſuch ſhall be our eſtate then: All age, ſickneſſe, infirmitie removed cleane away. Therefore it was alſo, that the Reſurrection fell in the Spring, the freſheſt time of the yeare; and, in the Morning, the freſheſt time of the day, when (ſaith Eſay) the dew is on the herbs. Therefore, that it was in a Garden (ſo it was) in Ioſeph of Aremathea's Garden: that, looke as that garden was, at that time of the yeare, the Spring; ſo ſhall our eſtate then be, in the very flower and prime of it.

Eſay. 26.19.

2 Sitting.

They ſaw him ſitting: Which is (we know) the ſite of reſt, and quietneſſe; of them that are at eaſe. To ſhew us a ſecond qualitie of our eſtate then; that, in it, all labour ſhall ceaſe, all motions reſt, all troubles come utterly to an end for ever; and the ſtate of it a quiet and reſtfull ſtate.

3 On the right ſide.

They ſaw him ſit on the right ſide. And, that ſide is the ſide of pre-eminence and honour. To ſhew, that thoſe alſo ſhall accompany us riſing again. That, we may fall on the left ſide, but, we ſhall riſe on the right; be ſowen in diſhonour, but ſhall riſe againe in

1 Cor. 15.43.

honour

honour; that honour which His Saints and Angels have, and ſhall have for ever.

Laſt, they ſaw him cloathed all in white. And white is the colour of gladneſſe, as we finde (*Eccleſ.*9.8.) All to ſhew ſtill, that it ſhall be a ſtate, as of Strength, Reſt, and Honour; ſo, of Ioy likewiſe. And that, robe-wiſe: not ſhort or ſcant, but (as his ſtoale) all over, down to the ground. 4 Cloathed in white.

Neither ſerves it alone to ſhew us, what then we ſhall be; but withall, what now we ought to be, this day, the day of His Riſing. In that we ſee, that, as the heavens at the time of His Paſſion, were in black, by the great Eclipſe; ſhewing us it was then a time of mourning: ſo, this day, the Angels were all in white, to teach us thereby, with what affection, with how great joy and gladneſſe, we are to celebrate and ſolemnize this Feaſt of our SAVIOUR's riſing. Matth 27.45.

Their affection (here) was otherwiſe: And that is ſomwhat ſtrange. In the Apparition, there was nothing fearfull, as ye ſee; yet is it ſaid, they were afraid. Even now, they feared nothing: and now, they fall to be afraid, at this ſo comfortable a ſight. Had they beene guilty to themſelves of any evill, they came to doe, well might they then have feared. GOD firſt, as the Malefactour doth the Iudge, and then His Angell, as the Executioner of His Wrath. But their comming was for good. But (I finde) it is not the Sinners caſe onely, but even the beſt's of our nature. Looke the Scripture: [a] Abraham, and [b] Iacob, in the Old: [c] Zachary, and the [d] Bleſſed Virgin in the New, all ſtrucken with feare ſtill, at the ſight of good Angels; Yea, even then, when they came for their good. 3 Their affrighting therewith.

a Gen. 15.12.
b 28.17.
c Luke 1.12.
d 29.

It fareth with the Angels of light, as it doth with the light it ſelfe. Sore eyes and weake, cannot indure it: No more can Sinners, them: No more can the ſtrongeſt ſight neither beare the light, if the object be too excellent; if it be not tempered, to a certaine proportion: Otherwiſe, even to the beſt that is, is the light offenſive. And that is their caſe; Afraid they are, not for any evill, they were about, but for that, our very nature is now ſo decayed, Vt lucem, ad quam nata eſt, ſuſtinere nequeat, as the Angels brightneſſe, for whoſe ſociety we were created, yet (as now we are) beare it we cannot, but need to be comforted at the ſight of a comfortable Angell. It is not the Meſſenger Angelicall, but the Meſſage Evangelicall that muſt do it.

III. The Meſſage.

Which leadeth us along, from the Viſion that feared them, to the Meſſage it ſelfe that relieved them: which is the third part. The ſtone lay not more heavie on the grave, than did that feare on their hearts, preſſing them downe hard. And no leſſe needfull was it, the Angell ſhould roll it away (this ſpiritnall great ſtone) from their hearts, than he did that other materiall, from the Sepulcher it ſelfe. With that, he begins.

1 Feare not. Heb. 2.15.

1. Feare not. A meet Text for him, that maketh a Sermon at a Sepulcher. For, the feare of that place maketh us out of quiet all our life long (*Heb.*2.) It lyeth at our heart like a ſtone: and no way there is, to make us willing to go thither, but by putting us out of feare; by putting us in hope, that the great ſtones ſhall be rolled away againe, from our Sepulchers, and we, from thence, riſe to a better life. It is a right beginning, for an Eaſter-dayes Sermon, Nolite timere.

2. And, a good reaſon he yeelds, why not. For, it is not every bodies caſe (this) Nolite timere vos, feare not You: Why not? For You ſeeke JESUS of NAZARETH, which hath beene crucified. Nazareth, might keepe you backe (the meanneſſe of His Birth;) and Crucified, more (the repro ach of His Death:) In as much as theſe cannot let you, but ye ſeeke Him; are aſhamed neither of His poore birth, nor of His ſhamefull death, but ſeeke Him: And ſeeke Him, not (as ſome did) when He was alive, when good was to be done by Him, but even now, dead, when nothing is to be gotten: And, not to rob or rifle Him, but, to embalme Him, an office of love and kindneſſe (this touched before:) feare not You, nor let any feare that ſo ſeeke Him.

Now, that they may not feare, he imparts them his Meſſage full of comfort. And, it containeth foure comforts of Hope, anſwerable to the foure former proofes of their Love: [1] He is riſen; [2] But, gone before you; [3] Ye ſhall ſee Him; [4] All His Diſciples, Peter and all: Goe tell them ſo.

1 He is riſen.

In that you thus teſtifie your love in ſeeking Him, I dare ſay, ye had rather, He, ye thus come to embalme, that He were alive againe: and, no more joyfull tidings could come to you, than that He were ſo: Ye could (I dare ſay) with all your hearts be content, to loſe all your charge you have beene at, in buying your odours, on condition it were ſo. Therefore I certifie you, that He is alive, He is riſen. No more than Gaza gates could hold Samſon; or the Whale, Ionas; no more could this ſtone keepe Him in the Sepulcher, but Riſen He is.

Iudg. 16. 3. Ionas 2. 10.

Firſt, of this ye were ſure, here He was; ye were at His laying in; ye ſaw the ſtone ſealed, and the Watch ſet: ſo that here He was. But, here He is not, now: Come ſee the place, truſt your owne eyes, Non eſt hîc.

But what of that, this is but a lame conſequence, for all that: He is not here, therefore He is riſen. For, may it not be, He hath beene taken away? Not, with any likelihood; though ſuch a thing will be given out, that the Diſciples ſtole Him away while the watch was aſleepe: But your reaſon will give you; 1. Small probability there is, they could be aſleepe, all the ground ſhaking and tottering under them by meanes of the * Earth-quake. 2. And ſecondly, if they did ſleepe for all that, yet then could they not tell (ſleeping) how, or by whom, He was taken away. 3. And thirdly, that His Diſciples ſhould doe it; they (you know) of all other were utterly unlike to doe any ſuch thing: So fearefull, as miſerably they forſooke Him yet alive, and have ever ſince ſhut themſelves up ſince He was dead. 4. And fourthly, if they durſt have done ſuch a thing, they would have taken Him away, linnen-cloathes, and all (as, fearefull men will make all the haſte they can poſſibly) and not ſtood ſtripping Him and wrapping up the cloathes, and laying them every parcell, one by one in order, as men uſe to doe that have time enough, and take deliberation, as being in no haſte, or feare at all. To you therefore (as we ſay, ad hominem) this conſequence is good, Not taken away, and not here, therefore riſen He is.

Mat. 28. 13.

* Matth. 28. 2.

He is gone before.

But, to put all out of doubt: you ſhall truſt your owne eyes; Videbitis, you ſhall ſee, it is ſo; you ſhall ſee Him. Indeed, Non hîc would not ſerve their turnes: He knew their queſtion would be, Where is He? Gone He is; Not, quite gone, but onely gone before, which is the ſecond comfort: For, if He be but gone before, we have hope, to follow after: I præ, ſequar; ſo is the nature of Relatives. But, that we may follow then; Whither is He gone? Whither, He told ye Himſelfe, a little before His Paſſion (Chap. 14. 28.) into Galilee.

1. No meeter place, for JESUS of Nazareth to goe, than to Galilee: there He is beſt knowne: there, in [a] Nazareth He was brought up; there, [b] in Cana He did His firſt miracle, ſheweth His firſt glory; meet therefore to ſee His laſt: there in Capernaum, and the coaſts about, preached moſt, beſtowed moſt of His labour.

a Mat. 2. 23. b Iohn 2. 11.

2. Galilee; it was called Galilee of the Gentiles; for, it was in the confines of them: To ſhew, His Reſurrection (tanquam in Meditullio, as in a middle indifferent place) reacheth to both; concerneth and benefiteth both alike. As Ionas, after his reſurrection, went to Ninive; ſo, CHRIST, after His, to Galilee of the Gentiles.

Matth. 4. 15.

Ionas 3. 4.

3. Galilee; that, from Galilee (the place, from whence, they ſaid, No good thing could ever come) He might bring one of the beſt things, and of moſt comfort, that ever was; the ſight and comfort of His Reſurrection.

4. Galilee laſt, for Galilee ſignifieth a Revolution or turning about to the firſt point; Whither they muſt goe, that ſhall ſee Him, or have any part or fellowſhip in this feaſt of His Reſurrection. Thither is He gone before: and, thither if ye follow, there ye ſhall ſee Him.

This

This is the third comfort: and, it is one, indeed. For, Sight is the ſenſe of certainty; and all that they can deſire: And there they did ſee Him. Not theſe here onely, or the Twelve onely, or the hundred and twenty names (in Acts 1.) onely; but even five hundred of them at once (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15.) a whole Cloud of witneſſes, to put it cleane out of queſtion. And, of purpoſe doth the Angell point to that apparition, which was the moſt famous and publike of all the ten.

3 Ye ſhall ſee Him.

Acts 1. 15.
1 Cor. 15 6.

This was good newes for thoſe here; and they were worthy of it, ſeeking Him, as they did. But, what ſhall become of the reſt; namely, of His Diſciples that loſt Him alive, and ſeeke Him not dead? They ſhall never ſee Him more. Yes: (which is Evangelium, good tidings indeed, the chiefe comfort of all) they too, that left Him ſo ſhamefully, but three dayes agoe; them He caſts not off, but will be glad to ſee them in Galilee. Well whatſoever become of other, Peter (that ſo foully forſooke and forſware Him both) he ſhall never ſee Him more. Yes: Peter too, and Peter, by name. And indeed, it is more than needfull, He ſhould name him: He had greateſt cauſe of doubt; the greateſt ſtone upon him, to be rolled away, of any; that had ſo often, with oathes, and execrations, ſo utterly renounced Him. This, is a good meſſage, for him: and Mary Magdalen as fit a meſſenger, as can be, to carry it; one great Sinner to another. That not onely CHRIST is riſen: but content, that His forſakers, deniers, forſwearers, Peter and all ſhould repaire to Him, the day of His Reſurrection: That, all the deadly wounds of His Paſſion have not killed His compaſſion over ſinners: That, though they have made wrack of their duty, yet He hath not loſt His mercy, nor left it in the Grave; but is as ready to receive them as ever. His Reſurrection hath made no change in Him; dying, and riſing, He is to ſinners, ſtill one and the ſame; ſtill like Himſelfe, a kinde, loving, and mercifull SAVIOUR. This is the laſt: Peter and all may ſee Him.

4 And His Diſciples, Peter and all.

Marke 14. 71.

And with this He diſmiſſeth them, with Ite & dicite, with a Commiſſion and precept; by vertue whereof, He maketh theſe Women Apoſtolos Apoſtolorum, Apoſtles to the Apoſtles themſelves; (for, this Article of the Reſurrection, did they firſt learne of theſe Women; and they were the firſt of all, that preached this Goſpell:) giving them in charge, that, ſeeing this day is a day of glad tidings, they would not conceale it, but impart it to others; even to ſo many as then were or would ever after be CHRISTS Diſciples.

They came to embalme CHRISTS body naturall: that needs it not; it is paſt embalming, now. But another body He hath; a myſticall body, a company of thoſe, that had believed in Him, though weakly: that they would goe and annoint them, for they need it. They ſit drying away, what with feare, what with remorſe of their unkinde dealing with Him: they need to have ſome oyle, ſome balme, to ſupple them. That, they doe, with this Goſpell: with theſe foure: Of which foure ingredients is made the balme of this day.

Thus we ſee, theſe that were at coſt to annoint CHRIST, were fully recompenced, for the coſts they have been at; themſelves annointed with oyle and odours of a higher nature, and farre more pretious, than thoſe they brought with them, Oleum latitiæ (ſaith the [a] Pſalme) Odor vitæ (ſaith the [b] Apoſtle.) And that, ſo plenteouſly, as there is enough for themſelves; enough too, for others, for His Diſciples, for Peter and all.

b 2 Cor. 2. 16.

The Application.

But what is this to us? Sure, as we learned by way of duty, how to ſeeke CHRIST, after their example; ſo, ſeeking Him in that manner, by way of reward, we hope to have our part, in this good newes, no leſſe than they.

1 CHRIST is riſen; that concerneth us alike. 'The Head is got above the water; c Epheſ. 4. 15.

a Rom. 11. 16. b 1 Cor. 15. 23

a The Roos hath received life and ſap: b The firſt fruits are lift up and conſecrate: We, no leſſe than they, as His members, His branches, His field, recover to this hope.

2. And for His going before; that which the Angell ſaid here once, is ever true, He is not gone quite away, He is but gone before us: He is but the antecedent; we, as the conſequent, to be inferred after. Yea, though He be gone to Galilaa ſuperior, the Galilee that is above (Heaven) the place of the Celeſtiall Spheres and Revolutions; even thither is He gone, not as a party abſolute, of or for Himſelfe; but as a Herbenger (ſaith the Apoſtle) with relation to others, that are comming after, for whom He goeth before to take up a place. So, the Apoſtle there; So, the Angell here: So He Himſelfe, Vado; not Vado alone, but Vado parare locum vobis, I goe to prepare a place, wherein to receive you, when the number of you and your brethren ſhall be full.

Heb. 6. 20. Iohn 14. 2.

3. To us likewiſe pertaineth the third videbitis: that, is the Goſpell indeed. He is riſen: Riſing, of it ſelfe, is no Goſpell. But, He is riſen and we ſhall ſee Him: that, is it. That the time will come alſo, that we ſhall ſee Him, in the Galilee Celeſtiall, that is above; yea, that all ſhall ſee Him, even they that pierced Him. But, they that came to embalme Him, with joy and lifting up their heads, they ſhall ſee Him: with that ſight ſhall they ſee Him, that ſhall evermore make them bleſſed.

Iohn 19. 37.

4 Laſtly (which is worth all the reſt:) That we ſhall not need to be diſmayed with our unworthineſſe; in that, willing He is, Peter ſhould have word of this, and Mary Magdalen ſhould carry it. That (ſuch as they were) ſinners, and chief ſinners ſhould haue theſe tidings told them, this Goſpell preached them: that He is as ready to receive them to grace, as any of the reſt; and will be as glad to ſee them, as any others in Galilee.

But then are we to remember the condition; that (here) we get us into Galilee, or elſe, it will not be. And Galilee is a revolution, or turning ad principia, to the firſt point, as doth the Zodiake, at this time of the yeare. The time of His Reſurrection is Paſcha, a paſſing over: The place Galilee, a turning about: It remaineth then, that we paſſe over, as the time; and turne, as the place putteth us in minde. Re-uniting our ſelves to His body and bloud, in this time of His riſing; of the diſſolving and renting whereof our ſins were the cauſe: The time of His ſuffering, keeping the Feaſt, of CHRIST our new Paſſeover offered for us; Leaving whatſoever formerly hath beene amiſſe, in CHRIST's grave, as the weeds of our dead eſtate, and riſing to newneſſe of life, that ſo we may have our parts in the firſt reſurrection: Which they are happy and bleſſed that ſhall have; for, by it they are ſure of the ſecond.

Apoc. 20. 6.

Of which bleſſing and happineſſe, He vouchſafe to make us all partakers, that this day roſe for us, JESUS CHRIST the Righteous, &c.

A SER

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XVI. of Aprill, A.D. MDCIX.
being EASTER-DAY.

IOHN Chap. XX. Vers. XIX.

Cum ergo sero esset die illo, una Sabbatorum, & fores essent clausæ, ubi erant Discipuli congregati propter metum Iudæorum: venit Jesus, & stetit in medio, & dixit eis, PAX VOBIS.

The same day then, at night, which was the first day of the weeke, and when the doores were shut, where the Disciples were assembled for feare of the Iewes, came IESUS, and stood in the middest, and said to them, Peace be unto you.

THis is the enter-view of CHRIST and His Disciples: and this, His first speech, at His first enter-view: Both, this day; the very first day of His rising.

Five sundry times, appeared He, this day. [1] To Mary Magdalen: [2] To the Women comming from the Sepulcher: [3] To the two that went to Emmaus: [4] To Saint Peter: [5] And here now, to the Eleven, and those that were with them. The two first, to Women; the three last to men: So, both Sexes: To Peter, and to Mary Magdalen: So, to Sinners of both Sexes. To the Eleven, as the Clergie; to those with them, as the Laitie: so, to both Estates. Abroad, at Emmaus: at home, here. Betimes; and now, late. When they were scattered, severally; and now, joyntly, when they were gathered together. That no Sexe, Sort, Estate, Place or Time excepted: but, as Visitavit oriens ab alto; so Visitavit, occidens ab imo: Rising, from above, at His Birth; Rising, from beneath, at His resurrection, He visited all.

4 Luke 24.44.
5 In Text.

Luke 1.78.

But,

But, of all the five, this is the chiefe. Thoſe were, to one; as Peter: Or two; as thoſe of Emmaus: Or three, as the Women: This, to all: The more, the more Witneſſes; the better for faith. Thoſe when they were ſcattered: this (here) when they were all together: The more together, the more meet for this ſalutation here, Peace be to you.

The Diviſion.

Which Salutation is the very ſubſtance of the Text: the reſt but appendent, all.

I. In it, two things give forth themſelves: 1. The Perſons, to whom, Vobis. 2. The Matter of the Wiſh it ſelfe, Peace. The Perſons are thus ſet down: Diſcipuli, congregati, concluſi: [1] His Diſciples they were; [2] gathered; [3] and the doores ſhut on them, for feare of the Iewes.

There will fall out beſides, foure other points. [1] CHRIST His Site; that, He ſtood, when He wiſhed it: [2] His Place; that, in the middeſt, He ſtood: [3] The Time, All this, the ſame day, the firſt day of the weeke, Sunday, Eaſter-day: [4] and, the very time of the day; that, it was late.

II. The ſpeech, of it ſelfe, is a Salutation: any will ſo conceive it, at the firſt hearing. And, if it were but ſo, and no more; that were enough. CHRIST'S Salutations are not (as ours be) formall; but good matter in them.

But, it is more than a Salutation, ſay the Fathers, for this reaſon. At meeting, men uſe to ſalute but once: within a verſe, He repeateth it againe. So, it keeps not the law of a ſalutation: but, it is, (certainely) ſomewhat, beſides. Votum Chriſti, they call it. Votum pacis, Votum Chriſti: CHRIST'S Vow, or wiſh: His Vow; and His firſt Vow.

Now, every Vow implieth an advice, at the leaſt. What CHRIST wiſheth to us, He wiſheth us to. Every wiſh, ſo: But, if it be the wiſh of a Superiour, in His Optative, there is an Imperative; His Wiſh, is a command, if he have wit that heares it. So that theſe words (rightly underſtood) are both an Advice, and an Injunction to it; of the nature of an Edict. Pax vobis, is as much, as Pacem habete in vobis, Be at peace among your ſelves.

Marke 9. 50.

We are then, to joyne with CHRIST; to follow Him, in His Wiſh. To whom He wiſheth it: To all CHRIST'S Diſciples, together, even to His whole Chriſtian Church; and, even them, that (it may be) as little deſerve it, as theſe here did. [1] To make it Caput voti, our firſt Vow: yea, firſt and ſecond; as CHRIST here did. [2] Oportet ſtantem optare, to wiſh it, ſtanding. [3] And, ſtanding where CHRIST ſtood (that is materiall) in the midſt. [4] This day to doe it; and think it pertinent to the time: It is Votum Paſchale. As for Serò, we ſhall never need to take thought for it: It is never too ſoone; late enough alwaies, if it be not too late; that, is all the feare.

I. The perſonall part of Chriſts Salutation. Pax and vobis, reconciled.

THE chiefe point, firſt: Pax vobis. The words are but two; yet, even between them there ſeemeth to be no peace: but one (in a manner) oppoſite to the other. Looking to Vobis (the Perſons) this ſhould not be a ſalutation for them, Pax. Looking to the Salutation (Peace) it ſhould not be, to thoſe Perſons; Vobis, to you. So that, our firſt work will be, to make peace between the two words.

Vobis, to you. Will you know, who they be? To you, Peter, and Iohn, and the reſt. To you, of whom none ſtood by me: To you, of whom ſome ran away, ſome denied, yea, forſware me. To you, of whom, all, every one ſhrunke away and forſooke me. How evill doth this greeting agree with this Vobis? Yet, even to theſe, Venit, & ſtetit, & dixit; He came, ſtood, and ſaid, Peace be to you Matth. 26. 56. 72. Marke 14. 53.

Uſed

Uſed by them, as He had beene, no cauſe, He ſhould come, or ſtand, or ſpeake at all: Or, if ſpeake, not thus. Not come to them, that went from Him: nor ſtand amongſt them, that had not ſtood to Him: nor ſpeake to them, that had renounced Him. It is ſaid, they feared the Iewes: All things conſidered, they had more cauſe to feare Him; and to looke for ſome reall revenge, at His hands: If not that, ſome verball reproofe, a ſalutation, of another ſtile or tenour: And well, if they might ſcape ſo. Confitemini Domino, quia bonus; It is not ſo: No evill deed, for all this: No, not ſo much as an unkinde word. Above that, they could looke for; farre above that, they deſerved, it is, Pax vobis. You and I are at peace; you and I are friends; Peace be unto you. This is His firſt goodneſſe: His making a peace betweene Pax and Vobis.

Marke 14. 50. Iohn 9. 22. Pſal. 106. 1.

This Speech to theſe Perſons, is much mended, by adding the Time in the Text; that, it was illo die, the day of His riſing. Pax vobis, is a good ſpeech, for Good-friday, then, men grow charitable, when ready to die. But, on their Eaſter-day, at their riſing, the day when Exaltavit Eum Deus, the day of their exaltation, they uſe to take other manner ſpirits, and remember former diſgraces, with a farre other congie. Hæc eſt lex hominis; Men do thus: but, not CHRIST. Neither their indignity, Vobis; nor His own dignity changeth Him. Riſing, exalted, the very day of His exaltation, illo die, He ſaith, Peace be unto you.

Illo die, that is, Primo Die. Philip. 2. 9.

Another yet: That it was Primâ Sabbati, the very firſt day of the weeke: tooke no long day for it: Nay, no day at all, but the very firſt day. Ioſeph (exalted) dealt well with his brethren; but, not the firſt day: it was ſome time, firſt. He kept them in feare, a while; but ſhewed himſelfe, at the laſt. CHRIST doth not ſo; hold them in ſuſpenſe: illo die, primo die, the ſame day, the firſt day, He came, and ſhewed Himſelfe, and ſaid, Peace be unto you.

Primâ Sabbati. * Luke 24. 1.

Yea, not ſo much as dixit (here) but (as it fals out) will beare a note. Even, that it is dixit, and not Reſpondit; a Speech, not an Anſwer. That He ſpake it, unſpoken to: He, to them, firſt; yer they, to Him. He might well have ſtayed till then: and reaſon would, they ſhould firſt have ſued for it. Yer they aske it, He giveth it: and prevents them with the bleſſing of peace. They firſt, in falling out; He firſt, at making friends.

Dixit: not, reſpondit. Pſal. 21. 3.

A great comfort for poore ſinners, when the many indignities, we have offered CHRIST, ſhall preſent themſelves before us, to thinke of this Vobis. That, when the Diſciples had done the like, yet He forgat all; and ſpake thus kindly to them, this day: That He will vouchſafe us the like (ſpecially, if we ſeeke it, He will) and ſay to us, Pax vobis.

Will ye remember now, to extend your wiſh of Peace, [1] to them, that (it may be) deſerve it as evill, as theſe, here: Even, his qui longè. [2] To doe it, at our riſing, at our high day, when it is Eaſter with us: [3] Not, to make their hearts to pant, and eyes to faile firſt; but, even primâ Sabbati, to doe it. [4] And not to take ſtate upon us, and be content, to anſwer, Peace; and not ſpeake: be moved for it; but, not move it: yes, even move it, firſt. If we doe, we joyne with CHRIST, in His firſt part, the perſonall part of the wiſh.

The perſons to whom.

Illis, and illo die, and primo die, what they were, we ſee; and in what ſort. Yet, (not to grate on this point altogether) ſome ſmoke yet was there in the flaxt; ſome ſmall remainders, illices miſericordiæ (as Tertullian) to move His mercy: In theſe words, [1] Diſcipuli, [2] congregati, [3] concluſi, [4] propter timorem Iudæorum: That, His Diſciples (yet) they were; and, together they were; and, in feare of the Iewes, they were ſhut up.

Whatſoever, or howſoever they were elſe, yet; they were His Diſciples: Vnprofitable ſervants, yet Servants: Loſt ſonnes, yet Sonnes: forgetfull Diſciples, yet Diſciples. His Diſciples they were: and, howſoever they had made a fault, fault (as it ſeemeth) ſo meant to hold themſelves, ſtill; and hereafter to learne their leſſon better.

[1] His Diſciples. Luke 17. 10. 15. 24.

2 For, in feare of the Iewes.

And, I like well their feare: that, they were afraid of the Iewes. It ſhewes, there were no good termes betwixt them; and that they ſhut their doores upon them, therefore they meant not to goe out to them, or ſeeke Pax vobis of the Iewes. They had no meaning (it ſeemeth) to give over CHRIST. If they had, what need they feare the Iewes? The Iewes would have done them no harme, they might have ſet open their doores well enough.

3 Aſſembled.

And Congregatis (I take it well) is no evill ſigne. It would have beene Ex alia cauſa; for love, rather than feare: And againe, for feare of GOD, rather than of the Iewes. Yet, even thus, I miſlike it not: And, much better this feare, than that at the Paſſion: That, ſcattered them one from another; every man ſhift for one. This makes them draw together, and keepe together, as if they meant to ſtand out afreſh. Which very [Congregatis] makes them fit for this Salutation. It cannot well be ſaid, diſgregatis, to them that are in ſunder. Vnà, is a diſpoſition to unity; and gathering, to the binding up in the band of peace. CHRIST (that ſaid, Quoties volui congregare?) liked it well, to finde them thus together: And, His comming was, as to take away their feare; ſo, to continue their gathering, ſtill.

Matth. 23.37.

And, ſhall we learne this of the Diſciples? [1] If a fault fall out, not to give over ſchoole, but to continue our Diſciple-ſhip, ſtill. [2] And, not to goe over, to ſeeke our Pax vobis, at the hands of His Enemies: To ſhut out both them, and their peace, too. [3] And laſtly, not to forſake the fellowſhip; to keepe together, ſtill. For, being ſo together, we are nearer our Peace. This ſhall make CHRIST come and ſay it to us the ſooner, and the more willingly.

II. The reall part.

The reall part, Voti ſumma, that which He wiſheth, is Peace. Firſt, Why peace? Then, What peace?

I Why peace.

Why, Peace? Is there nothing more worth the wiſhing? Nothing more, of it ſelfe; Nothing more fit for theſe perſons, this place, and this time.

Of it ſelfe: Votum pacis, Summa votorum. It is, all wiſhes, in one; Nothing more to be wiſhed. For, in brevi voce Breviarium, this little word is a Breviary of all, that good is.

1 As, good.
Pſal. 133.1.
Prov. 15.16. 17.
Prov. 17.1.

To ſhew how, a little: quàm bonum, how good, how worth the wiſhing it is. It is tam bonum, ſo good, as, without it, nothing is good. With it (ſaith Salomon) an hand-full of herbes; without it, an houſe-full of ſacrifices, is not good. With trouble and vexation, nothing is good; nothing is to be wiſhed.

Rom. 10.15.

And as, without it, nothing is to bee wiſhed: ſo, all that is to bee wiſhed (all good) is within it. Evangelizantium pacem, Evangelizantium bona; quia, in pace, omnia bona: To bring newes of peace, is, to bring newes of all good things; for, all good things are, in peace. Bona, is the true gloſſe or expoſition of peace.

2 Pleaſant.
* Pſal. 133.1.
3 Profitable.
Pſal. 72.7.

* Quàm bonum, you know: And, quàm jucundum, too: But good and pleaſant; and pleaſant, not onely, as Aarons ointment (which was onely pleaſant:) but, as Hermon dew, which brings profit with it. Abundantia pacis (ſaith the Pſalme) Peace, and Plenty go together.

4 Wiſhed by all.
Luke 2.14.
2 Cor. 13.11.
Philip. 4.7.
Luke 4.34.

And yet, how much it is to be wiſhed, this ſheweth, Pacem te poſcimus omnes: All wiſh it: Angels wiſh it (Heaven, to Earth) Pax in terris: And Men wiſh it (Earth, to Heaven) Pax in cœlis. GOD wiſheth it: moſt kindly for Him; Deus pacis, pacem Dei; the GOD of peace, the peace of GOD. Yea, the enemy of all peace wiſheth it: for, he complaines, Veniſti nos inquietare, are ye come to trouble us? So he would not be troubled, that troubles all; but, ſet all together by the eares, and ſit quiet himſelfe.

But it is much for the honour of Peace, that cùm bellum geritur, pax quæritur: Even militarie perſons, with ſword in one hand, and fire in the other, give this for their Embleme, Embleme, Sic quærimus pacem. Thus with ſword and fire, ſeeke we peace. As, ſeeke it, at laſt, they muſt; we muſt, all. Beſt, primâ Sabbati: but, Serò, ſooner or later, come to it we muſt: If it be not the firſt, it muſt be our laſt.

But, if their were nothing elſe, this only were enough; and, though there bee many, this chiefly doth ſhew it: That our SAVIOUR CHRIST, ſo often, ſo diverſe wayes, ſo earneſtly wiſheth it. Going, He did it, Pacem meam do vobis: And now comming, He doth it. Sitting, He did it (Chap. 16.) and now, ſtanding. Living, when He was borne, Pax in terris, Xenium Chriſti, It was CHRIST'S New-yeares-gift: Dying, when He was to ſuffer, Pacem meam relinquo vobis, it was Legatum Chriſti, CHRIST'S Legacie. And now (here) riſing againe, it is His wiſh, ſtill. To ſhew, not only the good of this life, but of the next, to be in peace. Prayed for it (Chap. 17.) Payed for it (Chap. 18.) Wept for it, O if thou hadſt knowne the things that pertaine to thy peace! Wept for it; and bled for it: therefore, immediately (the very next words) Hee ſhewed them His hands and his ſide: As much to ſay; See, what I have ſuffered, to procure your peace: Your peace coſt me this: Pax vobis, coſt Crux mihi; See, you hold it deare. Now (ſure) if there were any one thing better than other, thoſe hands would not have with-held it, and that heart would wiſh it. And, Peace it doth wiſh: therefore, nothing more to be wiſhed. Complete it is, Votum pacis, Summa votorum.

2 And by CHRIST, often.
Ioh. 14.27.
Ioh. 16.33.
Luk. 2.14.
Chap. 14.28.
Chap. 17.21.
Luk. 19.42.

There need no other ſigne be given, but that, of the Prophet Ionas; that CHRIST wiſhed his wiſh: So the tempeſt may ceaſe, and peace (as a calme) enſue, ſpare mee not, take mee, caſt mee into the Sea; make me a Peace-offering and kill me. This, is enough to ſhew, it is to be wiſhed; to make it precious in our eyes. For, we undervalue it, at too low a rate, when (that, which coſt ſo deare) for every trifling ceremonie, we are ready to looſe it. Our faint perſwaſion in this point, is the cauſe, we are faint in all the reſt.

Ioh. 1.12.

Well, though this be thus good; yet good it ſelfe is not good, unleſſe it be in ſeaſon, come fitly. Doth this ſo? Every way fitly. 1 For the Perſons: 2 For the Place: 3 And for the Time.

The Perſons: both 1 CHRIST by whom; and 2 they, to whom it is wiſhed. 1. CHRIST, by whom: Decet Largitorem pacis hæc ſalutatio (ſaith Cyril) It is meet, for Him, to give peace, that made peace: Nay, Ipſe eſt Pax noſtra (ſaith the Apoſtle;) and, for Peace, what fitter ſalutation, than peace?

I
And now fitly for the Perſons.
1 By whom; CHRIST.
Eph. 2.14.
2 To whom. The Diſciples.

2. They, to whom: for, they needed it: with GOD, they had no peace, whom they had provoked: Nor peace with men; not with the Iewes about them: Nor peace with themſelves, for they were in feare, and night-feare, which is the worſt of all others. Fit for them; and they, for it: for, together they were, and ſo, not unfit to entertaine it.

And, with the place, it ſuiteth well. For, they were ſhut up, as men environed and beleaguered with their enemies: Concluſi & derelicti, ſhut up and forſaken: And to ſuch, peace is ever welcome.

For the Place.

And for the time, ſeaſonable. For after a falling out, peace is ſo: And, after a victory, peace is ſo. Fit therefore, for this day, the day of the Reſurrection: for, till then, it was not in kinde. The great battell was not fought: The laſt enemie (death) was not overcome. Never, till now: but, now the laſt enemy is conquered, now it is in ſeaſon.

3
For the Time.
1 Cor. 15.26.

And, for the thing it ſelfe, peace, is a kind of Reſurrection. When CHRIST was riſen, His Diſciples were dead. Thoſe dead affections of ſorrow and feare, when they ſeaze thorowly upon men, what are they, but Mors ante mortem? Vpon good newes of Ioſeph, Iacob is ſaid to revive: as if, before, hee had beene given for dead. It was their caſe, here. The houſe was to them, as their grave; and the doore as the grave-ſtone; and they buried in feare: when they ſaw Him, in the next verſe, and were thus ſaluted by Him, they gat hope, were glad (that is) revived againe. For, if

4
For the thing it ſelfe: Peace, a kind of Reſurrection.
Gen. 45.27.

thoſe were the pangs of death, peace (after a ſort) is a reſurrection: and ſo, a fit wiſh for the time.

Never kindly till then.

And, to ſay truth, peace is never kindly, till then. They define felicity ſhortly; to be nothing elſe but Pax deſiderii. For, give the deſire perfect peace, and no more needs, to make us happy. Deſire hath no reſt; and will let us have none, till it have what it would; and, till the Reſurrection, that will not be.

Chap. 16. 33.

1. Pax & preſſura, our SAVIOUR oppoſeth (Chap. 16.) If we be pinched with any want, Deſire hath no peace. 2. Let us want nothing (if it were poſſible) No peace, yet: Pax & Scandalum (the Pſalmiſt oppoſeth:) When we have what we would ſomewhat commeth to us, we would not; ſomewhat thwarts us: Till non eſt eis ſcandalum, till that be had away, deſire hath no peace. 3. Let that be had away, yet a new warre there commeth. Peace and feare, are (here) oppoſed. We are well: neither preſſura, nor Scandalum: but we feare tolletur à vobis, that it will not hold, or wee ſhall not hold. The laſt enemie will not let us be quiet. Till he be overcome, our deſire hath no perfect peace. That will not be, till the Reſurrection. But, then, it is Pax plena, pura, perpetua, : full without want; pure, without mixture of offenſive matter; and perpetuall, without all feare of forgoing, of tolletur à vobis. And that, is pax deſiderii; and that, is perfect felicity: The ſtate of the Reſurrection; and the wiſh of the Reſurrection day.

Pſal. 119. 165.

2. What peace.

Thus (we ſee) good it is: and, fit it is. It remaines, we ſee, What it is; What, peace. When we ſpeake of peace, the nature of the word leadeth us, to aske, With whom? And they be diverſe. But, as diverſe as they be, it muſt be underſtood of all; though, of ſome one, more eſpecially than the reſt.

1. Peace with GOD.

There is a peace above us in heaven, with GOD: that, firſt. They were wrong, here their feare ranne all upon the Iewes: It ſhould have looked higher. The Iewes they kept out, with ſhutting their doores: Againſt GOD, no doore can be ſhut. Firſt, peace with Him: and, with Him, they have peace, to whom CHRIST ſaith Pax vobis.

2. With our owne hearts.

1 Pet. 2. 11.

There is another peace, within us, in ſinu, with our heart. For betweene our ſpirit and our fleſh, there is in manner of a Warre: The luſts of the fleſh, even Militant, wage Warre (ſaith St. Peter) againſt the ſoule: And, where there is a warre, there is a peace, too. This is peace with feare, here. Which warre is ſometime ſo fearefull, as men, to rid themſelves of it, rid themſelves of life and all; Conclude a peace there. This, followeth of the firſt: If all be well above, all is well within.

3. With all men.

Mat. 5. 9.

Tertul. Apolog.

There is a Peace without us, in earth, with men, with all men: The Apoſtle warrants it; peace with the Iewes here and all. I will never feare, to make civill peace, a part of CHRIST'S wiſh; nor, of his Beati Pacifici, neither. Hee will be no worſe at Eaſter, than at Chriſt-maſſe, He was: at this, His ſecond; than, at that, His firſt birth. Then, Ianus was ſhut, and peace over all the world. Orbem pacatum was ever a clauſe in the prayers of the Primitive Church; that the World might bee quiet.

4. Among themſelves.

Pſal. 133. 2.

Pſal. 122. 3.

Act. 4. 32.

Yet is not this the peace of CHRIST'S principall intendment; but, their peace, to whom CHRIST ſpake: Pax Diſcipulorum; Pax vobis, inter vos: peace among them, or betweeene themſelves. It was the ointment on Aarons head: Aaron, that had the care of the Church. It was the dew that fell upon Sion: Sion, the place, where the Temple ſtood. The peace of Ieruſalem; that it may be once, as a Citie at unitie within it ſelfe. The primitive peace; that the multitude of Beleevers may bee of one heart and one minde. All the reſt depend upon our peace with GOD; and, our peace with Him, upon this: [a] Pacem habete inter vos, and Deus pacis erit vobiſcum. The peace of Ieruſalem; [b] they ſhall proſper that love it (ſaith David) [c] Ioy ſhall be to them that counſell it (ſaith Salomon) [d] Bleſſed ſhall they be that make it (ſaith CHRIST.) How great a reward ſhould he finde in Heaven; how glorious a name ſhould he leave on earth, that could bring this to paſſe!

[a] Mark. 9. 50. Phil. 4. 9.
[b] Pſal. 122. 6.
[c] Prov. 12. 20.
[d] Mark. 5. 9.

This,

This, is CHRISTS wiſh: And what is become of it? If wee looke upon the Chriſtian world, wee ſee it not; it is gone, as if CHRIST had never wiſhed it. Betweene Iehu and Ieroboam, Salomons ſeed went to wracke. Iehu, his proceedings (like his Chariot wheeles) headlong and violent. But Iehu, is but a brunt; too violent, to laſt long. Ieroboam is more dangerous: who makes it his wiſdome, to keepe up a Schiſme, in religion; they ſhall ſway both parts more eaſily. GOD forbid, we ſhould ever thinke Ieroboam wiſer than Salomon. If peace were not a wiſe thing, the Wiſeſt mans name ſhould not have beene Salomon. A greater than Salomon would never have ſaid, Habete ſalem & pacem; If you have any ſalt, you will have peace. Sure, when the Diſciples loſt their peace, they loſt their wiſdome: their wiſdome, and their ſtrength both. They were ſtronger by congregatis, than by clauſis foribus; more ſafe, by their being together, than any doore could make them.

1 Peace, Chriſts wiſh.

Mat. 12. 42. Mat. 9 50.

It is, as CHRIST told us (Luke 10. where, He preſcribes this form of ſalutation) it ſpeeds, or it miſſes, thereafter, as it meetes with the Son of peace: Speeds, if it finde Him; if not, comes back againe, and takes no place.

Luk. 10. 5, 6.

Well, though it doe not, we muſt ſtill hold us to CHRISTS Wiſh: and, when all fails, ſtill there muſt be Votum pacis in corde; though enmitie in the act, yet peace in the heart ſtill. Still it muſt hold, Amicus, ut non alter; Inimicus, ut non idem: friends; as if never other wiſe; enemies, as if not ever ſo. Quaſi torrens, bellum: war, like a land-flood, that will be drie againe: Quaſi fluvius, pax; peace, as a river, never drie, but to run ſtill and ever.

But yet, many times we aske, and have not, becauſe we aske not aright (ſaith Saint Iames:) We know not the things, that belong to our peace; we erre in the order, manner, ſite, place, or time.

Iam. 4. 3.

The Order: which helpeth much: firſt it is; firſt Primum & ante omnia; Caput fidei; the prime of His wiſhes. No ſooner borne, but Pax in terris: No ſooner riſen, but Pax vobis: Apertio labiorum, the very opening of his lips was, with theſe words: The firſt words: at the firſt meeting: On the very firſt day. It is a ſigne, it is ſo in His heart. That which moſt grieveth us, we firſt complaine of: and, that which moſt affecteth us, ever ſooneſt ſpeake of. This, is the firſt errour. That which was firſt with CHRIST, is laſt with Chriſtians: and, I would it were ſo (laſt:) for, then, it were ſome: Now, ſcarce any at all, as it ſeemeth.

1 The order of it: firſt wiſhed.

In the Manner: for, firſt is but firſt, that is but once. This, is firſt and ſecond. Here, He ſaith it: and, within a verſe, He is at it againe. Nay, firſt, ſecond, and third: [1] in this, [2] the XXI, and [3] XXVI. verſes: As if (like Actio, in Rhetorike) all in all.

2 The Manner: thriſe wiſhed.

All CHRISTS vowes are to be eſteemed; eſpecially, His ſolemn vowes: And His ſpeeches; chiefly, thoſe He goeth over and over again. That which, by Him, is double and treble ſaid, would not by us, be ſingly regarded. He would have it better marked: therefore he ſpeaketh it the ſecond time. He would have it yet ſinke deeper; therefore, the third alſo. We faulty, in the manner. Once, we do it (it may be:) but upon any repulſe, we give over: if it come not at firſt, we go not to it Secundò & tertiò, repetitis vicibus. We muſt not leave at once, that CHRIST did ſo oft.

The ſecond errour is; we aske it ſitting (I feare;) and CHRIST ſtood: His ſtanding imports ſomething. Standing is the ſite of them, that are readie to goe about a matter, as they, to take their journey, in the XII. of Exodus, That Site, is the Site of them, that wiſh for peace: Oportet ſtantem optare. A Sedentarie deſire (it may bee) wee have; but, loth to leave our cuſhion: We would, it were well; but not willing, to diſeaſe our ſelves. Vtinam hoc eſſet laborare, ſaid he, that lay along and ſtretched himſelfe. So ſay we: peace we would; but ſtanding is painfull. Our wiſh hath lips, but no leggs.

2 His Site in wiſhing it. Situs.

Exod. 12. 11.

But, it could not be ſaid: Beautifull are the feet of them that bring peace, if the feet had nothing to doe, in this buſineſſe. With ſitting and wiſhing, it will not be had.

Eſay 52. 7. Rom. 10. 15.

* Pſal. 34. 14. * Peace will hide it ſelfe; it muſt be ſought out: It will fly away, it muſt be purſued. This then, is a point, wherein, we are to conforme our ſelves to CHRIST: as well to uſe our legs, as to open our lips for it. To ſtand, is Situs voventis: to hold up the hands, Habitus orantis. The meaning of which ceremony, of lifting up the hands with prayer, is, Vt, pro quo quis orat, pro eo laboret, what we pray for, we ſhould labour for: what we wiſh for, ſtand for. We ſee, CHRIST ſheweth His hands and His feet; to ſhew, what muſt be done with both, for it. If we ſhould be put to do the like, I doubt, our wiſh hath never a good leg to ſtand on.

; His Place: In medio. Luk. 1. 79.

To ſtand then: But, to ſtand, in a certaine place. Every where to ſtand; will not ſerve the turne. Stetit in medio, that ſtanding place is aſſigned for it, thus guiding our feet into the way of peace. And, the Place, is materiall, for peace. All bodies naturall never leave moving, are never quiet, till they recover their proper places; and, there they find peace. The midſt is CHRISTS place, by nature: He is the ſecond Perſon in divinis; and ſo the middle-moſt of the other two. And on earth, follow Him (if you will) you ſhall not (lightly) finde Him out of it. Not, according to the letter, ſpeaking of the materiall place. At His birth, In medio animalium in the Stable. After (a Childe) In medio Doctorum, in the Temple. After (a man) Medius veſtrûm ſtetit (ſaith Iohn Baptiſt) in the midſt of the people; ſaith He of Himſelfe, Ecce ego in medio veſtri, in the midſt of his Apoſtles. At His death, it fell to His turne likewiſe, that place; even then He was in the midſt. And now (riſing) there Hee is (wee ſee.) They, in the midſt of the Iewes: and He, in the midſt of them. After this in Patmos, S. Iohn ſaw Him in Heaven, in the middeſt of the Throne: in earth; walking in the midſt of the Candleſticks. And at the laſt day, He ſhall be in the midſt, too, of the ſheep on His right hand, and the Goates on His left. All which ſhew, the place and He, ſort very well.

By nature. Luk. 2. 7. 46. Ioh. 1. 26. Luk. 22. 27. 23. 33. Apoc. 7. 17. 1. 13. Mat. 25. 33

But, were it not naturall for Him, as the caſe ſtandeth, there, He is to ſtand, being to give peace. No place ſo fit, for that purpoſe: None, ſo kindly, as it. His Office being, to be a Mediatour, Medius betweene GOD and man, where ſhould a Mediatour ſtand, but in Medio?

By office: as a Mediator. 1 Tim. 2. 5.

Beſides, the two qualities of good being to be Diffuſivum and Vnitivum; that, is the fitteſt place, for both. To diſtribute, beſt done, from the center. To unite, likewiſe ſooneſt meet, there. The place it ſelfe hath a vertue ſpecially to unite: which is never done but by ſome middle thing. If we will conclude, we muſt have a medius terminus: Elſe, wee ſhall never get Majus and Minus extremum to come together. Nor, in things naturall; either combine two elements diſagreeing in both qualities, without a middle ſymbolizing with both: Nor fleſh and bone, without a cartilage betweene both. As for things morall; there, the middle is all in all. No vertue without it. In Iuſtice; encline the ballance; one way or other, the even poize is loſt: Et, opus Iuſtitiæ, pax: Peace is the very worke of Iuſtice. And the way, to peace, is the mid way: neither to the right hand, too much; nor, to the left hand, too little. In a word; all analogie, ſymmetrie, harmonie, in the world, goeth by it.

The reaſon of it.

It commeth all to this: the manner of the Place doth teach us, what manner of Affection is to bee in them, that wiſh for, or ſtand for peace. The place is indifferent, equally diſtant, alike neere, to all. There, pitch the Arke; that, is the place for it. Indifferency in carriage, preſerveth peace: By foregoing that, and leaning to extremities, it is loſt. Thither we muſt get againe, and there ſtand, if ever we ſhal recover it. Deſceſſit à medio loſt it: Stetit in medio muſt reſtore it.

Therefore when you heare men talke of peace, marke whether they ſtand where they ſhould. If with the Phariſee, to the corners, either by partialitie one way, or prejudice, another; no good will bee done. When GOD will have it brought to paſſe, ſuch mindes He will give unto men; and make them meet, to wiſh it, ſeek it, and find it.

A little

A little (now) of the time. This was CHRIST's wiſh, at this time: And CHRIST never ſpeaks out of ſeaſon. Therefore, a ſpeciall intereſt hath this Feaſt, in it. It is Votum Paſchale, and this is Feſtum Pacis. 4 The time: In illo die.

And ſure, Habemus talem conſuetudinem, & Eccleſiæ Dei: Such a cuſtome we have, and ſo, the Church of GOD hath uſed it; to take theſe words of CHRIST, in the nature of an Edict for pacification, ever at this time. That, whatſoever become of it, all the yeare beſide, this time ſhould be kept a time of peace; we ſhould ſeek it, and offer it: ſeek it, of GOD; and offer it, each to other. 1 Cor. 11. 16.

There hath not, theſe ſixteen hundred yeares, this day paſſed, without a Peace-offering. And, the Law of a Peace-offering is; he, that offers it, muſt take his part of it; eat of it, or it doth him no good. This day therefore, the Church never failes, but ſets forth her Peace-offering: the Body, whoſe hands were here ſhewed: and, the Side, whence iſſued Sanguis crucis, the blood that pacifieth all things in earth and heaven: that we, in and by it, may this day, renew the Covenant of our peace. Then can it not be, but a great griefe, to a Chriſtian heart, to ſee many, this day, give CHRISTS peace the hearing, and, there is all; heare it, and then turne their backs on it; every man go his way, and forſake his peace: in ſtead of ſeeking it, ſhun it; and, of purſuing, turne away from it. Col. 1. 20.

We have not ſo learned CHRIST: S. Paul hath not ſo taught us. His Rule it is: Is CHRIST our Paſſeover offered for us (as, now, He was?) Epulemur itaque (That, is his Concluſion) Let us then keep a Feaſt, a Feaſt of ſweet bread, without any ſowre leven, that is, of Peace, without any malice. Epheſ. 4. 20. 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8.

So to do: and, even then (this day) when we have the peace-offering in our hands, then, then to remember, alwayes (but then, ſpecially) to joyne with CHRIST, in His wiſh; to put into our hearts, and the hearts of all, that profeſſe His name (theirs ſpecially, that are of all others moſt likely to effect it) that CHRIST may have His wiſh, and there may be peace thorow the Chriſtian world: That we may once all partake together, of one Peace-offering; and with one mouth, and one minde, glorifie GOD, the Father of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the VIII. of Aprill, A.D. MDCX.
being EASTER-DAY.

IOB Chap. XIX.

Quis mihi tribuat, ut ſcribantur, &c.

Verſ. 23. Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were written even in a booke!

24 And graven with an iron pen, in lead, or in ſtone for ever!

25 For I am ſure, that my Redeemer liveth, and he ſhall ſtand the laſt on the earth (or, and I ſhall riſe againe in the laſt day from the earth.)

26 And though, after my skin* wormes deſtroy this body: I ſhall ſee GOD in my fleſh.

27 Whom I my ſelfe ſhall ſee, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and none other for me, though my reines are conſumed within me. (Or, and this hope is laid up in my boſome.)

* or, And I ſhall bee compaſſed again with my skin.

THIS day calleth us, to ſay ſomewhat of CHRISTS Reſurrection. To finde CHRISTS Reſurrection, in the New Teſtament, is no maſtery: out of many places, you have thence heard of it heretofore, many times; and many times may, hereafter, out of many places moe. If it be but for variety, it will doe well, not to dwell ſtill on the New; but, otherwhiles to ſee, if we can find it, in the Old. It will give us good ſatisfaction to ſee JESUS CHRIST to day, and yeſterday, the ſame: yeſterday, to them, to day, to us. To read Reſurget in JOB, He ſhall riſe; as we read Reſurrexit, in JOHN, He is riſen: To ſee their Creed Heb. 13. 2.

and ours differ but in tenſe, ſhall riſe, and is riſen: Shall and is: but, the REDEEMER all one, in both. Much adoe is made by your Antiquaries, if an old ſtone be digged up with any dimme letters on it. In this Text, I finde mention of a ſtone to be graven; ſo that, I ſhall preſent you this day with an Antiquity, an old ſtone digged up in the land of Hus, as old as Iobs time, and that as old as MOSES; with a faire inſcription, the Characters of it yet legible, to prove the faith of this Feaſt, ſo ancient, that it began not with the Chriſtians, the Patriarchs had it as many hundred yeares before CHRIST, as we are after. This Text is a monument of it. And, it will be never the worſe welcome to us that are Gentiles, that it commeth from one that is a Gentile (as JOB was) and not of JACOBS line. It is the ſtronger, for that MOSES and JOB, the Iew and Pſal. 90. 5. Gentile believed it: MOSES put it, in his ordinary prayer (the ninetieth Pſalme) as it were, his Pater noſter; and JOB here, in his Creed.

S. Hierome ſaith of JOB: Nullum tam apertè poſt CHRISTUM, quàm iſte hîc ante CHRISTUM, de Reſurrectione loquitur CHRISTI & ſuâ: No man, ever ſince CHRIST, did ſo clearely ſpeake of CHRISTS Reſurrection, and his own, as JOB did here, before CHRIST: That his Redeemer liveth and ſhall riſe againe. Which is as Iohn 11. 25. much to ſay as, He is the reſurrection and the life: (S. Iohn could ſay no more.) It is his 1 Pet. 1. 3. hope: He is by it regenerate, to a lively hope: (S. Peter could ſay no more.) Enters into
1 Cor. 15. 53. ſuch particulars, this fleſh; and theſe eyes: (S. Paul could do no more.) There is not in all the Old; nay there is not in all the New, a more pregnant direct place.

There is then, in this monument of antiquity, a direct prophecie; or (if you will) a plaine Creed, of the ſubſtance of this Feaſt, of his Redeemers riſing, and of his hope to riſe by Him; the one poſitivè, the other illativè. There is a patheticall Poëme ſet before it; and there is a cloſe or farewell, by way of Epiphonema, after it, no leſſe patheticall.

The Summe and Diviſion.

I. The two firſt verſes, we may well call the Paraſcue, of preparation to the Feaſt of Paſſeover: which ſerve to ſtirre up our regard, as to a Myſtery or matter of great moment; worthy not onely to be written or inrolled in a booke, but to be cut in ſtone; a monument to be made of it, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, Oh that, &c.

II. Then followeth (in the third) his Redeemer and his riſing; his paſſing over from death to life: I know, &c. and out of it (in the laſt) by way of inference, his owne: Et quòd ego, &c. ſet down with words ſo cleare, and ſo full of caution, as, in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, it is not fuller expreſſed.

III. Upon theſe two, there be two Acts here ſet downe, 1 Scio, and 2 Spero. He begins with Scio, for the truth: and ends with Hæc mihi ſpes, for the comfort, or uſe of this knowledge. Graven, that it may be knowne: knowne, that it may be our hope. His it was, and ours it muſt be: repoſita, with him; reponenda, with us, to be lodged and layed up in our boſomes, againſt we be laid into the boſome of the earth. Indeed, [ſculpſit in lapide] is nothing without [reponi in ſinu;] Graving in ſtone will doe no good, without laying it up in the boſome.

I.
The Paraſceue or preparation. Iobs wiſh.

IOB, fearing (it ſhould ſeeme) if he had but barely propounded the point following, it would have been but ſlenderly regarded; doth enforce himſelf, to ſet it down with ſome ſolemnity, to make the deeper impreſſion, (which I call the Paraſceue:) that we might not reckon of it, as a light holy-day; but, as a high Feaſt. He would have the Scio of it ſtamped in ſtone, as worthy everlaſting remembrance; and the Spero of it carefully laid up, as worthy pretious accompt. It is as much as S. Paul had ſaid: It is a faithfull ſaying, and by all meanes worthy to be received: For the Scio, faithfull; for the ſpero, worthy all receiving: For the truth, to be graven in marble; for the comfort, to be lodged in the boſome. 1 Tim. 1. 15. 4. 8.

For the firſt, thus he proceedeth. He was dying now; and ſeeing he muſt die, one thing he had, he would not have die with him: It was that, when he had loſt all, he kept in his boſome ſtill; when all comforters, and comforts forſooke him, and (as hee ſaith) his Phyſitians grew of no value, hee found comfort in. This, he thought, it was pitie ſhould periſh: but, though he die, it live. It was certaine words; and, becauſe they had beene cordiall to him (had beene, to him; and might be to others) he deſires they might remaine to memory; and becauſe writing ſerves to that end, they might be written.

Which his wiſh of writing conſiſts of three degrees: is as it were three wiſhes in one.

1 They be words; and becauſe words be but wind (his own Proverbe) that they might not blow away with the wind, he wiſheth they were written: Quis mihi tribuat, Who will help him to a Clerk, to ſet them down in writing? 1 That it were written. Chap. 6. 26.

2 But then he bethinks himſelf better: they were no common ordinary matter, therefore not to be committed to common ordinary writing. So, they might be rent or loſt: they be more worth than ſo. Therefore now ſecondly, he mends his wiſh: he would not have them to be barely written, but regiſtred in a booke, enrolled upon record, as publike inſtruments, mens deeds, judiciall proceeding; or (as the very word gives it) Acts of Parliament, or whatſoever is moſt authenticall. 2 Written in a booke.

And yet, upon farther advice, he cals backe, that too, by a third wiſh. If they were upon record, Records will laſt long, yet, even them, time will injure. No ink, no parchment, but will decay with time. Now, theſe he would have laſt for ever: therefore he gives over his Scribe, and in ſtead of him wiſheth for a Graver: no paper, or parchment will ſerve; it muſt be ſtone; and the hardeſt ſtone, the rocke. For this paper he muſt have a pen of iron: that he wiſheth too. But, here is mention of lead: what is to be done with that? If we believe the Hebrewes (that beſt knew the faſhion of their Countrey-Monuments,) when it is graven, the graving may be choaked with ſoile, and the edges of the letters, being rough, and uneven, may be worne in, or broken, and ſo defaced; to provide for that, the graving he would have filled with lead, that ſo it might keepe ſmooth and even, from defacing; and full, from choaking up. That it be לָעַד (the laſt word) that is, laſt for ever, to the laſt Ages and Generations to come, never to be worne, but to hold for ever. If it were the beſt in the world, more cannot be done, or wiſhed, than this: and this he wiſheth, and not coldly, but earneſtly. Oh that it were, would God it were! Quis mihi tribuat? Who will do ſo much? Who? as if he were earneſt begging of GOD and man to have it done. 3 Written in ſtone, with a pen of iron for ever.

Now in the name of GOD, what may this be, that all this work is kept about? It is the worke of this day. And why would not a booke ſerve for this? Why no remedy but it muſt be in ſtone? There want not reaſons; Let me touch ſome few. Moſes and Iob are holden to have lived at one time. Moſes Law was graven in ſtone, we know. This of Iob (here) is Goſpell, the ſubſtance, the chiefe Article of it. No reaſon Why, in ſtone? &c. 1 Reaſon. Exod. 34. 1. 1 Cor. 15. 14.

reaſon, the law, in tables of ſtone; and the Goſpell, in ſheets of paper. Good reaſon, Iob, as zealous for the Goſpell, as Moſes, for the Law. If that wrought in ſtone, this no leſſe; as firme and durable, as it, every way. And the ſame reaſon is for the iron pen. As the ſtone for the Law, ſo the pen for the Prophets. If, in the Prophet, mens ſinnes be written with a pen of iron; meet, the diſcharge ſhould be written no leſſe deepe, with as hard a pen, as it; that ſo the Characters of one, may match the other at each point.

Ier. 17. 1.

2 Reaſon.

This for Moſes: now for our Redeemer. There it was meet, ut de Petrâ, in petrâ: Petra autem Chriſtus, Our Redeemer is a Rocke: O LORD my Rocke and my Redeemer, (ſaith David) or my Redeemer of the Rocke, alluding to this of Iob: Kindly it is, it ſhould be wrought in the Rocke, that is, of the Redeemer, who is the Rocke. And ſo the reſurrection, being a putting on incorruption, would not be written in corruptible ſtuffe, but in that commeth neareſt to incorruption, and is leaſt of all ſubject to corrupt and decay: The words would be immortall, that treat of immortality.

1 Cor. 10. 4. Pſal. 19. 15. 1 Cor. 15. 54.

3 Reaſon.

A third, in reſpect of thoſe Works, that are uſually wrought of ſtone, as Graveſtones, as Arches Triumphall. The Reſurrection is mors mortis (ſaith Oſee) O death I will be thy death: for the death of him that is the death of us all, here, is a grave-ſtone allowed, and an Epitaph graven on it. Here it is, and ſo doth Nazianzen call this Scripture, Deaths Epitaph. Either (if as Eſay ſaith, Death by CHRISTS riſing be ſwallowed up in victory:) a trophee of this victory would remaine; and that, as all victories, in a Pyramis of ſtone: and that Arch-wiſe on two pillars, [1] One for Chriſts; [2] One for our reſurrection.

Hoſ. 13. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. Eſa. 25. 8. 1 Cor. 15. 54.

4 Reaſon.

One more: That Iob needeth this wiſh, in regard of thoſe, that were to receive this doctrine. It will not well be written, there is ſuch unbeliefe and hardneſſe of heart, yea, even in the Diſciples, and ſo generally in our nature; as, enough to doe, to grave it in us: yet ſo neceſſary with all, as where it will not be written, he wiſhes it graven. Written, where it may; but graven, where it muſt. But written, or graven, one of them in us all.

II.

The Object: Jobs Redeemer, and his reſurrection.

This for Iobs wiſh. Shall we now paſſe to the third verſe, and ſee what theſe words be, that no paper will ſerve, but ſtone; nor pen, but iron; nor inke, but lead? Great expectation is raiſed with this ſo ſtately an entrie. The words be Iobs: His Scio, and his Spero, touching the two articles of this day, [1] His Redeemer, and His riſing; [2] and the traine of it, His owne riſing, and his ſeeing GOD. They begin with Scio the pillar of this faith, and end with Hæc mihi ſpes, the arch of his hope; ever, hope giving the aſſumption to faiths propoſition.

1 Quòd Redemptor.

Let's begin with the object of his knowledge. The firſt is newes of a Redeemer. We owe this word to Iob: he, the firſt, in the Bible, that ever named Him ſo. Of the creation, we read, in Moſes: and GOD provided well for us, that we ſhould no ſooner heare of a Creator by Moſes, but we ſhould, of a Redeemer, by Iob. For, though GOD by right of creation were (as ſaith Melchiſedeck) owner of heaven and earth, yet the creature being ſubject to vanity, ſhewed they were gone, aliened from GOD. But this is good newes, that ſeeing we were GODS, and not our owne, He would not ſee that carried away that was his owne, but would be content one ſhould redeem it back.

Gen. 14. 19. Rom. 8. 20.

But, it is newes to heare, that Iob is at his Redeemer; Iob with all his innocency, with his ſo juſt, and holy life, as GOD Himſelfe bare witneſſe unto it, as Satan himſelfe could not except againſt it; yet he is not at Scio quòd Iudex; but Scio quòd Redemptor: doth deprecari judicem; and, for all his vertues, a Redeemer will doe well though; and he in the number of thoſe that are glad to ſay Scio, to take notice of Him.

Iob 1. 8. 9. 2. 3. 4.

From which his Scio, his notice taking, we take a true eſtimate of Iobs eſtate. For if he look after a Redeemer, than is he, either ſold for a Servant, or carried away for a Captive: one of theſe. For, theſe two onely we read of; redeemed from Egypt the houſe of bondage: or redeemed from Babylon the land of their captivity. Saint Paul confeſconfeſſeth both by himſelfe; Sold under ſinne, and led away captive under the law of ſinne. Iob confeſſeth as much: Peccavi, quid faciam? ſinned he had, and by committing of ſinne was become Servus peccati. Sold by himſelfe, and made ſubject by ſinne; and ſold by GOD, and made ſubject to corruption: from both which hee needed a Redeemer. Whether ſervant, or captive, one or both, it falleth out well, that both ſtates are redeemable; neither paſt redemption. Sinned; that he needs a Redeemer: Not ſo ſinned, but a Redeemer will ſerve. GOD is willing (ſaith Elihu) to receive a reconciliation, to admit of a Redeemer: if we can get us one, to lay downe the price, there is hope, vve may be reſtored, to ſee GOD againe. A Redeemer vvill doe it.

Rom. 7 14 23. Iob. 7 20. 6 20. Chap. 33 24. 20. 34 31.

Why then, Scio quòd, he knovves of one. Good tidings, to all that need to knovv, there is one, preſently in being. For then, Nunc dimittis, may Iob ſay; he may depart in peace, dye when he will, his Redeemer lives, who will never ſee that periſh, He hath payd the price for; but, ſince He came to redeeme that which was loſt, will not ſuffer that to be loſt which He hath redeemed.

2 quòd credo.

This of his Redeemer, Now, what he beleeves of Him. Firſt, live he muſt: be a living, quicke thing; not dead, or without life. Silver, gold will not doe it; our redemption is perſonall: not reall, to give ſomewhat and ſave himſelfe. But ſuch a Redeemer, as muſt anſwer body for body, and life for life; give Himſelfe, for Iob, and thoſe He redeemes: ſo is the nature of the word: ſo the condition of our redeeming. There is His Perſon.

His Natures. God.

Of what nature, out of the word Redeemer. Sure if a Redeemer, GOD. The Pſalme deduceth at large: Man cannot redeeme his brother, nor give an attonement unto GOD for him, It coſt more to redeeme ſoules: ſo that, he muſt let that alone for ever. Then tells he us plainely: it is GOD ſhall redeeme our ſoules from the hand of hell. Iob ſaith the ſame in effect: In His Saints He found folly, and in His Angels pravitatem, ſomewhat awry: They (both) need a Redeemer, themſelves. That, they want themſelves, they cannot performe to others: and, if neither Saint, nor Angell, then no Redeemer, but GOD.

Pſal. 49. 7. 8. Verſ. 15. Chap. 15. 15. 6. 25. 4. 5.

And Man.

On the other ſide, if a Redeemer, man He is to be, of neceſſity. So is the flat law of Redemption of perſons. He muſt be frater, or propinquus, a brother, or next of blood: elſe, not admitted to redeeme a perſon. That He may be admitted then, Hee muſt be fleſh of our fleſh; and then He may. The very word ſheweth it, which doth as properly ſignifie, to bee next of kinne, as to redeeme. Vpon the point then, both Hee muſt bee. Man cannot; GOD may not: But, GOD and man both, may and can.

Levit. 25. 25. Ruth. 3. 12. גאל

Deum in carne.

But what ſtand we ſtrayning the word Redeemer, or the conditions of it, when we have both twaine, his natures in formall termes, immediately in the verſe following, videbo Deum in carne? There is GOD in plaine termes; and his fleſh is humane fleſh; and that is man. I know in carne (there) may be conſtrued two wayes: But (I Know) both wayes well; and both wayes it is taken, by the Fathers: 1 I in my fleſh, ſhall ſee GOD: or: 2 I ſhall ſee Deum in carne, that is Deum incarnatum, GOD having taken fleſh upon Him. This latter way, I finde, Saint Auguſtine taketh it: Videbo Deum in carne; quod, ad id tempus pertinet, cùm CHRISTI Deitas habitu carnis induta eſt. I ſhall ſee GOD in my fleſh: this pertaines to the time, vvhen the God-head of CHRIST vvas clothed with the habit of fleſh. And well both: For, one depends on the other; our ſeeing GOD in the fleſh; upon GOD's being ſeen in our fleſh. But, Deus, in carne, are the two natures.

quod reſurget. His Office.

Now His office is Redeeming: How diſcharges He that? How brings He the worke of our redemption to paſſe? Many were His vvorkes concurring to it. Iob ſingles out, and makes choiſe of one among them all, vvhich is the chiefe of all, the accompliſhment of all, and vvhere he ſhevved Himſelfe a compleat Redeemer. For, then a Redeemer right, vvhen He had brought His vvorke to perfection: and that He did, vvhen He roſe againe.

So I read. riſe againe; and not ſtand. It is vvell knovvne, it is the proper vvord for for riſing, and not ſtanding. The LXX. ſo turne it; not στήσεται, ſhall ſtand; but ἀναστήσεται, ſhall riſe againe. The Fathers ſo reade it: Nec dum natus erat Dominus (ſaith Saint Hierome) & Athleta Eccleſiæ Redemptorem ſuum videt à mortuis reſurgentem, Hee was not yet borne, and the Churches champion, Iob, ſaw his Redeemer riſing from the dead. Victurum me certâ fide credo, Liberâ voce profiteor, quia Redemptor meus reſurget, qui inter impiorum manus occubuit: with aſſured faith I beleeve, and with free courage confeſſe, that riſe I ſhall, in as much as my Redeemer ſhall riſe, who is to dye by the hands of wicked men: (ſaith Gregory, upon theſe very words.)

Riſe againe then ſhall our Redeemer from the dead. There He was then, or Hee could not riſe thence. How came Hee there? So that, here is His death implyed evidently, that brought Him thither. Riſe He cannot, except firſt He fall: Fall therefore He muſt and be laid up in the earth, before He can riſe from thence againe. Specially ſeeing we find Him firſt alive (in the fore-part of the verſe;) and then riſe againe (in the later.) For how can that be, unleſſe death come betweene?

Yea, the Fathers goe further: and from the words [carne meâ] ſet downe the very ſtate of his death. In my fleſh, that is (ſay they) ſuch fleſh as mine, rent and torne. As (to ſay true) betweene CHRISTS fleſh when Pilate ſhewed Him, with Ecce Homo, and Iob's, no great odds: Vnum in toto corpore vulnus: One reſembled ſomewhat the other; ſcarce any skinne left on Him, no more than Iob: poſtquam pellem meam contriverunt, might CHRIST as truly ſay.

Ioh. 19. 5.

In this caſe, he ſaw Him; brought to the duſt: and thence he ſeeth Him riſing againe: and ſo now, it is Eaſter-day with Iob. For, this Text, this day, was fulfilled. Then, He roſe againe: and riſing, ſhewed Himſelfe a perfect Redeemer. Then: for, till then, though the price were paid, nothing was ſeene to come backe. Now, His ſoule was not left in hell; and ſo that came backe: Nor His fleſh, to ſee corruption; and ſo that came backe. And, having thus with a mighty hand redeemed and raiſed Himſelfe, is able to doe as much for us. Quam in Se oſtendit, & in me facturus eſt (ſaith Gregory) Exemplo hîc monſtravit, quod promiſit in præmio: What He ſhewed in Himſelfe, He will performe in us; and what we ſee now in this example, then we ſhall feele in our owne reward.

Pſal. 16, 10. Act. 1. 31. 13. 35.

But, thus have we, in this verſe compriſed, His Perſon, His two natures, God-head and Man-hood; His office, His Death, and his Reſurrection, and His Second comming: (for, at His firſt, Iob ſaw him not, as Simeon; but, at His ſecond, ſhall.) What would we more? with a little helpe, one might make up a full Creed.

Iobs owne reſurrection.

Very well then, on he goeth, and out of this [Scio quòd Redemptor] he inferreth [Scio quòd ego;] arguing, from His Redeemer to himſelfe. eâdem catenâ revincta eſt Chriſti reſurrectio, & noſtra; One chaine they are linked with, His and ours: you cannot ſtir one end, but the other moveth with it. The ſinews of which reaſon are in this; that the Redeemer doth but repreſent the perſon of the redeemed. For, a Redeemer is res propter alium; all he doth, is for another: Lives not, dyes not, riſes not to, or for himſelfe; but to, or for others: him or them, He undertakes for. His life, death, reſurrection, theirs; and the conſequence (ſo) good: Scio quòd ille, & quod ego. So there is no error, in reading as we doe, our Office of the dead, I ſhall riſe againe at the laſt, Though it be the third perſon, in the Text, the firſt is as infallibly deduced by conſequence, as if it were there expreſly ſet downe; as ſure as He ſhall riſe, ſo ſure He ſhall raiſe: for, to that, is He a Redeemer.

The Benefit.

We ſee the coherence; let us ſee the Benefit: which ſtandeth of theſe foure points. Firſt, He ſhall ſee GOD: Secondly, See Him in his fleſh, and with his eyes: Thirdly, in the ſame fleſh, and with the ſame eyes and no other: Fourthly, and he ſhall ſee Him, ſibi, for his owne good and benefit: and all this, non obſtante the caſe, he was in, which gave but ſmall likely-hood of it.

The

The first and maine benefit, his Redeemer will raise him to, is to see GOD. That, he lost, when he became aliened: that, he recovers, being redeemed. Here begins all misery, to be cast out of His presence: here, all happinesse, to be restored to the light of His countenance. Visio Dei, all along the Scripture, is made our chiefe good; and our felicity still set forth, under that terme. In thy presence is the fulnesse of joy (saith the Psalme:) Ostende nobis Patrem & sufficit, and we will never desire more. A conjecture we may have, of the glory of this sight, from Moses: he saw Him; and not His face neither; and that but a glimpse, and but as He passed by; yet, got he so glorious a brightnesse in his countenance, he was faine to be veiled; no eye could indure to behold him. And, a like conjecture of the joy, by the transfiguration: they did but look up at it, they desired never to be any where but there; never to see any sight but that: so were they ravished with the beholding of it.

Videbo Deum. 1 I shall see GOD.

Psal. 16. 11. Iohn 14. 8.

Exod. 33. 22. 23. Mat. 17. 3.

See GOD: and so he may in spirit, as doe the soules of the righteous departed: it skils not for the flesh. Yes; see him, in the flesh. That, as proper to this text, and this day, which offers more grace. This day, CHRIST rose in the flesh, and this Text is, We shall see Him in the flesh. It is meet, the flesh partake the redemption wrought in the flesh; and He be seene of flesh, that was seene in the flesh. He will doe it for the flesh; it is (now) His nature, no lesse than the Godhead: Hee will not forget it, we may be sure. It were hard, the Redeemer should be in the flesh, and the flesh never the better for it.

2 Videbo in Carne. See him in my flesh.

For, the soule is but halfe; though the better halfe, yet but halfe; and the redeeming it, is but a halfe redemption; and if but halfe, then unperfect. And our Redeemer is GOD, and GODS works are all perfect: if He redeeme, He doth it not by halves. His redemption is a compleat redemption, certainly. But, so it is not, except Hee redeeme the whole man, Soule, flesh and all: his soule from hell, his flesh from the grave, both, to see GOD. His redemption is unperfect, till it extend so farre. Therefore, at His comming againe, they are willed to lift up their heads, their redemption is at hand, their full redemption; then full, when both soule and body shall enjoy the presence of GOD.

1 Reason.

Luke 21. 28.

And, what we say of GODS worke, the same we say of the soules desire: It is not full neither, without this. Every man, yea the Saints, Saint Paul, by name, professeth all our desire, Nolimus expoliari, sed supervestiri, We would not be stripped of this flesh, but be cloathed with glory immortall, upon soule and flesh both: which desire, being both naturall, and having with it the concurrence of Gods Spirit, cannot finally be disappointed.

2 Reason. 2 Cor. 5. 4.

I add farther, that it is agreeable, not only to the perfection of His work; but even to His justice, that Iobs flesh should bee admitted, upon the Septuagints reason, in the forepart of the verse, τὸ ἀνάντλητον ταῦτα, that it hath gone through, joyned in the good, indured all the evill, as well as the soule. For God is not unrighteous, to deprive the labourer of his hire; but, with Him, it is a righteous thing, to reward them joyntly, that have joyntly done service; and not sever them in the reward, that in the labour were not severed. But, the flesh hath done her part, either in good or evill; her members hath been members, either wayes. In the good, the flesh hath kneeled, prayed, watched, fasted, wasted and wearied it selfe, to and for God: In evill, it hath done, I need not tell you what: and that, to and for sin. Therefore, even justice would, they should share in the reward of the good; and in the evill, take like part of the punishment. This may serve for the flesh.

3 Reason. Heb. 6. 10. Rom. 6. 13.

And sure, the very same may be said, and is no lesse strong for the third degree: as, for the flesh, and the eyes; so that the same flesh should participate, and the same eyes, and no other for them. No justice, one flesh should labour, and another reape that, it never laboured for. What comfort can it be for the poore body, to abridge it self of much pleasure, and to devoure much tediousnesse, and many afflictions; and another strange body shall step up, come betweene, and carry away the reward. Nay, if these eyes of Iobs, have droppen many a teare, it is reason the teares be wip'd from them, not from another payre of new-made eyes. If they have restrained themselves,

3 Incarne mea, &c. In my owne flesh, and with the same eyes.

Chap. 16. 20.

Chap 31. 2. even, by covenant, from ſtraying after objects of luſt; it is meet, they be rewarded with the view of a better object.

But, to ſay true: ſo ſhould there be no reſurrection indeed; a riſing up, rather, of a new, than a riſing againe of the old. Iob ſhould not riſe againe, this Iob; but, another new Iob, in his place, and ſtead. Therefore is this point ever moſt ſtood on, of the reſt.

1 Cor. 15. 53. Iohn 2. 19. S. Paul: not a corruptible, or a mortall, at large, but Hoc, this corruptible, this mortall. Yea, our SAVIOUR Himſelfe, ſolvite Templum hoc, this very Temple: and to ſhew, it was that very one indeed, it pleaſed Him, to retaine the print, both of the nayles and ſpeare. And Iob moſt plaine of all, uſing not onely the word His, as it were pointing to it with his finger, poſitivè; but by adding, this, and no other, excluſivè too, to expreſſe it the more fully above exception.

But now, theſe all, [1] ſeeing God, and [2] in the fleſh, and [3] in the ſame fleſh, all are as good as nothing, without the fourth. Videbo mihi, a little word, but not to be little regarded. In the tranſlation, it is left out ſometimes, never in the treaty. To ſee Him for our good; elſe, all the reſt is little worth. For, all ſhall ſee Him, and in the fleſh, and in the ſame fleſh; but all, not ſibi; but many, contra ſe: not to their good, all; but many to their utter deſtruction.

4 Videbo mihi. I my ſelfe ſhall &c.

This very word is it, which draweth the Diameter, betweene the reſurrection of life, and the reſurrection of condemnation; the right hand, and the left; the ſheepe, and the goats: They that ſee them ſibi; to them, Eſay: Ariſe and ſing. They that, contra ſe; of them Saint Iohn: Videbunt & plangent: ſee they ſhall and mourne. Thoſe ſhall flie, as Eagles, with all ſpeed to the body: Theſe other draw backe, and ſhrinke into their graves; creepe into the clifts and holes, to avoid the ſight; cry to the hils, to fall upon them, and hide them from that ſight. One ſhall rapi in occurſum, be caught up to meet: the other ſhall converti retrorſum, be tumbled backward into hell, with all the people that forget GOD.

Eſay 26. 19. Apoc. 1. 7. Luke 17. 37. 23. 30. 1 Theſ. 4. 17. Pſal. 9. 17.

So that this word is all in all: which GOD after expounds, Videbit faciem meam in jubilo, with joy and jubilee, ſhall he behold my face; as a Redeemer, not as a revenger: and, as it followeth, with hope (and not with feare) in his boſome.

Chap. 33. 26.

And the very next point was it, that revived him; and in very deed, the tenor of his ſpeech, ſo often iterating the ſame thing, and dwelling ſo upon it, ſheweth as much. Once had beene enough; I ſhall ſee GOD: Hee comes over it againe, and againe; as if hee felt ſome ſpeciall comfort even by ſpeaking it. Three ſeverall times he repeats; the ſeeing; and, three other, his perſon I, and I my ſelfe, and I and none other but I: And as if he were not enough, he reckons up three parts, his skin, fleſh, and eyes; As if being once in, he could not tell how to get out. Blame him not: it ſeemes hee felt ſome eaſe of his paines; at leaſt forgat them, all the while, hee was but talking. It did ſo raviſh him, having begun, hee knew not how to make an end.

III. The two Acts. Scio. His Knowledge.

Thus much for the object. Now to his Scio, his knowledge firſt; and then his Spero, his hope after. For his knowledge: there be foure things, I would note out of foure words. [1] His certainty, out of Scio: [2] His propriety, out of meus: [3] His patient waiting, out of tandem: [4] and his valour or conſtancy, in non obſtante.

I His certainty. Scio.

Scio, his certainty: That he did not imagine or conceive, it might be; but knew it for certaine, even for a principle. Quis ſcit, Who knowes (ſaith one, Eccleſ. 3. 21.) Who knoweth, whether men die as beaſts? Quis ſcit? Scio: Who knowes? I know (ſaith Iob) Putáſne, (ſaith he, Chap. 14.) Thinke you, one that is dead may riſe againe? Thinke? I know it (ſaith Iob.) It was res facta, even this day, to His Diſciples. It was res certa, to him, many hundred yeares before: It is much to the praiſe of his faith: ſo much was not found, no not in Iſrael. And wee ſhall not need to trouble our ſelves to know how he knew it: Not by any Scripture; he had it not from Moſes, but the ſame way that Moſes had it; he looked in the ſame mirrour, Abraham did, when he ſaw the ſame Perſon, and the ſame day, and rejoyced to ſee it.

Mat. 8. 10.

Iohn 8. 56.

Out

Out of Scio his certainty; and, out of Meus his peculiar, as it were. The Redeemer of the world would not ſerve him, nor S. Paul's maximè fidelium, of the faithfull chiefly. This (of the Epheſians) would not content him, That loved us, and gave himſelfe for us: None but (2. Gal.) That loved me, and gave himſelfe for me. My Redeemer: which they call Faith's Poſſeſsive.

2 His property: Meus. 1 Tim. 4.10. Ephes. 5.2. Gal. 2.20.

In Tandem, the third word, his patient enduring. For, patience is not onely ſhewed in ſuffering the Croſſe, but in waiting alſo for the promiſe. It will not bee done by and by, this: but Tandem, at the laſt it will. He ſhall riſe againe at the laſt: he ſhall; and we ſhall. Qui crediderit, ne feſtinet, He that believeth, let him not bee in all haſte. No: Si moram fecerit, expecta eum; If he ſtay, ſtay his leiſure. Tarry his Tandem.

3 His patience. Waiting. Tandem. Heb. 12.6. Tit 2.13. Eſay 28.16. Hab 2.3.

And laſt, all theſe, Non obſtante, or Tametſi; the reſolute courage, or valour of his faith; that this hee ſaith, being in caſe hee was, ſmall likelihood of it in appearance, ſeeing and feeling, that hee ſaw and felt. There ſate hee falling away by peece-meale, vivum cadaver. For him then to talke of Scio, and meus thus, having no better ſignes and arguments than hee had; in the ſenſe of his anger, to believe his favour; brought to the day of death, to promiſe himſelfe ſo glorious an eſtate: This is Abrahams faith, Contra ſpem in ſpe credere; faith without, nay, faith againſt feeling. His ſtate, in ſenſe of miſery, want of comfort; his friends diſmaying him; for all that, hee keepes to his Scio, and to his Meus ſtill. All elſe, even all hee hath (his righteouſneſſe too) they may take from him: Salutem non auferent, his REDEEMER they ſhould never get: non obſtante, he would hold him faſt.

4 His courage: Tametſi. Rom. 4.18.

This for his Scio, and now to his Spero, which word leadeth us to the uſe, hee did, and wee are to make, of this knowledge. Not, know, to know; or to bee knowne to know; but, know, to lodge in our boſomes true hope: It is the generall uſe of all our knowledge of the Scriptures, whatſoever is written for our learning, that wee by patience and comfort in the Scriptures may have hope. Generally of all; but above all, of theſe, of CHRIST our REDEEMER: Hee is our hope; and His riſing, that is Caput bonæ ſpei, our cape of good hope, the moſt hopefull of all other.

2 Act, Spero: His Hope. Rom. 15.4.

The uſe of hope is, to expell feare. No feare, to the feare of death: what ſhall become of us, after our ſhort time here, which makes us never quiet, but in the valley of Achor, all our life long: The reſurrection opens us a gate of hope. Therefore, this day, Noli timere, ſay the Angels: Nolite timere (ſaith CHRIST.) That our proper ſalutation of the day. This, a day of hope. And this uſe made DAVID of it: My fleſh ſhall reſt in hope, though hee were not in JOBS caſe; but in all his royalty. For, even Kings, in all their royalty, ſometimes have before them the hand-writing on the wall: Numeravit, hee hath numbred thy dayes; and even then, they reſt on this hope, and read this inſcription not unwillingly. The ſame uſe doe the Apoſtles: Who hath regenerated us, in ſpe, to a lively hope, by the reſurrection of CHRIST (it is Saint Peter.) Reſt in hope (ſaith DAVID) a lively hope (PETER;) Reſt in hope of riſing and living againe.

Spes repoſita. Hope laid up. Hoſ. 2.15. Marke 16.6. Luke 24.38. Pſal. 16.9. Dan. 5.5. 26.

And the terme, that JOB here gives hope, is worth a note: he cals it the kidneyes of the ſoule. It made the Tranſlator miſſe, that knew not this idiome. For, as in that part of the body is bred, and from thence doth iſſue that ſame generativus humor, whereby we propagate our kinde, and live here (in a ſort) after we be dead: In like manner, by this hope (ſaith JOB, and ſo ſaith Saint Peter) we are begotten anew; we are ſowen (ſaith Saint Paul) and of that ſeed, riſe againe in power, honour, and immortality.

כליות 1 Pet. 1. 1 Cor. 15.

And this is hæc ſpes, this hope. For, hope at large heareth evill, hath no good name; Many our hopes prove Vigilantis ſomnia, waking dreames: we cannot lay them up, and if we would; they are not worth the laying up, no more than our dreames be. That the Heathen man made it his happineſſe, to ſay: Vale ſpes, farewell all Psal. 146. 5. hoping. This is true, where the reſt of our hope is vaniſhing, as man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils; and when that goeth, all his thoughts periſh. But this hope is of another nature: Non confundet, it will not make you aſhamed. There's a reality in it, and anchor-hold; it is built on the rocke, it will endure, as the rocke, on which it is built, and on which it is graven here: There will come an end, and his hope will not be cut off, of all other: You may make a Depoſitum of it, lay it up: Repone illam, & repone te in illa; you may reſt on it, it is ſpes viva, a living hope, in Him that liveth, and ſhall reſtore us all to life.

Rom. 5. 5. Heb. 6. 19. Luke 6. 48.

1 Pet. 1. 3.

Repoſita in Sinu: In my boſome. Now, the place is much, where wee lay it: Every thing is beſt kept in his proper place. Iob ſaith, hee beſtowed it in his boſome, and would have us to doe the like. Of that place, hee made choice: of none without us, behinde us. That wee might ever carrie it about us; ever have it before us, and in our ſight; ever at hand: not to ſeeke, but ready and eaſie to bee had, when wee call for it: and theſe, for the continuall uſe wee are to have of it, in all the diſmayes and diſcomforts of our life. Beſide, there it will be ſafely; that, being the ſureſt place, as being within the fold of our armes, where our ſtrength lyeth, and whence, hardeſt to take it from us. And there it will be beſt cheriſhed, in the warmth, and vitall heat of the boſome. There, the nurſe carrieth her childe: and the wife is called the wife of the boſome: And what is dearer to us than theſe two? But, above all, there it will bee next the heart, (for the boſome is but the coffer of the heart) and there Iob would have it. As well, for that, that place is the beſt place, and ſo beſt for the beſt hope: as that, there is in it this hope, a ſpeciall cordiall vertue againſt the fainting of the heart: as (indeed) it is cor cordis, the very heart of the heart, and whereby the heart it ſelfe is more heartened. Iob found it ſo: So did Saint Paul, when hee grew out of heart. Put his hand in his boſome, tooke out this Hope, lookes upon it, preſently ſaith: propter quod non deficimus. And when Timothie was in the like deliquium, he applies to him: (What man! Memento, Remember, CHRIST is riſen, and we ſhall riſe and ſee GOD; an amends for all, we can ſuffer;) as a ſpeciall receipt againſt all cardiaque paſſions.

Deut. 13. 6. 2 Cor. 4. 16. 2 Tim. 2. 8.

But, in chuſing this place; Iob's minde was ſpecially, to except to the braine, where (commonly) men lodge it, and are miſtaken: it is not the right place. Scio, there (if you will;) in the braine; it is the place of memory: But Spero, in the heart, the place of affection (namely feare:) and till the heart be the leſſe fearefull, and the more cheerfull for it; it is not where it ſhould be; not laid in the right place. Nay, not Scientia cerebri; knowledge is not the beſt neither, not in the braine: Scientia Sinus, and corde creditur; beſt, when it hath his reſt there. When knowledge in the heart, and hope in the reines; and He that ſearcheth heart and reines, may there finde them. Erre not then in laying it up in the head, or any where, but whither Iob carried it, and where he laid it, in the boſome.

To end; becauſe we be ſpeaking of a hope to bee laid up in our boſome, it falleth out very fitly, that, even at this time (feſtum ſpei) the Church offereth us a notable pledge, and earneſt of this hope there to beſtow. Even the holy Euchariſt, the fleſh wherein our Redeemer was ſeene, and ſuffered, and payed the price of our redemption; and together with it the holy Spirit, whereby we are ſealed to the great day of our redemption. To the laying up of which earneſt of our hope, and intereſt in all theſe, we are invited at this time, even literally, to lodge, and lay it up in our boſome. We ſhall be the nearer our Scio, if wee taſte and ſee by it, how gracious the LORD is; the nearer our Spero, if an earneſt or pledge of it be laid up within us: the nearer our redemption, if we have within us the price of it: and the nearer our reſurrection; they be his owne words, He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh, &c. hath eternall life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day. So dwell we in Him, and He in us; we, in Him, by our fleſh in Him; and He, in us, by His fleſh in us. Thereby drawing life from Him, the ſecond; as we doe death, from the firſt Adam.

Ioh. 6. 24. Ephes. 4. 30. Iohn 6. 54.

But this hope hath this property (ſaith S. Iohn) it will mundifie the place where it lyeth (Every one that hath this hope cleanſeth himſelfe;) which place by vertue of it, we ſhall ſo cleanſe, Vt videatur in carne noſtra Deus, that the life of Ieſus may be manifeſt in our fleſh; and all men ſee the vertue of His reſurrection, to have His worke in us, by our riſing out of the old duſty converſation, to newneſſe of life: His reſurrection and the power of it being exemplarily ſeene in our fleſh, our end ſhall be, to ſee Him in our fleſh; and that, nobis (not, contra nos) for our eternall joy and comfort. And then have we the feaſt in kind, and as much fruit of it, as either Patriarch, or Apoſtle can wiſh us. Which that we may, pray we to Him, &c.

1 Iohn 3. 3.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XXIV. of March, A.D. MDCXI.
being EASTER-DAY.

And being alſo the day of the Beginning of His Majeſties moſt Gracious Reigne.

PSAL. CXVIII. Verſ. XXII.

The Stone, which the Builders refuſed, the ſame Stone is become (or made*) the Head of the Corner.*

THE Stone; which the Builders refuſed · ſaith the Prophet David. This is the Stone which ye Builders refuſed: ſaith the Apoſtle Peter. And ſaith it, of CHRIST our SAVIOUR, Hic eſt lapis, He is the ſtone. And ſaith it to Caiphas and the reſt, that went for Builders. We know then, who this ſtone is, and who theſe Builders be, to begin with. 1 Act. 4. 11.

And in the very ſame place, the ſame Apoſtle telleth us further, what is meant by refuſed, and what, by made head of the Corner. Quem vos, whom ye denyed and crucified: that was, His refuſing. And then, Quem Deus, whom GOD hath raiſed again from the dead; that was His making Caput Anguli. Refuſed, when? three dayes agoe. Made Head, when? This very day: for Hic eſt dies, followeth ſtraight within a verſe, this is the day. Which Day: there is not one of the Fathers, that I have read, but interpret it of Eaſter day. Act. 4. 10. Verſ. 24.

And ſo we have brought the Text and the time together. We know, who is the ſtone: CHRIST. Who the Builders: Caiaphas and thoſe with him. When refuſed: In His Paſſion,. When made head? at His Reſurrection, that is, this day, which day is therefore (at the 27. verſe) ſaid to be, Conſtitutus dies ſolennis, made a ſolemn Feaſt day: In condenſis, on which the Church to ſtand thick and full: Vſque ad cornua Altaris, even up to the very Corners of the Altar.

This (I take it) is a good warrant, for our Church, to make this Pſalme, a ſelect choiſe Pſalme, for this day; as peculiar and pertinent to the Feaſt it ſelf. And a good warrant; for us, ſo to apply it. It is the Holy Ghoſt's owne application, by the mouth of S. Peter: we may boldly make it, ours.

2 Apoc. 19. But though this be the chiefe ſenſe: yet, it is not, the only. The chiefe it is: for the Spirit of Prophecy is in it, which is the teſtimonie of JESUS. Yet not the only: for according to the letter we cannot deny, but that originally it was meant of David. He was a Stone too, and in his time refuſed: yet after, raiſed by GOD to the higheſt place, even to be King over His people. The Chaldee Paraphraſt (the oldeſt wee have) is enough for this, thus he turneth the verſe. מלא &c. The Child, whom the chiefeſt men oppugned, He of all the ſonnes of Iſhai, was made Ruler of Iſrael. A ſecond ſenſe then it hath, of David.

3 And, by analogie it will beare a third; and it will ſort with ours, or with any Prince, in like manner banded againſt, and ſought to be put by, as He: and yet after, brought by God, to the ſame place, that David was. To any ſuch it will well agree, and be truly verified of him, and rightly applyed to him. And; I confeſſe, I choſe it the rather for this third. Becauſe, (as this yeare falleth out) upon one day (and Hic eſt dies, this is the day) We have in one, a memoriall of two benefits: 1 of our Saviours exalting, by His Reſurrection: 2 and of our Soveraignes exalting, and making Head of this Kingdome. Both, lighting together, we were (as we thought) ſo to remember the one, that we left not the other out. And this Text, will ſerve for both. Both, may in one be ſet before us: and ſo we rejoyce and render thanks to God for both: For the Lord CHRIST; and the Lords CHRIST, under one.

Three ſenſes then, there are in the Text, and (to do it right) we to touch them all three. 1. CHRIST in prophecy. 2. David in hiſtorie. 3. Our owne in analogie. But we will give CHRIST the precedence. Both for His Perſon, He is Davids Lord, and the Head of all Head-ſtones: It is meet, He have Primatum in omnibus, He in all things, have the pre-eminence: And, for that the truth of the text, never was ſo verified in any, as in Him. We may truly ſay, None ever, ſo low caſt down: None ever, ſo high lift up again, as He. Others refuſed, but none like Him: and their heads exalted, but nothing in compariſon of His. 1. Firſt then of CHRISTS, 2. after, of Davids briefly: 3. and laſt, of our owne.

Col. 1. 18.

I To apply it to CHRIST. The ſtone, is the ground of all. Two things befall it: two things as contrary as may be, 1. Refuſed, caſt away: 2. then, called for againe, and made Head of the Building. So, two parts there are, to the eye. 1. The refuſing. 2. and the raiſing: which, are His two eſtates, His humiliation: and His exaltation.

1 In either of theſe you may obſerve two degrees. A quibus, and Quouſque: By whom, and How farre: By whom refuſed? We weigh the word, Ædificantes: Not by men unskillfull, but, by workmen, Builders profeſſed: It is, ſo much the more.

2 How farre? We weigh the word, Reprobaverunt: uſque ad reprobari, even to a reprobation. It is not improbaverunt: diſliked, as not fit for ſome eminent place: but reprobaverunt, utterly reprobate, for any place at all.

II 1 Againe, exalted, by whom? The next words are, à Domino, by God, as good a Builder, nay better than the beſt of them; which makes amends for the former.

2 And, how far? Placed by him, not in any part of the Building: but, in the part moſt in the eye (the corner:) and in the higheſt place of it (the very head.)

So, Rejected, and that by the Builders, and to the loweſt eſtate: And from the loweſt eſtate, Exalted in Caput Anguli, to the chiefeſt place of all; and that by GOD himſelf. This for CHRIST.

Gen. 49. 24. And David is a ſtone, and ſo is ours, and ſo is every good Prince Lapis Iſrael (as Iacob, in his Teſtament, calleth them.) And Builders there be, ſuch as by office ſhould, 3 Pſal. 61. 4. but many times doe not their office, no more than Caiaphas here. Reprobaverunt is when they deviſe to put Him by, whom God would exalt: And Factus Caput, when GOD for all that, doth them right, and brings them to their place, the Throne Royall.

As

As, this was the day, when GOD so brought David (as appeareth by the 24. verse:) And Hic est dies, this is the day, when He brought His Majestie to be Head of this Kingdome. Of these in their order.

The stone which the Builders refused, &c.

THe estate of mankind, as they are in Society, either to Church or Kingdome, is in divers times set forth to us in Scripture, sometimes of a Flock, sometimes of Husbandry: otherwhile, of a Building. Ye are his Flock, divers times in the Psalms, Yon are Gods husbandrie, you are Gods building, both in one verse. Now the stile of this Text, runs in termes of this last, of Building, or Architecture. For here are Builders, and here is stone, and a Coigne or Corner, and a Top or Turret over it. 1 Cor. 3. 9.

Of this Spirituall Building, we are all stones: and (which is strange) we all are Builders too: to be built, and to build, both stones; in regard of them whom GOD hath set over us; who are to frame us, and we so to suffer them. Builders, in regard of our selves first: then, such as are committed to us, by bond, either of duty, or charity: Every one, being (as Saint Chrysostome saith well) de subditâ sibi plebe, quasi domum Deo struere, of those under his charge, to make GOD an house. As stones; it is said to us, by Saint Peter, Super-ædificamini, Be ye Built up, or framed. As Builders; it is said to us, first, by S. Iude, Build your selves in your most holy faith. Then, by Saint Paul, Edifie ye, or build ye one another. Be built, by obedience and conformitie: Build your selves, by increase in vertue, and good workes: Build one another, by good example, and wholesome exhortation. The short is: this is to be our studie, all: if we bee, but our selves, every one in himselfe, and of himselfe, to build God an Oratorie. If he have an Houshold, of them, to build Him a Chappell. If a larger circuit, then a Church. If a countrey or Kingdome, then a Basilica, or Metropolitan Church: which is properly the Princes Building. 2 Pet. 1. 5. Iud. 20. 1 Thes. 5. 11.

This in the text (the Builders here were in hand with) as a Basilica: for it was the frame of the Iewes Government: but, is applyed, to all States in generall. For, Iewry was the Scene or Stage, whereon the errours or vertues of all governments, were represented to all posterity.

Foure words there be in the text: 1. Ædificantes, Builders. 2. Lapis, Stone, 3. Angulus, a Corner, and 4. Caput, the Head. From the first word Ædificantes, this wee have: that States would not be, as tents: set up, and taken downe, and removable. They would be buildings, to stand steddy and fixed. Nothing so opposite unto a State as not to stand.

2 From the second, Lapis: that, this Building would be, not of clay and wood, or (as we call them) Paper-walls: but, Stone-worke, as strong, as defensible, as little subject to concussion, or combustion: as might be.

3 From the two parts specified, first, Anguli: this Stone-worke, is not a wall forthright, to part in sunder, or to keepe out: but, it consists of divers sides; those sides meete in one Angle: where if they meete, and knit well, all the better will the building be.

4 Caput. And they will knit the better, if they have a good Head. For, where they meet, no place so much in danger of weather going in, and making the sides fly off, if it want a Covering. A head it would have to cover it: It is a speciall defence, and besides, it is a Soveraigne beautie, to the whole building.

And that Head, would not be of playster, to crumble away: or of wood; to warp or rot with the weather: or of lead, to bow or bend, or to crack: but of Stone, and the principallest Stone, that could be. The chiefe part it is, the head: the chiefe care, and consultation would be, what Stone meet for that place: for indeed it is all in all.

That

The first sense CHRIST.

That, is the consultation here. Here is CHRIST, what say you to him? He is a stone. 2. A building stone, 3. A Corner stone. 4. A Head stone. A stone. So the Prophet termes Him. Dan. 2. 34. Zachar. 3. 9. Esay 28. 16. And so the Apostles, Peter, Act. 4. 11. Paul, 1 Cor. 10. 4. 1 In His Birth: Daniels stone, cut forth without hands, 2 In His Passion: Zacharies stone, graven and cut full of eyes, all over. 3 In His Resurrection: Esays stone layed in Sion, Qui crediderit non confundetur, He that believeth in him then shall not be confounded, saith S. Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 6. Hic est lapis. He is the stone of our faith, saith S. Peter, Lapis erat Christus. And Petra erat Christus, saith S. Paul. He is the stone of our Sacraments, the Water of our Baptisme, and of our Spirituall drinke (both) issue from Him. A stone: first, for His nature, of the earth as stones are, out of Abrahams quarrie (saith Esay) to shew His Humanitie. And, out of κατώτερα τῆς γῆς the very lowest part of the earth (saith the Apostle;) to shew His Humilitie. Indeed, nothing so subject to contempt, to be trodden on, to be spurned aside, as it. And such was His condition, Vermis, non homo, and Lapis, non homo. A worme, or a stone, and no man.

Dan. 2. 34. Zach. 3. 9. Esay 28. 16. Act 4. 11. 1 Cor. 10. 4. Esay 51 1. Ephes 4. 9. Psal. 22. 6.

2 A stone will endure much sorrow, nothing more. And, who did ever suffer like Him? or in his suffering, who more patient, or still, or stone-like, than He?

3 But the chiefe vertue of a stone is, that it is firme and sure: And so is He. Ye may trust him, ye may build on him. He will not faile you. What you lay on him is sure. [a] David may have sure footing, and rest his feet; [b] Moses, his hands; [c] Iacob his head, on this stone. This is it he hath his denomination from. He that trusts in him, nothing, not the gates of hell, shall prevaile against him. Trustinesse, with non confundetur, the chiefe vertue of a stone: of CHRIST: and of those that are Head-stones by, and under Him.

a Psal. 40. 3. b Exod. 17. 12 c Gen 28. 11. Mat. 16. 18.

But, there are stones, that lye scattered, that will neither head well, nor bed well (as they say) not meet to build withall: meet, for nothing, but to hurle, and to doe hurt with. But CHRIST is a Stone, to do good with, to build with. Lapis ad ædificationem. And he loveth not to scatter, or be by himselfe, his delight is to be with the Sons of men: and to grow with them, into one frame of building.

Pro. 8. 31.

3 A Corner-stone. Of all the places in the building, that one speciall place liketh him: Where the sides meet, there hee is. To joyne together, to make two one, he loveth it above all: stretching himselfe, to both walls, that both may rest on Him.

Ephes. 2. 14.

4 And lastly, Lapis primarius, a Headstone. For, there he should be, there is his right place, and it will never bee well with the Building, till he be in that place, till CHRIST be Ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, Caput, in omni procuratione, the highest and chiefest end of all. This he is, and in the end, this he will be: if not by men, yet by GOD.

But now we have to doe with Men: and we are to put it to voices, their voices, with whom hee lived, what they thinke of CHRIST for Caput Anguli. It is returned, Quem reprobaverunt: He is refused. Will you heare it, from themselves? Nolumus hunc regnare, We will not have Him King; Not in that place; no Head, in any wise.

Luk. 19. 14.

1 But, à quibus, who are these? These were foolish people, that knew not the vertue or value of a stone: no heed to be taken what they cry. We will get us, with Ieremy to men of skill, that know, what stone is for every place; professed builders, by their trade: But these also, were no better conceited of him, than the other: for, doe any of the rulers make any accompt of him? Iohn 7. 48. As who say, None of them neither, the very Builders refuse him too.

Ier. 5. 4. Ier. 5. 5.

2 Well we will make the best of it: It may be, not for the Head: But there be more places than that: If not allow him there, yet he may be in some else. Improbaverunt, it may be, but not reprobaverunt: disallowed, but not cast aside quite. We aske then, how farre? Will ye put him up the second time, and (to see the Quousque in kinde) will ye put up Barabbas with him? Non hunc, sed Barabbam. So it went: That was their verdict. Now, by this time it is reprobaverunt (as flat as may bee) a refuse indeed, and that with a foule indignity.

Iohn 18 40.

But

But theſe, were but the Vulgar, againe: What ſay the Builders to this? He: of them, that tooke himſelfe for a very Vitruvius, ſuch a workman, as he ſaid, all the reſt underſtood nothing at all, the Maſter-builder Caiaphas, he was flat, Expedit, It was expedient he ſhould die; be caſt aſide into the heape of rubbiſh, be put out of the building, cleane. That, is his doome. Ioh. 11.49. 50

Now, lay theſe together. To be refuſed is not ſo much; it may be, it is of ſuch, as are ignorant. 1

But to be refuſed of builders, and thoſe the chiefe, is much; for, they are preſumed to be skilfull. 2

Againe, to be diſliked for the chiefe place, not ſo much; if not for that, he may be for another: But, to be utterly reprobate (that is) not refuſed, for the Head, nor refuſed for the Corner, but refuſed ſimply for any roome at all: not in the top, nay, not in the bottome: not in the Corner, nay, not in any ranke of the building: that, is as much as may bee. And this, was CHRISTS lot.

Yet this was all but in words, nothing was done to him. But there is a reprobation, indeed, and that is yet farre worſe. And to that, they proceed, even to actuall matters, to reall reprobation. Before they caſt Him aſide (this poore ſtone) they hackt and they hewd it, and mangeled it pitiouſly; they ſhewed their malice even in that, too. Cælaverunt Sculpturam ejus (ſaith the Prophet) their tooles walked on Him, they graved Him, and cut Him with a witneſſe, and made him full of eyes, on every ſide. What skilled that? What diſgrace, or what ſorrow is done, to a ſtone? the Stone feeles it not. The cry, of Non hunc, or the edge of the graving toole, affect it nothing. True: but He was Lapis vivus, a living ſtone (as Peter calleth Him, 1 Pet. 2.5.) a ſtone that hath life, life and ſenſe, and felt all: Felt His graving, the edge and point both: felt His diſpiſing, the ſcorne, and malice both: (of the twaine, this the more, but) both He felt. When they made furrowes on his backe, with the ſcourges, when they platted the Crowne of Thornes, and made it ſit cloſe to His head; when they digged His hands, and feet, He felt all. He endured it patiently, tanquam Lapis: but He felt it ſenſibly, tanquam vivus, Had quick ſenſe, of His paine in graving: had lively apprehenſion, of His contempt in refuſing. Zach. 3.9. Pſal. 129 3. Mat. 27. 29. Pſal. 22. 16.

And theſe very two words (in the text) Lapidem, and Reprobaverunt, ſet out unto us, both parts of His Paßion fully: As if He had beene ſtone, ſo layd they on Him: As if He had beene a Reprobate, ſo powred they all diſgrace upon Him. And even as a ſtone He was, in His paſſion. For, as the ſtones give againſt the weather: ſo was there not to be ſeen upon Him a bloodie ſweate? Did He not give (as it were) of Himſelfe, againſt the tempeſt came? And, when it came, was it not ſo ſtrange (even that, which this living ſtone ſuffered) as the dead ſtones, that had no life, as if they had had life and compaſſion of His caſe, rent in ſunder with it? Lapidem then, is true. Luk. 22.44. Mat. 27.51. Ioh. 19.29

And, for reprobaverunt, that, is as true. For how could they have intreated a reprobate, worſe than they entreated Him? In His thirſt, In His prayer, In the very pangs of death, what words of ſcorne and ſpitefull opprobrie? What deeds of malice and wretched indignitie! of Himſelfe, it is ſaid (and by way of exaggeration) He humbled Himſelfe to death, the death of the Croſſe: of them, it may be no leſſe, Reprobaverunt ad mortem, mortem crucis, they rejected Him to death, the death of Reprobates; the death, wherunto a curſe is annexed, the death of the Croſſe. And never gave Him over, till they brought Him, lapis ad lapidem, into a grave of ſtone, and rolled a ſtone upon Him, and there left Him. And thus much for Lapis quem reprobaverunt. Math. 27 47. Phil. 2.8. Mat. 27.60.

It is the Feaſt of the Paſſeover: we now paſſe over, to His other eſtate; His Exaltation, ad caput Anguli. Were it not ſtrange, the ſtone ſhould be rolled away, and this ſtone ſhould be digged up againe, and ſet up in the Antes, the place moſt conſpicuous (that is) made a Corner-ſtone: and that, in the very top, the higheſt part of all (that is) made a Head-ſtone? Were not this a ſtrange Paſſeover, from death, to life; from loweſt reprobation, to higheſt approbation; from baſeſt reproach, to greateſt glory? 2

But, ſeeing builders (we ſee) may be deceived, and that in Capite (as we find here) and that, though Caiaphas be one of them: and a ſtone may have wrong, Would it not not be well, we called to ſcrutinie againe? Is there any builder yet left, before whom we may bring the matter? Yes, there is. Every houſe is built of ſome man (ſaith the

Is He of the ſame minde? Offer CHRIST to His probation. He will reprobare reprobantes, condemn them, that ſo refuſed Him: And all will turne, quite contrary. Saint Peter ſaith it: he was 1 Pet.2.4. ἀπὸ ἀνθρώπων δεδοκιμασμένος, reprobate with men, but ἐκλεκτὸς, choſen of God, ἄξιος, nothing worth with them, but ἔντιμος, precious, with Him. Meet to be in the building; Nay, no build-ing, meet to be, without him. And in the building, if any part more object to the ſight, than other, there. And in that, if any place higher than another; there. In ædificio, Angulo ædificii, Capite Anguli: In the Building, the Corner of the Building, the Head of the Corner: (that is) in the higheſt place, of the chiefeſt part of all. This He thought Him, and as he thought Him, ſo He made Him: and made Him ſo this day, the day of His Reſurrection. Whom they caſt down, GOD lift up, from the grave: whom they vilified, He glorified; glorified, and made him Caput anguli, The Head of the Corner.

Anguli. How of the corner? The corner, is the place, where two wals meet: and there be many two's in this Building: The two wals of Nations, Iewes and Gentiles: The two, of conditions, Bond and Free: The two, of Sex, Male and Female: the great two (which this day wee celebrate) of the Quicke and the Dead: above all, the greateſt two of all Heaven and Earth.

The two firſt meet in Him: There was a partition, but he downe with it: Et fe-

Caput. And as Vnitie is in the Angle; ſo Order, his under the Head. As all, one, in Him; ſo, he is Head of all. Head of the Iewes, Ieſus in their tongue: Head of the Gen-

1 Now then: will ye lay theſe together? There can come to a ſtone no greater dig-
2 nity, than, there to be in the (Head.) To any ſtone: but it is much increaſed, by that Circumſtance, that it is not onely, Lapis (barely;) but, Lapis quem reprobaverunt, that now is there in the Head: Not any ſtone, but a ſtone ſo refuſed (as we heard) for ſuch a ſtone, there to be, from that Terminus à quo, to come to this Terminus ad quem; from ſo baſe an eſtate, there to be, that is a great increaſe to it.

3 And thirdly, by ſuch a perſon, a Builder ſo matchleſſe, there to be: that is yet a degree higher: And this triplicitie exalteth much his Exaltation. That by God, and not Gods ſuffering, but His doing: and that factum mirabile, His wonderfull doing; it came to paſſe: As indeed, wonderfull it is to ſee, that which all the world now ſeeth: CHRIST, that (for the preſent) was ſo ſtrangely dejected; ſince to be ſo exceeding-Phil.2.9.10 ly glorifie: So many knees to bow to Him, ſo many tongues to confeſſe Him, His Name to be
11. above all Names, Heaven and earth to be full of the Majeſtie of His glory.

Now from theſe words, caput Anguli: that which we learn morally, is: to make much of the two vertues commended to us, in theſe two words: [1] Virtus Anguli [2] and Anguli ſub c[illegible]te.

Firſt

First, the vertue of two walls united in one Angle, that is Vnitie. For CHRIST will not be Caput Macerie, of a Party-wall, but of an Angle joyned. He is not of their ſpirit, that, ſo they may be Head, care not, though it bee never ſo broken a wall.

Secondly, not every Vnitie, but Vnitas ordinata, that hath, or is under a Head, For it is not, Cujuſvis Anguli, but Anguli cui Caput: not of every Angle, but of an Angle, the unitie whereof, is neither in the taile, nor in the ſides, but in the Head: That is commended to us, as Vnitie againſt Diviſion; ſo Order againſt Confuſion. They that can be content to corner well, but would be Acephali, Headleſſe, have no Head, pleaſe him not: No more doe they, that would joyne, but would be Poly-cephali, have a Conſiſtory of heads, many heads: as many as the beaſt of Babylon. For ſure it is, an Angle can have no more heads but one. To love an Angle well, but an Angle that hath an head, and but one head. To love an head well; but an head, not of a ſingle wall, but of an Angle. Both theſe, and both to be regarded. They be Zacharies two ſtaves, Bands and Beautie, which uphold all government; break one, and the other will not long be unbroken. The head, without Vnitie: Vnitie, without the head: either without other will not long hold. Zach. 11.7. 10.14.

Both then: but eſpecially Vnitie, for that commeth in here, not neceſſarily (as doth the head) but extraordinarily. And therefore, extraordinary regard to bee had of it. For I was thinking, why hee ſhould here in this ſecond part, ſay, that He was made head of the Corner? Why ſhould it not ſuffice to have ſaid, factus eſt Caput, and no more? Or if more, factus eſt Caput Ædificii? To have ſaid, He was made the Head: at leaſt-wiſe, made the head of the whole building? Why muſt Anguli, bee added? What needed any mention of the Corner? No occaſion was given, no mention was made of it, in His Refuſing: The word [head] would have ſerved fully, to have ſet His Exaltation forth. Some matter there was, that this word muſt come in. And ſure, no other, but to ſhew CHRIST's ſpeciall delight and love of that place. At His riſing, this day, ſtetit in medio: and here He is come to His place againe: for, Stetit in medio, and Caput Anguli, come both to one. Therefore, that like love, like ſpeciall regard be had by us of that place, and of the vertue of that place (unitie;) that it be ſought and preſerved carefully, that the ſides flie not off, the well knitting wherof, is the very ſtrength of the whole building. Iohn 20.19

By Bede, it is rendred, as a reaſon why the Iewiſh Builders refuſed our Saviour CHRIST, for the head-place, Quia in uno pariete, ſtare amabant. They could endure no Corner; they muſt ſtand alone, upon their owne ſingle wall; be of themſelves; not joyne with Gentile or Samaritane. And CHRIST they endured not, becauſe they thought, if He had beene head, He would have enclined that way. Alias oves oportet me adducere: Alias, they could not abide. But ſure, a purpoſe there muſt be alias oves adducendi, of bringing in others, of joyning a corner, or elſe wee doe not facere ſecundùm exemplar, build not according to CHRIST's patterne; our faſhion of Fabricke, is not like His. They that thinke, to make CHRIST Head of a Single wall, are deceived, it will not be. They that ſay, ſo the head, all is well; it skils not for the Corner; erre too. He is γωνιαῖος a Corner ſtone firſt, and then ἀκρογωνιαῖος, a Head-ſtone after. And they that had rather be a Front in a wall, than in a meaner place ſub lapide Angulari; And they, that ſtand upon their owne partition, and will not endure to heare of any joyning; care not what become of Angulus, if it were ſtrucken out; the ſame mind is not in them, in neither of them, which was in CHRIST JESUS. His mind we ſee. He lookes to the Angle, as to the Head; and to the Head, as to the Angle. And they build beſt, that build likeſt Him, Wiſdome is juſtified of all her Children. Iohn 10.16. Heb. 5.8. Phil. 2.5. Luk. 7.35.

And laſt; the dutie of the whole ſecond part, and ſo, this dayes dutie, is this. When the head-ſtone is brought forth, and reared (as to day it was) wee are to proſecute it, with Hoſanna, and Benedictus qui venit (as it ſtraightway followeth in the Pſalme) with acclamation of Grace, Grace unto it. For ſo (ſaith the Prophet) Lapis primarius would be laid with rejoycing. Rejoycing: as in His regard, that hath obtained his I Verſe 25.26. Zach. 4.7.

due: ſo, even in the Buildings, that hath got ſuch a Head: Such and ſo gracious a Head, as could endure thus to be refuſed by them; and yet admit, yea even thoſe, that ſo refuſed Him (if the fault be not in themſelves) to be Stones in His Building, for all that: and to be members of the Body, whereof He is the Head.

2 Then ſecondly, as GOD hath: ſo we to make Him Head. Actually, wee cannot; He is made to our hands: but in account, wee may. Giving Him, the higheſt place in all our reſpects; Magnifying His Name, and His Word, above all things: His Word; making it our chiefe ground: His Name and the glory of it, making of it our chiefe end. That other conſiderations carry us not away, as theſe builders here it did, of Venient Romani, or I wot not what; but that ever, (as the Heathen Lawyer ſaid) it be Potior ratio, quæ facit pro Religione, the beſt reaſon, that maketh beſt for Religion, and for the good of the body of this Head (that is, the peace of His Church.) And this, for, Lapis erat CHRISTUS.

Iohn 11. 48.

1 The ſecond ſenſe, David. But, Lapis erat David, is likewiſe true. Therefore, that we doe King David no wrong, let us ſhew, how it fits him too: but briefly, becauſe, this, is not His day. David was a ſtone. The Iewes ſay, it was his Nic-name, or name of diſgrace; that, in ſcorne they called him ſo. For that, all His credit (forſooth) came, by caſting a ſtone, and hitting Goliah, by chance, right in the fore-head: and ſo, they thwitted him with that name. They gave it him, in ſcorne: but he bare it, in earneſt. For ſure, much ſorrow he endured: had that propertie of a Stone. And nothing could remove him, or make him ſhrink, from his truſt in GOD, or from his Allegiance to Saul his liege-Lord: that qualitie alſo.

2 And refuſed he was: not as CHRIST, we muſt not looke for that, neither in him, nor in any. GOD forbid, that any, ever ſhould be ſo refuſed, as he. As CHRIST, none, but CHRIST. No: but yet, in his degree refuſed he was, though. A hard time he had, and many hard termes, and hard uſages he endured for many yeares together; purſued, and followed, and ſhould have beene no head, nay, ſhould have had no head, if he had been gotten.

3 Refuſed, and by whom? Even by Saul, all his life-time: and when Saul was dead, Abner refuſed him, and ſet up another againſt him. And when he was out of his countrey, in Gath, refuſed there too, by the Princes of Achis And even at home, by his owne brethren, and fathers houſe. Yea, Samuel himſelfe, had given it away (the head-place) from him, to Eliab, and ſo refuſed him; but, for GOD. And theſe, went then, for the chiefe Builders in Iſrael, at that time. So, the builders refuſed him.

1 Sam. 17. 28.
1 Sam. 16. 6.

4 But after all this, all this notwithſtanding, this Stone became the head, (that is) David got the Crown, and was King at laſt. For (head) is the Kings name. So doth Samuel call the King, 1 Sam. 15. 17. So doth Eſay, Chap. 7. 4. So doth Hoſee, Chap. 1. 11. But eſpecially, ſo Daniel, in expreſſe termes, Tu es Caput aureum, ſpeaking to the King, Thou art the head of Gold.

Chap. 2. 38.

Head, and of the corner: that is (as ſome interpret it) of Iuda, and Iſrael. But, that is thought ſomewhat hard. For, thoſe two, were not two Kingdomes, nor ever ſo reckoned, till Roboams time. And, what if David had not happened to have beene firſt King of one Tribe, and after, of all; ſhould he have loſt this name then? Should he not have beene Ἀκρογωνιαῖος? Shall no King be Caput Anguli, if hee have but one entire Kingdome? ſhall not Salomon, as well as David? No queſtion but he ſhall.

The better part therefore think good, to give it that ſenſe, which never failes in any State: and which ſundry times ye ſhall finde pointed at by David himſelfe, as in the [a] 115. before, and in the [b] 135. after: Yea, even here in [c] this Pſalme at the beginning, Domus Iſrael, and Domus Aaron, the Houſe of Iſrael, and the Houſe of Aaron; that is, the two eſtates, Civill and Eccleſiaſticall, which maketh the maine Angle, in every Government. GOD Himſelfe hath ſevered them, and made theſe, two; but to meet in one: Not one to maligne and conſume the other. And, the happie combining

c Verſ. 2. 3.

combining of theſe two, is the ſtrength of the Head, and the ſtrength of the whole Building. If it beare but upon one of them, it will certainly decay. It did ſo in Sauls time: He little regarded the Arke, and leſſe the Prieſts. David ſaw Sauls errour, and in his Pſalme (where he ſingeth Ne perdas, to a Common-wealth) promiſeth to have equall care of both pillars, and to uphold them both. Pſal. 75. 3.

The firſt booke of Chronicles, is ſufficient to prove, and perſwade any, he dealt in both, as chiefe over both. Not by right of Prieſthood, for none he had. And that, of his Prophecy, is as cold. Others alſo did the like, Aſa, Ioſaphat, Ezekias, Ioſias, that were no Prophets, nor ever ſo accounted.

In the Law (it is Philo's note) both Tables meet in the fifth Commandement (which is the Crown-Commandement) as it were in an Angle; which Commandement, is placed (ſaith he) ὡς ἐν μεσωείῳ, as it were in the middle, or confines of both tables; that of Religion, and this other of Iuſtice Civill: That, with the right arm, the Prince may ſupport that, and with the left, this; and ſo uphold both. And in the Goſpell, CHRIST applyeth this very verſe to Himſelfe, as Heire of the Vineyard. Heire He was not, but as King, not as Prieſt: He could not; for, of that Tribe he was not borne, but was called to it, as was Aaron. Matth. 21. 42. Heb. 7. 13. 14.

Since then, here we finde both, and that David was both, it is no errour (I truſt) to call a King, Caput Anguli; No more is it, to call him Lapidem primarium, or angularem, chooſe ye whether. The Perſian (by the light of nature) called the King Ahaſhueroſh (that is) Soveraigne head. The Grecian (by the ſame light) called the King, Βασιλέα that is, βάσιν τοῦ λαοῦ the Baſe or Corner-ſtone of his people.

Shall I adde this? This word (Stone) which is here affirmed, of David, in this verſe: is, in the new Teſtament, five ſeverall times, turned by the Syrian Tranſlator, Cepha:[a] thrice in the three Goſpels: once in the[b] Acts: and once in[c] Saint Peter. So that, he did not thinke it ſtrange, to call King David Cephas. So Cepha, as well ſaid of David, as of Peter. And[d] Tu paſces, as well ſaid to David, as Paſce to Peter. And[e] Zorobabel hath in his hand, the Line, as well as Ioſua the high Prieſt, towards the building of the Temple. The thing, the dutie it ſelfe, and the bounds of it, let us lay forth and agree of, as we can: but ſure, the Name is not to be ſtood on; it cannot be denyed him.

3 The third ſenſe His Majeſtie.

And now to our ſelves: to whom, as This is the day which the LORD hath made, touching CHRIST, and His Reſurrection; ſo is it, likewiſe, the day that hee hath made, the ſecond time, by making on it, his Majeſtie, Head of this Kingdome, the very Name whereof, hath affinitie, and carrieth an alluſion to the terme, Anguli, in the ſound of it.

2

And, neither were Your Majeſtie, without your part of refuſing, in a kinde: but did participate, ſomewhat of it, with David, though in a leſſe degree. Good, and firme, and ſure, though your Right were, as any ſtone; yet allegations were ſtudied, to ſubject it to queſtion, yea, to refuſing. For, did no body ever ſee a project drawn, wherein ſome other ſtone was marked out, to have beene caput Anguli? Yes; it is well knowne, Titles were raiſed, and ſet on foot, and Bookes written, to that end.

2

And, they tooke themſelves for no meane Work-men, that were the deviſers of them: that, both at home and abroad, contrived it another way: and plotted, to have put You by, and to have ſome other head-ſtone, of their owne hewing out, in Your roome.

Yea, to make your caſe, yet more like to CHRIST s caſe: even the High Prieſt, he that claimeth Caiaphas' s place, he and his crue, had their hands in it. Wee may no leſſe truly, ſay to them, than Saint Peter ſaid to Caiaphas; Quem vos, Whom ye would have caſt aſide, if you might have had your wils. And to that end, had your firſt breves ready drawn, and ſent abroad; and others, in a readineſſe, to ſecond them.

4 Yet for all their Breves, and Bulls; this Stone is the Head, for all that. Factus, made he is, and made by GOD. For à Domino, GODS doing it was, evidently; that after ſo much plotting, ſo many yeares together, at the very time, GOD bowed the hearts of ſo many thouſands, as it had been the heart of one man, to agree in one: as that, all that foreſaw it, thought it had not been poſſible; and all that ſaw it, confeſſed it admirable; and all men ſaid, This hath God done: for they ſaw evidently, it was his worke.

Pſal. 64. 9.

4 The Head, You were then made: And Head, not of One Angle, as You were before (for, Caput Anguli, I hold a King to be, though he have but one Kingdome) but Caput Trianguli, Head now of three, even of a whole Triangle. So, their titles were daſhed, their plots diſappointed, and all their devices, as the Potters clay. Yours it was of right, and GOD hath brought You to it. So, it is: and our eyes doe ſee it, and our hearts doe joy in it, and our tongues bleſſe GOD for it; and here we are, this day, with all praiſe and thanks to acknowledge it, that ſo it is. It is a part of this Dayes dutie, that ſo we ſhould acknowledge it, and give Him thanks for it, that brought it to paſſe.

Eſay 29. 16.

2 And, may I not further put you in minde, of another making yet? And it is not impertinent neither: to this day, eſpecially. For, after the firſt making or placing, looke, how many after-attempts are made, to unmake or diſplace the Head-ſtone againe; ſo many times, as it is heaved at, to that end, and thoſe attempts defeated: ſo many new placings, ſo many new-makings, are we to reckon of. David was made head, not only when Saul and Abner thought to put him downe, and were put-downe themſelves; which was, before he came to the Crown: but even after he had it, and had worn it long, when Abſalom and Sheba refuſed him (being their head) and cryed, No part in David, and ſo, ſought to him beſides the Throne.

2 Sam. 20. 1.

15. 30. 9. 36. And Builders there wanted not in that deſigne: Abſalom had Achitophel and Amaſa, two as principall Maſter-builders, as then were any. When GOD brought David backe to his Seate againe, and delivered him from them, that ſought to remove him from it, He did as good as place him in it, anew. David himſelfe ſaith ſo, before (at the 13. verſe.) He was ſhrewdly lifted at, and ready to turne over: but God ſtayed him, and ſet him right in his Seat againe. And in very deed, the Verſe next before, (the XXI) where he ſaith, GOD had heard him and was become his deliverer, makes the Writers to thinke, this Pſalme was endited rather for this ſecond, than for his firſt placing.

Now, a like Second making, wee may well remember: and wee cannot doe it better, than upon this day. This day (as we ſhall ſee) hath an intereſt in it. That, ſince your ſitting in the Seate of this Kingdome, Some there were, Builders one would have taken them to bee, if he had ſeene them, with their tooles in their hands, as if they had beene to have laid ſome foundation; where their meaning was, to undermine, and to caſt downe foundations and all: Yea, to have made a right Stone of You, and blowne You up among the Stones, You, and Yours without any more adoe.

2 And, Maſter-builders they had amongſt them, (ſo they will needs be accounted) that encouraged their hearts, and ſtrengthened their hands to the Work. And that they might doe, there was no Seale to hinder it: But diſcloſe it, that, they might not, for feare of breaking a Seale: there was a Seale for that. And thus did they ædificare ad Gehennam: edifie their followers to Hell-ward, to ſet them forward and ſend them to their owne place. That Day, which GOD undid that wretched deſigne, and brought their miſchiefe upon their owne heads, That Day, did GOD make You Caput trianguli, the ſecond time. That day, that He brought You backe (if not from death it ſelfe, yet) from deaths doore, from the very gates of deſtruction, That day, was a very Eaſter-day to You, though it were in November. And, εἰς ἐπιβολήν, after a ſort, a very Reſurrection: as very a reſurrection, as Iſaacs was, which the Apoſtles there ſpeaketh of: That, the deſtroying Angell (I am ſure) paſt over You, and ſo, it was truly the Feaſt of the Paſſeover. Fit therefore to bee remembred this Day,

3

Heb. 11. 19.

Hic

Hic eſt dies, This is the day of the Paſſeover, This is Eaſter day, the day of the Reſurrection.

But, to returne to the firſt making of all. By the true courſe of the yeare, this Moneth, being the very Moneth, this day being the very day, of that, of the firſt laying of the Headſtone: we are (as before in CHRISTO Domino, ſo againe here) in CHRISTO Domini, to proſecute it with Davids cry of Hoſanna, and Benedictus: and with Zacharies acclamation, of Grace, Grace unto it, even to this Headſtone. Grace, in his eyes that ſo made you: And againe, Grace in their eyes and hearts to whom he ſo made you: But above all, the Grace of all Graces, that you may make him ever Your Ἀκρογωνιαῖον, Your ſtone of chiefe truſt, and Your marke of higheſt regard, in all your Counſels and purpoſes, that ſo made you: And, ſeek to reduce the diſiecta latera, the ſides and wals flyen off, of this great building (for which the world it ſelfe was built) His Church, and reduce them into one Angle: The greateſt Service that can be done Him, on earth.

And ſo: He that this day made You the head, ſo make You, and ſo keepe You long, and many dayes. He that refuſed them, that refuſed You (refuſed them, with reprobation) ſtill may he ſo doe, toties quoties, to their continuall confuſion: That, the head over the Triangle, and the Triangle under the head, may many yeares ſtand faſt and flouriſh, in all peace, plentie, and proſperity, health, honour, and happineſſe. And, after all: He that hath crowned You here, with two Crownes, alreadie; crowne You alſo with the third, of Glory and Immortality, in his heavenly Kingdome.

I have now done. Onely I would move one thing, and it ſhall well agree with that, hath beene ſaid of the Corner-ſtone: and it ſhall ſerve to further our duty of thankes; and be a good cloſing up of the whole. Many wayes, was CHRIST our bleſſed SAVIOUR a Corner-ſtone: among others, eſpecially in this, ſaith Saint Hierome: Quando agnum, cum pane conjunxit, finiens unum, inchoans alterum, utrumque perficiens in ſemetipſo, One chiefe Corner-point of his, was: when hee joyned the Lambe of the Paſſeover, and the Bread of the Euchariſt: ending the one, and beginning the other, recapitulating both Lambe and Bread into himſelfe: making that Sacrament (by the very inſtitution of it) to be, as it were, the very Corner-ſtone of both the Teſtaments.

No Act then, more fit for this Feaſt (the Feaſt of the Paſſeover) than that Act which is it ſelfe the paſſage over, from the old Teſtament to the New. No way better to expreſſe our thanks, for this Corner-ſtone, than by the holy Euchariſt, which it ſelfe is the Corner-ſtone, of the Law, and the Goſpell.

And, there is in it, a perfect repreſentation of the ſubſtance of this verſe and text ſet before our eyes. Wherein, two poore Elements of no great value in themſelves, but that they might well be refuſed, are exalted by GOD, to the eſtate of a Divine myſterie, even of the higheſt myſterie in the Church of CHRIST. 1

And, a kinde of reſurrection there is in them, and therefore fit for the day of the Reſurrection (as ever, in CHRISTS Church, Eaſter-day hath pleaded a ſpeciall propertie in them.) Sowen, as it were, in weakneſſe and diſhonour: and (after they be conſecrated) riſing againe, in honour and power. 2 1 Cor. 15. 43.

And that a great honour and power: not only to repreſent; but to exhibit that, it repreſenteth: nor to ſet before us, or remember us of; but even to ſerve us for a Corner-ſtone. Firſt, uniting us to CHRIST the head, whereby wee grow into one frame of building, into one body myſticall, with him. And againe, uniting us alſo as living ſtones, or lively members, omnes in id ipſum, one to another, and all together in one, by mutuall love and charity. Qui comedit de hoc pane, & bibit de hoc Calice, manet in me, & ego in illo. He that eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup, abideth in me, and I in him. There is our Corner with Him. And againe, Vnum corpus omnes ſumus, qui de uno pane participamus: All wee, that partake of one bread, or Cup, grow all, into one body Myſticall. There is our Corner, either with other. By the ſame meanes, expreſſing our thankes for it; and by the ſame 3 Ioh. 6. 56. 1 Cor. 10. 17.

poſſeſſing our ſelvs of it: Sealing up both ways our duty to GOD for making CHRIST the LORD, our greateſt and chiefeſt : and for making His Annointed this day, under Him, either in their ſeverall degrees, our Χριστιανοί & our chiefe, or Head corner-ſtone. For which, together with all other his benefits, but eſpecially, as the time calleth to us, for theſe two, [CHRISTS riſing] and [Our Soveraignes raiſing to His Royall place] render wee, as we are bound, to GOD the Father, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XII. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXII.
being EASTER-DAY.

I. COR. Chap. V.

Expurgate vetus fermentum, &c.

Ver. 7. Purge out therefore the old leven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unlevened: For, Christ our Passeover is Sacrificed for us.

8. Therefore, let us keepe the Feast, not with old leven, neither with the leven of maliciousnesse and wickednesse; but, with the unlevened bread of Sincerity and Truth.

Here be two things, give themselves forth upon the very first view of this Text. [1] First, here is newes, that we Christians, we also have our Passeover: [2] Then, that in memory of it, we are to keepe a Feast. Pascha Iudæorum, the Iewes Passeover we finde, in Iohn, Chap. II. and XI. Pascha nostrum, Our Passeover, never till now. And indeed, to finde a Passeover, in Saint Pauls Epistles, and his Epistle, not to the Hebrewes, but to the Corinthians; their Passeover as well as his: For him to call, not his Countrimen the Iewes at Ierusalem, but the Gentiles at Corinth, to keep such a Feast, is newes indeed. But Pascha nostrum; the words be plaine: One we have. Itaque, and therefore let us hold a feast, for it.

And truly, upon this word [Celebremus] may this Feaſt of our EASTER ſeeme to be founded. There, is not onely a Warrant, but an Order for the making it a feaſt. And ſure, howſoever it will fall out with other feaſts, this of Eaſter, if there were nothing elſe, but the Controverſie, that was about the time of keeping it, in the very prime of the Primitive Church, even immediately after the Apoſtles, it were enough to ſhew, it was then generally agreed of all, Such a feaſt was to be kept. And the alledging on either ſide (one, S. Iohns manner of keeping; the other, S. Peters) prove plainely, it is Apoſtolicall (this feaſt;) and that the Apoſtles themſelves kept it. Itaque celebremus, therefore let us keep it.

The Diviſion. The word Itaque, in the later Verſe, is ever a note of a Concluſion: And where a Concluſion is, there is an Argument: And ſo is the Text. It ſtandeth of an [1] Antecedent, and a [2] Conſequent. [1] The Antecedent, in theſe words: CHRIST our Paſſeover, &c. [2] The Conſequent, in theſe: Itaque celebremus, &c. Supply but this Maxime of reaſon and law; If we have one, we are to hold one; The Text will make up a complete Argument: But, one wee have; therefore wee are to hold it. Habendum & tenendum, as our Tenures run.

I. In the Antecedent there riſe theſe five points: 1. The maine word Paſſeover, what is meant by it: Paſcha. 2. That we have one, in the word noſtrum. 3. Who it is expreſly: CHRIST. 4. CHRIST how, or when? not every way, nor at every time conſidered; but, as, and when He was offered up; Immolatus, offered up as a Sacrifice. 5. And laſtly, the word of our intereſt, Propter nos, For us; that ſo, we might paſſe over our ſinnes, and be paſſed over by the puniſhment due to them.

II. In the Conſequent, there ariſe two points: 1. There is an Itaque, to conclude us to keep this feaſt. 2. And there is a Non, and a Sed, to direct us how to keepe it. The former binds us to Celebremus, to celebrate a feaſt; or to Epulemur, to make a feaſt. Both are read; and both well, for both are due. The latter, by Non in fermento, ſed in azymis (not ſo, but thus) teacheth us, how to hold it: How to keep a Paſſeover? but as a Paſſeover ſhould be kept. How was that? not with leven, but with ſweet bread. And then he takes off the veile from MOSES face, that under the legall types of Leven, and Sweet bread, theſe Evangelicall duties are expreſſed unto us: By leven, is meant malice and lewdneſſe: and ſo, we may not. By ſweet bread, is meant Sincerity and Truth: and ſo, we are (with them) to celebrate our Feaſt.

So, in the Antecedent, there is the [1] Benefit, and the [2] Meanes: that is CHRISTS part. In the Conſequent, [1] the Feaſt, and the [2] Duty: that is Ours. Indeed, to the word Paſſeover, ye may reduce them all. 1. The Benefit: for it is a Paſſeover; even the paſſing over of the Deſtroyer. 2. The Meanes: that is CHRIST, by the Sacramentall figure called the Paſſeover, as the meanes of it. 3. The Feaſt: whether that we ſolemnize, or that we are invited to, either is a Paſſeover. 4. And laſt our Duty: for, that is alſo a kinde of Paſſeover, from Vetus fermentum, to Nova conſperſio. So, [1] the Benefit, [2] the Meanes, [3] the Feaſt it ſelfe, and [4] the Duty of it, all are recapitulate, in this one word, Paſſeover.

The Summe of all is; that we performe the duty, that we ſo may partake of the benefit: all is but to conclude us ad hoc Feſtum, ad hoc epulum, to the Feaſt and the feaſt of the Feaſt; that we paſſe not them over. This is all, that S. Paul (here) pleads for, and all that we. Enough, to let you ſee the Text, in the feaſt; and the feaſt, in the Text: in the Text, the parts and the order of them.

Paſcha

PAſcha, a Paſſeover. * Quænam eſt hæc Religio (ſaith GOD) ſhall be our queſtion? What is the meaning of this obſervance, and what good is there in it? For, every Feaſt is in remembrance of ſome benefit (ἑορτὴ, ὅτι ἔπαθόν τι.) Paſſing over is (of it ſelfe) a thing indifferent; good or bad, thereafter as that is, which paſſeth over us, or we over it. For, if any good over-paſſe us, we loſe by it; but, if any danger, we are the better. Againe, if we paſſe from better to worſe, it is a detriment. But, if from a worſe caſe or place, to a better, it is a benefit. And this is a benefit: for, here is a Feaſt holden for it. Then did ſome evill paſſe over us; or we our ſelves paſſe over into ſome better eſtate.

I. The Antecedent. 1 What is meant by Paſcha. * Exod. 12. 26.

The Law muſt be our line, to lead us along this Text; the Character of it is legall. How was it there? Evill paſſed them; a deſtroying Angell, that ſlew the firſt borne in every houſe through Egypt, but paſſed them over, and touched them not. And yet there was another: They paſſed out of Egypt, to the Land of promiſe, over the Red ſea. They paſſed it well: As for Pharaoh and his hoſt, they periſhed in it. Yee ſhall finde both theſe thus ſet downe together (Heb. XI. in the 28. verſe) the Deſtroyer did paſſe over them: (In the 29. verſe) they did paſſe over into Canaan. The Egyptians periſhed in both; had no Paſſeover: GODS people had. Exod. 12. 29.

But what is this to us? Here is Paſcha, but where is Noſtrum? We are not in Egypt, no feare of our firſt borne; here is no deſtroying Angell: And we are farre enough from the red ſea. What then, if our caſe fall out to be like, if our danger as great: and ſo it will. Here we live, we call it a vale of miſery; in a world, whereof Egypt is but a corner, and was but a Type; Nor their Pharaoh but a limme of the great Pharaoh, that tyrannizeth here in this world. [a] We have every one a ſoule; it is not our firſt borne, it is more; even Vnicam meam (as the Pſalmiſt calleth it) the firſt, and all that we have. [3] It skils not for the Angell: GODS wrath is ſtill ready to be revealed on our ſinnes: from that, commeth all deſtruction. The Angels doe but carrie the phials of it. [4] And death will match the red ſea: all muſt through it, and ſome paſſe well, but the moſt part periſh.

2 Our Paſſeover. What it is. Pſal. 84. 6. Pſal. 22. 20. Apoc. 16.

Now then for Noſtrum. Our abode here is as dangerous, as theirs in Egypt: as many deſtroyers, yea, as many Crocodiles too; and therefore we need a Paſcha, to eſcape GODS wrath, to have it paſſe over us here.

And yet, there reſts another beſides. For, how well we ſhall do with that former, I know not; but, to the latter we muſt all come, to death, to the Red-ſea-brinke: and there, either periſh, or paſſe well over, one of the twaine. Sure, Paſcha noſtrum is not more than needs; Paſcha nobis opus eſt, wee need one (a Paſſeover) no leſſe than they.

Nay, I goe farther: Ours is ſuch as theirs. Theirs is nihil ad noſtrum, nothing to ours. For, what talke wee of a deliverie of one poore Nation; and that, but from a bodily danger; and but one neither? Call ye that a Paſſeover? How much more then, ours, the great, and generall Paſſeover, that freeth us? that freeth all mankinde, from the totall deſtruction both of body and ſoule; and that by an eternall delivery, both here and for ever? How to eſcape that, GODS wrath, ira ventura; that is the true Paſſeover. And what mention we Canaan? Is there any compariſon, between the two kingdomes of Canaan, and Heaven, whither CHRIST ſhall make us paſſe? Indeed, Paſcha noſtrum is it: ours, and none but ours. Theirs, but a ſhadow; Ours, the ſubſtantiall, very Paſſeover indeed. When all is done, Paſcha noſtrum is it. Matth. 3. 7.

Will ye give me leave, to preſent you with a meditation upon this point? it will fit

fit the feaſt well, and ſerves us for a preparation to our Paſſeover, and I will not fetch it farre, but even from the word Paſſeover. For, all the labour is, but to make us feele the want of it.

Eccleſ 1.4. Eſt ſapientis querela, tranſire generationem, aliam ſuccedere, aliam quoque tranſire. It is that, the Apoſtle tels us, and we feele it, Mundus tranſit, that the world paſſes:
Chap.7.31. Παράγει (ſaith S. Paul) ἔρχεται (ſaith S. Iohn) in the Active, and Paſsive both, the world
1 Ioh.2.17. paſſeth away. Et en Paſcha, en tranſitus, a kinde of Paſſeover of the world it ſelfe, of Heb 13. 14. this tranſitory world (as we terme it) Vbi non habemus manentem, &c. where we cannot long have any abode.

2 But then, if we look home to our ſelves, we ſhall finde another Paſſeover there;
Pſal 90.10. even that of the Pſalme, Citò tranſit & avolamus, we paſſe as a ſhadow, as a dreame, when one awaketh; we bring our yeares to an end, as it were a tale that is told. Citò tranſit, Iames 3.6. ſo ſoone paſſeth it and we are gone. Saint Iames very excellently expreſſeth it: Τροχὸς, a very wheele of our nature whirling about: That the world paſſeth; but we, faſter than it.

3 But the third is the complaint indeed: that tranſitory though this world be, and we yet more tranſitory; yet we cannot paſſe it quietly for all that. But, ſome wipe we have of the Angels ſword; at leaſt-wiſe, in feare we live ſtill, of thoſe in the Pſal.91.5,6. Pſalme, Sagitta volans, or Terror nocturnus, or Incurſus, or Dæmon meridianus; one Apoc.6.4. of Egypts ten plagues: One of the Angels phials, or of the Horſes, red, black, or
5. pale, are ſtill abroad; much adoe we have, without ſome miſ-hap, to paſſe this life
8. that paſſeth ſo faſt.

4 But laſtly, ſay that we have the good hap, to ſcape well here; yet hence we muſt yer long, to the red-ſea-bank: we muſt come to death all: and death is not Interitus (a finall end) but Tranſitus (a paſſage over to a new eſtate.) There, is the maine perill, that we miſcarrie not; (great odds there is, for many doe;) but paſſe well over into the land of promiſe.

Theſe foure Paſſeovers it will not be amiſſe to think of. And, in all theſe, need we not one, to helpe us well through, that theſe perils may well paſſe us over? Need we not one, that may make the red ſea paſſable for us, that we may well come to the land of the living?

And now then, tell me, what is the ſumme of all our deſires? Is it not Bonum Paſcha? While we are here, the Deſtroyers may paſſe, and when we go hence, we may well get over? Is it not, Sic tranſire tranſitoria, ut tranſeundo perveniamus ad æterna? So to paſſe theſe tranſitory things, that we may well come to thoſe, that ſhall never paſſe? A good Paſſeover is our wiſh; and againſt we ſhall need it, a good one GOD ſend us. Upon the point, if we weigh well, Salus ipſa nihil eſt, niſi Paſcha. The benefit of all benefits (ſalvation it ſelfe) is compriſed, in this word; is nothing but a Paſſeover: As much, in one word, as the other, tranſire à malo, to be ſaved from evill; tranſire ad bonum, to be ſet ſafe in good: To theſe two may all be reduced. This is all we need, and all we ſeeke. And this Paraſceue (or preparation) will ſet us in hand to ſeeke it, and make us ſay (with our SAVIOUR) deſiderio deſideravi ut, &c. earneſtly to

3 Who it is. The next point; if we need one, and if we deſire one, where ſhall we have one?
Mark 16.3. Quis revolvet nobis hunc lapidem? Who will roll us away this ſtone (ſaid the Women this day.) To our line againe, the law. How did they there, in the Type? (for, ſo it muſt bee, in the truth.) They had a meanes, tha helped them through both, which (per Metonymiam cauſæ) they called their Paſſeover. And it was a Lambe.

CHRIST the Lambe of GOD. Have we ſo? yes: Ecce AGNUS DEI (ſaid the Baptiſt, at the firſt ſight.) But every Lambe will not ſerve; it muſt be a Paſchall Lambe. Is CHRIST that Lambe?
Iohn 1.29. S. Iohn puts it out of queſtion: That which was ſaid of the Paſchall Lambe [ye ſhall Iohn 19.36. not breake a bone of him] he applies to CHRIST; and ſaith, in Him the Scripture was fulfilled. Eodem tempore, illorum, & noſtrum: adductus in Feſto ipſo.

Then,

Then a Paſchall Lambe, He is; and ſo in caſe, to be made a paſſe-over of. But, a Paſſe-over He is not, till He be offered. For (if ye marke it) offering is a paſsing over of that is offered, to Him, we offer it to: Offered He muſt be. Et oblatus eſt (ſaith Eſay) offered He was. 4 Chriſt offered in a ſacrifice. Eſay 53.7.

Oblatus; ſo He may be, and yet alive: but the word is ἐσφαγμένον, immolatus, offered, and offered in ſacrifice. A live Lambe is not it; it is a Lambe ſlaine muſt be our Paſſe-over. And CHRIST is a Lambe ſlaine (ſaith S. Iohn) from the beginning, and the ſprinkling of His blood in Baptiſme, maketh the Deſtroyer paſſe over us. Apoc 5.12. 13.8.

There be many kindes of offerings: This determineth which of them CHRIST was. Such an one, as we muſt epulari; that is the Peace-offering. For, of the Peace-offering, the fleſh was to be eaten: Part GOD had, and part the offerer eate; in ſigne of perfect peace and reconciliation betweene them. CHRISTS blood not only in the Baſon, for Baptiſme; but, in the Cup, for the other Sacrament. A Sacrifice; ſo, to be ſlain: A propitiatorie Sacrifice; ſo, to be eaten. As a Peace-offering. Levit.7.17.

Thus CHRIST is a Paſſe-over. But, where is noſtrum, without which all this is nothing? Propter nos, for us, that maketh it ours. That which is for us offered, is ours: and we ſo reckon it. The Lambe was not ſlaine, for it ſelfe: (Quid agnus committeret?) but for the firſt borne: So CHRIST; not for Himſelfe (Nothing worthy death in Him, witneſſe Pilate;) but, for us. 5 Our intereſt: propter nos. Exod.13.15. Luk.23.4. 14. 15.

For us, that is, for our ſalvation, to ſave us: Save us, from what? from our ſinnes. And here now, we are come to the point of the Paſſe-over indeed: the quitting us, and the manner of quitting us from our ſins. All the buſineſſe whereof was carried in the very manner of a Paſſe-over. To ſave us from our ſins.

Firſt, ſin it ſelfe, what is it but a tranſgreſsion, or paſsing over the lines and limits of our Dutie, ſet us in the Law of GOD? And why hovers the deſtroying Angell over us? Why goeth he not on his way, but ſeeks to bring deſtruction upon our heads? What is the marke, he ſtriketh at? What, but our ſinnes? But for them, no Deſtroyer ſhould have power over us. But for them that hang ſo heavie on us, and ſo preſſe us downe, we ſhould goe thorow well enough. 1 ἀνομία.

Why then, Hic eſt omnis fructus, ut auferatur peccatum: All is but this, to have our ſins taken away. And who ſhall take them away? Ecce qui tollit peccata mundi; that taketh away ours; nay the ſins of the world. 2 Iohn 1.29.

How taketh away? God hath taken away thy ſin (ſaith Nathan to David:) the word is not abſtulit, but tranſtulit (that is) transferendo abſtulit; or as the Hebrew word is) tranſire fecit: to take it from David, make it paſſe from Him upon ſome others; (that is) even the Son of David, Him GOD hath given us, to paſſe our ſins over, from us to Him. 3 2 Sam.12.13. העניר

And when that? when He was offered, made a ſacrifice for us. It is the nature of every Sacrifice transferendo auferre: He that offers it, layes his hands on the head of it, confeſſes his ſinnes over it, and his juſt deſert to be ſmitten by the Deſtroyer; but prayes, he may put this offering, in his owne place, and what is due to him (that is death) may be transferred from him, and light on the offering; that may ſerve, and hee ſcape. 4 Levit.1.4. 3.2. 8. 13.

In all offerings thus it was: but in the Paſchall Lambe ſpecially: that it hath carried away the name, from all the reſt, to be called the Paſſe-over only. In it (evidently) the death of the firſt borne was tranſlated over upon the poore Lambe. The Lambe died, the firſt borne was ſaved; his death paſſed over unto the Lamb: that it was juſtly called the Paſſe-over, for ſo it was. 5 Exod.12.13.

But much more juſtly CHRIST: who (ſure) was even a Paſſe-over throughout from the firſt to the laſt. At the firſt: His birth, what was it but a Paſſe-over, from the boſome of His Father, to the wombe of His Mother, to take our nature? And His Circumciſion what, but a Paſſe-over, from the ſtate of one free, to the condition of one bond, 6 bond, to undertake our debt? And at the laſt, His Reſurrection (this day) what was it, but a paſſage from death to life? and His Aſcenſion another, de mundo ad Patrem, from the world to His Father? Firſt and laſt, a Paſſe-over He was.

7

But, above all, His death, His offering was it: then, He was Paſcha pro nobis, indeed. For then, He paſſed over into the eſtate of us wretched ſinners, laid off His owne (as it were) and took upon Him our perſon; became tanquam unus è nobis, nay tanquam omnes nos. For, GOD tooke from us, and laid them on Him, Poſuit ſuper Eum iniquitates omnium noſtrûm, Laid upon Him (our Paſſe-over) the tranſgreſſions of us all. Fecit peccatum, made Him ſinne for us; there, our Sinnes paſſed from us; fecit maledictum, made Him a Curſe for us; there the Puniſhment of our ſinnes paſſed from us to Him. Then, and there, paſſed the Deſtroyer over us.

2 Cor. 5. 21.

Gal. 3. 13.

Over us, to Him. But, when He came at Him, He paſſed Him not. Tranſeat à me, calix would not be heard; and it was Paſcha, non paſcha; a Paſſe-over to us, No paſſe-over to Him. We had one: He had none. Him it paſſed not, but light upon Him ſo heavie, that, it made a ſweat of bloudy drops, paſſe from Him; yea, life and ſoule and all, yer it left Him. At which His Paſſion; He was a right Paſſe-over; Chriſtus πάσχων, Chriſtus paſcha. Then, He was pro nobis; then, He was noſtrum: CHRIST, CHRIST offered, offered for us. Of which paſſing our ſinnes to Him, and GOD's wrath over us, this day and the action of this day, is a memoriall.

Luke 22. 44.

II.

The Conſequent

And ſo let us paſſe over from the Antecedent, to the Conſequent: which is, Itaque Celebremus, Therefore let us keepe a Feaſt. A Feaſt, and CHRIST ſlaine, and ſo handled as He was? A faſt rather, one would thinke. True: but that, we heard againe of ours; ſo did not they, or theirs. For, this, He came againe ſafe; and opened unto us a new paſſage, by His ſecond Paſſe-over. All wee ſpake of right now, was done the third day ſince: But, we hold not our Feaſt, till this day. For, till this day, we knew not, what was become of Him. Paſſed He was hence; but, whether in His paſſage He had miſcarried or no, we knew not. But now, this day, by His Reſurrection (we know) He is well paſſed over; and ſo, omni modo, a true Paſſe-over. So now, we hold our Feaſt, as a feaſt ſhould be holden, with joy. And, a double Feaſt it is: [1] One, that by His ſuffering, He paſſed from life to death for our ſinnes. [2] A ſecond, that by His riſing againe, this day, He paſſed from death to life for our juſtification. And ſo, two Paſſe-overs in one. He died, and by His death made the Deſtroyer paſſe over us: He roſe againe, and by it, made death (as the Red-ſea) paſſable for us. Itaque celebremus, Itaque epulemur.

Rom. 4. 25.

Ἑορτάζωμεν, Celebremus. Epulemur.

Ἑορτάζωμεν, the word is one, but two wayes it is turned. [1] Some read, Celebremus. [2] Some other, Epulemur. But well: for firſt, it is kindly, when we keepe a feaſt, we make a feaſt. But this, this feaſt is not celebrated ſine hoc epulo. If CHRIST be a propitiatory ſacrifice, a Peace-offering, I ſee not how we can avoid, but the fleſh of our peace-offering muſt be eaten in this feaſt by us, or els we evacuate the offering utterly, and loſe the fruit of it: And was there a Paſſe-over heard of, and the lamb not eaten? Time was, when He was thought no good Chriſtian, that thought, he might do one without the other. No Celebremus, without Epulemur in it.

1 Immolatus and Celebremus.

But firſt, will ye lay the former and this together, Immolatus and celebremus; and ſee how well it falleth out with us. Immolatus is His part, to be ſlaine; Celebremus is ours, to hold a Feaſt: Good-friday, His; Eaſter-day ours. His premiſſes, bitter; our concluſion joyfull: a loving partition, on His part; an happy, on ours.

2 Immolatus and Epulemur.

Againe, will we lay Immolatus to epulemur. That the Paſſe-over doth not conclude in the ſacrifice, the taking away of ſinne onely; (that is) in a pardon, and there an end: But, in a feaſt; which is a ſigne, not of forgiveneſſe alone, but of perfect amity, full propitiation: Ye may propius ire, draw neare unto Him; ye are reſtored to full grace and favour, to eat and drink at His Table.

Heb. 10. 12.

Beſides, there was an offering in Immolatus; and here is another (a new one) in Epulemur. Offered for us, there; offered to us, here: There, per modum victimæ, here, here per modum epuli. To make an offering of; To make a refreshing of. For us in the Sacrifice: to us, in the Sacrament. This makes a perfect Passe-over. We read both in the Gospell, πάσχα θύειν, to sacrifice the Passe-over; and πάσχα φαγεῖν, to eat it. It was eaten (the Paschal Lambe) and it was a sacrifice: It cannot be denied, there is a flat Text for it, Exod. 12.27. Both propounded here, in the termes of the Text: [1] The Sacrifice, in Immolatus: [2] The Supper, in Epulemur. Luke 22. 7. Matth 26. 17. Iohn 18. 28.

Celebremus, and Epulemur. There be, that referre Celebremus to the Day; Epulemur, to the Action: and so it may, well: Both Day, and Action have interest in this Text. And then, the Text is against them, that have never an Easter-day in their Calender. But the Fathers usually referre both to the Action. Their reason: Because (in truth) the Eucharist now, in the Gospell, is that, the Passe-over was, under the Law: The Antitype answering, to their type of the Paschal Lambe. It is plaine by the immediate passage of it from the one to the other: that, no sooner done, but this began. Looke, how soone the Paschal Lambe eaten, presently the holy Eucharist instituted, to succeed in the place of it for ever. And yet more plaine, that this very Scripture of my Text was thought so pertinent, and so proper to this Action, as it was alwayes said, or sung at it. And, I know no cause, but it might be so still. Two things CHRIST there gave us in charge: [1] ἀνάμνησις, Remembring, and [2] λῆψις, Receiving: The same two, Saint Paul (but, in other termes) [1] καταγγελία, shewing forth; [2] κοινωνία, communicating. Of which, Remembring and Shewing forth referre to celebremus: Receiving and Communicating, to epulemur here. Chap. 21. 25. Chap. 11. 25.

The first, in remembrance of Him, CHRIST: What of Him? Mortem Domini, His death (saith Saint Paul:) to shew forth the LORDS death. Remember Him, that we will, and stay at home; thinke of Him there: Nay shew Him forth ye must. That we will, by a Sermon of Him: Nay, it must be Hoc facite. It is not ment all thinking, or verball speaking: there must be actually somewhat done, to celebrate this Memory. That done, to the holy symboles, that was done to Him, to His body, and His bloud, in the Passe-over: Breake the one, powre out the other; to represent κλώμενον how His sacred body was broken; and ἐκχυνόμενον, how his precious bloud was shed. And in Corpus fractum, and Sanguis fusus there is Immolatus. This is it, in the Eucharist, that answereth to the Sacrifice, in the Passe-over: The memoriall, to the figure. To them it was: hoc facite in Mei præfigurationem, doe this in prefiguration of Me: To us it is, Doe this, in commemoration of Me. To them, Prænuntiare; to us, Annuntiare: there is the difference. By the same rules, that theirs was; by the same, may ours be termed a Sacrifice. In rigour of speech, neither of them: for (to speake after the exact manner of Divinitie) There is but one onely sacrifice, veri nominis, properly so called: That is CHRISTS death. And that sacrifice but once actually performed, at His death: but ever before represented, in figure, from the beginning; and ever since repeated, in memory, to the worlds end. That onely absolute; all else relative to it, representative of it, operative by it. The Lambe, but once actually slaine, in the fulnesse of time: but vertually, was from the beginning, is, and shall be, to the end of the world. That, the Center, in which their lines and ours, their types and our antitypes doe meet. While yet this offering was not, the hope of it was kept alive, by the prefiguration of it, in theirs. And after it is past, the memory of it is still kept fresh in minde, by the commemoration of it, in ours. So it was the will of GOD; that so, there might be with them a continuall fore-shewing, and with us a continuall shewing forth the LORDS death till he come againe. Hence it is, that what names theirs carried, ours doe the like, and the Fathers make no scruple at it; no more need we. The Apostle (in the X. Chapter) compareth this of ours, to the Immolata of the Heathen: And (to the Hebrews) Habemus aram, matcheth it with the Sacrifice of the Iewes. And we know the rule of comparisons: They must be ejusdem generis. [1] Celebremus: In the Sacrifice. 1 Cor. 11. 26. Luke 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 26. Heb. 10. 4. Heb. 9. 28. 1 Cor. 10. 21. &c. Heb. 13. 10.

Neither doe we stay here, but proceed to the other [Epulemur.] For, there is another thing yet to be done, which doth present to us that, which Celebremus doth represent. [2] Epulemur: In the Sacrament.

repreſent. From the Sacrament, is the applying the Sacrifice. The Sacrifice, in generall, Pro omnibus. The Sacrament, in particular, to each ſeverall receiver, Pro ſingulis. Wherein, that is offered to us, that was offered for us; that, which is common to all, made proper to each one, while each taketh his part of it; and made proper by a communion, and union, like that of meat and drinke, which is moſt neerely and inwardly made ours, and is inſeparable for ever. There, Celebremus paſſeth with the repreſentation: But here, Epulemur (as a nouriſhment) abideth with us ſtill. In that wee ſee; and in this we taſte, how gracious the LORD is, and hath beene to us. And ſo much for theſe two, as two meanes, to partake the Benefit, and we to uſe them: and as Duties required of us, and we to performe them.

Pſal. 34. 8.

Will ye marke one thing more: That Epulemur doth here referre to Immolatus. To CHRIST, not every way conſidered, but as when He was offered. CHRISTS body that now is; True: but not CHRISTS body as now it is, but as then it was, when it was offered, rent, and ſlaine, and ſacrificed for us: Not as now He is glorified; for ſo, He is not, ſo He cannot be immolatus; For He is immortall, and impaßible. But, as then He was, when he ſuffered death (that is) paßible and mortall. Then, in His paßible eſtate, did He inſtitute this of ours, to be a memoriall of His Paßible, and Paßio, both. And we are, in this action, not only carried up to CHRIST (Surſum corda) but, we are alſo carried backe, to CHRIST; as He was at the very inſtant, and in the very act of His offering. So, and no otherwiſe, doth this Text teach. So, and no otherwiſe doe we repreſent Him. By the incomprehenſible power of His eternall Spirit, not He alone, but He, as at the very act of His offering, is made preſent to us, and we incorporate into His death, and inveſted in the benefits, of it. If an Hoſt could be turned into Him now glorified as He is, it would not ſerve: CHRIST offered is it: Thither we muſt looke. [a] To the Serpent lift up, thither we muſt repaire, [b] even ad cadaver: we muſt [c] hoc facere, doe that, is then done. So, and no otherwiſe, is this Epulare to be conceived. And ſo (I thinke) none will ſay they doe or can turne Him.

[a] Iohn 3. 14.
[b] Luke 17. 37.
[c] 1 Cor. 11. 24.

1 Itaque: we bound to keepe it.

Now, all we have to doe, is to ſhew what we thinke of this Itaque, whether it ſhall conclude us or no: and that we ſhew it by our practice; for, other anſwer, the Apoſtle will take none. If we play faſt or looſe with it on this faſhion (as divers doe) upon the matter as good to ſay, The HOLY GHOST cannot tell, how to make an argument: CHRIST is offered, but no Itaque epulemur, for all that. Thus we will not ſay, for very ſhame. What then? will we diſpenſari contra Apoſtolum (which we blame as a foule abuſe in the Pope? and yet, I cannot ſee, but every meane perſon takes upon Him Papall authority, in this caſe;) and, as oft as we liſt, diſpenſe with the Apoſtle and his Itaque; exempt our ſelves from his Concluſion: That we will not ſeeme to doe. No: it is not at Itaque: The truth is, it is at Non in fermento, we ſticke: we love our leven ſo well (be it malice, or be it ſome other leven as bad:) ſo well we love it, we will not part with it; we loath the Lambe, rather than the leven ſhall out. But, in the meane time, there is no trifling with this concluſion; there is no diſpenſing with the Apoſtle: there is no wanton wilfull diſabling our ſelves will ſerve. Itaque will not be ſo anſwered: Not, but with Epulemur. It layeth a neceſſitie upon every one, to be a gueſt at this Feaſt. The Iewes (we know) were held hard to theirs, upon a great paine, to have (not their names, but) their ſoules cut out from GODS people. And is it a leſſe treſpaſſe for Chriſtians to paſſe by this Paſſe-over? or hath the Church leſſe band, to exact like care at our hands? No indeed: wee muſt know, the HOLY GHOST can tell how to inferre: And that this Itaque of the Apoſtles is a binding concluſion. To the next point.

Exod. 12. 19.

2 Direction how to keepe it.

Abſolutely, we are to keepe this Feaſt: but not to keepe it Quovis modo: No matter how: prepared, unprepared: in any garment in any ſort. No: this Non and this Sed; Not on that manner, but this; ſhew plainly every manner will not ſerve. What then is the Manner? not in old leven. With the Paſſe-over he began, and he holds him to it ſtill: that, if it be a Paſſe-over, reaſon vvould, it ſhould be kept like a Paſſe-over even, even in the ſame manner. Now, the Paſſe-over was not a looſe lawleſſe thing; to hold it in any faſhion, it skilled not how. No: it had his lawes. Even that, Hæc eſt lex Paſchalis (ye ſhall reade it, Exod. 12. 43.) This is the law of keeping it.

Indeed, diverſe lawes it had in type, that concerne us in truth: Among the reſt this, for one, in the Text. The Lambe would not be eaten, with every kinde of bread: Every paſte was not for this Feaſt; not levened, in any wiſe. Such an antipathie there was betweene leven, and it, as it might not (I will not ſay, come to the board; but not) be endured in the houſe, all the Feaſt long, though it were neither taſted nor touched. If it were not throwen out; if any never ſo little of it remained in any corner, the Law was broken, the Feaſt illegitimate. To make it up then a perfect Paſſe-over; here is another yet (which I called our Paſſe-over duty:) the not ſtaying ſtill, in our old leven; but paſsing over (as it were) to a new paſte, a neceſſary condition for the right holding this Feaſt. For ſweet bread was ſo proper to the Paſſe-over, as (Luke 22.) ye ſhall finde, they be but two divers names, of one and the ſame thing.

1 Non inſermentum. Not with the old Leven.

Exod. 12. 19.

Luke 22. 7.

Omnia in figuram illis (ſaith the Apoſtle) With them, all was in type: What is the Spirit of this letter? What meant by leven? The Apoſtle tels us, the old leven of Ægypt, is our former vitious courſe of life, ſowred with the leven of the old Adam; and Nova Conſperſio is newneſſe of life. The time of offering the Lambe, is the time of caſting out this. Meet, if we would have our ſinnes paſſe from us, wee ſhould paſſe from them alſo, and throw their leven out.

1 Cor. 10. 11.

And well is Sinne reſembled to leven. Leven will grow noyſome, if it be kept long: and ſinne, if it have lyen long in us, or we in it, turnes to a certaine ſowreneſſe, that we our ſelves feele an unpleaſant ſavour or upbraiding of it, in our ſoules. Our SAVIOVR felt it ſo (I am ſure;) the Vinegar He tooke, ſhewed the reliſh of it. By which upbraiding, we finde, we need an Expurgate for it, as it were a corrupt humour in our ſoules, that needed to be purged out.

Generally, all old leven whatſoever: namely, two ſorts of it, 1 κακία, and 2 πονηρία turned, Naughtineſſe and Malice. The words, in their owne nature (as they properly ſignifie) 1 One noteth a looſe licentious lewdneſſe, lightly ending in Luſt. 2 The other, an unquiet working wickedneſſe, that will take paines to doe a ſhrewd turne, commonly the effect of Malice. The ſinnes of Luſt are well ſet out, in old corrupt leven: for, ſo they end, moſt-what in corruption, and rottenneſſe. The ſinnes of malice likewiſe. For, as leven, it makes men ſwell one againſt another as if they would burſt; and ſowre are the fruits of it, and unpleaſant, as any leven in the world.

These two to be caſt out, as thoſe that have a ſpeciall antipathie with this Feaſt and Offering. For, no agreement betweene a foule life, and the feaſt of an undefiled Lambe. Nor, no fellowſhip, betweene ſowre malice, and the feaſt of Sweet-bread. And theſe two are ſpecially named, becauſe they were the faults wherewith the Corinthians ſpecially were levened, to whom he writes. Inceſt (at the firſt Verſe:) as (we know) Corinth heard evill for looſeneſſe: There is Nequitia. And againe, ſwelling one againſt another (at the ſecond) there is Malice.

As, to rid our ſelves of this leven; ſo to furniſh our ſelves (as with new paſte) with the two leven-leſſe vertues, Sinceritie and Truth. Sinceritie (that is) cleanneſſe of life: (a word thought to be taken from Honey, which is then mel ſincerum, when it is ſine cera, unmingled, without wax, or any baggage in it.) εἰλικρινεία, the Greeke word is (properly) of uncounterfeit wares; ſuch, as we may κρίνειν ἐν εἰλῇ bring forth, and ſhew them in the Sunne; as need not the falſe light of a cloſe ſhop, to utter them. But, Truth, that, runnes thorow all; flat againſt all kinde of leven: if it have any manner leven, true it is not: and ſo, out it muſt.

Sed, &c.

1. The leven of Doctrine. Matth. 16. 6. 12.

Of leven in the Goſpell, I finde three ſorts interpreted to our hands, that we cannot miſtake. CHRIST willed his Diſciples, to beware of the leven of the Phariſees and Sadduces. It is after ſaid, He meant it of their doctrine, that was full of corrupt leven. 1. The Phariſees; of the leven of ſuperſtition, conſiſting in Phylacteries, phraſes, and obſervances, and little elſe. 2. The Sadduces; of a leven that ſmelt ſtrong of prophanenesſe, in their libertie of prophecying, calling in queſtion Angels, and Spirits, and the Reſurrection it ſelfe. 3. And a third leven CHRIST names, the leven of Herod; ware that too: Many times, it is the bane of true Religion, when GODS truth and worſhip muſt be moulded up with Ieroboams, and with Herods ends; ſquared to them juſt, as is fitteſt to doe their turnes; that Ieroboam may be ſafe. No ſuperfluous Caveat: many times, this marreth all, Let all be abandoned; Phariſees, Sadduces, Herods, and the truth take place.

Marke 8. 15.

2. The leven of life. Luke 12. 1.

Now, as in that place, the Phariſees leven, is Doctrine: ſo, in another, I finde, that CHRIST expounds it hypocriſie: and that is meerely oppoſite to truth, in meaning, ſpeaking, and dealing. The Phariſee was a great dealer with this leven. He had it on his face, to make him looke ſowre; men might take notice, when they faſted. Hee had it on his tongue; Rabbi, O you teach the truth, you reſpect no mans perſon; when they ſought to cut His throat. He had it in his whole courſe; all for ſhew; to ſeeme that, they were not: Gabbatha, without; and Golgotha, within.

Matth. 6. 16. Matth 23. 7. 27.

But yet, even they, though they uſed it, they taught it not for a doctrine; nor avowed not the lawfull uſe of it; that one might ſpeake the one halfe without, and the other halfe within: (as our Phariſees now doe.) Men, ye ſhall never have any ſincere truth from them. Search them, they have ſtill a peece of leven in their boſome: ſpeake ſo, and deale ſo, as if they would take the ſentence by the end, and turne it cleane againſt the Apoſtle; to purge out all his ſweet bread, all ſinceritie, and truth; and hold their Paſſe-over in leven, or not at all. Antichriſts goat may be ſo eaten: The Lambe CHRIST cannot. To the Lambes nature (that is ſincere) nothing ſo contrary, as this, to meane, ſpeake, or deale un-ſincerely.

3. The leven of company corrupt in life.

You ſee a leven of Doctrine, and Life: (that is, the leven of the Goſpell.) A third there is (the leven of the Epiſtle) and that is of Corrupt company: and that is (in very deed) the leven of this Text. For, when the Apoſtle would have this leven here purged, what meanes hee? To have the inceſtuous Corinthian removed, and caſt out of the Fellowſhip of the faithfull, by the Cenſures of the Church. True: but thoſe, not in every mans power. But, this is: To avoid, and ſhunne them, and their company: ſo, we may; and ſo, we are bound to caſt them out.

There is very great danger in perſons ſo levened; great ſcandall; even to the well diſpoſed: but, farre greater danger, to the moſt; that will ſoone take this leven: Our nature is apt to take it; it is eaſily fermented that way. As much good leven, as will ſerve three pecks, ſo much evill will doe more than ſerve three buſhels, and never leave till it have ſowred them all. That, except this be looked to, all the reſt will be to ſmall purpoſe.

In Religion.

Now, when Saint Paul ſpeakes of perſons thus levened, he meanes not only ſuch, as are lewd of life, tainted that way: but, even ſuch alſo, as are unſound in matter of Religion, and have a ſowre ſavour that way. Here (to the Corinthians) he would have the inceſtuous perſon caſt out, with his levened life: But (to the Galathians, after) hee preſſeth the ſame point againſt another kinde; ſuch as levened the Goſpell, with MOSES ceremonies, and ſo corrupted the truth in Religion; and them he would have cut off: both Corinthian and Galathian leven both muſt out. And marke: upon the ſame reaſon, both; and in the very ſame words. That a little leven doth not a little hurt; but otherwhile, marreth the whole batch of bread. Evill doctrine is againſt Truth: Evill life, againſt walking in the truth: Evill company will bring us to both. Therefore, away with them: but, away with this eſpecially. If they will not purge out their leven, purge them out. And that eſpecially, againſt this Feaſt, in the nature whereof, there is a contrarietie to all leven.

Gal. 5. 3. 4, &c. 9. 12.

Gal 5. 9.

Now

Now then, this is our concluſion: Come we muſt, and Itaque celebremus. This is our Caution: Thus we muſt come, Non in fermento, ſed azymis. If we ſay; it skils not, whither we come; Itaque meets with us: If we ſay; it skils not, how we come, Non in fermento meets with us too. It is, with us here, as with the Prophet; when we would heale one, the other breaketh forth. If we preſſe Non in fermento, we loſe Itaque epulemur, they come not at all: No Feaſt. If we urge Itaque epulemur, they come; how? levened, and unlevened, all; clap them down together. We need a Quomodo intrâſti huc? to keepe ſome backe: And yet, we need a Compelle intrare, to bring others in. But, the manner, but the caution, remember that. The maine concluſion is, that we come. The other we muſt not leave undone: But, this (peremptorily) we are bound to doe. Hoſea 7.1. Matth. 22.12. Luke 14.23.

The Apoſtle binds us to doe it: The time to doe it, now. For, if this follow: CHRIST is offered, Therefore we are to come to His feaſt: This will follow as ſtrongly, CHRIST is now offered, therefore let us now come. Goe by degrees: The Chriſtian Paſſeover (our Paſſeover) a time it muſt have; ſometime it is to be kept. We would doe it, at that time, when it were beſt for us to doe it. When beſt for us to doe it, but at the time, He did it Himſelfe? And that did He, even at this feaſt, now. Now then, at this feaſt, it is moſt kindly to do it: moſt like to pleaſe Him, and to proſper with us.

And indeed, if at any time we will do it, Quando Paſcha, niſi in Paſcha, what time is the Paſſeover ſo proper, as at the feaſt of the Paſſeover? Quando tempus epulandi, niſi quando tempus immolandi? When the time of His receiving, as at the time of His offering? Therefore they both, the feaſt and the lambe, have one name; to ſhew the neere conjunction, that ſhould be between them. When the day commeth, to remember what was done on the day; and ſo, what we to do, on that day. Paſcha quod celebramus, to put us in minde, of Paſcha quod epulamur. For, tell me, will the ſacrifice commemorative, or the Sacrament communicative ever fall more fit, than, when that was offered, which we are to commemorate, and to communicate withall? Is not the fitteſt time of doing it, the time when it was done? of Hoc facite, then, when Hoc factum eſt? So that without any more adoe, the ſeaſon it ſelfe pleadeth for this effectually.

And now is the time of Expurgate, for our bodies: the corrupt humours, that leven it, now we caſt them out. And why not, now likewiſe, thoſe that lie ſowre in our ſoules? And even Natures Paſſeover, the generall Paſſeover is even at this time, both in heaven and earth. Above, in heaven: where, the Sun having paſt over all the Signes is come about, and renewes his courſe, at the firſt Signe in the Zodiack. And beneath in earth, from the ſharpe time of Winter, and fermenting time of the earth, to the renewing ſweet time, the time of the Spring, wherein there is nova conſperſio, in nature it ſelfe. And why ſhould not the Paſſeover of grate be now likewiſe in ſeaſon, and have due concurrence with nature?

Sure, all agree well, if we but agree our ſelves. And if we agree, for our parts, to doe the dayes duty, CHRIST will not be behinde with His, the dayes benefit. But, during our time, and in the houre of death, be our true Paſſeover; ſhielding us from all deadly miſhaps, while we here live; and giving us a ſure and ſafe paſſage at our end, even a paſſage to the laſt and great Paſſeover of all; the truth of that, whereof theirs was the ſhadow, and ours the image now. For, we have not yet done with our Lambe; nor the work of this Paſſeover is not yet fully accompliſhed.

There is a farther matter yet behinde: for as this feaſt looketh back, as a memoriall of that, is already paſt and done for us: ſo doth it forward, and is to us a pledge of another, and a better yet to come, The feaſt of the marriage of the Lamb here, that is our Paſſeover: where, whoſoever ſhall be a gueſt, the Angels pronounce him happy and bleſſed for ever. Apoc. 19.7. 9.

That, is the laſt and great Feaſt indeed, when all Deſtroyers and all deſtructions ſhall ceaſe and come to an end for evermore; and we heare that joyfull voice, Tranſi in gaudium Domini; Paſſe over into the joy of the LORD; the joyes of Heaven: Joyes not mingled with any ſowre leven (as this worlds joy is) but pure and entire: nor tranſient (as Mat. 25. 21.

that of this world) and ever flitting and forſaking us then ſooneſt, when we thinke, we have beſt hold of them; but permanent, and abiding ſtill. A Paſſeover, that will never be paſſed over, but laſt and continue a Feaſt to all Eternity. Of that, this here is a pledge, if we neglect it not, as if it were not worth the taking. And He, that at this time gave us this pledge, in His good time alſo bring us to the Paſſeover, whereof this is the pledge, even to the never paſſing, but everlaſting joyes, and happineſſe, of His heavenly kingdome, through the offering of His bleſſed SONNE the very PASCHALL LAMBE. TO whom with, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XVIII. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXIII.
being EASTER-DAY.

COL. Chap. III.

Igitur, ſi con-ſurrexiſtis Cum CHRISTO, quæ ſurſum ſunt quærite, ubi CHRISTUS eſt in dextera DEI ſedens:

Quæ ſurſum ſunt ſapite, non quæ ſuper terram.

Verſ. 1. If yee then be riſen with CHRIST, ſeeke thoſe things which are above, where CHRIST ſitteth at the right hand of GOD.

2 Set your affections (or minds) on things which are above; and not on things which are on the earth.

THE Wiſdome of the Church hath ſo diſpoſed of her Readings in theſe great Feaſts; as (lightly) the Goſpell lets us know, what was done on the day, (done for us) and the Epiſtle, what is to be done by us. To inſtance in this preſent: Surrexit Dominus verè, The Lord is riſen indeed (ſaith the Goſpell:) In quo con-ſurrexiſtis & vos, and you are riſen with Him (ſaith the Epiſtle.)

2 That which is in the Goſpell, is CHRISTS Act, what He did: That which in the Epiſtle, our Agendum, what we to do.

3 Or rather, both ours: 1 what He did, matter of faith: 2 what we to doe, matter of dutie, our Agendum upon His Act.

The common ſort looke to Eaſter-day, no further than Eaſter-day fare, and Eaſter- day apparell: and other uſe they have none of it. The true Chriſtian enquireth further, what is the Agendum of the feaſt, what is the proper Act of Eaſter-day? The Church hath hers; and we have ours. Nothing more proper to a Chriſtian than to keepe time with CHRIST: to riſe with Him, this day, who this day did riſe. That ſo it may be Eaſter-day with us, as it was with Him: the ſame, that was the day of His, be alſo the day of our riſing.

The Summe. Thus then it lieth: CHRIST is riſen; And, if CHRIST, then We. If we ſo be, then we ſeek: and that we cannot, unleſſe we ſet our minds. To ſet our minds then. On what? On things above. Which above? Not on earth (ſo is the Text) but, where Chriſt is. And why there? Becauſe, where He is, there are the things, we ſeeke for, and here cannot finde. There, He is ſitting; So, at reſt: And, at the right hand; ſo, in glorie: Gods right hand, and ſo, for ever. Theſe we ſeeke; reſt, in eternall glorie. Theſe CHRIST hath found: and ſo ſhall we, if we make this our Agendum; begin, this day, to ſet our minds; to ſearch after them.

Becauſe it is to the Coloſſians, the Coloſſus, or capitall point of all, is, To riſe with CHRIST: That is the maine point. And if you would do a right Eaſter-dayes worke, doe that. It is the way to entitle us to the true holding of the Feaſt. That ſo we may, theſe two Θpera Paſchalia are commended to us. Things above, [1] to make them our ſearch, [2] to fix our minds on them. Theſe two we read, quærite, ſapite, in the Imperative: wee may, in the Indicative, as well: ζητεῖτε is quæritis, as well as quærite; and φρονεῖτε ſapitis, as well as ſapite. If ye read them imperativè, thus: This yee are to doe, to ſeeke, to ſet your minds; then be they in præcepto, and per modum Officii, by way of precept, and in nature of a dutie. If you read them indicativè, thus: If you bee riſen, then you doe ſeeke, and ſet your minds; then, they bee in elencho, and per modum ſigni, by way of triall, and in nature of a ſigne. Both well; and a good uſe of both.

The Diviſion.

I 1 2 — II 3 4 — III 5 6 7

Heb. 1.

Act. 1. 11.

The Parts lye thus. Two things are ſuppoſed: Two other inferred: And a third Two, we are referred to, or given hope of. The Two ſuppoſed, theſe: [1] CHRIST is riſen. [2] and We with CHRIST: If ye be riſen with CHRIST. The Two inferred, theſe: If riſen, then [1] to ſeeke; [2] then, to ſet our minds above, on things there, where CHRIST is. The two he referreth to, or giveth hope of, Reſt with Him in glory. [1] Reſt, to ſit: [2] Glory, at the right hand. And GOD maketh up all (the perfect number of ſeven:) For, eternall is the reſt, and eternall the Glorie, that is at His right hand.

Theſe we heard of at His Birth, in the Epiſtle then. This wee heare of againe at His Riſing, or ſecond Birth, from the grave, in the Epiſtle, now. This we ſhall heare of againe at His Aſcenſion too. This is remembred in all, as the fruit of all; at every Feaſt, ſet before us, as our hope, and all we ſeeke, To ſit with CHRIST at the right hand of GOD.

I

The two ſuppoſitions.

I

Chriſts riſing.

IF Ye be riſen. This ſeemeth prima facie to bee but a ſingle ſuppoſition: but being well looked into, reſolves into two riſings: [1] CHRIST's and [2] Ours: [1] Hee, and [2] We with Him. Of which, the firſt (CHRIST's) doth immutabiliter ſupponere; His; needs no If. It is not, If CHRIST be: but If we, with CHRIST. For, CHRIST is certainly. Three hundred yeares the World oppoſed it: Thirteene hundred (ever ſince) the World hath ſuppoſed it. And ſo let us: and ſo paſſe to our owne, and begin every yeare, to lay our grounds anew; every Eaſter, to be teaching our rudiments over againe.

There

There is an [If] that ſuppoſeth but mobiliter; may be, or not be, thereafter as wee ſeeke, and our minds be ſet. But yet (if ye marke it) is not His ſuppoſed, by it ſelfe, and ours inferred upon His; but ours ſuppoſed likewiſe: His, and ours (both) ſuppoſed under one: under one and the ſame If. And as they are cloſe lincked, that one ſuppoſition ſerveth for them: ſo are they woven together that one Prepoſition (Σὺν) holdeth them: under one Si, and one Σὺν both. The Apoſtle hath framed a new word here, for the purpoſe [con-ſurrexiſtis.] The Reſurrection, we have heard of: The con-ſurrection we are now to heare, and take notice of.

To ſet our Suppoſe right, I aske two queſtions: [1] the one of theſe [If you:] [2] the other of theſe [If you be riſen.] Si vos, if you: Why, doth the reſurrection pertaine but to ſome certaine vos? Is it not Si omnes? concernes it not all? As Chriſt died, ſo is He riſen for all: and ſhall not all riſe with him? What doe wee then doe with Si vos? Yes, all riſe with Him out of their graves: but, not all riſe to the right hand after mentioned. A great part riſe, to ſtand on the left: not to ſit on the right hand of God. With that, the Apoſtle here dealeth. The reſurrection reacheth to all: This reſurrection, to ſuch onely as Seeke, and ſet their mindes.

Our Riſing:
1 Si vos, If you.

The other, bee riſen (the tenſe) is that right? For, (ever) when we heare of the Reſurrection, we are carried ſtraight, to that of the dead, from their graves, at the latter day. We conceive: Well, if He be riſen we ſhall riſe: ſhall, in the future tenſe. But, here is newes of another, in the preter tenſe: (For, ſo it is; Bee riſen, not ſhall riſe; be alreadie, not ſhall hereafter.) It cannot be taken of that, which is to come: It ſhould then be, Si conſurgetis. But needs, of one preſent, or paſt: it is, Si conſurrexiſtis.

2 Si conſurrexiſtis, If you be riſen.

How then? Fall we in with them, qui dicunt reſurrectionem jam eſſe factam, that ſay the reſurrection is already paſt? Nor that neither. We are no Sadduces: Nor wee are not of Hymenæu's ſect, neither. But, this we beleeve: as there is one to come, of the body, at the laſt and great reſurrection, which he treats of, to the Corinthians: ſo is there alſo one, which we are to paſſe here, of the minde's; which here he commendeth to the Coloſſians.

2 Tim. 2. 18.

1 Cor. 15.

And theſe two leade us directly to the two Reſurrections, which Saint Iohn (after) doth more expreſly deliver, under, the termes of firſt and ſecond (Apoc. 20. 6.) And this withall, that all the good or evill, of that of the Corinthians, doth depend much upon the well, or evill, paſſing, of this of the Coloſſians.

This wee are to looke after, to riſe before; a reſurrection now in being. This of ours imports us (we ſee) no leſſe, than CHRIST's owne (which, I wiſh, well laid up in minde) ſince both are under one If, ſuppoſed alike, one no leſſe than the other. CHRIST is riſen, is not enough; nay, is nothing at all, if that be all; if He be riſen without us; He riſen, and we lye ſtill: if, with this daies reſurrection on his part, there be not alſo a con-ſurrection on ours.

Now then we are to looke to our If; that it ſuppoſeth aright. And if he be riſen, to cry to Him Trahe nos poſt Te, to draw us with Him, and not leave us ſtill in our graves of ſinne. He ſaid of himſelfe, that if once He were exalted, He would make His magneticall vertue to appeare, and draw all to Him. All, but not all at once: but (as the Apoſtle ſaith) each in his order. And that order is to beginne with the ſoule firſt, and draw it. For, the ſoule being (as the very Philoſophers have acknowledged (it is Ariſtotles owne word) ἄνωθεν from above) will the more eaſily be drawne to τὰ ἄνω things above. It is kindly, it is con-naturall for it, to draw thither-ward. And then after, in the ſecond place, together with it ſelfe, to elevate and lift up the fleſh thither with it. For (as well obſerveth Chryſoſtome) theſe two were not thus joyned (the Spirit, and the fleſh, I meane) that the fleſh ſhould pull downe the ſpirit to earth, but that the Spirit ſhould exalt the fleſh to heaven. And this ſubliming or lifting up the Spirit, is the riſing with CHRIST, here in the Text. The other, in His time and turne, to follow. But, if this goe not before, the other will not come after, take that for certaine. This then to endeavour; and this day to ſet in hand with it. For, this is the maine point, that we finde our ſelves riſen with CHRIST; finde it, or procure it: finde it already, or procure it, as ſoone as may bee.

II. The double Inference. 3 If wee ſeeke. 4 if we ſet our mindes, &c. on things above.

Now, thus we ſhall know, if we be riſen, and thus procure it, if we be not: If wee ſeeke, if we ſet our minds on things above: which is the double inference, upon the former double ſuppoſe: which I divide into the 1 Act, and the 2 Object. The 1 Act, Quærere, and ſapere: the 2 Object, quæ ſurſum.

Of the two acts, one referreth to action: (ſeeking, is a matter of endevour.) The other to the affection: (ſet your affection, or minde; it is both) There be two works arguing the Spirit: 1 Motion, and 2 Senſe. Motion, in the one, Seeking: Senſe, in the other, ſo is it turned (Phil. 2. 5.) Idem ſentite, let the ſame minde be in you. There is Motus læſus, in them that ſeeke not: and Senſus læſus, in them that ſavour not. To theſe two reduce all: 1 Quærenda ſapere, 2 and Sapienda quærere: To minde, what we are to ſeeke; and to ſeeke, what we minde. Of theſe two 1 joyntly firſt: 2 then ſeverally; and 3 laſt of their order.

I The two acts joyntly. Seeke, and ſet your mindes. Matt. 16. 23.

Ioyntly: for, diſ-joyned they may not be. One is little worth, without the other. There bee, that ſeeke, and be very buſie in it, and yet ſavour not the things that are of GOD. So ſought a great Apoſtle once: and our SAVIOUR did not let to tell him of it, ὲ φρονεῖς (the very word here) thou ſavoureſt not. Men, that are poſſeſſed with falſe principles, and yet fall a ſeeking; zealous in their way, but want true knowledge, to fix their minds aright. Now, without knowledge, (ſaith Salomon truely) the minde is not good: and we know, Mala mens, malus animus, the minde miſ-led, will ſet the affections awry ſtraight.

Pro. 19. 2.

Will yee ſee them in kinde? Looke but to the end of the laſt Chapter before. There, they ſeeke ſo, as they will neither taſte, handle nor touch. So ſeeke, as downe they goe to worſhip, not onely GOD, but the Angells too. So ſeeke, as ſpare not their owne bodies, and yet wrong all the while; and yet with all their ſeeking, not riſen with Chriſt, for all that. Why? For, quærunt, non ſapiunt.

Cap. 2. 21. Verſe. 18. Verſe. 23.

On the other ſide: there be, that ſapiunt, non quærunt; that ſapiunt quæ Chriſti, quærunt quæ ſua, Savour Chriſt, but ſeeke themſelves. Of whom the Apoſtle (Phil. 2. 21.) they have knowledge competent, but without ſo much as a ſparke of true endeavour: Pariter intelligunt nobiſcum (ſaith Auguſtine) pariter non diligunt; Vnderſtand well enough, but coldly affected: So ſit ſtill, and ſeeke not.

So that, both would be kept together; Quærite, and Sapite both. For, as in the body naturall, it fareth between the ſtomach and the head: (a rheumatique head ſpoyles the ſtomach with diſtillations; and a diſtempered ſtomach fills the head with raw vapours, and ſoone mars the other:) So is it here: our minde miſtaking, miſ-leads the affection: and a wrong ſet affection puts the minde out of frame. That, in ſunder they would not be, but joyned ever. Sapere, without quærere, will not riſe, but lye ſtill; and quærere, without ſapere, will riſe, but lead you aſtray.

2 The Acts ſeverally. 1 Seeke.

Now ſeverally. If we be riſen, to move, and to ſeeke: that is, to reſolve, that with ſitting ſtill without ſeeking, what we are here willed to ſeeke, will not be had. Wee ſhall not ſtumble on it, or hit upon it unawares; there needs a ſeeking. If our Saviour knew the way well, it is hard to hit, and few there be that finde it. The ſhort: there goeth ſearch and enquiry to it; paines, and diligence are requiſite: wee ſhall not come thither, with the turning of a ginne. It were great folly (when we ſee dayly, things here beneath, without travaile, will not be come by) once to thinke, things above will drop into our lapps, without any ſeeking.

Matt. 7. 14.

To ſeeke then: but, to doe it to purpoſe. For, that which wee call ſeeking, is nothing leſſe. Thoſe, to whom the Prophet Eſay ſaid (Chap. 21. 12.) Si quæritis, quærite, If yee will ſeeke, why then ſeeke; doe it, in earneſt; it ſeemes, they ſought ſo ſo ſlightly, ſo ſlenderly, as it deſerved not the name of ſeeking. Pilate asked, Quid eſt veritas? & then, ſome other matter tooke him in the head, and ſo up he roſe and went his way, before he had his anſwer: He deſerved never to finde what truth was. And ſuch is our ſeeking moſt what; ſeldome or never ſeriouſly: but ſome queſtion, that comes croſſe our braine, for the preſent: Some Quid eſt veritas? ſo ſought, as if, that we ſought were as good loſt as found. Yet, this, we would faine have go for ſeeking: but it will not be. O ſi quæritis quærite (ſaith ESAY; looke the place) The morning comes, ſo doth the night, that is; our dayes, ſpend apace; and we ſay, we will ſeeke. If we will, let us once do it indeed: ſeeke it, as they did, this day; follow it hard, make it our race, with the one; our morning-worke, with the other: Ioh. 18. 38. Eſay 21. 12. Ioh. 20. 4.

2 Set your minds.

But, wee ſhall never ſeeke, as wee ſhould, unleſſe wee put to the other word, Set our mindes on them. For, will a man ever kindly ſeeke that he hath no minde to? Never. The minde is all. Be it what it will, or whence it will, above or beneath, if we affect it not, we ſhall ſeeke but faintly. That we may ſeeke things above, as it is meete, we muſt prize them; prize them, as a ſilver mine (ſaith Salomon:) as a treaſure hid in a field (ſaith our Saviour) and goe ſell all, to compaſſe them. Then ſhall we ſeeke to ſome purpoſe. Pro. 3. 14. Mat. 13. 44.

But in the word φρονεῖν there is more. There is (I told you) idem Sentite, the ſenſe; (Hee that ſeekes, ſhould have as well eyes to diſcerne, as feete to goe about it: It is no buſineſſe for a blinde man, no more than for a lame, to ſeeke:) And that is knowledge, which would be had too. To ſeeke, we know not what, is but to erre, and never finde that we ſeeke for. To quærere then; but, Sapere, to be wiſe in our ſeeking, to get us true directions; elſe, for all our ſeeking, we may be to ſeeke ſtill.

Which φρονεῖν is a word, the Apoſtle much uſeth, as being very ſignificant, full, and forcible. Foure things are in it: 1. To ſet the minde; the minde, not the phanſie: not to take up a phanſie, and fall to ſeeking, as wee ſee many now adaies; no ground in the world, but their owne conceipts. Yet ſeeke they will needs, and have all the world follow them, and have nothing to follow themſelves, but their owne folly. So as, being very idiots, they take themſelves, for the onely men; And till they come into it, never was wiſe man in the world, that knew what to ſeeke, or how.

2 It is then an act of the underſtanding (φρονεῖν) but not of it alone: for then νοεῖν were enough. Yet the greateſt part make no matter of it, but even noëma. It is, as to ſet our minde, not our phanſie; ſo, our minde, not onely to know it, but to mind it. It is Sentire, and Sapere; And it is beſt ſeen in Sapite, which is not onely to diſtinguiſh taſts; but, in and with the taſte, to feele ſome delight, to have a ſenſe of the ſweetneſſe withall, which will make us ſeeke it againe plus magis: and without it, our ſeeking will be but unſavorie.

3 So to ſavour it, as wee hold quærere, to be Sapere, that, to ſeeke, is our wiſedome; that wee doe not rectè ſapere, unleſſe wee doe hoc ſapere, Hæc erit ſapientia veſtra (ſaith Moſes) This ſhalbe your wiſedome, before GOD and man, and you ſo to reckon of it: even this, to ſeeke things above; and to thinke, when ye are about that buſineſſe, ye are about a point of high wiſedome; and that to performe it well, is the wiſeſt action of our life. Deut. 4. 6.

4 To hold it our wiſedome: and (laſt) I aske what wiſedome? Not that, which doth contemplate, that is σοφία; but the active wiſedome, for that is φρόνησις rerum agendarum. To ſhew that not onely our Grounds, for Iudgement; but our Rules, for Action, are to be fet thence. Thither to get us, thence to derive our reaſons, why wee doe things, or leave them undone. Thus to caſt with our ſelves: this, that now I am about, He that ſitteth on high, at GODS right hand, what will He ſay or thinke of it? May I offer it to him? Will He allow of it? Will he helpe me forward with it? Will He in the end reward me for it? Yea, even our πολίτευμα (as to the Philipians) is to bee from thence, even the wiſedome, that ſwayeth there, to be from above, de ſurſum. If it be not, Saint Iames is ſomewhat homely with it. Philip. 3. 20. Iam. 3. 15.

By

3 The Order. Quærite, First.

By this time, we know, what it is to ſeeke, and what to ſet our mindes. But, in the marſhalling theſe, there is ſomewhat, that quærite is called on firſt. 1. To teach us, that it is the firſt thing, we are to have care of; Chriſts primùm quærite makes quærite, to be primùm, to ſtand firſt. That wee then doe it the honour, to make it our firſt act, our riſing with him; at this feaſt, the, riſing of the yeare; and on this feaſt, in the morning, the riſing of the day. For, then He roſe.

1 Mat, 6. 33.

2 It is firſt called on, becauſe (to ſay truth) there is more need of diligence, in this buſineſſe, than ought elſe. Alwaies, we have more adoe, to quicken the affection, than to enforme the judgement. And that did they, this day, know: who ſought, before they had light, while it was yet darke. So much did they know, diligence to import, in this buſineſſe. The greateſt defect is in that point: therefore it needs firſt to be urged. For, though we ſee, yet we ſit ſtill and ſeeke not.

III.

The thing referred to, or the Object. quæ ſurſum.

And now to the object. Of ſeeking we ſhall ſoone agree: Generatio quærentium wee are all (ſaith the Pſalme:) even a generation of ſearchers. Somewhat wee are ſearching after ſtill. Our wants, or our wanton deſires finde us ſeeking-worke enough, all our lives long. What then ſhall we ſeeke, or where?

Pſal. 24. 6.

He (ſaith the Apoſtle) that will thus beſtow his paines, let it be, where? Above. On what? The things there: Quæ ſurſum he repeats in both; tells it us twice over: Quæ ſurſum quærite; quæ ſurſum ſapite. Above it muſt be.

And, of this alſo, we ſhall not varie with him, but be eaſily enough entreated to it. We yeeld preſently (in our ſenſe) to ſeeke to be above others, in favour, honour, place and power, and what not? Wee keepe the Text fully in this ſenſe: wee both ſeeke, and ſet our whole minds upon this. Altum ſapimus omnes; all would be above, Bramble and all, and nothing is to high for us.

Iudg. 9. 15.

It is true, here; for on earth, there is a Surſum above: there bee high places, wee would not have them taken away; wee would offer in them, and offer for them too, for a need. And, there is a right hand here too, and ſome ſit at it; and almoſt none, but thinkes ſo well of himſelfe, as why not he? Our SAVIOUR CHRIST, when it was phanſied, that Hee ſhould have beene a great King upon earth, there was ſuing ſtraight, For His right-hand-place. Not ſo much as Good-wife Zebedees two ſonnes (that ſmelt of the fiſher-bote) but, meanes was made for them, to ſit there.

But, all this while; wee are wide. For, where is all this? Here upon earth. All our above, is above one another, here; and is Ambitions above; and further it mounteth not. But, this is not the Apoſtles; not the above, nor the right hand; he meaneth. No: not CHRISTS right hand upon earth: but, that right hand, Hee ſits at, Himſelfe, in Heaven. The Apoſtle ſaw cleerely, we would erre this error: therefore, to take away (as he goes) all miſtaking, he explaines his above, two waies. 1 Privativè: Non quæ ſupra terram, Heare you, not upon earth: His Above, is not here, upon earth. This is, where not? 2. Then poſitivè: to cleere it from all doubt, where; he points us to the place it ſelfe, above, there above, where CHRIST is (that is) not on earth: Earth is the place, whence He is riſen. The Angels tell us, non eſt hîc; ſeeke him not here now, but in the place, whither He is gone, there ſeeke Him; In heaven. Heaven is a great circle; where, in heaven? In the chiefeſt place: there where GOD ſits, and CHRIST at His right hand. That place ſeeke: there ſet your minds.

So that, upon the matter, the fault he findes, the fault of our [above] is; it is, not above enough: It is too low, it is not ſo high, as it ſhould be. It ſhould bee higher, above the hills; higher yet, above the clouds; higher yet, higher than our eye can carry, above the heavens. There now, we are right.

And

And indeed the very frame of our bodies (as the Heathen Poet well obſerved) giveth thither, upward: -----Cœlumque tueri Iuſſit, and bids us looke thither. And, that way, ſhould our ſoule make; it came from thence, and thither ſhould it draw againe: And we doe but bow, and crooke our ſoules, and make them Curvæ in terras animæ, againſt their nature, when we hang yokes on them, and ſet them to ſeeke nothing but here below. 1 The reaſons,

And, if Nature would have us no Moles, Grace would have us Eagles, to mount, where the body is. And the Apoſtle goeth about to breed in us, a holy ambition; telling us, we are ad altiora geniti, borne for higher matters than any here: therefore, not to be ſo baſe minded, as to admire them; but to ſeeke after things above. For contrary to the Philoſophers ſentence, Quæ ſupra nos nihil ad nos, things above they concerne us not; he reverſes that: Yes (and we ſo to hold) Ea maxime ad nos, they chiefly concern us. 2 Luk. 17.37.

Come to the laſt now. And why this place, above? I ſhall tell you: For, there is CHRIST, and Him we ſeeke, to day, if it be Eaſter-day with us; and if we ſeeke where He is, He is above, certainly. But he implieth a further reaſon yet: Becauſe, in very deed, there, with Him, are the things which we, of all other, ſeeke for; and when all is done, all our ſeeking is to them referred, as to the end. We would not ever travaile but after our laborious toyling courſe here, finde a place of reſt, and this we ſeeke. But, not this alone: but a ſeat of glory withall. Sit we would; but in ſome eminent place; not, at the left foot, but at the right hand; in light, and honour, as much as might be. 3

We ſeeke reſt: Specially, they that are toſſed in a tempeſt, how doe they deſire a good haven, a harbour of reſt! And ſure, here we dwell in Meſech, meet with much diſquietneſſe. None but, ſometime, hath ſenſe of the verſe in the Pſalme: Oh that I had wings like a Dove! then would I flie and be at reſt. And the more our incolatus is prolonged, the more we ſeeke it, finde it how we may. What the things above are? Reſt. Pſal. 120.5. Pſal. 55.6.

And, it is not the bodies trouble ſo much, but invenietis requiem animabus, to finde reſt to our ſoules; that, is it. And, the ſoule is from above; and but in her owne place; never findes it. Turne thee to thy reſt O my ſoule, that is worth all. But, both are beſt: and not, after all our turmoiles here in this world, to heare non introibunt in requiem meam, in another world, but to be caſt into that place, where there is no reſt day nor night: but enter into His reſt, which (in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews) hee ſo much beates upon. Mat. 11.29. Pſal. 116.7. 95.11.

And verily, if we ſeeke reſt; glory we ſeeke much more. For, for it, we are content to deprive our ſelves of all reſt, which otherwiſe we love well enough. And, a reſtleſſe courſe we enter into, and hold out in it, all our life long, and all to winne it though it be but a little before our death. For, no reſt will ſatisfie, or give us full content, unleſſe it be on the right hand. Chap 3.17. 18. 19. 1 Glory.

Theſe two then we ſeeke for; where are they to be found? Not in quæ ſupra terram: Not here therefore: but folly to ſeeke them here. We are by all meanes to avoid their errour, that ſought, this day, to ſeeke the living among the dead; a thing where it is not to be had. Luk. 24.5.

Never ſeeke, to ſet up our reſt here, in this tumultuous troubleſome place, this [a] vale of Achor right (as Hoſee:) this [b] Τρύβος (as S. Iames) a wheele ever wherling about, [c] quærens requiem & non invenit eam. Where, we ſhall ſoone be diſeaſed with a Surgite poſtquam ſederitis, after we ſit a little, quickly diquieted againe. The Prophet Mica tels us plaine, Non habetis hic requiem, here we cannot have it, this is not our reſt. [a] Hoſ. 2.15. [b] Iam. 3.6. [c] Mat. 12.43. Mic. 2.10.

Nor never ſeeke for true glory here: Why? Locus eſt pulicum & culicum. It is, the place of fleas and of gnats, this. In the garden, the place of our delight, we meet with wormes; and there be Spiders, even in the Kings Palace. This place of wormes and Spiders, call ye this the place of glory, in duſt and cobwebs?

Say it be: yet ſuch is the nature of theſe two (ſuch as they be) the reſt, and the glory here, as they divide it ſtill: have ye one, ye muſt quit the other. They that are in glory, have not the quieteſt life: And they that are moſt at reſt, fartheſt off from being glorious. Reſt is here, a thing inglorious: and glory a thing reſtleſſe. Thus it ſtands with us: Iſſachars condition like ſome; Reſt is good, though it be betweene a paire of panniers: If that like us, we muſt live in this eſtate, the moſt obſcure of all the Tribes. But, if we will have a name among the great ones of the earth, if it be glorious, then farewell reſt: We muſt take our lot among them, that live not moſt at eaſe, certainly. For, here they meet not, but are in ſunder ſtill.

7 At the right hand of God.

But ſay yet, we could make them meet; Be at all eaſe, and in all glory together? ſeated, and ſeated at the right hand both. (Now come we to weigh the word Dei:) The right hand (here) ſuper terram is not the right hand of GOD, but of a man, which ſhall wither, and within a certaine of yeeres (as the Prophets terme is) fall from the ſhoulder. And ſo this reſt, and this right hand, we can have no hold of either. It is ſaid in the Acts, After two yeares, Felix went his way, and another came Governour in his place. And then the places were changed; ſome were diſeaſed: and ſo is the caſe of all felicity here.

Ioh. 3 ſ. 22

Acts 24. 28

Upon the point then. Reſt, and glory we ſeeke not barely: but, we ſeeke them ſo as they may endure: and our wiſh is, if it might be, even for ever. And this may be had: but, it will be had at no right hand, but ad dexteram Dei; Gods only. Then, ſeek them there. Not here, where either we ſhall ſeeke and not finde them; or finde one from the other; or, if both together, yet have no hold of them, but ſoone loſe them againe. Seek, where we may; nay, where we ſhall be ſure to find them; where, both will be had; and both together, and good aſſurance of both, even to eternity, as, at Gods right hand, a right hand that withereth not. If ye ſeeke reſt, let it be in His holy hill; if glory, Gloria in excelſis, where CHRIST is already; Set, ſo at reſt; at the right hand, ſo in glory; at Gods right hand, and ſo, in both, for ever. There they be, there ſeeke, there ſet your minds.

Pſalm 15. 1
Luke 2. 14.

To withdraw our ſelves, to ſequeſter our mindes from things here below, to thinke of Him, and of the place where now He is, and the things, that will bring us thither.

The application to the time.

It is a prerogative, that a Chriſtian hath: to make it Eaſter, any day in the yeare, by doing theſe duties on it. They come no day amiſſe. But, no day ſo fit, as this day, the very day of his riſing. Then, of very congruity; we to riſe alſo. For, no reaſon in the world, if He riſe, that we ſhould lie ſtill. Nor is it good for us, that He ſhould riſe, without us, and leave us behind in the grave of our ſins ſtill. But, when, He, then we too.

Riſing is not ſo proper to the day, but the two ſignes, or two duties (call them which ye will) are as proper. For, this day was (indeed) a day of ſeeking. I know whom you ſeeke, yee ſeeke Ieſus that was crucified (ſaith one Angell:) Why ſeeke yee the living among the dead (ſaith another?) To riſe, when He roſe; to ſeeke Him, when He was ſought. This day, He was ſought by men, ſought by women. Women, the three Maries; Men, the two Apoſtles. The Women, at charges; the Apoſtles at paines. Early, by the one, earneſtly, by the other. So, there was ſeeking of all hands.

Mar. 16. 6.
Luk. 24. 6

And they which ſought not, went to Emmaus, yet they ſet their minds on Him; had Him in minde, were talking of Him by the way. So that, theſe doe very fitly come into the Agendum of this day. Thus to ſeeke, and ſet our minds. At leaſt, not to loſe Him quite, that day, we ſhould ſeeke Him; nor have our minds fartheſt from Him, that day, they ſhould be moſt upon Him.

Luke 24. 13

The

The Church, by her Office, or Agendum, doth her part, to help us herein, all ſhee may. The things, we are willed to ſeeke, ſhe ſets before us; the bleſſed Myſteries. For, theſe are from above: the bread that came downe from heaven; the blood that hath been carried into the holy place. And I adde, ubi CHRISTUS: For, ubi Corpus, ubi ſanguis, CHRISTI, ibi CHRISTUS, I am ſure. And truly, here, if there be an ubi CHRISTUS, there it is. On earth, we are never ſo neere Him, nor He us, as then and there. There, in efficaciâ; and, when all is done, efficacie, that is it, muſt do us good; muſt raiſe us here, and raiſe us at the laſt day, to the right hand: and the locall ubi, without it, of no value. To the Sacrament. Ioh. 6 50. Heb. 9. 12.

He was found in the breaking of bread: that bread She breaketh, that there we may finde Him. He was found by them, that had their mindes on Him: To that end, She will call to us, Surſum corda, lift up your hearts: which when we heare, it is but this Text iterated, Set your minds, have your hearts, where CHRIST is. We anſwer, We lift them up; and ſo (I truſt) we doe; but (I feare) we let them fall too ſoone againe. Luc. 24. 30. 35.

Therefore, (as before, ſo after) when we heare, Thou that ſitteſt at the right hand of the Father; and when againe, Glory to God on high, all is but to have this. But eſpecially, where we may Sentire and Sapere quæ ſurſum, and guſtare donum cœleſte, taſt of the heavenly gift (as in another place he ſpeaketh:) ſee in the breaking, and taſt in the receiving, how gracious He was and is; was, in ſuffering for us; is, in riſing againe for us too, and regenerating us thereby to a lively hope. And gracious, in offering to us, the meanes (by His Myſteries and grace with them) as will raiſe us alſo and ſet our mindes where true reſt, and glory are to be ſeene. Heb. 6. 4.

That ſo, at this laſt and great Eaſter, of all (the Reſurrection-day) what we now ſeeke, we may then finde; where we now ſet our mindes, our bodies may then be ſet; what we now but taſt, we may then have the full fruition of: Even of His glorious God-head, in reſt, and glory, joy, and bliſſe, never to have an end.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XXIV. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXIV. being EASTER-DAY.

PHIL. Chap. II.

Verſ. 8. He humbled Himſelfe, made obedient, unto death, even the death of the Croſſe.

9. For this cauſe, hath GOD alſo highly exalted Him; and given Him a Name, above every name.

10. That at the Name of JESUS, every knee ſhould bow, of thoſe in Heaven, and in earth, and under the earth.

11 And that every Tongue ſhould confeſſe, that IESUS CHRIST is the LORD, to the glory of GOD the Father.

FOR this cauſe, GOD hath exalted Him (ſaith the Text:) Him (that is) CHRIST. And, for this cauſe are we now here, to celebrate this exalting. Of which His exalting, this is the firſt day: and the Act of this day, the firſt ſtep of it: even, His riſing againe from the dead. Hæc eſt clarificatio Domini noſtri JESU CHRISTI, quæ ab Ejus reſurrectione ſumpſit exordium (ſaith S. Auguſtine upon this place:) This now, is the glorifying of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, which tooke His beginning, at His glorious reſurrection. The Summe.

Thus, is the ſumme and ſubſtance of this Text, ſet down by that learned Father. By Him alſo, is it likewiſe divided to our hands: Into Humilitas Claritatis meritum; The Diviſion

I and, Ciaritas humilitatis præmium. Humilitie, the merit of glory (in the firſt verſe of the foure.) And glorie, the reward of humilitie (in the other three.) Which two, here and ever, are ſo faſt linked together, as, there is no parting them. I cannot, but touch; and I will, but touch the Merit (in the firſt verſe:) It properly pertaines, to another day. And ſo, come to Opus diei,

II The matter of this daies exultation, is called here, His exaltation.

And is, of two ſorts. By GOD (in the ninth verſe:) And by us (in the two laſt.)

1 By GOD; And that, is double: Of His Perſon: Of His Name. Two Super's, either, one. Super-exaltavit Ipſum, His Perſon; there is one (in the forepart of the ninth verſe.) And Nomen ſuper omne nomen, His name; there is the other (in the latter part of it.) And this is GODS.

2 Then commeth ours. For GOD exalting it Himſelfe; He will have us to doe the like. And not to doe it inwardly alone: but even outwardly to acknowledge it for ſuch: And ſets downe preciſely this acknowledgement, how, He will have it made a by us. Namely, two waies: By the Knee, by the Tongue. The Knee, to bow to it (verſe 10.) The Tongue, to confeſſe it (Verſe 11.) And both theſe, to be generall; Every Knee, every Tongue. And not in groſſe, but deduced into three ſeverall rankes: All in Heaven, All in earth, All under the earth: which comprehends all (indeed) and b c leaves none out. This acknowledgement, thus, but only inſinuated by the Knee, is by the Tongue more plainly expreſſed: And this it is, That JESUS CHRIST, is d the LORD, LORD of all thoſe three. This, to be done, and ſo done, as it redound all, to the glory of God the Father.

But then laſt, take the Uſe with us: that, ſince in Him, His humiliavit ſe-ipſum, ends in Super-exaltavit Deus; His humbling Himſelfe, in GODS Exalting; That the ſame minde be in us; Verſe 5. And the ſame end ſhall come to us. As His end was, ſo ours ſhall be, in the glory of God the Father.

Propter quod, For this cauſe.

I WE touch firſt upon this word. It is the Axis and Cardo, the very point, whereupon the whole Text turneth.

Verſe 8. First, Propter; A cauſe there is. So GOD exalts ever, for a cauſe. Here,

1 on earth, otherwhile, there is an Exaltavit, without a Propter quod. Some, as Sobna, Haman, Sanballat, ſometimes exalted; no man knowes, wherefore. With GOD, there goeth ever; with men, there ſhould goe, a Propter quod, before Exaltavit.

Propter. Eſay 22. 15. Eſt. 3. 1. Nehem. 4. 1.

2 For a cauſe: for what? for this cauſe. And this now, caſts us back to the former verſe, where it is ſet downe, Humiliavit: There it is, for His Humilitie.

Propter quod. Humiliavit.

Now, of all cauſes, not for that: if we goe by this world, which (as the Proverbe is) was made for the preſumptuous. Not for that vertue of all others. A vertue (before CHRIST thus graced it) ſo out of requeſt, as the Philoſophers (look into their Ethickes) you ſhall not ſo much as finde the name of humilitie, in the leſt of all their vertues. Well, this caſt vertue, of no reckoning, is here made the Propter quod, of CHRISTS exalting. As, Reſpexit humilitatem, the ground, of His Mothers Magnificat. And He, that, by Him brought light out of darkneſſe, at the firſt: will

Luke 1. 48. by Him, bring glory out of humilitie at laſt, Or this booke deceiveth us. With GOD, it ſhall have the place of a Propter quod; how poore account ſoever, we make

2 Cor. 4. 6. of it here.

But, this Quod, is a Collective, there be in it more points than one. I will but 1 Ipſe. point at them.

Hu-

Humiliavit ipſe, He humbled. (He) which many times is idle, but here, a circumſtance of great weight. He: ſo great a Perſon; being in the forme of GOD, and without any diſparagement at all, equall to GOD (as he tels us a verſe before) He humbled. Verſe 6.
Vbi, Majeſtatem præmiſit; ut humilitatem illuſtraret: That diſcourſe of His High Majeſty, was but to ſet out, to give a luſtre to His humility. For, for one of meane eſtate, to be humble, is no great praiſe: It were a fault, if he were not. But, In alto nihil altum ſapere: For a King (as David) to ſay, I will yet be more humble: for the King of Kings, for Him, to ſhew this great humility; that is a propter quod indeed. Humiliavit ipſe. 2 Sam. 6. 22.

Then ſecondly, that Humiliavit Ipſe ſe. Ipſe ſe, and not alius ipſum; that He was not brought to it by any other, but of His owne accord, He humbled Himſelfe. There is a difference betweene humilis, and humiliatus. One may be humbled; and yet not humble. Pharao was humbled, brought down, by his ten plagues. Simeon of Cyrene, angariatus, to humble his neck under the Croſſe. This was, alius ipſos. But Ipſe ſe, is the true humility. For then, it is laudabili voluntate, not miſerabili neceſsitate: of a willing minde; and that is, commendable; not of force and conſtraint; for that, is miſerable. For this cauſe, that He humbled Himſelfe. 2. Se. Exod. 10. 16. Matth. 27. 32.

And thirdly, humiliavit ipſe ſe (Obediens.) It was not Abſaloms humility, in ſhew and complement; and his heart full of pride, diſobedience, yea rebellion. (And yet it is a glory for humility, that even proud men take a pride, to ſhrowd themſelves in her mantle: that pride weares humilities livery.) But it is not humble courteſie, but humble Obedience, that is the Propter quod. Till it come to that, many beare themſelves in tearmes and ſhew, low, ad humum, even touch the ground. But come once thither, to obedience; then, give lawes they muſt, but obey none, make others obedient (and ye will) but not factus obediens, not made themſelves ſo. CHRIST was ſo made. And for this cauſe. 3. Obediens. 2 Sam. 15. 5.

And ſomething ſtrange it is, why Humiliavit ipſe ſe Obediens, would not ſerve and no more; but (factus) muſt be added. Somewhat there was, in that. An Obedience there is, that commeth from the dictamen of naturall reaſon: in ſome things we ſo obey; we will do it, becauſe our reaſon ſo moveth us. That is, Obediens natus. But, ſome other there be, wherein there is no other reaſon, to lead us to doe it, but onely this, that it is injoyned us by a lawfull Superiour, and therefore we doe it, and for no other cauſe. This is Obediens factus; and that in true proper termes, is the right obedience indeed. All looke to the former; and very few obey thus. But even ſo obeyed CHRIST, & erat ſubditus illis. And for this cauſe then, that He was factus Obediens. 4. Factus. Luke 2. 51.

And Obediens factus: (uſque) is a fifth. For the very ſize, the extent of our obedience is a matter conſiderable. For if we come to any, it is Agrippa's, In modico, in ſome petty ſmall matter. Or Sauls, in the refuſe of the ſpoiles little worth. And, that obedience is little worth, that is ſo ſhrunk up. The drawing out, the uſq; of it, is all in all. How farre obedient? untill what? Vſque quò? Which very Extent, or uſque, is many times as much worth as the Obedience it ſelfe. This alſo will come into the Propter quod. 5. Vſque. Acts 26. 28. 1 Sam. 15. 9.

Now many Vſque's there be, in this, of His. 1. Vſque naturam hominis, Thither. His very humanity had beene humility enough. 2. Vſque formam Servi, is more: How? Even to waſh the feet of thy ſervants (ſaid Abigail, and tooke her ſelfe to be very humble in ſo ſaying) Thither He came too. Verſe 7. 1 Sam. 25. 41. Iohn 13. 5.

What ſay ye to uſque mortem (the ſixth point?) Mortem? that will ſtagger the beſt of us. We love Obedience in a whole skin: Vſque any thing, rather than that. And (to ſay troth) no reaſon in the world, Obedience ſhould come to that. Death is the wages of ſinne, of diſobedience. Factus obediens? What, and factus reus too? Obedient, and yet put to death? Heaven and earth ſhould ring of it, if the caſe were ours. Well, even thither came His obedience: Et, ne perderet obedientiam, perdidit vitam. And rather than to loſe His obedience, loſt His life. This is indeed, a great Propter quod. 6. Mortem. Iob 2. 4. Rom. 6. 23.

5 Mortem autem Crucis.

Enough now: For, death is ultima linea (we ſay.) Nay, there is yet an Autem more behinde, to make it up full ſeven. For, One death is worſe than another. And His, was Mortem autem, the worſt death of all: the death of malefactors: and of the worſt ſort of malefactors, Mortem Crucis.

Nay; if He muſt die, let him die, an honeſt, a faire death. Not ſo: nay Morte Chap. 2. 20. turpiſſimâ (ſaid they of it, that put Him to it) the foulеſt death of all other: uſque mortem, mortem autem Crucis.

Died, and, ſo died. Ever the (So) the manner is more than the thing it ſelfe, in Luke 2. 7. all of CHRIST. To be borne (So) to be borne, uſque preſepe, to the Cratch: To die, nay (So) to die, uſque Crucem, to the Croſſe. Vſque naturam hominis; uſque formam ſervi; uſque mortem malefici. 1. So great a Perſon: 2. Thus to humble: 3. Humble His owne ſelfe: 4. To be obedient: 5. To be made obedient: 6. Obedient with an uſque, ſo farre: 7. So farre, as to death: 8. And to a death, ſo opprobrious: Theſe extenſives, and Intenſives put together, will (I truſt) make up a perfect Propter quod. And this, for humilitas claritatis meritum (in the firſt verſe.)

II. Now, for Claritas humilitatis præmium (in the reſt.) And, will ye obſerve Verſe 9. how they anſwer one another? For humiliavit there, here is exaltavit: For Ipſe there; DEUS, GOD here: For Ipſe ſe, DEUS ipſum. He humbled himſelfe; GOD, exalted Him. For humiliavit uſque, there: here is exaltavit ſuper. For, factus obediens there; here factus dominus. For mortem Crucis, the death of the Croſſe there: here, is the glory of GOD the Father.

Super-exaltavit Ipſum.

This exalting, we reduced to two: [1] Of His Perſon; [2] Of His Name. Of His Perſon, in ſuper-exaltavit Ipſum: Of His Name (in the reſt of the verſe.)

To begin with His perſonall exaltation. Super-exaltavit, is a de-compound. There is, Ex and Super (both) in it. His exalting hath an Ex, whence or out of what: His exalting hath a ſuper, whither or whereunto.

Ex.

Ex, from whence? from the two very laſt words, Mortem Crucis. His raiſing to life oppoſed to Mortem, the ſorrowes of death. The giving of His Name; to Crucis, the ſhame of the Croſſe. This dayes (Ex) was from death. His humiliavit had beene ad humum, to the ground: Nay further, into the ground: Nay further yet, Ephel. 4. 9. εἰς τὰ κατώτερα, into the very loweſt parts of it. His exaltavit then was from thence, from Pſal. 9. 13. 49. 15. death: and not the gates of death (then, He was not in:) nor the jawes of death (then, Prov. 7. 27. He was not quite downe:) out from inferiora, and interiora, the lowermoſt, and in-Matth. 28. 2. nermoſt roomes of death. From under the Stone; thence: from the Dungeon, with a Gen. 40. 15. [a] Ioſeph; From the bottome of the Den, with [b] Daniel; From the belly of the Whale, b Dan. 6. 23. with [c] Ionas: (All three, Types of Him.) There is His Ex.
c Ionas 2. 10.

Super.

Now then, whither? From Death, to life: From ſhame, to glory: From a death of ſhame, to a life of glory. From the forme of a ſervant, in factus obediens; to the dignity of a Soveraigne, in factus Dominus.

But will ye mark againe? For, Non ſicut delictum, ſic donum (ſaith He, elſwhere)
Rom. 5. 15. So here, not as His humbling, ſo was His exalting: but more. That, of His humbling, was diſpatched in one verſe. This, of His exalting, hath no leſſe than three. So the amends is large, three to one.

But, that is not it I meane: but this: Super is not thither only, but above and be-Iohn 11. 44. yond it. From death to life: Nay, Super; more than ſo: Not to Lazarus life, to die againe, but to life immortall: ut vitam habeat, & abundantius habeat: That abundan- Iohn 10. 10. tius is immortality. From ſhame to glory: onely that? Nay, Super, to the glory of 1 Pet. 1. 4. the Father (that is) glory, that ſhall never fade, as all here ſhall. So downeward, it was but uſque, had his ſtint, ſo farre, and no farther: upward now, it is, Super, no ſtint, but higher and higher ſtill.

Levit. 23. 10. This day is the feaſt of the firſt fruits. On it, He had no more, but the firſt fruits of Iohn 2. 10. His exalting. He was exalted, but with Iona's exaltation onely, from the lower parts, 2 Reg. 2. 11. to the upper parts of the earth. But we ſhall follow Him higher, to the exaltation of Elias.

Elias, Super, above the clouds: Nay, Super, above the Starres, above the Heavens, and the heavens of the heavens: till we have brought Him, from de profundis, to in excelsis; from the loweſt parts of the earth, to the higheſt place in Heaven, even to the right hand of GOD. And higher, we cannot goe.

Will ye obſerve yet once more, a kinde of Omen or preſage, of both theſe exaltings; and that, at the very time of His Humiliation? For, even that His humiliation was acted, after the manner of an exalting (though in a meere mockery.) For, to all their diſgraces, they added this, of ſcorne: They lift Him up, upon His croſſe, for all the world as the Philiſtines, did Samſon; ſet Him aloft, betweene the two pillars, to make ſport at Him. This was His exaltation. And they gave Him a Name too, Pilates title over His head; And bowed their knees; and cried, Ave Rex (a kinde of Confeſſion.) Iudic. 16. 25. Mar. 15 16. 19. 18.

This, as they performed it, was grande ludibrium; but as GOD turneth it, it was grande myſterium. For, to earneſt, GOD turneth both. A kinde of ſtrife, there ſeemed to be: the lower they, the higher GOD: the more odious they ſought to make Him; the more glorious GOD: He exalted His Perſon, in ſtead of the Croſſe, to His owne high throne of Majeſty. And inſtead of Pilates title, gave Him a Title of true honour, above all the Titles in the world.

And this, for Super-exaltavit ipſum: And ſo, I paſſe from the exalting of His Perſon (the amends for Mortem.) And come to the exalting of His Name, the amends for Crucis, (in the latter part of the ſame verſe.)

He gave Him a Name. For, without a Name, what is exalting? What is His Nativity without an Epiphanie? For, to thoſe two, may theſe two here well be compared. His Reſurrection is a very Nativity. To it doth S. Paul apply the verſe of the Pſalme, Hodie genui te, Acts 13. And this Name giving, is as the Epiphanie; to make it apparent and knowne to the world. And indeed, why are things exalted or lift up, but that they may be in view, and notice taken of them? So that, they which be exalted, ſeem not ſo to be, till their ſo being be made publike, and, there go a Name of it abroad in the world. Dedit Ei Nomen. Acts 13. 33.

And ſure, when men are ſo high, as higher they cannot be (as Kings) there is no other way to exalt them, left us, but this; to ſpread abroad, to dilate their names. Which every noble generous ſpirit had rather have, than any dignity; though never ſo high. For, being in their dignities, how farre will they venture; even to jeopard dignity, life and all: and all, but to leave a glorious Name behinde them? That, To give a Name, is even to exalt His very exaltation it ſelfe; and to make him, that is at the higheſt, higher yet.

A Name He gave Him: what Name? not (inter) among the famous names on earth; but (Super omne nomen) above them all. Here is, Super upon Super: another Super to His Name, no leſſe than His Perſon. That, above all perſons; and this, above all names whatſoever. And now, by this time, His exaltation is complete, and not one (Super) to be added more. Super omne Nomen.

This Name, is named in the verſe, and it is the Name of JESUS. Of the giving firſt, And then of the Super, of it.

Of the giving, three doubts ariſe: 1. How given Him, and others had it alſo? 2. How given now, and He had it before, even in the womb of his Mother? 3. How given Him of grace, and yet He deſerved it? Propter quod. Dedit Ei.

How is this Name ſaid to be given Him, (as ſome ſpeciall dignity) and others had it beſide, and before Him? Ieſus the Worthy, the ſonne of Nun: Ieſus the high-Prieſt, the ſonne of Ioſedek (to ſay nothing of Ieſus, the ſonne of Sirach.) They had it (it is true) but not given them by GOD, as He, by the mouth of the Angell, GODS deputy. But they, by men, had men to their God-fathers, As now, we have a Sect or Society of Ieſus: but they gave themſelves the Name: GOD never gave it them. He gave it here, for humiliavit, a vertue they little regard: For he that doth but ſmell of it, is eo ipſo, not meet to be of that Company. Other manner ſpirits, they

1 Others had it. Heb. 4. 8. Agg. 1. 1. Matt. 1. 21.

I have

Ser. at Christm. 1610.

I have before this, told you, of foure maine differences, betweene this Iesus, and all others. This one now, shall serve for all. All those Iesus, and every one of them,

Luc.8.25. had need of, and were glad, to lay hold of the skirts of this Iesus, to be saved by Him: otherwise, they had beene falsely so called; lost men all. And so, will be willing, to resigne this Name to Him; that He, may beare it (at least) with a maine difference from them all.

Dedit Ei. 2 He had it before.

But what tell ye us of it, now, after the Resurrection? doe not we know it was given Him, being yet in the wombe? It was so, but by a kinde of anticipation. For, it never had the perfect verifying, the full Christendome (as they say) till this day. Not yet full three daies since, they upbraided Him with it: JESUS, a SAVIOUR,

Mat.27 42. A wise SAVIOUR, and cannot save Himselfe! For, He seemed to perish then, to lose Iohn 10.18. His life, in their sight: but, now, this day taking it againe, He shewed, He did but lay it downe, He lost it not: He was now JESUS indeed, able to save Himselfe: and a-

Heb.5.9. ble to save all those, that trust in Him with their salvation. So; it was never in kinde till now: but now, it was.

Dedit Ei. 3 He did merit it.

But, if He gave it Him, and ἐχαρίσατο, gave it Him, of grace: where is the merit then, the Propter quod we spake of, what is become of that? Safe enough, for all this.

1 Cor.7.9. That, which is otherwise due, it may be so cheerfully parted with, as if it were a frank and free gift indeed. The Apostle elsewhere, hath taught us to joyne debita and benevolentia, in one: They will stand together well enough.

In many things, we suffer slander by the Church of Rome: In this among many; as if we pinched at CHRIST'S merit, and were loth, He should be allowed Himselfe to merit ought, because of this ἐχαρίσατο that soundeth all upon grace. Wherein, it is well knowne, take the most that can be made of it, and we say no other thing, than do their own Schoolemen. It is not gratia adoptionis, this; the grace of adoption (as in us) that is, here spoken of: It is gratia unionis, the grace of union. And that grace CHRIST had. For, seeing, in the humanity of CHRIST, there was not, there could not be, any possibility of merit, to deserve the uniting it selfe, or the being assumed into the God-head: To be so assumed, and so united, was that grace, we terme, the grace of union. Other grace, we know none in CHRIST. But being once so united, there was in Him, to deserve, and deserve againe, and that amply. Propter quod, might then be truly said of Him, every way.

Super omne. Above all names.

This, for the giving. But now, how is this Name, said to be above all names? what, above the Name of GOD? We may say, with the Apostle, When he saith, GOD did give it Him, it is manifest, He is excepted, that did give it Him. But we need not so say,

1 Cor.15.27. For, this is one of GODS owne Names. I am (saith He) and beside me, there is no SAVIOUR.

Esay 43.11. How is it then given Him? Accepit ut homo, quod habebat ut Deus. What, as GOD, He had, as Man, He received: with His nature, His Name; and the chiefe of all His Names, the Name of a SAVIOUR. For, Above all, it is: Above all, to Him: Above all, to us.

Above all to Him.

To Him: for though many Titles of the Deitie, sound, and seeme, to be more glorious; Yet he esteemes them all, not like this: Why? For no other reason, but that, they had not, nos homines, and nostram Salutem, in them. No Name He sets by, like that, wherein, with His glory, is joyned, our safety. And this, of all, He made choice of (as, to Him, above all) that we might accordingly esteeme of Him, that esteems it above all, only for our sakes.

Above all to us. Acts 4.12.

But howsoever, to Him: To us sure, above all. For no Name, doe we hold by, No Name under Heaven, given us, whereby we may be saved, but it. To us more worth it is, than all: yea (I may say) than the very name of GOD. For, GOD in Him reconcileth the world;

2 Cor.5.19. without Him, is enemy to it, and to us: So, with this Name, there is comfort in the Name of GOD: without it, none at all. The Name (sure) which we have use of above all. For it is the Name, which in the depth of all our distresse, by sinne or by misery, we even adjure Him by, ut rem nominis impleat, that he make good

His

His owne Name; ſhew, He beares it not for nought, and ſo, ſave us: That, He would never ſo remember our wretched ſinnes, as that thereby to forget His owne bleſſed Name: That Name ſpecially, which He of all other moſt eſteemeth: and ſo, of all other will leaſt forget. To Him then, and to us both; it is Nomen ſuper omne nomen. And, ſo let it be, even Suprema lex, ſalus; and ſupremum nomen, Ieſus. To ſave, the higheſt law: And the Name of a Saviour, the higheſt Name. Let it ſo be, let it ever ſtand Higheſt, and let no name whatſoever, get above it. And ſo, I come to the tenth verſe.

That at the Name of Jeſus, &c. Verſe 10.

To give Him ſuch a Name, is one gift: To give Him, that for ſuch an one, it ſhould be reputed and taken, is another; For, given it may be, on His part; and not acknowledged on ours. So that, this is a new degree. At the Name of IESVS.

That GOD, though He have ſo exalted it, yet reckons it not exalted, unleſſe wee doe our parts alſo, unleſſe our exaltation come too. At which words, comes in our dutie: The part, that concernes us. Thus to eſteeme it Super omne nomen, above all: And in ſigne we ſo do, to declare as much. And therein, He leaves us not to our ſelvs, but preſcribes the very manner of our declaration, how He will have it: Namely, theſe two waies: The knee to bow to it; the tongue to confeſſe it.

Now, theſe are outward acts, both. So then: firſt we are to ſet downe this for a ground; that the exalting of the ſoule within, is not enough. More is required by Him: more to be performed by us. He will not have the inward parts only, and it skils not for the outward members, though we favour our Knees, and locke up our lips. No: Mentall devotion will not ſerve: He will have, both corporall and vocall, to expreſſe it by. Knee and Tongue.

Our body is to afford her part, to His glory: And the parts of our body: And namely, theſe two, the Knee, and the Tongue. Not only the upper parts, the Tongue in our head: but even the nether alſo, the Knee, in our legge. The words be plaine, I ſee not how we can avoid them.

For the Knee, two things: 1. He would have it bow. 2. He would have it bow to His Name. Bow, firſt: For, what better way, or more proper, than by our humilitie to exalt Him, who for His humilitie was exalted? Or what may more fit, to expreſſe our humilitie by, than by this ſigne of humbleneſſe? For a ſpeciall way it is of exalting, or making a thing high, by falling downe, and making our ſelves low before it. Then ſecondly, That GOD careth for our knees: will be ſerved with them. Negatively; He will not have them [a] bow to Baal. Poſitively; He will have them bow to Himſelfe. Will yee believe Him, if He binde it with an oath? I have ſworne (ſaith He) by my ſelfe that every knee ſhall bow to me, Eſay 45. 23. And will yee make GOD forſworne? And it cannot be ſaid, this is old Teſtament: For even in the New, Rom. 14. 11. theſe very words are applyed to CHRIST, as meant to be fulfilled in, and to Him. Knee bow 1 2

But, this here in the Text, is more ſtrong: that, It is aſſigned Him (this honour) as a part of His reward, for Mortem Crucis. And ſhall we rob Him, or take from Him the reward of His Paſſion.

We begin our Liturgie every day, with the [b] Pſalme: (and we had it from the Primitive Church, they did begin theirs with the ſame.) Wherein we invite our ſelves to it: Come, let us worſhip, and fall downe, and kneele before the Lord our maker. Shall we ever ſay it, and never do it? Is not this to mock GOD?

* They in the Scripture, They in the * Primitive Church, did ſo, did bow. And verily he will not have us worſhip Him like Elephants, as if we had no joynts in our

Knees

Knees; He will have more honour of men, than of the pillars in the Church. He will have us bow the knees: And let us bow them in GODS Name.

Bow to His Name.

To bow the Knee, And to His Name, to bow it. For, this is another prerogative. He is exalted, to whose Person Knees doe bow: but He, to whose Name only, much more. But the cause, is here otherwise. For, His Person is taken up out of our sights: all we can doe, will not reach unto it. But, His Name, he hath left behinde to us, that wee may shew by our reverence and respect to it, how much we esteeme Him; how true the Psalme shall be, Holy and reverend is His Name.

Acts 1.9.
Psal.16.2.
Psal.111.9.

But if we have much adoe, to get it bow at all: much more shall we have, to get it done to His Name. 1. There be, that do it not.

2. What speake I of not doing it? There be, that, not only forbeare to doe it themselves, but put themselves, to an evill occupation, to find faults where none is, and cast scruples into mens minds, by no meanes to doe it.

3. Not to doe it at His Name? Nay, at the holy Mysteries themselves, not to do it: Where, His Name is (I am sure) and more than His Name, even the body and blood of our LORD JESUS CHRIST: And those, not without His soule: Nor that, without His Deitie: Nor all these, without inestimable high benefits of grace, attending on them. And yet they, that would be glad and faine, a Pardon for this life, or some other Patent, with all humilitie to receive upon their knees: This, so great, so high, so heavenly a Gift, they straine, and make dangerous, to bow their Knees to receive it: as if it were scarce worth so much. But, it hath ever beene the manner in CHRISTS Church, whether we * offer to Him, * or receive ought offered from Him, in this wise to doe it.

* *Chrys. hom.ad Pop.Antioc.*61. Ambr. in Psal. 118.bis.& lib. 3.*cap.*12. *De Spir.S. Aug. Epist.*120. *cap.*27.

But, to keepe us to the Name: This is sure, the words themselves are so plaine, as they are able to convince any mans conscience: And there is no Writer (not of the Ancient) on this place, that I can find * (save he, that turned all into Allegories) but literally understands it, and likes well enough we should actually performe it.

* *Amb. Hexam. lib.*6.*cap.*9. Hicro. in Esa. 45.*ver.*23. Cyril. in Esa.To. 4.*orat.*3.

Yet will ye see, what subtilties are taken up, to shift this duty?

All Knees are called for, and all have not Knees. Here are three rankes reckoned: and two of them have none. What is that to us? we have: To us, it is properly spoken, and we to look to it. And if this were ought, that the spirits in Heaven and Hell have no bodies, and so no Knees: Why, they have no Tongues neither properly, and then by the same rule, take away confessing too, and so doe neither.

But the Apostle, that in another place, gives the Angels tongues (with the tongues of Men and Angels,) might aswell in this place, give them Knees: they have one, as much as the other And in both places humanum dicit, he speakes to us, after the manner of men: that we by our owne language, might conceive, what they doe. For, sure it is, the spirits of both kindes, as they doe yeeld reverence, so they have their waies, and meanes, to expresse it, by somewhat, ἀνάλογον to the Knee. They doe it, their way: we to doe it, ours. And this is ours: let us look to our own then, and not busie our braines about theirs. But for us, and for our sakes they are divers times expressed in the Revelation, even doing thus, falling downe before Him.

The Name of IESVS.

Secondly, why to this Name, more than to the Name of CHRIST? There want not reasons why.

CHRIST is not, cannot be, the Name of GOD: GOD cannot be anointed. But, JESUS is the Name of GOD, and the chiefe Name of GOD (as wee have heard.)

The name CHRIST, is communicated, by Him to others, namely to Princes: So is not JESUS: that is proper. Ego sum, & praeter me non est alius. And ever that which is proper, is above that which is holden in common.

Esa. 43.11.

CHRIST is anointed, to what end? to be our Saviour. That is the end then. And ever, the end is above the meanes: ever the name of health, above the name of any medicine.

But

But, when we finde expreſly in the verſe, this Name is exalted above all names, and this act, limited to it, in direct words; and ſo, this Name above them, in this very peculiar: Why ſeek we any further?

Thirdly, What? to the two ſyllables, or to the ſound of them? What needs this? Who ſpeakes of ſound or ſyllables? The Text ſaith, do it to the Name. The name is not the ſound, but the ſenſe. The caution is eaſie then, do it to the ſenſe; have minde on Him, that is named, and doe His Name the honour, and ſpare not. 3

Fourthly, But it cannot be denied, but there hath ſuperſtition beene uſed in it. Suppoſe there hath. And almoſt, in what not? In hearing of Sermons now, is there not ſuperſtition in a great many? What ſhall we do then? Lay them downe? Abandon hearing as we do Kneeling? I trow, not; but remove the ſuperſtition, and retaine them ſtill; doe but even ſo here, and all is at an end. 4

Indeed, if it were a taken-up-worſhip, or ſome humane injunction; it might perhaps, be drawne within the caſe of the brazen Serpent. But being thus directly ſet downe by GOD Himſelfe; in us, there may be ſuperſtition; in it, there can be none. And, if it be in us, we are to mend our ſelves, but not to ſtirre the act, which is of GODS owne preſcribing. It was never heard in Divinity, that ever ſuperſtition could aboliſh a duty of the Text. 2 Reg. 18.4.

That we ſet our ſelves to drive away ſuperſtition, it is well: But it will be well too, that we ſo drive it away, as we drive not all reverent regard and decency away with it alſo. And are we not well toward it? we have driven it from our head: for we keep on, of all hands: And from our Knees; for, Kneele we may not: we uſe not (I am ſure.) Sure, heed would be taken, that by taking heed we prove not ſuperſtitious, we ſlip not into the other extreme, before we be aware: Which, of the two extremes, Religion worſe indureth; as more oppoſite unto it. For, believe this, as it may be ſuperſtitiouſly uſed; ſo it may irreligiouſly be neglected alſo.

Looke to the Text then, and let no man perſwade you, but that GOD requireth a reverent carriage, even of the body it ſelfe: And namely, this ſervice of the Knee; And that, to His Sonnes Name. Ye ſhall not diſpleaſe Him by it, feare not: Feare this rather, for the Knee, if it will not bow; that it ſhall be ſtricken with ſomewhat, that it ſhall not be able to bow. And for the Name, that they that will do no honour to it; when time of need comes, ſhall receive no comfort by it. And ſo I leave this point.

The Tongue. Pſal. 30.12. 57. 8.

For, the Knee is not all: He further requires ſomewhat, from the Tongue. And, reaſon: That member, of all other, the Pſalmiſt cals our glory: a peculiar, we have more than beaſts: They will be taught to bow, and bend their joynts: We have Tongues beſides, to doe ſomthing more than they. And indeed, the Knee is but a dumbe acknowledgement; doth but ſignifie implicitè: but a vocall confeſsion, that doth utter our minde plainly. And ſo, is looked for, at our hands.

To confeſſe.

This He cals, ἐξομολόγησις. Three things are in it: Firſt, λόγος: ſpeak we muſt, ſay ſomewhat. And ſecondly, ὁμοῦ; do it together; not ſome ſpeake, and ſome ſit mute. And thirdly, ἐξ ſpeak out, not whiſpering, or betweene the teeth; but clearly and audibly. And this is ἐξομολόγησις. And it was the praiſe of the Primitive Church, this, that joyntly they did it, and aloud; that their Amen (as S. Hierome ſaith) was like a clap of thunder; and their Alleluja as the roaring of the Sea: And no praiſe it is to us; who, as our joynts are ſtiffe to bow, ſo our voices are hoarſe to confeſſe. We can neither ſee the former, nor ſcarce heare the latter; as if (there being but two duties in the Text) we meant to ſuppreſſe them both.

Knee firſt, and then Tongue.

The Knee, and the Tongue: Why the Knee firſt? why begins He there? They be marſhalled right. For, having by our Knee bowed, put our ſelves in minde of due regard of Him in feare and reverence; we are then the fitter to ſpeake of Him, and to Him, with that reſpect is meet: And, not be ſo homely with Him, as in their geſture and ſpeech both, ſome are: as if they were haile fellow, even familiar with GOD. And all (forſooth) as they call it, to caſt out the ſpirit of bondage. From a heart poſſeſſed with the humble feare of GOD, from ſuch an heart, Confeſsion is evet moſt kindly: Faith being as the heart; and feare being as the lungs; (ſo the Fathers compare them:) It will get an heat, and an over-heat (our faith;) if by feare, as coole ayre, it be not tempered: But, faith and feare together, make the bleſſed mixture.

The Tongue, and every tongue; as the Knee, and every Knee: they to bow all, and theſe all to confeſſe. But for all that, not all alike. They, in heaven, caſt downe their crownes, and fall downe themſelves of their owne accord: And confeſſe Him, ſinging, as at His birth, and in the Revelation diverſe times. They under the earth do it too, but not ultrò, are throwne downe, and even made His foot-ſtoole. So; downe they go, though ſore againſt their wils: And confeſſe Him too, though roaring, and as it were upon the racke. They, on Earth (as in the midſt) partake of both. The better ſort, with the Angels, get them to their Knees gladly; and cheerfully confeſſe Him: The reſt (as Infidels, and ſome Chriſtians little better) are forced to fall backward, and made in the end to cry, Vicisti Galilæe, though they gnaw their Tongues when they have done.

So, we ſee our lot: One way, or other, we ſhall come to it, all: if not now, in die illo: Which is the reaſon, that Rom. 14. 11. the Apoſtle applieth this place in Eſay, to CHRIST's ſitting in Judgement, at the latter day. Exalted, He ſhall be, with our good wils; or whether we will or no. Either fall on our Knees now; or be caſt flat on our faces then: Either confeſſe Him Cantando, with Saints and Angels, or ululando, with devils and damned ſpirits. For, the Father will be glorified in the Sonne, by the glorious Confeſſion, of them that yeeld; or the glorious confuſion, of them that ſtand out.

Every Tongue.
Pſal. 150. ult.

The Tongue, and every Tongue: that is, every Speech, Dialect, Idiome, Language, in the world, ſtand charged with this Confeſſion. Omnis ſpiritus, every ſpirit to give breath; and Omnis Lingua, every Tongue to be as a Trumpet, to ſound it forth. And, where are they then, that deny any Tongue the faculty here granted; Or barre any of them the duty here injoyned? That locke up the publike Confeſſion (the chiefe of all other) in ſome one Tongue or two, and ſend forth their Superſedeas to all the reſt? No, His Title here, hath more Tongues than Pilate's on the Croſſe: That had but three; this, hath every Tongue, what, where, whoſoever, none except. is the LORD.

But, though thus many Tongues, yet one Confeſſion, even this, that JESUS CHRIST is the LORD. And a bleſſed Confeſſion is it (this) that JESUS (that is) a SAVIOUR, that He, that ſuch a one is the LORD: that not a fleecer, or a flayer, but a SAVIOUR, hath the place. 2. That CHRIST (that is) one which ſaveth and cureth, unctione, non punctione, with anointing, not with ſearing or pricking, that we acknowledge Him to be the LORD. LORD: before, by that He is SONNE: And now LORD againe, by vertue of His Propter quod.

Lord, whereof? Nay not qualified, of ſuch a Place, Baronie, County, Segniorie, but Lord in abſtracto. But, if we will qualifie Him, we may. Lord of theſe three ranks of Confeſſours (here in the Verſe) and of thoſe three places and Regions, that containe them: 1. Lord of Heaven, He gave the Keyes of it: 2. Lord of earth: He hath the Key of David (and, if of His, of every Kingdome elſe:) 3. Lord of hell, for, loe, the Keyes of Hell and of Death, Apoc. 1. 18. Of Death, to unlocke the graves:

Well, if it be but to confeſſe this, that is no great matter, we will not ſticke with Him; who cannot ſay, JESUS CHRIST is the Lord? That can no man (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſay it, as it ſhould be ſaid, but by the HOLY GHOST. For, confeſſing Him LORD, we confeſſe more things by Him, than one. For, two things goe to it.

Matth. 14. 30.
Acts 9. 6.

1. S. Peter gives us one; 2. S. Paul, the other. 1. Domine ſalva, pereo, ſaith S. Peter. Save Lord, I ſink: A Lord to ſave. 2. Domine quid me vis facere? ſaith S. Paul. Lord what ſervice wouldeſt thou I ſhould doe? A Lord to ſerve.

Saint

S. Peters, we like well; to ſuccour and ſave us, when we are in any danger: He ſhall heare of us, then. But S. Pauls Quid me vis facere? when it comes to that, then our confeſſion fumbles, and ſtickes in our teeth: Nay, then, Quis eſt Dominus noſter? we have no LORD (we) then. So, we play faſt and looſe, with our confeſſion; faſt, at ſuccour, looſe, at ſervice; in, at one, out, at the other. Pſal. 12.4.

But what ſpeake I of doing His will? when, if He do not ours, in each reſpect; if we have not this or that when we would, we fall from confeſſing, and fall to murmuring. And it fareth with us, not as if He were LORD, and we to do His will: but as if, we (indeed) were the LORDS, and He to do ours: As if there were nothing betweene us and Him, but He to do our turnes, and then Tu autem Domine, His Lordſhip were expired and at an end.

Upon the point, thus it is: we confeſſe it, the wrong way; the Lord to be Ieſus: but not, Ieſus to be the Lord. O Lord be Ieſus: but not, O Ieſus be Lord. O Lord be Ieſus, to ſave us: but not, O Ieſus be Lord, to command us. So that, all our humiliavit ſtill, is without factus obediens.

Ye ſee then, it is worth the while, to confeſſe this, as it ſhould be confeſſed. In this wiſe none can doe it, but by the HOLY GHOST. Otherwiſe, for an Ore tenus only, our own ghoſt will ſerve well enough. But that, is not it. Quid me vis facere? is it, that makes the Lord. He tels us ſo Himſelfe, and with a kinde of admiration, that any ſhould think otherwiſe: How call ye me Lord (ſaith He) and doe not as I will you? Luke 6.46. As much to ſay, as, It is to no purpoſe, though you ſay Domine, Domine, double it, and treble it too, it will goe for no confeſſion, if a factis negant come in the neck of it: Matth. 7.21. Tit. 1.16. if S. Pauls Quid me vis facere be left out?

And this, is yet more plaine, by the laſt words of all. Namely, that this confeſſion is ſo to be made, as it redound to the glory of GOD the Father. Whoſe great glory, it is, that His Sonne is Lord of ſuch ſervants, That men ſhall ſay, See what ſervanrs He hath! how full of reverence to His Name! how free, how forward to do His will! Herein is His Name much magnified. As on the other ſide, it muſt needs be evill ſpoken of, and that among the very Heathen, when, not a Knee, got to bow; when this ſyllable (LORD) comes out of our mouth, but no Quid me vis facere? to follow it. When they ſee, how unſervice-like, our ſervice is; how rude our behaviour toward Him, and His Name, whom we terme Lord (indeed) but uſe Him nothing ſo. But, come hither into His preſence, and carry our ſelves here, for all the world, as the fellow did before Auguſtus, of whom, Mecænas well ſaid: Hic homo erubeſcit timere Cæſarem. And ſo, we: as if we were aſhamed, to ſeeme to beare any reverence at all, to Him, or His Name. It would not be thus. I am privie, there is no one thing, doth more alien thoſe, that of a ſimple minde refuſe the Church, than this; that they ſee ſo unſeemly behaviour, ſo ſmall reverence ſhewed this way. But ſure, the Apoſtle tels us, our carriage there ſhould be ſuch, ſo decent, as if a ſtranger, or unbeliever ſhould come into our aſſemblies, the very reverence He there ſeeth, ſhould make him fall downe, and ſay, Verily GOD is among us; to ſee us, ſo reſpectively beare our ſelves, in the manner of our worſhip. Rom. 2.24. 1 Cor. 14.25.

This Confeſſion that Ieſus is the Lord, is to be, to the glory of GOD the Father: So we take it one way. Or, this Confeſſion is to be, that Ieſus is the Lord to the glory of GOD the Father: ſo another way. And both well. To confeſſe: that He is the Lord, that all His Lordſhip is, not to His owne glory, but to His Fathers. Think not then, that Gloria filio, ſhall abate ought of Gloria Patri. The Sonne is Lord, to the glory of His Father, and not otherwiſe. Let that feare then be farre from us, that in exalting the Sonne, we ſhall in the leaſt minute eclipſe the glory of His Father. Here is no feare of emulation, that it will prove the caſe of Iupiter and Saturne. No, ſo bleſſed is the accord of this Father, and this Sonne, as the Father thinketh it ſome blemiſh to His glory, if ſo profound humility, ſo complete obedience, He had not ſeen highly rewarded, with Super upon Super. And the Son will admit of no glory, that ſhall impaire His Fathers in the leaſt degree: For loe, He is Lord to the glory of God His Father. This, is the end of His (of CHRISTS:) And the ſame may be the end of all Exaltations; that Confeſſe to the glory of GOD the Father.

IESVS is the LORD to the glory of GOD the Father.

that a SAVIOUR ever may be LORD, hold that place: and hold it, and be LORD, not to His owne, but to the glory of GOD, even GOD the Father.

The conclusion. Matth. 11. 26. Iohn 13. 15. Luke 2. 12.

The end of all: And, we muſt needs know and take that, with us; for which, all this here is brought. And it is a Leſſon; even, His Diſcite à me: and it is a Paterne; even His Exemplum dedi vobis, to commend unto us, the vertue of the Text; the Propter quod of the Feaſt; even Humility: Hoc erit ſignum, it is His ſigne at Chriſtmas: As His ſigne then, ſo His Propter quod now, at Eaſter. So, the vertue of both Feaſts: I will offer you but three ſhort points touching it.

1 Humiliavit. CHRISTS Perſon.

It is no humble man is ſet before us here, it is the Sonne of GOD, and Himſelfe GOD: Et quomodo non humiliatur homo, coram humili Deo? How is not the Sonne of man humble, and the Sonne of GOD is? Even for Him, to love it; for His very Perſon.

2 Worke.

And, in this vertue, He is not barely ſet out to us, but in it, and by it, bringing to paſſe the works of our redemption: Which, cannot but extraordinarily commend this vertue to us; in that it hath pleaſed GOD, to doe more for us, in this His Humility, than ever He did, in all His Majeſty: even, to ſave and redeeme us by it. To love it then; if not for Him, yet for the works ſake.

Ioh. 10. 38. 14. 11.

3 Reward.

But ſpecially (which is the third) for the Propter quod, in the Text: if not for the worke, yet for the Rewards ſake. That, as CHRIST was no loſer by it, no more ſhall we: For, all this Glory here, the way to it, is, by the firſt verſe. Humiliavit, is the beginning, and the end of it is exalting. That, the mother; this, the daughter: all riſeth from Humiliavit ipſe ſe. Humiliamini ergo, ſaith Saint Iames: Humiliamini ergo, ſaith Saint Peter; and after it there followeth ſtill, & exaltabit vos Deus, a promiſe of a like glorious end. And what ſaith the Apoſtle here? This minde (ſaith he) was in CHRIST; and it was φρονῆσις, a wiſe minde: That, we count it a wiſe minde, and worth the carrying, and carry it; and it ſhall carry us, to the ſame journeyes end, it brought Him: even to the glory of GOD the Father. This for Humility.

Iames 4. 10. 1 Pet. 5. 6. Verſe 5.

Obedicns Domine.

And what? Shall we not give ſome light triall, of our Obedience alſo, to averre our Confeſſion, that, He is our LORD? It would be, by Domine, quid nos vis facere? (that is the true triall.) Say then, Domine, quid nos vis facere? And, He will anſwer us; Hoc facite in Mei memoriam. Will ye know, what I would have you doe? Doe this, in remembrance of Me: In ſigne that I am LORD, doe but this: Here is a caſe of inſtance, and that now; even at this very preſent, a proof to be made. By this, we ſhall ſee, whether He be LORD or no. For, if not this; but ſlip the collar here, and ſhrink away: Si rem grandem dixiſſet, in a farre greater matter, how would we ſtand with Him, then? We were wrong before, here is the ſound and ſyllables (we ſpake of) here it is. For, all is but ſound and ſyllables, if, not this.

2 Reg. 5. 13.

Heb. 6. 9.

But of us, I hope for better things, that by our humble carriage, and Obedience (at leaſt, in this) we will ſet our ſelves, ſome way to exalt Him, in this His day of Exaltation: Which, as it will tend to His glory; ſo will He turne it to matter of our glory: and that, in His Kingdome of glory; or (to keep the word of the Text) in the glory of GOD the Father. That ſo we may end, as the Text ends. A better, or more bleſſed end there cannot be. And, to this bleſſed end, He bring us, that by His humility and obedience, hath not onely purchaſed it for us: but ſet the way open, and 'gone it before us, JESUS CHRIST the Righteous, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the IX. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXV.
being EASTER-DAY.

JOHN, Chap. II. Ver. XIX.

Reſpondit IESUS, & dixit, Solvite Templum hoc, & in tribus diebus excitabo illud.

IESUS anſwered and ſaid, Diſſolve (or, deſtroy) this Temple, and within three dayes I will raiſe it up againe.

HE anſwered and ſaid this, to the Phariſees. Who ſought a Signe of Him (the Verſe next before.) A Signe they would have; And (he tels them) a Signe they ſhould have. Themſelves ſhould miniſter Him occaſion, to ſhew a Signe; the like was never ſhewen. For, deſtroy Him they ſhould (His body, ſo) and He within three dayes, would raiſe it againe, from death to life. The Occaſion. A Signe. Verſ. 18.

But this Anſwer of His, is a figurative ſpeech, and runs under the termes of the Temple. The reaſon whereof was: they were then in the Temple; there, fell out this Queſtion. And (as it appeareth in the Verſes before) much adoe there had beene betweene them, and that a long time, about the Temple. The ſpeech figurative.

Now, His manner ſtill was; the Place, the Time, the Matter in hand, ever to frame the Tenour and termes of His ſpeech, according to them. And ſo, now, being in the Temple, He takes His termes from thence; even from the Temple.

But He doth (as I may ſay) Solvere Templum hoc, looſe and undoe this terme for us: For (within a Verſe) we are told, this Temple is no other, than the Temple of The figure interpreted. Verſ. 21.

His body. (Now the reſt followes of it ſelfe.) The Solvite, is a taking Him in ſunder, His ſoule from His body: The excitabo, is the ſetting them together, and raiſing them up againe. And both theſe, within three dayes (the onely word in the Text, wherein there is no figure.)

How a Signe in the true ſenſe.

And this now was His Signe. And a great Signe it was. Great, even in their ſenſe, if it had been, but of the Pile of Building (as they took the word Temple.) But greater farre, farre another manner Signe in His ſenſe, in the true.

For, as for that Temple, Zorobabel, and Herod had raiſed it: and other great Perſons, as great Buildings as that. But, the Temple of the body, if that were once downe, all the Temple-builders that ever were, with all their care and coſt could never get it up more. Therefore, in His (in CHRIST's) ſenſe it is farre the greater ſigne, than as they phanſied it.

Luke 16.30.

Indeed, ſo great a Signe, as he, that was in hell fire, could not deviſe, nor did not deſire a greater. If but Lazarus, if but one come from the dead: then; then regard him: that ſigne, out of queſtion. Why, here is one come from the dead, and this day come, and a greater than Lazarus: I truſt then, we will regard Him, we will regard this ſigne, and not be worſe, than he in hell was. Let us then regard it.

The Diviſion.

The ground of the ſigne (and of all here) is Templum hoc. About it, two maine Acts, they ſhew forth themſelves: The razing of it downe, in Solvite; The raiſing of it up, in Excitabo. Theſe in figure. Anſwerable to theſe, This Temple, is Chriſts bodie. The razing it downe, is CHRIST crucified and ſlaine. The raiſing it up, is CHRIST reſtored to life.

Of which two (to divide it by the Perſons) Solvite is their part: Excitabo, His. That, His Paſſion by their act (Solvite:) This, His Reſurrection, by His owne, (Excitabo.)

Now, this (He ſaith) ſhall be done: And ſaith farther, ſhall not be long in doing: No longer, than three dayes. And within the compaſſe of the time limited He did it: For, this is now the third day; And to day, by Sun-riſing, it was done.

I. II. III. IV.

So upon the matter, there come to be handled theſe foure points. 1. That Chriſt's body is Templum hoc. 2. The diſſolution of it by death, in Solvite. 3. The rearing it up againe by His reſurrection, in Excitabo. 4. The time to doe it in, three dayes.

By which circumſtance of three dayes, and this day the third of them, commeth this time, to claime a kinde of property in this paſſage of Scripture. And that, two wayes.

For firſt: at this Feaſt, were theſe words here ſpoken: (you may ſee, they were ſo, at the thirteenth verſe before: at the Feaſt of Eaſter.)

And ſecondly: at this Feaſt againe, were they fulfilled after: the Solvite, three dayes ſince; the Excitabo, this very day. So, at this Feaſt, the promiſe, and at the very ſame, the accompliſhment of it. The accompliſhment, once: the memoriall, ever.

Being then, at this very time, thus ſpoken and done: Spoken, here now, done, three yeares after: Being (I ſay) ſpoken, and done, and at this time ſpoken and done; Never ſo fit as now.

I.

The two ſenſes of Templum hoc. Verſ. 19.

Solvite Templum hoc. Templum hoc, we begin with. It is a borrowed terme. But we cannot miſſe the ſenſe of it. For, both are ſet down here to our hand: the wrong ſenſe, and the right. The wrong (the next verſe of all) for the materiall Temple. So the Phariſees tooke it, and miſ-tooke it. The right (the next Verſe after) for for the Temple of His body. So, they ſhould have taken it. For ſo He meant it: Ipſe autem dicebat, &c. But He ſpake of the Temple of His Body. And He knew his owne meaning beſt; and reaſon would, ſhould be His own Interpreter. Verſ. 21.

And this meaning of His, it had been no hard matter for them to have hit on: but they came but a byrding, but to catch from Him ſome advantage, and ſo were willing to miſ-take Him. As, this they caught as an advantage (we ſee) and laid it up for a rainie day, and three yeares after, out they came with it, and framed an Inditement upon it, as if He had meant to have deſtroyed their Temple. Mat. 26. 61. Mar. 14. 58.

But was it likely, or could it once be imagined, He meant to deſtroy it? It was GOD's houſe, and the zeale of God's houſe (but even a verſe before) conſumed Him. And doth His zeale now (like the zeale of our times) conſume God's houſe? What, and that ſo quickly? but a Verſe between? But even very now, He purged it: And did He purge it to have it pulled downe? That were prepoſterous. Now it was purged, pull it downe? Nay pull it downe, when it was polluted: Now it is cleanſed, let it ſtand. To reforme Churches, and then ſeek to diſſolve them, will be counted among the errours of our Age. CHRIST was farre from it. He that would not ſee it abuſed, would never indure to have it deſtroyed; ſpecially, not, when He had reformed the abuſes: And yet more ſpecially, not even preſently upon it (they might be ſure.) The Phariſees ſenſe could not be true. Verſ. 18.

But, that, which muſt needs lead them to the right meaning, was: that, theſe words (Templum hoc.) He could not ſay them, but, by the manner of His uttering them, by His very geſture, at the delivery of this particle (hoc) they muſt needs know what Temple it was, He intended. It was eaſie to marke, whither He carried His hand, or caſt His eye up to the fabrique of it; or, whither He bare them, to His body: Which one thing onely, was enough to have reſolved them of this point, and to quit our Saviour of equivocation.

We will then wayve theirs as the wrong meaning, and take it (as he wiſheth, who leant on his breſt and beſt knew His minde) of the Temple of His body. The true ſenſe. Chap. 13. 23.

But what reſemblance is there, between a body and a Temple? or how can a body be ſo termed? Well enough: For, I ask, why is it a Temple? What makes it ſo? Is it not, becauſe it is Domus Patris mei as (He ſaid, a little before) becauſe GOD dwelleth there? For, as that, wherein man dwels, is a houſe: So, that, wherein GOD, is a Temple properly. That (I ſay) wherein; be it place, or be it body. So come we to have two ſorts of Temples; Temples of fleſh and bone, as well as Temples of lime and ſtone. For, if our bodies be termed houſes, becauſe our ſoules (tenant-wiſe) abide and dwell in them; If, becauſe our ſoules dwell, they be houſes; if GOD doe ſo, they be Temples; why not? Why not? why know ye not this (ſaith the Apoſtle) that your very bodies (if the Spirit of GOD abide in them) eo ipſo, Temples they be (ſuch as they be?) But then they be ſo ſpecially, when actually we imploy them in the ſervice of GOD. For, being in His Temple, and there ſerving Him, then, if ever, they be Templa in Templo, Living Temples in a Temple without life. A body then, may be a Temple: Even this of ours.

1 A Body, a Temple. Verſ. 16.

1 Cor. 6. 19.

And if ours, theſe of ours (I ſay) in which, the Spirit of God dwelleth onely by ſome gift or grace: with how much better right (better infinitely) His body (Chriſt's) in whom the whole Godhead, in all the fulneſſe of it, dwelt corporally? Corporally (I ſay) and not Spiritually alone (as, in us:) By nature; by perſonall union: not (as in us) by grace, and by participation of it, onely. Againe, if ours, which we ſuffer oft to be polluted with ſinne, that many times they ſtand ſhut up, and no ſervice in them for a long ſeaſon together; how much more His, that never was defiled with any the leaſt ſinne, never ſhut, but continually taken up, and wholly imployed in His Father's ſervice? His, above all exception; His, without all compariſon, certainly. Alas, ours but Tabernacles under goat skinns; His, the true, the Marble, the Cedar-Temple indeed. CHRIST's body then, a Temple. 2 CHRIST's body a Temple. Col. 2. 9.

But, a Temple at large, will not ſerve: It muſt be Templum hoc, that very Temple, they tooke it for. And ſo we to proceed yet further, and to ſeeke a congruity of 3 Chriſt's body. This Temple, or templum hoc.

His bodie with the materiall Temple (it was taken for) to which there is no doubt, His intent was to reſemble it.

The Rabbins, in their Speculative Divinitie, do much buſie themſelves, toſhew; that, in the Temple, there was a modell of the whole world, and that all the Spheres in heaven, and all the Elements in earth were recapitulate in it. They were wide. The Fathers tooke the right, and beſtowed their time and travaile more to the point: to ſhew, how, that Temple and all that was in it, was nothing els, but a compendious repreſentation of CHRIST, for whom, and in whoſe honour, was that and all other true Temples. And this they did by warrant from the Apoſtle, who (in Heb. 9.) aimeth at ſome ſuch thing.

Heb. 9. 5.

Chriſts body, & Templum hoc wherein like.

Now the points of congruitie, they found, were many, they may be reduced to theſe foure. 1 Whether you looke to the compoſition or parts of it. 2. Or, to the furniture, and veſſels of it. 3. Or, to what was done in it. 4. Or, to what was done to it (that is) what, firſt and laſt, befell it. In all which, they hold, that Templum hoc might more truly be affirmed of Him, that was in the Temple; then of the Temple, He was in.

The laſt of the foure (what was done to that Temple, what befell it, and ſo what befell the Temple of Chriſts body) that (I take) to be moſt proper to this Text, and to that we have in hand. (For, to go through all foure, would take up a whole Sermon.) So, I take my ſelfe to the congruitie only.

Mark then what befell either: by that ſhall you beſt find, that Fata utriuſq; Templi, the deſtinies of both Temples were alike.

Pſal. 132. 6
Mat. 2. 1.
Like in Solvite, and excitabo.

They began alike. The firſt newes of the Temple was heard at Ephrata (which is Bethlehem.) So was it of Him; for, there was He borne.

Like, in their beginnings: and in their ends, no leſſe. I appeale to this text, and content me with thoſe two, He inſiſts on Himſelfe. Both were deſtroyed, both were reared againe; that in all things, His body, and His Temple might be ſuitable.

2 Chro. 36. 19.
Pſal. 137. 7.

That Temple was deſtroyed by the Chaldees; downe with it even unto the ground. Imitated by them here: downe with it, even into the ground. For they never left, till they had Him there: paſt Excitabo (as they thought) paſt riſing any more. But, as the Temple, after it was ſo razed, had an Excitabo; was raiſed againe up by Zerobabel: So was this too. Solvite, tooke place: but, there came an Excitabo after, that made amends for it. And, as the glory of the ſecond houſe, was greater than the firſt: So the eſtate, He roſe to, far more glorious then that, He was in before.

Agge 1. 14.
Agge 2. 10.

And marke (I pray you) if theſe two were not to be ſeen as brim, in the little glaſſes about it, as in the great Mirrour it ſelfe. For, the Temple was as a great Mirrour, and the furniture, as ſo many little glaſſes round about it. Take but the Arke (the Epitome as it were of the Temple.) The two Tables in it, the type of the true treaſures of Wiſdome and Knowledge hid in Him: they were broken firſt, there is Solvite; but they were new hewen, and written over againe, there is excitabo. The Pot of Manna (a perfect reſemblance of Him; the Vrna, or the veſſell being made of earth, ſo earthly; The Manna, the contents of it, being from heaven, ſo heavenly.) The Manna (we know) would not keep paſt two daies at the moſt, there is Solvite: but, being put into the Vrna, the third day it came again to it ſelfe, and kept in the Pot without putrifying ever after; there is Excitabo. Aarons rod (the type of his Prieſthood and of the rule of ſoules annexed to it) that Rod, was quite dead and drie; but revived againe and bloſſomed, yea brought forth ripe Almonds. In every and in each of them, His deſtinie whom they repreſented; Solvite and Excitabo in all.

But, the End is all in all; and in reſpect of that (of the end) well ſaith Ambroſe, of His bodie, Verè Templum, in quo noſtrorum eſt purificatio peccatorum. Truly a Temple He, no Temple ever ſo truly, as wherein was offered up the true propitiation for, and the true purification of our ſinnes; and of us from them: which is the end of all Temples that ever were or ſhall be; and was but ſhaddowed in all beſides, but in this truly performed.

There, the only true Holocauſt of His entire obedience, which burnt in Him bright and and cleare, from the firſt to the laſt, all His life long.

There, the only true treſpaſſe offering of His Death and Paſſion (the Solvite of this Temple) ſatisfactorie to the full, for all the treſpaſſes and tranſgreſſions of the whole world.

There, the Meat-and-Drinke-Offering of His bleſſed Bodie and moſt precious blood.

And the Exta of this ſacrifice, the fat of the entrailes of it, that is the Love wherwith He did it; the deſire, the longing deſire He had to it; that, that was the perfect Offering, that ſet at one all things both in heaven and earth. That, what ever was Sub figurâ in Templo illo, was really and in truth exhibited in Templo hoc. Luc. 12.50. 22.15. Col. 1.20.

And judge now, whether the Signe were not well laid by our SAVIOUR in the Temple, which was it ſelfe a ſigne of Him. And whether, as He ſaid in a place, Ecce major templo hîc: So He might not have ſaid Ecce majus templum hîc, when He was in the temple; Behold a greater, a truer temple now, in the temple, than the temple it ſelfe. Mat. 12.6

Now to the ſecond point, Solvite. [a] The ſaying it ſelfe, [b] The executing it after. The Solvite, and the Solutum eſt. II. a Solvite, the ſaying:

1 Firſt, by Solvite (that is) diſſolving is meant death. * Cupio diſſolvi, ye know, what that is: And tempus diſſolutionis meæ inſtat, the time of my diſſolution (that is, my death) is at hand. For, death, is a very diſſolution: a looſing the cement, the ſoule, and bodie are held together with. Which two, as a frame or fabrique, are compaginate at firſt; and after, as the timber from the lime, or the lime from the ſtone, ſo are they taken in ſunder againe. But death, is not, this way only, a looſing; but a further than this. For upon the looſing the ſoule from the body, and the life from both, there followes an univerſall looſing, of all the bonds and knots here: of the Father from the Son; and otherwhile, of the Son from the Father firſt: Of Man from Wife, of friend from friend, of Prince from People: So great a Solvite is death; makes all, that is faſt, looſe: makes all knots flie in ſunder. 1 Solvite. Death a looſing. * Phil. 4.23. 2 Tim. 4.6.

2 And all this in naturall death. But a further matter there is in Solvite. For that is againſt nature, aliis ſolventibus, by the hands of other, that are the ſolventes (them, to whom this is ſpoken.) This temple, drops not downe for age, or weakneſſe; diſſolves not of it ſelfe: Others (they to whom Solvite is here ſaid) they pull it down. It is then no naturall, but a violent death, this. Well therefore turned (Solvite, deſtroy it:) there is no deſtruction, but with force or violence. 2 Solvite. Violent.

3 So violent though, on theirs, as voluntary yet, on His part. Not againſt His will quite, not by conſtraint: For, He Himſelfe, that is to be diſſolved, He it is, doth here ſay Solvite. He could have avoided it, if He would; He would not: In ſigne He would not (we ſee) Himſelfe ſaith Solvite. And Solvite He muſt have ſaid; He muſt have ſaid it, or they could not have done it. It had paſſed all their cunning and ſtrength to have undone this knot ever, but that He gave way to it. 3 Solvite. Voluntarie.

4 Gave way to it (I ſay) that we take not this Solvite otherwiſe, than He meant it. It is not of the nature of a charge, this; nor we, ſo to conceive it. Very expedient it is, that we know the nature of ſolvite templum.

Solvite templum is no Commandement (be ſure) in no ſenſe; He commands not any temple; not that, they themſelves meant, to be deſtroyed; It were ſacrilege that, and no better. And ſacrilege the Apoſtle rankes with Idolatrie; as being full out as evill, if not worſe than it. 2 Solvite Templum No commandement. Rom. 2.17.

But indeed worſe: for, what Idolatrie but pollutes, ſacrilege puls quite downe. And eaſier it is, to new hallow a Temple polluted; than, to build one anew out of an heap of ſtones.

And if, but to ſpoile a Church, be ſacriledge: (as, it is granted:) yet, that leaves ſomewhat, at leaſt, the wals and the roofe (ſo it be not leade:) To leave nothing, but downe with it, is the crie of Edom, the worſt cry, the worſt ſacrilege, of all: and never Pſal. 127.7.

given

given in charge by GOD, to any (we may be ſure.)

1 Reg 8.18. 2 Chron.6.8. For, GOD Himſelf, ſaid to David with his own mouth, Whereas it was in thine heart, to build me an Houſe; thou didſt well, that thou waſt ſo minded. Didſt well? well done, to thinke of building? then, â ſenſu contrario, Evill done, to thinke of diſſolving. And, that which is evill, CHRIST will never injoyne.

But, what is to be thought of ſolvite templum, I would have you to judge by theſe two (they be both in the Text.) 1 To whom this is ſpoken. 2 And what is meant by it.

1 To whom Solvite Templum is ſaid. 1 To whom, this is ſpoken: Diſtingue tempora, is a good rule; So is, Diſtingue perſonas. Diſtinguiſh the perſons then, give every one his owne, it will make you love ſolvite templum the worſe, as long as you know it. Solvite? To whom is this ſpoken? Who be they? The Phariſees. To them, is this ſpeech directed. That, is made their worke, worke for a Phariſee, to diſſolve Churches. And ſo it was. For, as hot and holy as they ſeemed, with their broad Phylacteries and long prayers, our SAVIOUR ſaith; they loved the gold of the temple, better than the temple. So doe their poſteritie, to this day. To the Phariſees then with them; to their marrowes: that would faine heare Solvite, given in charge. The other perſon, is CHRIST: CHRISTS word and worke both, is excitabo: excitator templorum He, a Raiſer of them; a raiſer of them when they be downe (we ſee here.) They will not let them ſtand when they be up. CHRIST, He, ſets them up, for His part: When you will have them downe, you muſt beſpeake ſome Phariſee: And they will doe it, leviter rogati. For, as His ſpeech to them, is Solvite & excitabo; So, theirs to Him may ſeeme to be, Excita & ſolvemus: Set up, as many as He will, they will downe with them; firſt with templum hoc, then with templum illud; and ſo, one after another (if they may have their will:) they lack but one, to give the Solvite to them, and to ſet them on work. Diſtingue perſonas then, And they, to whom ſolvite is ſaid, are but bad perſons certainly, and fit for a bad buſineſſe.

Mat 23.5. 14. 15.

2 What is meant by Solvite Templum. 2 Will ye marke againe, what is meant here by it, by deſtroying the temple? What, but even the killing of CHRIST? Now the ſuiting and ſorting of theſe two thus, hath but an evill aſpect neither. but, this worſe than the former, though. And, I wiſh but this one point well printed in all mens minds. Solvite templum: quid vult dicere? ſolvite templum (id eſt) Occidere CHRISTUM: that he that goes about to diſſolve the Church, it is all one, as if he went about to make away CHRIST. One of theſe is implied under the other. Enough (I think) to take off the edge of any that are glad to heare, and ready to catch ſolvite templum out of CHRIST's mouth, but quite beſides His meaning. For His meaning was (And it was one ſpeciall end of CHSIST's comparing His Body to the temple;) to ſhew, He would have us ſo to make account of the temple, and ſo to uſe it, as we would His owne very bodie: And to be as far from deſtroying one; as we would be from the other. This may ſuffice to let you know the nature of ſolvite templum once for all, that you bee not miſtaken in it.

3 Solvite templum hoc. Not by way of commandement. 3 Of ſolvite templum (I ſay:) But now, to come to ſolvite templum hoc, to the temple of his body. Concerning; that it ſhould enter into any mans heart, to think, CHRIST would open His mouth to command, or to counſell His owne making away; (that is, the committing the moſt horrible foule murther that ever was) GOD forbid. It was a ſin, out of meaſure ſinfull, that, if ever any were. And give me any Religion, rather than that, that draweth GOD into the ſocietie of ſin: makes Him, or makes CHRIST, either Author or Adviſer, Commander or Counſellor, of ought that is evill. Any (I ſay) rather than that.

But by way of prædiction. 1 How then? if no command, what is it? All that can be made of it (ſay the Ancient Fathers) is, but either, a prediction (in the ſtyle of the Prophets) Come down Babel; (that is) Babel ſhall be brought downe: So ſolvite, ye ſhall deſtroy; to warne them, what He ſaw, they were now caſting about, and whither their malice would carry them in the end, even to be the deſtroyers and murderers of the SONNE of GOD.

Eſay 47.1.

2 Either

2 Either this; Or (at moſt) but a permiſsion; which, in all tongues, is ever made in this mood (in the Imperative.) So, we uſe to ſay; Goe to, doe and ye will; or, doe what ye will with my bodie; when, we mean but ſufferance, for all that, and no command at all. For all the world, this ſolvite to them, as Fac citò to Iudas after. Quod facis, that, which you are reſolved to doe, and have taken earneſt upon it; Fac, doe it, and, Fac citò, Doe it out of the way; which yet (it is well knowne) was nothing but a permiſsion, and not a jot more. By way of permiſsion. Ioh. 13. 17.

2 But, ſhould ſuch, ſo foule an evill, as that, be permitted though? No, nor that neither, ſimply; It is not a bare permiſsion, but one qualified; and that with two limitations, Will ye marke them? 1 For firſt He would not ſuffer any evill at all (leaſt of all, that) but that out of the evill He was able (able and willing both) to draw a far greater good. Greater, for good (I ſay) than, that was, for evill. And that was ſolutionem peccati, ex ſolutione templi. Permitted for a greater good.

For, we are not to think, that He would, thus downe with it, and up with it again, only to ſhew them feats and tricks (as it were) to be wondred at, and for no other end. No, the end was the deſtroying of ſinne, by the deſtroying this temple. It went hard, Et ve tibi atrocitas peccati noſtri, and woe to the hainouſneſſe of our ſinnes, for the diſſolving whereof, neither the Prieſt might be ſuffered to live, nor the temple to ſtand; but the Prieſt be ſlaine, and the temple be pulled downe, Prieſt and temple and all be deſtroyed. But, ſin was ſo riveted into our Nature: And again, our Nature ſo incorporate into His, as no diſſolving the one, without the diſſolution of the other. No way to over-whelme ſin quite, but by the fall of this temple. The ruine of it like that of Samſons: That, the deſtruction of the Philiſtines; this, the diſſolving of all the workes of the Divell. It is S. Iohns owne terme, Vt ſolveret opera Diaboli. Iudic. 16. 30. 1 Ioh. 3. 8.

2 But, neither was this enough yet: Neither would He, for all this, have at any hand let it go down, but that withall He meant to have it up againe preſently. Never have ſaid ſolvite, but with an excitabo ſtraight upon it; which is a full amends; ſo that the temple loſes nothing, by the looſing. Permitted, for another as good.

The World with us, hath ſeene a ſolvite, without any excitabo; Downe with this, but nothing raiſed in the ſtead. But, that is none of His: Solvite without excitabo, none of CHRIST's. We ſee, with one breath, He undertakes, it ſhall up again, and that in a ſhort time: There is amends for ſolvite.

And ſo now with theſe two limitations, under theſe two conditions; 1 One of a greater good by it; the other, of another as good or better, in liew of it; may Solvite be ſaid permiſsivè: and otherwiſe not, by any warrant from CHRIST, or from His example.

And thus, you have heard what He ſaith. Will ye now ſee, what they did: what became of this ſolvite of His? Solvite (ſaith He) and when time came, they did it. But He ſaid ſolvite, that is looſe; and they cryed Crucifige, at the time (that is) faſten; faſten Him to the croſſe: but that faſtening was His looſing; for it loſt Him and coſt Him His life, Which was the ſolutum eſt of this ſolvite. b Solvite the doing.

For indeed, Solutum eſt templum hoc, this temple of His body, the ſpirit from the fleſh, the fleſh from the blood was looſed quite. The roofe of it (His head) looſed with thornes. the foundation (His feet) with nailes. The ſide Iſles (as it were) His hands both likewiſe. And His bodie, as the bodie of the temple, and His heart in the midſt of His body, as the Sanctum Sanctorum, with the ſpeare: Looſed, all. What He ſaid, they did, and did it home.

Nay, they went beyond their commiſſion, and did more than, ſolvere. A thing may be looſed gently, without any rigour: They looſed Him not, but rudely they rent and rived Him, one part from another, with all extremitie; left not one piece of the continuum whole together. With their whips, they looſed not, but tore His skin and fleſh all over; with their hammers and nailes, they did not ſolvere, but fodere His hands and feet: With the wreath of thornes, they looſed not, but gored His head round about: More then Solvite.

and

and with the ſpeare point rived the very heart of Him: as if He had ſaid to them, dilaniate, and not ſolvite. For, as if it had come è laienâ, it was not Corpus ſolutum, but lacerum: His bodie not looſed, but mangled and broken (Corpus quod frangitur:) And His blood, not eaſily let out, but ſpilt and powred our (Sanguis qui funditur) even like water upon the ground. Well is it turned, deſtroy: It is more like a deſtruction, than a ſolution: More than ſolvite it was, ſure.

1 Cor. 11. 23. Mat. 26, 28.

The ſolvite of this Temple ſenſible.

Now, will ye remember? This was a Temple of fleſh and bone, not one of lime and ſtone. Yet the ragged ruines of one of them demoliſhed, will pitie a mans heart to ſee them; and make him ſay Alas poore ſtones, What have theſe done? yet the ſtones neither feele their beating downe, nor ſee the deformed plight, they lye in. But He, Sic ſolutus eſt, ut ſe ſolvi ſentiret, the ſolution of His skin, fleſh, hands, feet and head, He was ſenſible of all; He ſaw the deformitie, He felt the paines of them all.

The ſolvite of this Sweat.

Luk. 22. 44.

So ſaw, and ſo felt, as with the very ſight and ſenſe, before it came, there befell Him another ſolvite, a ſtrang one: ſolutus eſt in ſudorem, the orifices of the veines, all over the texture of His bodie, were looſed, and all His blood let looſe, that He was all over in a ſtrange ſweat, ſtood full of great drops of blood. A Solvite, never heard of, nor read of but in Him only.

The ſolvite of the Veile.

Mat. 27. 51.

And yet another ſolvite. For (that ſolvite templum hoc might every way be true; in all ſenſes verified) what time the Veile of His fleſh rent, that His ſoule was looſed and departed: at the very ſame inſtant, the Veile of the materiall temple, that ſplit alſo in two from the top to the bottome: as it were for companie, or in a ſympathy with Him: That, it was literally true (this Solvite) and of the temple, that they meant. And ſo, two ſolvites of both temples, together at once.

The great ſolvite at His Paſſion.

Mat. 27. 51. 52.

* Dion. Areop.

One more yet (and I have done with ſolvite,) and that is, a ſolvite in a manner of all; of the great temple of heaven and earth. For the very face of Heaven, then all black and darke at noone day, yet no Eclipſe (the Moone was at the full) the Earth quaking, the ſtones renting, the graves opening, as they then did, ſhewed plainly, there was then toward, ſome univerſall ſolvite, ſome great diſſolution (as the * Philoſopher then ſaid) either of the frame of nature, or of the GOD of nature.

Caſt your eye thither, looke upon that, and there you ſhall ſee ſolvite templum hoc plainly, and what it meanes. And, it had beene enough, if they had had any grace, even to have pointed them to the time, when this ſolvite templum hoc, was fulfilled by them. And this for both ſolvite, and ſolutum eſt (their part:) which was His paſſion by, their Act.

III.

a Excitabo the ſaying.

Now (to anſwer them two) to Exeitabo, and Excitavit (His part:) His reſurrection by His owne.

And firſt to Excitabo. Hitherto, we are not come; but now, we come to the ſigne: for the ſigne is in Excitabo.

Et Excitabo, And I will raiſe it up. Which is ſpoken (as it were) by way of triumph, over all, they could or ſhould doe to Him. Goe to, diſſolve it, deſtroy it, downe with it; when you have done your worſt, it ſhall be in vaine; Excitabo illud, my power ſhall triumph over your malice: I will raiſe it, I will up with it againe.

Excitabo how oppoſed to Solvite.

But to looſe and to raiſe, theſe two are not oppoſite: Rather, to looſe and to ſet together. Raiſing is oppoſed to falling; and reſurrection to ruine, properly. But it comes all to one. Upon the diſſolving of any frame, ſtraight downe it dropps. This goodly Temple of our body (on the decking and trimming whereof, ſo much is daily waſted) looſe the ſoule from it but a moment, and downe it fals, and there it lyes, like a logge (we all know.) In oppoſition to this fall, it is ſaid He will raiſe. But, He will doe both: as it was looſed yer it fell; ſo will He ſet it together, yer He raiſe it againe.

Excitabo illud. Three points there are in it: [1] The Act; [2] And the Perſon, in Excitabo; and [3] the Thing it ſelfe, in illud.

1. The

1 The Act. The word He uſeth for it is ἐγερῶ, in proprietie, is a raiſing from ſleep. And ſleepe (we know) is far from deſtruction. It is, to ſhew us firſt, what a ſtrange metamorphoſis He would make in death: turne it, but into a requieſcet, and a requieſcet in ſpe, and there is all. So made He His own; ſo will He make ours. This Day CHRIST is riſen againe, the firſt fruits of them that ſleepe; and the reſt that ſleepe in the duſt, when their time comes, ſhall do the like.

Excitabo, the act, as from ſleepe.

Pſal. 16. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 20. Dan. 12. 2.

2 To ſhew (ſecondly) they ſhould miſſe of their purpoſe quite. They reckoned indeed, to deſtroy Him; they were deceived; they made Him but ready for a nights reſt or two. They made full account, Death had devoured and digeſted Him too: they were deceived, it was not ſo: Death had but ſwallowed Him downe (as the Whale did Ionas) upon the third day to caſt Him up againe.

Ion. 2. 10.

3 To ſhew (thirdly) not only that, this He would do, but, with what eaſe He would do it. With no more difficultie, than one is waked up, after a nights reſt; with no more adoe, than a knot: that is but looſe and untyed, is tyed againe.

But beſides the Act, we are to looke to the Perſon, in Excitabo. It is not, deſtroy you, and ſome other ſhall raiſe it; but, I; even I my ſelfe, and none but my ſelfe, will doe it: Nec alienâ virtute, ſed propriâ, and by none others beſide; but, by mine owne proper vertue and power. An argument of His Divine nature. For, none ever did; none ever could doe, that. Raiſed ſome were, but not any by himſelfe, or by his owne power; but by a power imparted to ſome Prophet by GOD for that time and turne.

Excitabo, the perſon. He Himſelfe.

CHRIST, by none imparted from any other, but by His own from Himſelf: And let it not ſtumble any, that elſewhere, the Father is ſaid to raiſe and exalt Him: That is all one. Both will ſtand well. The ſame power the Father, doth it by, by the ſame doth it, He. There is but one power of both: Of both, or of either of them, it is alike truly verified. This for the Perſon.

Now for the thing: Illud. Templum hoc before, and illud here: Hoc and illud are not two, but one, and the ſame. Not Solvite hoc, & ſuſcitabo aliud; downe with this, and I will up with another in the ſtead. No: but idem illud, the very ſame again. The very ſame you deſtroy, that, and no other, will I reare up againe. With us, with the world, it is not ſo; when we fall to diſſolve a frame of government (ſuppoſe of the Church) it is not ſolvite hoc, & excitabo illud; no, but excitabo aliud. We raiſe not the ſame, but another, quite another, nothing like it; a new one never heard of before. But let them keepe their aliud, and give us illud againe. Illud we love; It is CHRIST's excitabo, that: and if we follow CHRIST, in His raiſing, the ſame againe, or not at all.

Illud. The ſame temple. In ſubſtance.

But, though illud be the ſame againe, in ſubſtance; yet not in qualitie the ſame for all that: but ſo farre different, as in that reſpect, it may ſeeme aliud, another quite. At leaſt, well may it be now called illud, as it were with an Emphaſis, as qualified farre beyond that it was before, when it was but Templum hoc. And to ſay truth, if it be but the ſame juſt, and no whit better; as good ſave His labour, and let the firſt ſtand. For, it is but His labour for His travell, if nothing wonne by it.

Not the ſame, In qualitie.

But if (though the ſame) yet not in the ſame, but in a far better eſtate, than before; (Cedar, for Mulberry; Marble for Bricke, as the Prophet ſpeakes:) then, ye ſay ſomewhat, and then we will be content, to have it taken downe.

Eſay 9. 10.

And ſuch was the eſtate of this Temple after the raiſing. And ſuch was it to be: For, the glory of the ſecond Houſe was much greater than of the firſt. Which increaſe or bettering is implied in the word excitabo. It is (I told you) a Riſing up after ſleepe. Now, in the morning, after ſleepe, the body riſeth more freſh, and full of vigour; than it was over night, when it lay downe. The Apoſtle ſpeakes it more plainly: Templum hoc (ſaith he) at the looſing, it was in weakneſſe, diſhonour, mortalitie; Templum illud, at the raiſing it, is in power and honour, and to immortalitie.

Agg. 2. 10.

1 Cor. 15. 42. 43.

And ſure, one ſpeciall reaſon of the diſſolving this Temple was, that, as then it was,

Solvite might be ſaid of it; It was diſſoluble. But, being now raiſed againe, it is faſter wrought; indiſſoluble, now: No Solvite to be ſaid, not to be looſed ever any more. This for Excitabo illud. Now the laſt point, of the time. The ſigne is in that, too.

IV. The Time. Three dayes.

And when this? Within what time? Within three dayes. Which words, ſeemed to affect them moſt. All their exception lay to them. He looked not like one that would build Churches. But (let that paſſe) were He never ſo likely, He takes too ſmall a time, for ſo great a worke (as they thought.) But, if we agree once of His power to raiſe from death, the time will ſlide, we ſhall never ſticke at it much, but agree of that quickly. Hee that can raiſe from the dead (ten thouſand Churches will be built one after another, before one be raiſed thence:) To Him, that is able to doe that, forty ſix houres are as good as forty ſix yeares: all one. Nay, even forty ſix minutes; (but that it was held fit, He ſhould lie longer in His grave than ſo, that there might be the ſurer certainty of His death·) Otherwiſe, yeares, dayes, or minutes, to Him, are all alike. The Signe is in both: but (to ſay truth) in Excitabo, rather than in the three dayes. For, to the power of Excitabo, Nullum tempus occurrit.

Why three.

But, why three dayes, juſt? Neither more nor leſſe? Becauſe, elſewhere He ſaith, No other time, but Iona's: that, ſhould ſerve Him. No other, than Moſes time, (forty dayes) in His faſting. No other than Ionas time (three) in His riſing. Content to keepe time with His Prophets before Him. Far from the humour of ſome; that muſt varie (no remedie.) If Ionas three, they muſt foure, or three and a halfe, at leaſt. If Moſes forty, they muſt be a day under or over; have a number, have a tricke by themſelves, beyond others ſtill; Elſe, all is nothing worth. Far from them (I ſay:) and to make us farre from them: By his example to keepe us to that, which others before us, have well and orderly kept.

1. Excitavit, the doing.

Now to the excitavit, of this Excitabo. Thus He ſaid it ſhould bee, Et fuit ſic, and ſo it was. He would raiſe it, dixit: And He did raiſe it, factum eſt. His diſſolution laſted no longer than His limitation before-hand ſet. That, was not, poſt tres, but in tribus; not after, but within the compaſſe of three dayes. And He came within His time: For, this is but the third day, and this day, by breake of day, was this temple up againe.

a Our duetie upon theſe. To rejoyce.

This then being the day, not only of Excitabo, but of Excitavit illud (of the ſetting it up:) accordingly we, this day, to celebrate the Encænia, or new dedicating of this temple. A dedication was ever a Feaſt of joy, and that great joy. Every Towne had their Wake in memorie of the dedicating of their Church. That we then hold it as a Feaſt of Joy; that we be glad on it: as glad, nay more glad to ſee it up againe, this day; than the third day ſince, we were ſorry, to ſee it downe in the duſt. To Solvite, downe with it (Edoms cry) belongs Ieremies Lamentation: to Excitabo (this dayes worke) Zacharies joyfull ſhout, or acclamation, Gratiam Gratiæ, grace upon grace, and joy upon joy, and thanks upon thanks: Grace, Joy, and thankes with an Emphaſis; for, it is now illud, with an Emphaſis indeed.

Zach. 4. 7.

For our good. Rom. 3. 2. By Solvite.

But, our joy will quickly quaile if we no good by it. I ask then, what is all this to us? And I anſwer (with the Apoſtle) Multum per omnem modum. 1 For, firſt, this Solvite of His, is a Solvite to us: a looſing us, not only from our ſins, the cords of our ſins here, as Salomon cals them; but the chaines, the everlaſting chaines of darkneſſe, and of hell, there, due to them, and to us for them.

Prov. 5. 22. Iud. 6.

B. Excitabo.

2 Then, this excitabo, is not to end in Him: What, we believe, He did for that temple of His body naturall; the ſame, we faithfully truſt, He will doe for another temple, the temple of His body myſticall. For His myſticall, as much as for His naturall; for whoſe ſake He gave His naturall body, thus to be diſſolved. Of which myſticall call bodie, we are parts (and the whole cannot be without his parts:) Every of us, members of this body for his part: Every one living ſtones of this ſpirituall Temple. Diſſipentur illa, reſtaurabit denuò (ſaith Origen:) ſcattered we may be, He will gather us againe; looſed, He will knit us; fall downe and die, He will ſet us together and ſet us up againe. After two dayes He will revive us, and in the third day raiſe us, And we ſhall live in His ſight, ſaith the Prophet Hoſea, of us all. Hoſea 6. 2.

And this, is to us all, matter of great Ioy. For, to this Solvite in the end we muſt all come; Statutum eſt hominibus. There is an Act paſſed for the diſſolution of theſe our earthly tabernacles. Looſed they ſhall be, Spirit from Fleſh, Fleſh from bone, each bone from other; No avoiding it. Heb. 9. 27.

All our care to be this; how to come to a good excitabo. Good (I ſay:) for, excitabo, we ſhal never need to take thought for: we ſhall come to that, whether we care for it or no. But to a good excitabo: ſuch an one, as He, as CHRIST, as this Temple is come to (that is) to a joyfull reſurrection (as we call it.) That, is worth our care: For, in the end, that will be worth all. b Our moral duties.

That, ſhall we come to, if we can take order, that while we be here, before we go hence, (our bodies) we get them Templified (as I may ſay:) procure, they be framed after the ſimilitude of a Temple, this Temple in the Text: For, if it bee Solvite templum; at the diſſolution, a temple; a temple it will riſe againe, there is no doubt of that. To make our bodies Temples.

Our bodies (as we uſe the matter many of us) are far from temples; rather Proſtibula than templa; brothel-houſes, brokers ſhops, wine-casks (or I wot not what) rather than temples. Or, if temples, temples the wrong way, of Ceres, Bacchus, Venus: or (to keepe the Scripture phraſe,) of Camos, Aſhtaroth, Baalpeor; and not Domus Patris mei (as this here, He ſpeakes of.)

But, if this be the fruit of our life, and we have no other, but this; to fill and farce our bodies, to make them ſhrines of pride, and to maintain them in this exceſſe; to make a money-change of all beſides, Common-wealth, Church, and all: I know not well, what to ſay to it: I doubt, at their riſing, they will rather make blockes for hell fire, than be made Pillars in the temple of GOD, in the holy places made without hands. Apoc. 3. 12. Heb 9. 11.

Otherwiſe, if they prove to be temples here, let no man doubt, then, let them be looſed when or how they will, He that raiſed this temple (ſo they be temples) will raiſe them likewiſe; and that, to the ſame glorious eſtate, Himſelf was raiſed to.

A courſe then muſt be taken, that while we are here, we do Solvere templa hæc, diſſolve theſe temples (of Camos and Aſhtaroth;) and upon the diſſolution of them, we raiſe them up, very temples to the true and living GOD: That we downe with Bethaven, this houſe or ſhop of vanity (as by nature they are;) and up with Bethel, GODS houſe, as by grace they may be. The morall ſolute of them.

For, a Solvite, and an excitabo, we are to paſſe here in this life: and this, this excitabo, is the firſt reſurrection here to be paſſed: He that hath his part in this firſt, he ſhall not faile but have it in the ſecond. The morall. Excitabo. Apoc. 20. 6.

If then, temples they would be, that we ſo make them: for, to make them ſo, is the Excitabo of this life.

And ſo ſhall we make them, even temples: and no way ſooner, than if we love this place (the temple) well, and love to reſort to it, and to be much in it. By being much in it, we ſhall even turne into it. And ſure, if ever we have aliquid templi, any thing of a temple in us; then it is, when we are duly and devoutly occupied, and imployed, they and we, in His worſhip and ſervice. Then are we temples. That they may be Temples.

But, to be temples, is not all; we are further to be templum hoc, this temple: and this, was the temple of his body. And that are we, if at any time, then certainly, when, as if we were temples in very deed, we prepare to receive, not the Arke of His preſence, but Himſelfe, that He may come into us and be in us: Which is, at what time, we preſent our ſelves, to receive His bleſſed body and blood: that body, and that blood, which for our ſakes was diſſolved; diſſolved three dayes ſince, when it Temples, corporis ſui.

ſuffered for our ſinnes. And this day raiſed againe, when it roſe for our juſtification.

Rom. 4. 25. Which, when we do; (that is) receive this bodie, or this Temple: (for, Templum hoc, and Hoc eſt corpus meum are now come to be one: for, both Templum hoc, and corpus hoc, are in Templum corporis ſui: and when the Temples of our body, are in this Temple, and the Temple of His body in the Temples of ours; then are there three Temples in one, a Trinitie, the perfecteſt number of all. Then, if ever, are we, not Temples only, but Templa corporis ſui, Temples of His body; and this Scripture fulfilled in us.

This Feaſt a fit time for it. This are we, when we receive. Now, at no time, is this act of receiving, ſo proper, ſo in ſeaſon, as, this very day (ſo hath CHRISTS Church thought it, and ſo practiſed it, ever) the very day of this His Excitabo; the day of His Riſing: And by meanes of it, of our raiſing: our raiſing firſt, to the life of righteouſneſſe (to the eſtate of Temples) here in this world: And after, of our raiſing againe, to the ſecond, the life of glory and bliſſe (of glorious Temples) in the world to come; which is the Excitabo when all is done. What time, they and we ſhall be looſed: as now, from ſin; ſo then, from corruption. And raiſed, and reſtored: as now, to the eſtate of grace; ſo then, to the ſtate of glory, and glorious libertie of the ſons of God. To which happie and bleſſed eſtate, may He raiſe us all in the end, that this day, was raiſed for Vs, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XXXI. of March, A.D. MDCXVI.
being EASTER-DAY.

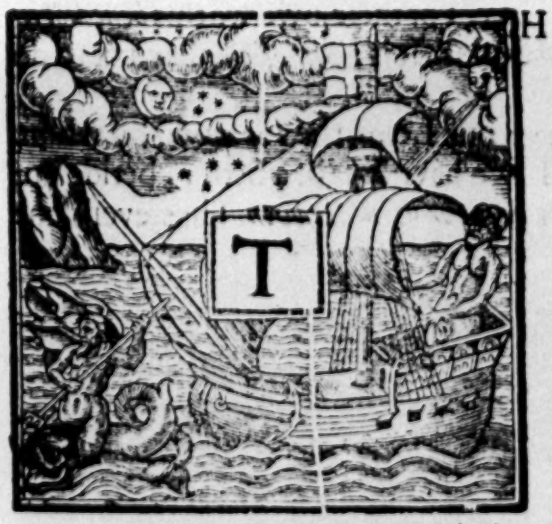
I PET, Chap. I. Ver. III, IV.

Benedictus Deus, &c.

Blessed bee God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercie, hath begotten us againe unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.



THE Summe of this Text, and (if ye will) the Name of it too, is set downe in the very first word of it. It is a Benedictus. The first word is so. The first word Benedictus: and (if you look) the last word is [for you.] Give me leave to reade it, for Vs; to put in our selves. Seeing to us, and for us, it was written. So, a Benedictus it is; from us, to GOD, for something comming from GOD, to, or for us. The Summe.

Something? Nay many. Benedictus is but one word, but the first word: the rest of the words, of both Verses, are for us all.

And, many they are: We reduce them to three: [1] Our regeneration which is past: [2] Our hope, which is present: [3] and our inheritance, which is to come. 1. Regenerating, or begetting, is (of it ſelfe) a benefit: We get life by it, if nothing els. 2. But, to beget to an Inheritance, in more than ſimply to beget. 3. And yet, more than that, to beget, to Such an Inheritance, as this; of which, ſo many excellent things are here ſpoken.

Three then, in this; [1] To be begotten: [2] To be begotten to Inherit: [3] To be begotten to Inherit, ſuch an Inheritance.

Titus 3.7. But then, an inheritance is no preſent matter. All heires be heires, under hope, Vſque dum, till the appointed time. So comes hope in. Therefore, firſt to hope. After, to the thing hoped for, the Inheritance it ſelfe. There is a reſemblance of both theſe, in the two Seaſons of the yeare. At this time, the time of CHRISTS Reſurrection, and of our celebrating it, to hope; as to the bloſſome or blade, riſing now in the Spring: To the Inheritance, that, as the crop or fruit to come after, at harveſt: And the harveſt of this
Mat. 13.39. crop (ſaith our SAVIOUR) is the end of the world.

We are not yet come to the point. Regenerate, whereto? to a lively hope: Hope, whereof? of an Inheritance: Inheritance, what manner one? Such as is here ſet downe.

But, all theſe, whereby? Per reſurrectionem, by the reſurrection of CHRIST: All, by Him: All, by that. This By, is the maine, here. This Διὰ the διὰ παντὸς, that runnes thorow all this Text. For, all ariſe, from CHRIST ariſing from the dead.

Now, if from CHRIST riſing, then from CHRIST, at this Feaſt. For this is the Feaſt of CHRISTS riſing: And ſo, this the proper Benedictus, for this Feaſt. We had
Luk. 1.68. a benedictus made by Zacharie, S. Iohn Baptiſts Father, for His Birth, for Chriſtmaſſe-day (knowne by the name of benedictus:) We have here now another, for His riſing, for Eaſter-day, of S. Peters ſetting. And this it is.

The Diviſion. For the Order, we will put the words in no other, for we can put them in no better, than they ſtand: Every one is in his due place, from the firſt to the laſt.

1 GOD firſt, and the true GOD the Father of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. 2 Then, His mercy, the cauſe moving. 3 Then, CHRISTS reſurrection, the means working. 4 Then our regenerating, the act producing.

Producing [1] hope (firſt) of the Inheritance: [2] then after the inheritance, we hope for. Of which, two points there are: [1] How it is qualified: Vncorrupt, undefiled, not fading: Every one hath his weight. [2] Then, how Seated: Even, in Heaven: There it is; there kept it is. And, which is the Capitall chiefe point of all, kept for us, there.

Now then, for theſe. [1] For His Mercy, firſt. [2] For our Regenerating, by His Mercy. [3] For the Hope, of this inheritance; [4] but more, for the inheritance it ſelfe: Specially ſuch an one, ſo conditioned, as here is ſet downe. [5] For keeping it for us in Heaven (in Verſe 5. this Verſe:) [6] For keeping us for it, on earth (the next verſe.) For theſe all: but above all, for the meanes of all, the riſing of CHRIST (this daies worke) the dew of this new birth, the gate of this hope, the pledge of this inheritance. For theſe, owe we this benedictus to GOD. And, this day, are we to pay it, every one of us. It is a Sin of omiſſion, not to do it; he that doth not, is a debtour.

To GOD the Father, the Qui, and to CHRIST our LORD, the Per quem, by whom and by whoſe riſing, loſe this life when we will, we have hope of a better; betide our Inheritance on earth what ſhall, we have another kept for us in Heaven. Thus, every one naturally ariſeth out of other.

Bleſſed

BLeſſed be GOD. Yea, bleſſed and thanked, and praiſed; Benedictus, Magnificat, Iubilate, and all. All; But, here, bleſſed ſuits beſt: that the beſt and moſt proper returne for a bleſsing. That we inherit, is the Bleſsing (Chap. 3. Verſe 9.) The hope is a bleſſed hope (Titus 2.13.) But the Inheritance is the State of bleſſedneſſe it ſelfe. Therefore Benedictus bene dicitur, Benedictus is ſaid well. Said well, of GOD, who is above all bleſſed for ever: well alſo, of a Father; Benedictus, a fit terme for him. And GOD, in the tenour of this whole Text, is brought in, as a Father, a Father begetting; begetting us firſt by nature; begetting us againe, in it, by grace.

1 The Act. Benedictus: Bleſſed be God.

2 The Party, GOD. Rom. 9. 5.

But thereby hangs a Scruple: For, what are we that we ſhould take upon us to bleſſe GOD? S. Peter ſayes it here: S. Paul ſeemes to gaine-ſay it, Without all queſtion (ſaith he) the leſſe is bleſſed by the greater. And is He leſſe, or we greater, that we ſhould offer to bleſſe Him? And, if not as GOD; not as a Father (the next word.) For, ſhall the Child preſume to bleſſe his Father? It becomes him not. He us, then; and not We, Him.

Bleſſe GOD we may. Heb. 7. 7.

Yes, He us; and We Him, too. We have ſo many Texts for it, I make no doubt, but there is bleſsing both wayes. Of the many, I remember that one of S. Pauls (Eph. 1.) Benedictus Deus qui benedixit nos, Bleſſed be GOD for bleſsing us. As if they were reciprocall, theſe: One, the Echo, the reflection of the other. Equall they are not. It were fond to imagine, the Father gives the child no other bleſsing, but the child can give him as good againe. No: aliter nos Deum, aliter Deus nos; Otherwiſe, GOD bleſſeth us; and the Parent, who repreſents GOD, in begetting our bodies; and the Prieſt, who repreſents Him, in begetting againe our ſoules. Otherwiſe, we them. GODS is reall: ours but verball. His cum effectu ever: Ours, if it be but cum affectu, that is all. His Operative; ours but Optative. What then? he that wiſheth heartily, would do more than wiſh, if his power were according. Even that then, in want of power, to ſhew a good will (I know not how, but) we take it well, ever. GOD doth, I am ſure: as appeareth, by the goats haire of the Old Teſtament, and by the Widdowes mites in the New. And this is S. Peters, but expreſſing a good minde onely. And, without all queſtion, thus, the Greater may be bleſſed, even of the leſſe: Not, tanquam poteſtatem habens, but tanquam vota faciens. So we may ſay Benedictus Deus: And let us then ſay it.

Ephes. 1. 3.

What ſay we then, when we ſay Benedictus? It is a word compound: Take it in ſunder, and Dicere, is to ſay ſomewhat, to Speake; and that we can: and bene, is (ſpeaking) to ſpeak well; and that we ought. To Speake, is Confeſsion: To ſpeake well, is Praiſe: And praiſe becommeth Him, and us to give it Him.

How We may bleſſe GOD.

Put together in one word, and then, Benedicere to bleſſe, in the phraſe of ours, and of all tongues elſe, is, not ſo much omnia bona dicere, to ſpeake all good of Him, as omnia bona vovere, to wiſh all good to Him. And that becomes Him too; not onely Laus, but Votum: ſpecially where Votum is totum, where we have little elſe left us, but it.

And what good can we wiſh Him that He hath not? Bonorum noſtrorum non eget (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) nor Benedictionum, neither. We can add nothing to Him by our Benedictus: Say we it, ſay we it not, He is bleſſed alike.

Pſal. 16. 2.

True, to Him, we cannot wiſh; not to His perſon: But, to His Name, we can: (And He is bleſſed, when His Name is bleſſed:) We can wiſh His name more bleſſedly uſed, and not in curſing, and curſed oathes, as daily we heare it.

In His Name.

And, to His Word, we can: We can wiſh it more devoutly heard, and not, as a few ſtraines of wit, as our manner is.

In His Word.

In His Person as united to His Church.

Yea, even to His person, we can: There is a way, to do that, inaſmuch as He, and His Church, are now growen into one, make but one person: what is ſaid or done to it, is ſaid or done to Himſelfe: Bleſſe it, and He is bleſſed.

In a word then: to bleſſe GOD, is to wiſh, His Name may be glorious; to wiſh, His Word may be proſperous; to wiſh, His Church may bee happy. By wearing of which name, and by hearing of which Word, and by being in, and of which Church, we receive the bleſſing here upon earth, that ſhall make us for ever bleſſed in heaven. This we ſay, if we marke what we ſay, when we ſay Bleſſed be God.

GOD, and the Father of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. This is ſtylo novo the ſtyle of the New Teſtament; ye read it not in the old: No, nor in Zacharies neither. Betweene that of Zacharies, and this of S. Peters, it fell out, this. The Sunne was yet under the Horizon, when Zacharie made His: But (now) up, and of a good height. And thereupon, this taken up by S. Peter, here: by S. Paul, 1 Cor. 1. Epheſ. 1. and upon great reaſon.

GOD, and the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: the Style of the New Teſtament.
1 Cor. 1. 3.
Epheſ. 1. 3.

1 Bleſſed be GOD: Say that, and no more, and never a Iew, Turk, or Pagan, but will ſay as much. Bleſſed be GOD, we; Bleſſed be GOD, they. It is never the worſe for that. But yet, ſeeing the world then was, ſtill is, full of many Gods, and many Lords (1 Cor. 8.) It would be knowne, which GOD. For, we would not beſtow our benedictus upon any, but the true GOD: neither they, nor we; I dare ſay. Which is then the true GOD? Pater Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti: and He that is not ſo, is a falſe fained God; is an Idol. Put them to it then, put this addition to; and neither Turke, Iew, nor Pagan will ſay after you: None, but the Chriſtian. For, this is the Chriſtian mans benedictus.

1 To ſever Him from all falſe Gods.
1 Cor. 8. 5.

Now, ever ſince Idolatrie firſt tooke head, it hath beene held fit, they that are GODS choſen People of all the people upon earth, they ſhould have ſome marke of ſeverance, to diſtinguiſh, as theirs, the true GOD; ſo themſelves, the true worſhippers, from the falſe. So to ſettle our benedictus right; upon the right GOD, this is added.

2 As His beſt Title.

2 For this cauſe: but, not for this alone. When we bleſſe Him, I dare ſay we would bleſſe Him, with His beſt Title. So hath it beene ever. You ſhall obſerve in Titles, ever, upon the comming of a greater, the leſſe is laid downe. No more, the Lord liveth that brought thee out of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth that brought thy captivitie from the North. And now, no more that neither; For, here is one, that after it came, puts them downe all, as being indeed the greateſt of them all, the greateſt that ever was, or that ever ſhall be. One, which when we adde, we ſet our benedictus at the higheſt.

Ier. 23. 7. 8.

For, if this be to be GOD, to be bounteous, beneficiall (as we ſeeme to think, when we ſay homo homini Deus:) In nothing, was GOD ever ſo beneficiall, ſo bounteous; and ſo, in nothing ever ſo GOD, as in ſending His only begotten Son into the world. In that, GOD, ſpecially; and, for that, ſpecially to be bleſſed. And becauſe, a greater than His Son He hath not, and ſo a greater than this ſhall never come, therefore this ſhall never be laid downe. This ſhall be His Title, for ever. For ever to have a place, and a chiefe place, in our benedictus.

Ioh. 3. 16.

3 To bring Chriſt in, too.

And yet there is another, on CHRISTS behalfe, Our Lord: even to bring Him in too. For, ſeeing all that which follows, comes not, but by the riſing of Chriſt, and ſo by CHRIST; I ſee not, how (well) we can leave Him out. All the good, that comes to us, as it comes to us from GOD, ſo it comes to us, by Chriſt. GOD, the Qui; Chriſt, the Per quem. GOD, the cauſe; from Him commeth all, Chriſt, and all: Chriſt the meanes; by Him commeth all, GOD and all. All things from GOD; and nothing from GOD immediately, but mediante Chriſto. Hee, the cauſe mediate, the Mediatour, the Medium. No benefactus (and ſo, no benedictus) without Him.

This is moſt plaine, in this here. Benedictus Deus, qui generavit Chriſtum: firſt that did generate Chriſt; before Benedictus Deus, qui regeneravit nos, that did regenerate us.

us. If He not generate, we not regenerate: then, no children; then, no Inheritance; then, all this Text void. For, in Him, this Text and all other Texts are Yea and Amen.

By this time we ſee, why this addition. [1] It is His Title of Severance: [2] It is the higheſt Title of His Honour: [3] It takes in CHRIST, who would not be left out, in our Benedictus. Dixit Dominus Domino meo, The LORD ſaid to my LORD, to take both LORDS in, and leave neither out. And ſo ſhall we knit it well to that, which followes. Pſal. 110. 1.

From the Party whom, we paſſe to the Cauſe why. For, we ſay not this Benedictus, as we ſay many an one here, without any cauſe: Benedictus, for nothing: Nay, otherwhile a Benedictus, for a malefactus, for a ſhrewd turne; yea, and glad and faine too. No, here is a Qui, and in this qui, there is a quia. That doth it (that is) for doing it: that regenerates us (that is) for regenerating us. For, GOD is ever aforehand with us: Regeneravit is the Præter; that is paſt, before any Benedictus can come from us. 3 The cauſe why.

Pater, qui Regeneravit followes well, is kindly. For, Generation, it is Actus paternus, the proper act of a Father. But, before we come to it, let us not ſtride over that, which (in the Text) ſtands before it, Secundùm miſericordiam. GOD did this, did all that followes, but upon what motive? According to what did He it? According to His mercy. And Mercy accords well with a Father: No compaſſion, no bowels like His. And as well, with regeneravit; for, of His owne good will begate He us. How elſe? When as yet we were not, what ſhould move Him, but His meere mercy? Well therefore ſaid, regeneravit ſecundùm: for regeneration is but ſecundum, but a ſecond, not a firſt: Would ye have a primum, a firſt for it? that firſt is His Mercy, ever. 1 Mercy.

But the benefits enſuing are too great to run in the common current of Mercy. As they then are, ſo is the mercy that goes to them, Great: Therefore according to His great Mercy. Mercy, the thing; Great, the meaſure. And, great would not be paſſed by, leſt we paſſe not greatly by it; leſt we conceive, and count of it, as but of ſome ordinary matter. His abundant (or great) mercy.

But (indeed) πολὺ is rather Multa, than Magna; a word of number, rather than Magnitude. The meaning is: no ſingle mercy would do it; no, though Great: there muſt be many. For, many the defects to be removed, many the ſinnes to be forgiven, many the perfections to be attained: Therefore, according to his manifold Mercy. His manifold mercy.

According is well ſaid. For, that indeed is the chord, to which this and all our Benedictuſſes are to be tuned. That, the Center, from which all the lines are drawne. The line of CHRISTS Birth, in Zacharies Benedictus, through the tender mercies of our GOD, whereby the day-ſpring from on high did (lately) viſit us. The line of CHRISTS Reſurrection, in S. Peters Benedictus, according to His manifold mercies, whereby this day-ſpring from on high doth now viſit us. The line of all the reſt, if we had time to go through all the reſt. Luke 1. 78.

At all times, mercy commeth in, at no time out of time (I truſt;) we ſhall die with it, in our mouthes: let us make much of it while we live: Never paſſe by it, but ſay it; ſay it, as oft as we can; bleſſed be GOD: bleſſed be His mercy. GOD, that doth it: His mercy, according to which He doth it. Doth it, and doth all elſe, at this and all other Feaſts: at Eaſter, at Chriſtmas, the fifth of November, and all. Bleſſed be He for His mercy: Yea, many times bleſſed, for His manifold mercies.

Mercy then firſt: Regeneravit ſecundùm, the act, of this mercy, the ſecond, that is Regeneravit. Regeneravit may be ſaid, with reference to CHRIST. Generavit Chriſtum, regeneravit nos; and not miſſe. But, better and more properly, both to us. Generavit nos, begot us firſt, in Adam, to this: regeneravit nos, begot us againe, in CHRIST the ſecond Adam, to the hope of a better life. 4 Regeneravit nos. 2 Hath begotten us againe.

But

But, why is it not ſo then, qui generavit without Re? Why begin we not with that? Verily, even for that, even for our naturall generation, we owe Him a Benedictus. But, what ſhould I ſay? Unleſſe (beſide our firſt generavit) we be ſo happy, as to have our part in this ſecond regeneravit, the former (I doubt) will hardly prove worth a Benedictus. But, if this come to it, then, for both, a Benedictus indeed.

Iohn 3.3. Otherwiſe (as our SAVIOUR ſaid to Nicodemus) No man, unleſſe he be thus borne againe, by his firſt birth, be it never ſo high or noble, is a whit the nearer this Inheritance following. For all our goodly generavit, we ſo much boaſt of, it would goe wrong with us, but for this. Well therefore may we all ſay, Benedictus qui regeneravit.

Againe, that is, the ſecond time. Gal.6.15. Now Re hath in it two powers, Re is, againe, the ſecond time: So, it ſuits well with Secundum, it is the ſecond. For, two there be: [1] that old creation; [2] and the new Creature in CHRIST: And, two births; (We ſee it daily:) A child is brought into the world, but it is carried but againe, to the Church, there to be borne and brought forth anew, by the Sacrament of Regeneration.

Againe, that is, upon a loſſe. But Re is not only againe, but againe (as it were) upon a loſſe. Not, a ſecond only, but a ſecond, upon the failing of the firſt. So doth Re imply, ever. Re-demption, a buying againe, upon a former aliening. Re-conciliation, upon a former falling out. Re-ſtitution, upon a former attainder. Re-ſurrection, upon a fall taken formerly. Re-generation, upon a former degenerating, from our firſt eſtate.

Eph.2.3. Prov.16.14. Our firſt would not ſerve; it was corrupt, it was defiled, it did degenerate. Degenerating made us filios iræ: And, ira principis (much more ira Dei) mors eſt. So, children of death, death and damnation: and there left us, and all by meanes of the corruption and ſoile of our former degenerate generation.

Never ask then, Quid opus eſt re? Re cannot be ſpared. There was more than need of a new, a ſecond, a re-generation, to make us children of grace againe, and ſo of life:

Tit.3.5. Zach.13.1. which He hath given us power to be made; by the waſhing of the new birth, the fountaine which He hath opened to the houſe of Iſrael for ſin and uncleanneſſe; even, for the ſin and uncleanneſſe of the firſt. Will ye have it plainly? Benedictus Deus qui generatos ad mortem, regeneravit ad vitam: or, qui generatos ad timorem mortis, regeneravit ad ſpem vitæ. That we, we that were begotten to the feare of death, or to a deadly feare; Vs, He hath begotten anew, to the hope of life, or to a lively hope.

This act of regenerating is determined doubly: eis is twice repeated. [1] To hope firſt: [2] then, to the inheritance: ye may put them together, to the hope of an Inheritance. But, thus parted, they ſtand, becauſe of our two eſtates, to ſerve them both: [1] Hope, in this life; [2] Inheritance, in that to come: Hope, while here, in ſtate of grace; Inheritance, when there, in ſtate of glory.

In Spem. To Hope. But becauſe (as we ſaid) an inheritance is no preſent matter: It is to come, and to be comen to: From begetting, we ſtep not ſtraight to entring upon our inheritance; but the ſtate of heires is a ſtate of expectancie, and ſo a fit object for hope, Donec, till the time come: therefore wee beginne with that: Regeneravit in Spem.

There needs no great Benedictus for in Spem: Hope, is no great matter. For what is hope? What, but vigilantis ſomnium, a waking mans dreame? And ſuch a hope indeed it may be: for, ſuch hopes there be many, in the world. But, this is none ſuch.

To ſhew, it is none ſuch, it is ſevered by two termes: [1] Regeneravit, and [2] Vivam. They are worth the marking, both.

a Spem generatam. 1 Regeneravit firſt: that it is Spes generata; which implies, there is another, but inflata, but blowen into us, or we ſprinkled or perfumed with it. Such there is; but, not this: but this is per viam generationis, and Generatio (we know) terminatur ad ſubſtantiam, brings forth a Subſtance. So, this, a ſubſtantiall hope; called therefore by 1 Theſ.5.8. Heb.6.19. S. Paul, the Helmet of Hope (Theſſ. V.) the Anchor of hope (Heb. VI.) things of ſubſtance, that will hold; that have metall in them.

b Spem vivam. 2 Then marke Vivam. And vivam followes well, of regeneravit. For, they that that are begotten, are ſo to live; to have life. Vivam alſo imports, there is a dead, or a dying hope: but, this is not ſuch, but a living.

Nay, Viva is more than Vivens; lively than living. Where, Viva is ſaid of ought (as, of ſtone, or water) the meaning is, they ſpring, they grow, they have life in themſelves. And, ſuch is the Water of our regeneration: not from the brooks of Teman (in Iob VI.) that in Summer, will be drie; but the water of Iordan, a running ri- Iob 6.15.16.

ment of our New birth; to ſhew what the nature of the hope is, it yeelds: even viva, with life in it.

And indeed Regeneravit is a good Verbe, to joyne with hope. There is, in hope, a kinde of regendring power: It begets men (as it were) anew. And, Viva is a good Epithete for it. When one droopes, give him Hope, his ſpirits will come to him a freſh; it will make him alive againe, that was halfe dead. As Iacob, when he was put in hope to ſee Ioſeph alive, it is ſaid, Revixit ſpiritus Iacob, his ſpirit revived in him: he ſhewed, Gen.45.24.
Spes was viva, hope was a reviver.

Never ſo well ſeene (this) as this day, in them, that went to Emmaus; With cold hearts; cold and dead (God wot) till they heard the Scriptures opened to this point: and then, Did we not (ſay they) feel our hearts warme (nay hot) within us? Such a vitall Luk.24.32.
heat, they found, and felt, came from this hope. For (to ſay truth) what is it, to give life, to them that have it already; dum ſpiro, that are alive, that can fetch their breath: it is not worthy (that) to be called ſpes viva: Spes viva (indeed) is, that which when breath and life, and all faile, failes not: that then puts life into us, dum expiro, when life is going away: that when this life we muſt forgoe, bids, let it goe; when that is gone, ſhewes us hope of another.

This is Viva indeed. Nay, this is Vita; for the hope of that life immortall, is the very life of this life mortall. And for ſuch a hope, Benedictus Deus, Bleſſed be God.

And, whence hath it this life? The next word ſhewes it, vivam per reſurrectionem. The Viveneſſe (as I may ſay) the vivacitie, the vigour it hath, from CHRIST riſing, and by his riſing, opening unto us the gate of life at large. What life? Any life? this life? No: vivam per reſurrectionem. Not this (here) falſi ſeculi vita (as even the Heathen man called it;) but, the other, the life by the reſurrection, the true life indeed. Not to live here ſtill, as we doe: : But to riſe againe and live, as CHRIST (this Day) did. That ſo, we miſtake not the life, and take the wrong for the right. For, ſo ſhall we miſtake, in our hope alſo, as commonly we doe. 1 Vivam, per Reſurrectionem Ieſu Chriſti.

For, ſhall we do hope no wrong? The truth is Hope heares evill without a cauſe. The fault is not hope's, the fault is our owne; we put it where we ſhould not, and then lay the blame upon hope; where we ſhould blame our ſelves, for wrong putting it. For, if ye put it not right, this is a generall rule: As is that, we hope in; ſo is our hope. [a] Ye leane on a reed (ſaith Eſay.) [b] Ye take hold by a cobweb, (Iob.) [c] Ye catch at a ſhadow, (ſaith the Wiſe man.) And can it bee then, but this hope muſt deceive you? a Eſa.36.6. b Iob 8.14. c Eccle.34.2.

We for the moſt part, put it wrong: for we put it in them, that live this tranſitory periſhing life; we put it in them, that muſt die, and then muſt our hope die with them, and ſo prove a dying hope. Miſerable is that man, that among the dead is his hope Sap.13.10.
(ſaith the Wiſeman.) The Pſalme beſt expreſſeth it; Our hope is in the Sonnes of men; and they live by breath, and when that is gone, they turne to duſt; and then there Pſal.146.3
lies our hope in the duſt. For, how can (ever) a dying object yeeld a living hope?

But, put it in one that dies not, that ſhall never die, and then it will be Spes Viva, indeed. No reed, no cobweb-hope then; but helmet, anchor-hope; hope, that will never confound you.

And who is that, or where is He, that we might hope in Him? That is IESUS CHRISTUS

CHRISTUS ſpes noſtra, JESUS CHRIST, our hope: ſo cals Him S. Paul (1 Tim. 1.1.) Such ſhall their hope be, that have CHRIST for their hope.

Yet, not CHRIST every way conſidered; not, as yeſterday, in the grave; not, as the day before, giving up the Ghoſt upon the Croſſe: dead and buried yeelds but dead hope. But in JESUS CHRISTUS hodie, JESUS CHRIST to day, that is, CHRISTUS reſurgens, CHRIST riſing againe; CHRIST not now a living ſoule, but a quickning ſpirit.

In Chriſts life then: But, not in His mortall life. They, that ſo hoped in Him, to Emmaus they went, this day, with Nos autem ſperabamus, we did hope: Did, while He was alive; but, now, now He is dead, no more hope now. And, for two dayes, as He was, ſo was their hope; dead, and buried: and if He had riſen no more, had beene quite dead for ever. But, this day, He revived and roſe againe: So did their hope too.

Luke 24. 21.

To this life we are regenerate, by the reſurrection of Chriſt: Right. As to death generate, by the fall of the firſt Adam: So, to life regenerate, by the riſing againe of Chriſt, the ſecond.

And theſe two, Reſurrection, and regeneration, match well. The Regeneration of the ſoule, is the firſt Reſurrection. And, the Reſurrection of the body, is the laſt Regeneration. So doth our SAVIOUR CHRIST terme it (Mat. 19.) In the regeneration, when the Sonne of Man ſhall ſit, that is, at the generall reſurrection. So was His owne, His reſurrection, His regeneration. This day have I begotten thee (the verſe of the Pſalme) the Apoſtle applies to Chriſts eternall generation (Heb. 1.5.) But, ſo doth he, to his Reſurrection alſo (Acts 13. 33.) For, then was Chriſt Himſelfe regenerate (as it were) begotten in a ſort anew, and brought forth out of the grave, as out of the wombe, the very wombe, wherein He was borne to the immortall, that is, to the true life.

Matth. 19. 28.

Pſal. 2. 7.

By His reſurrection: and if ye aske how, Eſay tels us; There goeth from His reſurrection an influence, which ſhall have an operation like that of the dew of the ſpring; which when He will let fall, the earth ſhall yeeld her dead, as at the falling of the dew, the herbes now riſe, and ſhoot forth again. Which terme therefore [of regenerating] was well choſen, as fitting well with His riſing, and the time of it. The time (I ſay) of the yeare, of the weeke, and (if ye will) of the day too. For, He roſe in the dawning: then is the day regenerate: and in primâ Sabbati, that the firſt begetting of the Weeke: And, in the ſpring, when all that were winter-ſterved, withered, and dead, are regenerate againe, and riſe up anew.

Eſa. 26. 19.

Luke 24. 1.

a In hæreditatem. To an inheritance.

We paſſe now to the Inheritance. But, as we paſſe, will ye obſerve the ſituation firſt. It is well worth your obſerving, that the Reſurrection is placed in the midſt, betweene our Hope, and our Inheritance. To hope before it; before the reſurrection, hope: But, after, to the Inheritance it ſelfe, to the full poſſeſſion and fruition of it. So, from the ſtate of hope, by the reſurrection (as by a bridge) paſſe we over, to the enjoying our Inheritance. And, that fals well with the feaſt, which is the feaſt of the Paſſe-over. The reſurrection is ſo too; paſſe we doe, from ſpes, to res. So paſſed Chriſt; So we to paſſe. Every word ſtands exactly in his place and order.

An Inheritance accords well with according to His mercy. We have it not of our ſelves, or by our merits, by the πολὺ of them; but, of Him, and by His mercies, and the πολὺ of them: Elſe were it a purchaſe, and no Inheritance. It comes to us freely; as the Inheritance, to children.

Well, with Mercy: and well, with Regeneravit. For, the Inheritance is of Children, pertaines to the Children, either of generation, by Nature; or of Regeneration, by Grace: By the former, He is Pater Domini noſtri; by the latter, He is Pater noſter.

But

But yet, for all that, Ad hæreditatem is a new point. Begetting is (properly) but to life, and nothing els: The greater part, by far, are begotten so. To Inherit, besides, not one of a thousand. Aske poore mens children: Aske yonger brethren. But this (heere) not in Vivam onely; but in Hæriditatem also, and these are two. [1] To be begotten, vivam: [2] To be heires, hæriditatem. It is no Lazarus's resurrection, to rise againe to the condition, he had before. It is Christ's; rising, to receive an Inheritance withall.

Nor shall we need to doubt any prejudice to GOD, from whom it comes, by our comming to this Inheritance. Vivam and Hæriditatem (there) will stand well together. Heere, they will not. Heere, the Inheritance comes not, but by the death of the partie in possession: But there, no prejudice to the Ancestor; he dies not, for the heire to succeed. There is Successio minorum sine recessione majorum. A succession, as of lights; the second burnes cleere; yet the first goes not out, but burnes as cleere as it.

Nor no prejudice to the Heire neither: To us, by Him; nor to Him, by us. It is not, as heere: One caries it from all, and all the rest goe without; Or, if they come in, his part is the lesse, No: it is of the nature of light, and other such spiritual things (as sounds, and smels) which be Omnibus una, & singulis tota. If there be a thousand together, every one sees, heares, smells as much, as he should doe, if there were no more but himselfe alone. Such is this: not, erga aliquos vestrûm, but erga vos.

And (as we said) one thing it is to be borne; another, to be so, to Inherit: So say we againe now; One thing, to be borne to an Inheritance; Another, to such an Inheritance as this heere. For, in Inheritances, there is great odds; one much better then another, even here with us: But this, better, incomparably better; another manner Inheritance farre, than any with us heere. We would know, what manner one, and Saint Peter gives us a little overture, how it is conditioned, that we may know, it is worth a Benedictus. E Theologicâ negativâ he doth it; there is no other way to describe things to come, but by removing from them such defects, as (we complaine) are incident and encomber all, we can inherit heere.

Three they are: [1] Corrumpi, [2] Contaminari, [3] Marcescere; Corruption, Soile, and Fading; to which nos nostraque, we and all ours are subject. Of which three [1] Corruption referrs, to the very being it selfe: [2] Defiling, to the sincere and true being, without all forreigne mixture: [3] Fading, to the beautie the prime and flourishing estate, that each thing hath.

The Substance, that corrupts and comes to nothing: suppose, by death: (for, Corruption is contrarie to generation.) The undefiled pure estate, that is soiled, and embased, by some bad thing comming to it from without: (as it might be, by infection or sickneſſe.) And though both these hold, the best estate long will not; but lose the lustre by and by, and fade away of it selfe. Saint Peter enlarges this, after, in this Chapter: taking his theme from the voice in Esay XL. All flesh is grasse, and all the glory of it as the flower of the grasse. The grasse it selfe lasts not long; but, the flower of the grasse, nothing so long, as the grasse it selfe. Let there be no blasting to corrupt it; no canker to defile it; yet, of it selfe, it falls of and leaves the stalke standing.

1 Incorruptible.

Ver. 24. Esa. 40. 6.

It is (now) the time of flowers, and from flowers, doth the Apostle take this terme, of Marcescere. It is properly the fading of the Rose. Streight, of it selfe, doth the Rose marcere, and the violet livere, wax pale and wan. Their best, their flourishing estate they hold not long; neither the flowers, that are worne, nor they, that weare them either: they, nor we: but decay we doe, (GOD wot) in a short time.

And, as we, so they; as the heires, so the Inheritances themselves. Their corruptible hath not put on incorruption neither. They corrupt daily (we see) from one to another. One mans Inheritance corrupts, by another mans purchace; To them, that had them and have them not, they are corrupt. And, not that way alone: diverse other excheat, for want of heires; confiscate, for some offenses; riotted and made away, by unthriftinesse; the heire stripped, and turned cleane out: the Inheritance wasted, and quite brought to nothing. At least, if not they, to us; We, to them, corrupt: which comes all to one.

1. Cor. 15. 53.

But say, they stand and corrupt not: another complaint there is: Their soile, their their μίασμα is but to evident. They ſoile us; their ſoile we bruſh off, wipe, rub, waſh off daily: in Summer, duſt; in Winter dirt; Theſe, and ſundry like inquinamenta mundi: Nothing, in this region, but ſubject to ſoile. Why, the Inheritance it ſelfe, we call it ſoile; and how can it then, but ſoile us? or how can there be (heere) any vndefiled Inheritance.

3 That fadeth not. Ion. 4. 7.

But, make them and keepe them as cleane as you can, take them, even at the beſt, yet fade they doe ſenſibly: Iona's worme, once a yeare, bites them by the roote, and they wither. Every yeare, at leaſt, they fall into a Maraſmus, loſe flowers and leaves and all; till they be regenerate by a reſurrection, or riſe againe, by a regeneration, as it were: Till this time, the time of the ſpring come about, and bring them forth new againe.

So, whatſoever we (heer) can inherit, is ſubject to one, nay, to all of thoſe. It corrupts, takes ſoile, fades. Is it not ſo? find we not, Saint Peter ſaith true? find we it not by proof daily? One or other, are we not ſtill complaining of, ſpeciall y of the fading? For, though they fade not of themſelves; yet, to us, they fade. The fading, to us, even before themſelves fade. We are hungry, and we eat: Eat we not, till that fades, and we are as weary of our fullnes, as we were of our faſting: We are weary, & we reſt; reſt we not, till that fades, and we as weary of our reſt, as ever we were of our wearineſſe.

Yes indeed, ſo it is: and that ſo it is, is the very faithfulneſſe of the creature to us. Thus by theſe defects, to tire us, and not ſuffer us to ſet up our reſt upon them, upon any Inheritance, heere; but to chaſe us from themſelves, and force us up to GOD the Creator, with whom, there is an Inheritance layed up, in danger of none of theſe. But uncorrupt, that ſhall hold the Being, and none ever diſ-herit or diſſeiſe us of it, [2] Vndefiled, that ſhall hold the aſſay, and never be embaſed, by any bad mixture: [3] And that ſhall never fade or fall into any Maraſmus, but hold out in the prime perfection, it ever had. And if there be, upon Earth, a ſtate like this, it is now at this time: Now, all things generate anew; the Soile of Winter is gone, and of Summer, is not yet come: Now, nothing fades; but all ſprings freſh and greene. At this time, heere; but, at all times, there: A perpetuall ſpring; no other Seaſon, there, but that. For, ſuch an Inheritance, bleſſed be GOD.

In heaven.

But, where may this be? For, all this while, we know not that. Onely, this we know; where ever it is, it is not heere; upon earth, no ſuch ſeate. All (heere) ſavour of the nature of the ſoile; corrumpi, contaminari, marceſcere, are the proper paſſions of Earth, and all earthly things: But, in Heaven, it may well be. There, is no contrarie, to corrupt; Nihil inquinatum, nothing to defile there. And there, all things keepe and continue, to this day, in their firſt eſtate, the originall beauty, they ever had. There then, it is: and we thither to lift up our hearts, whither the very frame of our bodies gives, as if there were ſomewhat remaining for us there.

It is thought, there is ſome further thing meant, by S. Peter. He writes to the diſperſed Iewes. And that, by, in Cælo, he gives them an Item, this Inheritance is no new Canaan, here on earth; Nor CHRIST, any earthly Meſſias, to ſettle them in a new Land of promiſe: No, that was for the Synagogue, ἥτις σκιᾷ σκιαῖς ἐπηγγέλλετο σκιάν, was it ſelfe mortall (is dead and buried ſince) and ſo had but mortall things to promiſe to her children, whom ſhe did generate to mortalitie. The Church of CHRIST, the heavenly Ieruſalem, hath other manner of promiſes, to her children regeneraee by the immortall ſeed of the word, and Spirit of GOD: to them She holdeth forth things immortall, and heavenly; yea, heaven, and immortality it ſelfe.

Gal. 4. 26.

Reſerved in heaven.

In heaven then. There, it is firſt; and there it is kept: the being there, one; the keeping, another. For, that there it is kept, is happie for us. Earth would not keepe it: Heere, it would be in hazard, there is great odds. For my part, I give it for loſt, if, in this State, we were poſſeſſed of it. It would goe the ſame way, Paradiſe went. Since it would be loſt in Earth, it is kept in heaven. And a Benedictus for that, too: as, for the regenerating us to it heere on Earth ſo;

ſo, for the keeping, the preſerving of it there, in Heaven.

Kept, and for us kept; Elſe, all were nothing: that, makes up all, that it is not onely preſerved, but reſerved for us, there. As Benedictus, the Alpha; ſo this the Omega of all. For us.

But reſerved (as the nature of the word is, and as the nature is, of things hoped for) yet under the veile: for, Spes quæ videtur non eſt ſpes. But, time ſhall come, when the veile ſhall be taken off, and of that, which is now within it, there ſhall be a revealing (as followeth in the next verſe.) And ſo, all begins and ends, as the Bible doth. As the Bible, with Geneſis; So this Text, with Regeneration: as the Bible ends, in the Apocalypſe; So, this here, with a Revelation. Rom. 8. 24. Verſe. 5.

Onely, it ſtayeth, till the worke of regeneration be accompliſhed. Generation, and it, take end both together; and when generation doth, then ſhall corruption likewiſe, and with it, the ſtate of diſhonour, which is in foulneſſe, and the ſtate of weakeneſſe, which is in fading; And in ſtead of them, incorruption comes in place with honour and power. And theſe three, 1 Incorruption, 2 honour, and 3 power, make the perfect eſtate of bliſſe: To which, CHRIST this day aroſe, and which ſhall be our eſtate, at the Reſurrection. That, as all began with a reſurrection, ſo it ſhall end with one. Came to us, by CHRISTS riſing now, this firſt Eaſter; and wee ſhall come to it, by our owne riſing, at the laſt and great Eaſter, the true Paſſe-over indeed: when, from death and miſery, we ſhall paſſe to life and felicity.

Now, for this Inheritance, which is Bliſſe it ſelfe, and in the interim for the bleſſed hope ſet before us, Which we have as an Anchor of our ſoule, ſtedfaſt and ſure, Which entereth even within the veile, where CHRIST the fore-runner is already ſeazed of it in our names and for our behoofes: For theſe, come we now, to our Benedictus, Heb. 6. 18. 19. 20.

For, if GOD, according to His manifold mercy, have done all this for us; wee alſo, according to our duty (as manifold as His mercy,) are to doe (or ſay, at leaſt) ſomewhat againe. It accords well, that, for ſo many beneficia, one Benedictus, at leaſt. It accords well, that His riſing ſhould raiſe in us; and our regenerating beget, in us, ſome praiſe, thankes, bleſſing at leaſt: but, bleſſing fits beſt with Benedictus.

Firſt then, dictus, ſomewhat would be ſaid, by way of recognition, This hath GOD done for us, and more alſo: But, this, this very day. Then, Benè let it be: to ſpeake well of Him, for doing thus well by us; A verball Benedictus, for a reall bleſſing, is as little as may be. For the Inheritance, which is bleſſing; for the hope, which is bleſſed; for the bleſſed cauſe of both, GODS mercy, and the bleſſed meanes of both CHRISTS Reſurrection, this bleſſed day, Bleſſed be GOD.

But, to ſay Benedictus, any way, is not to content us; but, to ſay it', ſolemnely. How is that? Benedictus, in our mouth, and the holy Euchariſt in our hands. So, to ſay it. To ſeale up, as He (in the old) His quid retribuam with calicem ſalutaris, the Cup of ſalvation: So we (in the new) our Benedictus, with Calix benedictionis, the Cup of bleſſing, which we bleſſe in His name. So, ſhall we ſay it, in kinde; ſay it, as it would be ſaid. The rather, ſo to doe, becauſe, by that Cup of bleſſing, we ſhall partake the bloud of the New Teſtament; by which, this Inheritance, as it was purchaſed for us, ſo it is paſſed to us. Alwayes making full account, that, from the Cup of bleſſing, wee cannot part, but with a bleſſing. Pſal. 116. 12. 13. 1 Cor. 10. 16.

And yet, this is not all; We are not to ſtay here, but to aſpire farther; even to ſtrive to be like to GOD: and, be like GOD we ſhall not, unleſſe our dicere be facere as His is; unleſſe ſomewhat be done withall. In very deed, there is no bleſſing, but with levatâ and extenſâ manu, the hand ſtretched out; So, our SAVIOUR Himſelfe bleſſed, Luk. 24. The vocall bleſſing alone is not full; nor the Sacramentall alone, without Benedictio manus, that is, the actuall bleſſing. To leave a bleſſing behinde us, to beſtow ſomewhat, for which the Church (the poore, in it, ſo) ſhall bleſſe us, and bleſſe GOD, for us. In which reſpect, the Apoſtle ſo calleth it expreſly (2 Cor. 9.) εὐλογίαν benedictionem, and by that name, commends it to the Corinthians. And, that is the bleſſing of bleſſings, when all is done: That is it, for which Venite benedicti ſhall be ſaid Luk. 24. 50. 2 Cor. 9. 5. Matth. 25. 33.

to us. Even, for parting with that here, which ſhall feed, cover, and ſet free the hungrie, naked, and them in priſon. That, ſhall prove the bleſsing reall, and ſticke by us when all our verball bene dictions ſhall be vaniſhed into aire.

So, for a treble bleſsing from GOD, [1] Our regenerating, [2] Our hope, [3] Our Inheritance, we ſhall returne Him the ſame number; even three for three: [1] Benedictus of the voice and inſtrument, [2] Benedictus of the Signe and Sacrament, [3] and Benedictus, of ſome bleſſed deed done; for which, many bleſsings upon earth, and the bleſsing of GOD from heaven ſhall come upon us. So, as we ſay (here) Benedictus Deus, Bleſſed He: He ſhall ſay, Benedicti vos, Bleſſed Yee. The hearing of which words, in the end, ſhall make us bleſſed without end, in heavens bliſſe. To which, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE IN THE CATHEDRALL, Church at Durham, on the XX. of April, Anno Domini MDCXVII, Being EASTER-DAY.

MATTH. Chap. XII. VER. XXXIX. VER, XL.
Qui reſpondens ait illis: Generatio, &c.

But He anſwered and ſaid unto them; An evill and adulterous generation ſeeketh a ſigne, but no ſigne ſhall be given unto it, ſave the ſigne of the Prophet Ionas.
For, as Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the Whales belly; ſo ſhall the Sonne of man be, three dayes and three nights, in the heart of the earth.

THE ſigne of the Prophet Ionas, is the ſigne of the Reſurrection: And, this is the Feaſt of the Reſurrection. Being then the ſigne of this Feaſt, at this Feaſt to be ſet up: Signum temporis, in tempore ſigni, The ſigne of the time, at the time of the ſigne, moſt properly, ever.

The Summe. The words are an anſwer, of CHRIST's (in this verſe) to a motion of the Phariſees (in the laſt) They would ſee a ſigne. The anſwer is negative, but qualified. There is in it, a Non, and a Niſi: Non dabitur, none ſhall be given them. Indeed, none ſhould: They were worthy of none. Yet ſaith He not, Non ſimply. His, Non, is with a Niſi, Non dabitur, niſi, it is with a limitation, with a but: None, but, that. So, that: So, one ſhall be. In the Non, is their desert: in the Nisi, His goodnesse: that, though they were worthy none, yet gives them one, though.

Gives them one: and one, that is worth the giving. Put Non and Nisi together, it is a Non nisi. If you speake of a Signe, None to it: a Signe, instar omnium.

This Signe, is the Signe of the Prophet Ionas. Of him, diverse other wayes, and namely this: That as he was in the Whales belly, so was CHRIST in the heart of the earth. There they were either.

And, that which makes up the Signe; Three dayes apeece: Three dayes, and no longer.

And then, as Ionas cast up by the Whale; so CHRIST rose againe from the dead; and both, the third day. So that, upon the matter, the Substance of this Signe, is CHRISTS Resurrection; and the Circumstance of it, is this very day.

The Division We will divide it no otherwise, than already we have: [1] into the Non, Non dabitur: [2] the Nisi Non, dabitur nisi: [3] and the Non nisi, Non nisi Signum Ionæ.

I. The Non, the deniall first: Non dabitur eis. And the reason is, in Eis, in the parties. For, they [1] an evill, and [2] adulterous, and a [3] generation of such (three brands set upon them:) Eis, to them, to such as them, no Signe to be given: none at all.

II. Then the Nisi: Non dabitur, Nisi. For though they were such, as little deserved any, yet CHRIST, of His goodnesse, will not cast them quite off. None He will give, but. So, one He will give: A Signe they shall have.

III. And that, no triviall, or pettie Signe (to give it His due) but, in very deed, a Signum non nisi; Non nisi Signum Ionæ, that is, insigne Signum, a Signe signall: marke them all, None like it.

And that is, the signe of the Prophet Ionas, comming forth of the Whales jawes, halfe out and halfe in. In which Signe, there are (upon the point) three Sicuts.

1. The Parties first; as Ionas, so the SONNE of man (that is) Himselfe.

2. Wherein, the Place. That as the one was in the Whales belly; so was the other in the bowels of the earth.

3. Last, in time. Either, three dayes and three nights just, and but three dayes, and then forth againe. There they were, and there (both) the same time: the Places diverse; the time, the same.

So, Ionas, the signe of CHRIST: and the Whales belly, the signe of CHRISTS grave. Iona's three dayes, the signe of CHRISTS three dayes, [1] Good-friday, [2] Yester-day, [3] and to Day.

Which three dayes, when we shall come to calculate them, they will give us three stands, and make (as it were) three signes in one; each day, his severall signe.

The letter of the Text saith, there they were; [1] we are carried then, to aske, how came they thither. The Text saith, there they were, but three dayes: [2] We are carried then to aske, how came they thence.

Iona's state before he came into the Whale: [2] His state while there: [3] His state getting thence.

Conforme in CHRIST. [1] Good-friday, when, as Ionas went downe the Whales throat, so CHRIST laid in His grave: [2] Easter-eve, while there He lay: [3] And this (which is now the third day) when, as Ionas cast up on drie land; So CHRIST risen from death, to the life immortall.

So have you (as in a signe) set forth [1] CHRISTS death, by Iona's drowning: [2] CHRISTS buriall, by Iona's abode there: [3] CHRISTS resurrection, by Iona's emersion againe.

As Christus sepultus, by Ionas absorptus: So Christus resurgens, by Ionas emergens. [1] Ionas going downe the Whales throat, of CHRIST put into His Sepulcher: [2] Iona's appearing againe, out of the Whales mouth, of CHRISTS arising out of His Sepulcher. All; in Ionas, shadowed: And, in CHRIST, fulfilled.

In these three dayes, these three Signes: And, in them, three Keyes of our faith, three Articles of our Creed, [1] Mortuus, [2] Sepultus, [3] and Resurrexit, [1] CHRISTS death, [2] buriall, and [3] rising againe.

And

And laſt, what this Signe portends, or ſignifies. That whatſoever it was, to them; to us, it is Signum in bonum, a Signe boding good to-us-ward: A ſigne of favour and good hope, which we have by the reſurrection of our SAVIOUR. Specially, if we have the true Signature of it, which is true repentance. Pſal. 86. 16.

TO aske a Signe, is (of it ſelfe) not evill; Good men, holy Saints have done it. Gedeon asked one of God and had it: He is painted with the fleece (that is, the Signe given him) in his hand. Ezechias asked one and had it too: In the Sun-diall of Ahaz, the ſhadow went ten degrees backe. Yet, this ſuit here is denied by CHRIST: and CHRIST denieth nothing that is good: Specially, not with hard termes as here (we ſee) He doth. The deniall of a Signe. Non dabitur. Iud. 6. 36. 2 King 20. 8.

Some what is amiſſe ſure: and it is not in the Signe, or in the ſuit, but in Eis, the men: the ſuit, was not evill, the Suitours were. In three words, three brands ſet upon them: [1] Evill, [2] adulterous, [3] a generation of evill and adulterous. The reaſon, in Eis, the men.

1 Evill. There bee markes of evill minded men, even in their very ſuit. They would ſee a ſigne: If they had never ſeene any before, it had not beene evill: but, they came now, from a Signe; they had ſcarce wiped their eyes, ſince they ſaw one (the Signe of the blind and dumbe man, made to ſee and ſpeake) immediately before: It was Spirans adhuc, yet warme, as they ſay. That, they ſaw; and ſaw they not a Signe? A little before, even in this very Chapter, a withered hand was reſtored to another: What, could not they ſee a Signe, in that, neither? Goe backe to the Chapters before, ye ſhall have no leſſe than a dozen ſignes, one after another: and come they now with a Volumus videre? They would have that ſhewed them, that, when it is ſhewed, they will not ſo ſee: A bad minde this, certainely. They were Evill. Verſe 22. Verſe 10. Verſe 38.
